JESTY,

BY THE GRACE OF GOD, KING OF Great Brittain, France and

Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c.

Our Maiesties goodnesse hath inuited this boldnes, in accepting my late Voluminous Twinnes of Pilgrimes; then also vouchsafing to aske of this my Pilgrimage, whether it were there annexed, and wherefore it was not (a sufficient prouocation to This Edition and Dedication;) that I mention not Your Pietie, which cannot denie hereditariē respect, where your Royall Father (of euer blessed memorie, the King of learned and Learnings kings) manifested so much fauour, as to make it Ordinarie of his Bed chamber; where vpon occasion of those later Volumes then presented, he questioned the difference, and professed freely that he had read this worke seuen times, giuing thereof a present testimonie in his learned discourse and censure. No lesse did hee promise touching the the Pilgrimes, which he made his Nightly taske, till God called him by fatall sicknesse to a better Pilgrimage and of a more enduring Kingdome; even the last day in which that Sunne yeelded his present rayes to this Citie, sending an Honourable messenger with a fauourable message of his gentle approbation and encouragement. Such a testimonie is a King of Testimonies, and no lesse reward to the Author, then commendation of the Worke to his worthy Heire, and to all English Readers. Once, it hath produced this my present aduventure on your Maiestie, being otherwise ambitious, that as my selfe, so all mine may there acknowledge subiection and reference. I might adde also that some Additions here inserted, had more fitly bene ranked in those Pilgrime files, which in more speciall propriety attended your Royall stander. And although these times seeme more to fauour of Armes then to fauour Arts (inter arma silent Musæ) yet Our Muse is not of the softer socke, but more Masculine, an armed Pallas, not bred in Poeticall myserie, but borne a reall Historie, containing actions, factions, fractions of Religions and States through the whole World of Place and Time; not nicer effeminate fictions of idle-busie fancifull braines.

Howeuer, may it please your Maiestie to accept his well-intended indeuours, who hath borrowed of thousands to furnish this one Worke of and to the World, and to admit the Pilgrimes heartie acclamation of ioy, ioy, to Your happy Inauguration, with prayers that the vertuous goodnesse of King IAMES may be succeeded and exceeded in the greatnesse and vertues of Great Britaines Great Charles.

Subiect,

REVEREND FA-
GEORGE
BY THE DIVINE PROVIDENCE, LORD

Archbishop of CANTERBURY, Primate of all ENGLAND and Metropolitane; one of his Maiesties most Honourable Princke Councill.

*Boue thirteene yeeres are passed since first your Graces auspicious name graced the Frontispice of this Pilgrimage, which promising the World and her Religions in four Parts, bath (onely and that four times) performed One. And as a late Queene ambitious of Souereigntie to all her Sonnes, found the Mathematicians which had foretold it, true, but her hopes false, that falling out by fatall succession in one Kingdom which shee had expected and indeuoured in diuers:
so bath this our First-borne with successiue improuements beene so often the sole heire and successor to himselfe. Now the Fourth time doth this Pilgrimage glory in your Graces benediction, and although my trauellling braine hath not beene deliuered of those

promised Pilgrimages, yet bath it by a strange superfatation procreated & lately presented to kisse your Graces hand, foure twins of Pilgrimes, which did not indeede formally pay the former debt, yet presumed to yeeld that which should bee as usefull to the World in the knowledge of her remoter parts. These issues exhausting their Parents procreative powers, his hastined age expects & exacts Rest for the rest, and now for This, hauing been often quarelled for forcing men by frequent Additions in later Editions to renew their purchase of Purchas his renewed Pilgrimage, though he durst not bestow a Childs portion on it, yet would he not send it forth without a Fathers blessing. The Three Treatises annexed had found fitter place with my Pilgrimes, had they then comine to my hands: but their rarities merit a place, yea a welcome, in what place soeuer.

For the Author, if his reiterated paines; if his here borrowing of aboue thirteene hundred Authors of one or other kind, in I know not how many hundreths of their Epistles, Treatises and Relations; if his weekly redoubled cares of the Pulpit, daily and howerly of a weak body and not strong family; if the Argument is selfe being of Religions (though irreligious) to a most Reuerend and religious Prelate; if the worlds approbation pressing it to so often view and censure; if None of these, if All of them may not excuse so often resumed presumption on your Grace, yet is he forced by necessarie dutie, and the sum of all duties. Thankesfulnes. Yea this I am sure will be full excuse, if not commendation, of that which I haue foure times obruded, the testimonie of our late deceased Soueraine of happie memorie (the King of literature also) King IAMES, who shewing me it by him in his Bed-chamber, said, that he had read it seuen times: Whereto if I should add his iudicious questions of diuers particulars therein, his ready and milde satisfaction, his ample commendation, copious discourse, piercing wit, admirable memory, gentle affabilitie, I might seeme to some emulous carpers to magnifie my self, in relating that truth which rather indeede doth illustrate to all posteritie his worth then my worthinesse, God and Gods greatest Vicgerents, delighting rather to shew Grace then to admit Plea of Merit. It pleased sed his Maiestie to enquire further of the different scope of my Pilgrimage, & my then presented Pilgrims, which here also for the Readers sake I think fit to answer, that These Brethren holding much resemblance in name, nature and feature, yet differ both in the object and subject: This being mine own in matter (though borrowed) and in forme of words and method: Whereas my Pilgrims are the Authors themselves, acting their owne parts in their owne words, onely furnished by me with such necessities as that stage further required, and ordered according to my rules; here is a Pilgrimage to the Temples of the Worlds Citie, religionis ergo, with obuious and occasionall view of other things; there is a full Voyage, and in a method of Voyages, the whole Citie of the World, propounded together with the Temples; here the soule and some accessories, there the body and soule of the remoter World, with (and her rarer furniture) her rarer furniture; this from the eare; that from the eye, this briefer notes, that the Text it selfe. How euer, such was his Maiesties fauour as to adde for my further encouragement, his promise to beare at large all those Pilgrims, which was nightly also performed, untill his fatall sicknesse called him to enioy a nightlesse day in the heauenly Kingdome.

Euen the last day on which this Citie saw him, it pleased him with gracious approbation of the former, to impose another taske on me, by an Honourable messenger, with promise of reward, which had almost in a dangerous sicknesse buried me, and was buried (with those hopes) in his Maiesties graue; whose Funerals this Citie hath beene forced euer since to solemnise, with armies of Mourners pressed by Pestilence, to attend & follow His Corps with their owne: And if some liuing remaines of him had not shined in his Sonne King CHARLES, in that Sun-set, what a Chaos of darkenesse had befallen vs, which lost that day, and yet saw no night? And long may your Grace shine as a Starre of greatest magnitude, attending neere our happy Charles-waine, and euer may that Royall Race bee the Load-starre of our Church and State vnder the Sunne of righteousnesse, euen so long as Bootes shall attend on that bright constellation.

May it please your Grace to pardon this talkative boldnesse, and to permit mee also to mention your late fauour, and seconding that Royall testimonie, when notwithstanding the dreadfull infection, your gracious affection admitted free communication with me, intended a free and bountifull Collation on me, and extended so large a collaudation to those my Pilgrimes; neither by their voluminous prolixitie deterred from reading them; nor then deterring my suspended scrupulous thoughts by your iudicious severitie, but with ingenuous sinceritie yeelding a testimonie so able and ample, that though I blush to record it, yet I now repent not of so vast undertakings, which such iudgement deemeth so profitable, that the studious in this kind of literature neede goe no further: which was the scope of those voluminous Collections, to coniuere as it were all Trauelling spirits into that one Pilgrime-centre, and at once to make the World Eye-witnesse to it selfe. Let me glorie further that my Volumes are admitted into your Graces Librarie, and my selfe an appendix of your family and

Chaplain,

S. P.

To the Reader.

ND now, READER, The PILGRIME comes vnto thee the fourth time, with whom hee dares be somewhat bolder. Being, I know not by what naturall inclination, addicted to the studie of Historie, my heart would sometimes object a selfe-loue, in following my priuate delights in that kinde. Atlast I resolved to turne the pleasures of my studies into studious paines, that others might againe, by delightfull studie, turne my paines into their pleasure. I heere bring Religion from Paradise to the Ark, and thence follow her round about the World, and (for her sake) obserue the World it selfe, with the seuerall Countries and Peoples therein; the chiefe Empires and States: their priuate and publique Customes; their manifold chances and changes; also the wonderfull and most remarkeable effects of Nature; Euent of Diuine and Humane Providence, Rarities of Art; and whatsoeuer I finde by Relations of Historians, as I passe, most worthe the writing. Religion is my more proper aime, and therefore I insist longer on the description of whatsoeuer I finde belonging thereto; declaring the Religion of the first Men the corrupting of it before and after the Flood; the Iewish obseruations; the Idols, Idolatries, Temples, Priests, Feasts, Fasts, Opinions, Sects, Orders, and siced Customes of the Heathens; with the Alterations and Successions that haue therein happened, from the beginning of the World hitherto.

This Worke I diuide into foure parts. This first exhibiteth the Relations and Theologicall discouerie of ASIA, AFRICA, and AMERICA: The second when God will, shall doe the same for EVROPE: The third and fourth, in a second visitation, shall obserue such things in the same places as I holde most remarkeable in the Christian and Ecclesiasticall Historie, and that according to the same Method; which is squared in the Whole by order of Place, going still out of one Countreie into the next; in each particular part and seuerall Countreie, by the order of Time, deducing our Relations, so farre as we haue Others foot-prints to guide vs, (though not exactly naming the day and yeere, and determining questions in Chronologicall controuersies, yet in some conuenient fort) from the ancient times, and by degrees descending to the present.

If thou demandest what profit may be hereof; I answer, that heere Students of all sorts may finde matter fitting their studies: The naturall Philosophers may obserue the different constitution and commixion of the Elements, their diuers working in diuers places, the varietie of heavenly influence, of the yeerely seasons, of the Creatures in the Aire, Water, Earth: They which delight in State-affaires, may obserue the varietie of States and Kingdomes, with their differing Lawes, Politics, and Customes, their Beginnings and Endings. The Diuine, besides the former, may heere contemplate the workes of God, not in Creation alone, but in his Iustice and Providence, pursuing sinne euery where with such dreadfull plagues; both bodily, in rooting vp and pulling downe the mightiest Empires; and especially in spirituall Iudgements, giuing vp so great a part of the World

TO THE READER.

World vnto the efficacy of Error in strong delusions, that hauing forsaken the Fountaine of liuing waters, they should dig vnto themselves these broken Pits that can hold no water; deuout in their superstitions, and superstitious in their deuotions; agreeing all in this, that there should bee a Religion, disagreeing from each other, and the TRUTH, in the practice thereof.

Likewise our Ministers may be incited vnto all godly labours in their function of preaching the Gospel, seeing other wise, for outward and bodily ceremonies, the Turkes and Iewes (in their manifold deuotions in their Oratories every day) and other Heathen would continue vs of idleness. And let mee haue leaue to speake it for the glory of God, and the good of our Church; I cannot finde any Priests in all this my Pilgrimage, of whom wee haue any exact History, but take more bodily paines in their deuotions, than is performed by not preaching Ministers, especially in Countrey villages, where on the weeke dayes they cannot haue occasion, or company, for publike prayers. & therefore if they read only the Service on holy dayes, and neuer studie for more (which I would it were not the idle practise of some) even the Heathen shall rise vp in iudgement against them. I subscribe with hand and practise to our Liturgy, but not to such Leithargie: whose darkenesse is so much the more intollerable; in this Sun-shine of the Gospel, wherein wee haue a gracious King, so diligent a frequenter of Sermons; and Reuerend Bishops (notwithstanding other their weighty Ecclesiasticall employments yet) diligent Preachers.

The studious of Geographic may somewhat be helped in that kinde: not that we intend an exact Geographic, in mentioning euery Citie with the degrees of Longitude and Latitude, but yet limiting euery Countrey in his true situation and bounds; and performing happily more then some, which take vpon them the title of Geographers, as their chiefe profession: and more then any, which I know hath done in our language.

He which admireth and almost adoreth the Capuchine, Iesuite, or other Romanists, for selfe-inflicted whippings, fastings, watchings, vovves of obedience, pouertie, and single life, and their not sparing their limbes, and liues for their will-worships, may see, in all these, the Romanists equalled by Heathens, if not out-stripped, euen by the reports of the Iesuites and other their Catholiques. Bodily exercise profiteth little, but Godliness is profitable vnto all, and hath the promise of this life and that which is to come.

Here also the Reader may see most of their Popish Rites, deriued out of Chaldean, Egyptian, and other Fountaines of Paganisme, as in the later taske we shall haue more occasion to shew. Heere euery English man may see cause to praise God continually for the light of his truth, communicated to vs: whereas it is (in comparison) but a small part of the World, that foundeth the sacred name of Iesus; and of those that profess it, how infinit are the sects and superstitions? God hath shewed his Word vnto our IACOB (THE DEFENDER OF HIS FAITH) his Statutes and his Iudgements vnto this ISRAEL of Great Brittain. He hath not dealt so with euery Nation, neither haue the Heathen, nor scarcely, if scarcely, any other Christian Nation, so much knowledge of his Iudgements. And yet how seditious are some? how prophane are others? how vnthankfull the most? That beastly Sinne of Drunkennesse, that biting Sinne of Vsurie, that Deuillish Sinne of Swaggering, ruffling in deformitie of clothes, like monstrous Chimeras, and barking out a multi-formitie of oathes, like hellish Cerberi, as if men could not be Gallants, vnlesse they turned Devils. These are the payments wee returne vnto the Lord, in stead of prayers for, and loyaltie to his Maiestie; peaceableness and charitie to each others; modestie and sobrietie in our selues.

For the forme, I haue sought in some places, with varietie of phrase, in all, with varietie of matter, to draw thee along with mee in this tedious Pilgrimage. Some names are written diuersly, according to the differing Copies which I followed, which thy discretion will easily conceiue. I doe not in euery question set downe my desire; sometimes I, because it were more then needs; sometimes because of the difficulty, I mention Authors sometimes of meane quality; for the meaneest haue leaue to obserue that which themselves see; more certainly then the contemplatiua and Theoretic of the more learned; I would also acknowledge the labour of the meaneest. I haue laboured to reduce Relations to their first Authors, setting their names to their Allegations; the want whereof hath much troubled mee, whilst the most cleane out their Authors; as if their owne assertion were sufficient authoritie in things borrowed. I haue (to my great paines) contracted and Epitomized whole Volumes (and some very large) into one Chapter; a thing vsuall through these Relations. Where I haue found plentifull discourse for Religion (my chiefe aime) I am shorter in other Relations; and where I haue had lesse helps for that discouerie, I insist more on the wonders of Nature, and discoueries by Sea and Land, with other remarkable accidents. These Rarities of Nature I haue sometimes suted in a differing phrase and figure of speech; not that I affect a fantastick singularity; but that these Diuine workes might appeare in Robes, if not fitting their Majesty, yet such as our Word-Robe did willingly without any great affectation or flattery, afford not without example of the Scripture, which vseth to bring in the mute Creatures, speaking and performing (as it were) other personall offices; nor without this effect to make the Reader stay a while with obseruation and wonder; besides that variety of it selfe is delightfome.

If any milke the fulnesse in some places, and the barrenesse of words in others; let them consider, we handle a World, where are Mountaines and Vallies, fertile habitations, and sandy desarts: and others steps, whom I follow, hold me sometimes in a narrower way, which elsewhere take more libertie. I touch here and there a Controuersie, both for illustration of Historie; and in season, and out of season, to shew my affection to the Truth.

Now if any man thinke, that it were better these rotten bones of the passed, and sinking bodies of the Present superstitions were buried, then thus raked out of their graues; besides that which hath beene said, I answer, That I haue sufficient example in the Scriptures, which were written for our learning to the ends of the World, and yet depaint vnto vs the vgly face of Idolatry in so many Countries of the Heathens, with the Apostasies, Sects, and Heresies of the Iewes, as in our first and second booke is shewed: and the Ancient Fathers also, Iustin, Tertullian, Clemens, Irenaeus, Origen, and more fully, Eusebius, Epiphanius, Philastrius and Augustine, haue gone before vs in their large Catalogues of Heresies and false Opinions.

I appeale vnto any indifferent Reader (for some not Readers, nor indifferent, I respect not) whose Authoritie, perhaps, would be but indifferent; if they must first win it by being Authors of so big, I dare not say, so great volumes) if there be any, either Idolatries, or other impieties, in this worke of mine expressed beyond theirs which heere out of the Scriptures are mentioned, scewes in the Temple, humane Sacrifices to Moloch, Tammuz his mourning, Sodomitie, Incests, with other fleshly, worldly, beastly, Denillish monstres of iniquitie, obtruded vnder Religions Sacred Mantle, amongst the Amorites, Egyptians and Iewes, before the coming of Christ: or greater darkenesse and more hellish then when the Light it selfe was made manifest, and the Darknesse comprehended it not: Herods butcheries, Iudas his treacherie, the blasphemies of the Scribes, Priests, and Pharises, and the crucifying of the Sonne of God by men, for men: or since, if as stinking, loathsome, monstrous abuses haue not beene offered to the Christian Name in worse impostures and pollutions, by the Nicholaitans, and other incarnat Deuils, recorded by those Fathers and other Ecclesiasticall Authors, then any of those heere in this booke obserued: to which, if that which Epiphanius hath written of the Gnostikes alone, fully and particularly, be considered, all these Ethnike and Mahumetan superstitions would comparatively be iustified: So true is that olde saying, Corruptio optimi pessima; and of the Truth it selfe, Sodom and her daughters not not comparable to Ierusalem with hers; and of the iustest Iudge, that it shall bee easier at the day of Iudgement for Those then These. And what indeede doth more set forth the glory of Gods grace, then in pardoning; his power, then in reforming; his justice, then in giuing men vp to such delusions? Are not these the Trophies and glorious victories of THE CROSSER OF CHRIST, that hath subuerted the Temples, Oracles, Sacrifices, and Seruices of the Deuill? And maist not thou see herein, what Manis, and thou thy selfe maist bee, if God leaue thee to thy selfe? Read therefore, with prayles vnto God, the Father of thy light; and prayers for these Heathens, that God may bring them out of the snare of the Deuill, & that Christ may be his saluation to the ends of the World. And let me also obaine thy prayers in this my Pilgrimage, to be there-

THE CATALOGVE OF THE AVTHORS.

Have heere mustered in thy view, Courteous Reader, those Avthors which from mine owne sight, I have mentioned in this Work. Some of them, I confesse are of no great note, and some are noted for notorious Counterfeits: but all are of some use, and meete to bee heere placed, that they may have their due: Some of thankfulnessse for their worthy and great industry (wherein those deserve a place, though otherwise obscure, who by their Navigations and Discoveries have made the World knowne to it selfe.) Others, that they may be knowne to be lyes and meere Changelings. In this, and all kinds, Sacred, Profane, Learned, Vnlearned, Ancient, Moderne, Good, and Bad; I have toyled my selfe to benefit thee. Many more might be added, which are cited in this Work. But because I have borrowed them on others credit, and not seene them my selfe (and Many for other causes) I have not here mentioned them. The Letter E. signifies that wee have a Fragment of the said Avthour, and P. brands him for a Counterfeit. The Sacred Avthours, or Scribes rather, to the Holy Ghost, are Transcendents, and quite beyond this Predicaments. We have also omitted the Apocrypha: besides those which have escaped vs in the Collection.

CHAP. I.

Of GOD, one in Nature, * three in Persons, the FATHER, SONNE, and HOLY GHOST.

THE * Poets were wont to lay the Foundations and First Beginnings of their Poeticall Fabriques, with invocation of their gods and Muses: although those workes were futable to such worke-men, who according to their names were Makers, of those both Poems and gods. I, as farre short of their learning, as beyond them in the scope of my desires, would so farre imitate their manner, in this matter which I intend; that although I enuy not to some their foolish claime of that Poeticall (not Propheticall) inheritance, to make my Maker: and my matter as in a Historie (not a Poeme) must be made to my hands: Yet in a Historie of Religion, which hath or should haue GOD to be the Alpha and Omega; the Efficient, from whom; the End, to whom it proceedeth:

the Matter of whom, the Forme by whom an I whose direction, it entreateth; I could not but make a Religion to begin this discourse of Religion at him; this being the way, which all men take, to come to him. First therefore, I beseech him, that is the First and Last, the Eternall Father, in the name of his Beloued and Onely Sonne, by the light of his Holy and All-seeing Spirit, to guide mee in this Perambulation of the World, so to take view of the Times, Places, and Customes therein, as may testifie my religious bond to him, whose I am, and whom I serue: and the seruice I owe vnto his Church, if at least this my Mite may be seruice-

Sunne comfortable thorow this chinke and Key-hole of our bodily prison, and euen the taste of these Delicacies, more then sweet and delectable.

Some of these names are attributed to him in regard of his beeing * in it selfe considered, as Iehouah, Iah, Eheie: and some in regard of the persons which all haue that one beeing, and e-uery of which haue all that being, which * in it selfe is individually one: and their seuerall manners of hauing it, is that which is called their personall proprietie and incommunicable.
Such a name (say I some) is Elohim: * applied to the Father, Sonne, and Holy-Ghost, in signification Mightie, in forme plural. Some of these names are such as are communicated to creatures also, but with this difference, that those which in the creature are borrowed, imperfect, accidentall; are in him Nature, Perfection, Substance. Some are absolutely considered as hee is 10 G o d blessed for euer; some relatively with respect vnto his creatures. Some againe * are negatiuely spoken, others affirmatiuely: some properly, others by a figure. But this is indeed a thorny way, * of which we may say with Augustine, Nothing is misse more dangerously, nothing sought more laboriously, nothing found more profitably. Euen the Angelicall Seraphims had their 7 fixe wings, whereof two serued to execute their prompt obedience; two cou-uered their feet, because of mans weaknesse not able to comprehend their glorie; and yet they themselves thus glorious, with two other wings couered their face, as not able to endure the brightnesse of a greater glorie. Let vs then be wise, but to * sobriety. Let vs goe to the Lambe to vnclaiepe this sealed Booke. For in him all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge are 20 hid. Let vs lo know as we may be knowne, and so * comprehend as we may rather be com-prehended. Let vs feare, loue, beleue, and serue him; and then G o d will * teach the humble his way, and They which will doe his will, shall know of his doctrine. This is our way to eternall life, thus to know him, and whom he hath sent, Iesus Christ: if namely we so learne * Christ, as the Truth is in Iesus, if we * become fooles that we may be wise, and putting off the old man, be renewed in the spirit of our minds; and put on the new man which after G o d is shapen in righteousness and true holinesse. Otherwise, we * know nothing as we ought to know; otherwise, we know nothing more, nor so much as the Devils know. * The feare of the Lord is the beginning of this wisdom.

And for this cause hath he called himselfe, and proclaimed those his Names, * I H O V A, Iehona, strong, mercifull, and gracious, slow to anger, and abundant in goodnesse and truth, &c. and the like in other places; not that we may know to know, (a foolish curiositie) but that ha-uuing light, we may beleue and walke in the light, that we may be children of the light.

30 Iehona (if we may fo name it) the most essentiell (and after the Iewish tradition, inessei-able) name of G o d, is not therefore onely reuealed vnto vs, that we may know him in himselfe and of himselfe to bee * *Yesterday, to day, and the same * for euer, which is, which was,* which is to come: but also as the Creator, of whom, in whom, and for whom are all things: * by the Redeemer, which is knowne by his Name Iehona (as himselfe * interpreteth it) by giuing a reall being, and accomplishment to his promises. In which one name (as in others of like signification) is exprest the Simplicitie, Immutabilitie, Infinitenesse, Blessednesse, Eternitie, Life, Perfection, and other Attributes of G o d. When he calleth himselfe Strong, therein is declared his almighty power, whether we vnderstand it actually in producing and preserving all

40 things in Heauen and earth; or absolutely, whereby he is able to doe euen those things, which in his wisdom he doth not; whereby he is able to doe all things which either * in themselves (as implying contradiction) or with him (as imperfections) are not impossible, both those kinds not excluding, but concluding the power of G o d, which because he is Almightie, * cannot lie or denie himselfe.

What should I speake of his Wisdome, whereby all things are open in his sight, both himselfe, and his creatures, past, present, or to come, and that not as past or future, but in one, e-ternall, perfect, certaine, immediate, act of knowledge, which in regard of second causes are necessary or contingent, or in effect but merely possible, and neuer actually subsisting? Truth is thinks that Galatius was the first author of this pronunciation Iehona, Callatian writeth it Ioua: the most both Iewes and Christians before forbare to name it: The Massites ascribed to it no points of it: owne, but of Adonai; and when Adonai goe might before or after it: Elohim. It is holden, that onely the High-Priest, and that in the Temple, and on the day of Expiation might pronounce it, which to aspruate man, the Iewes esteemed the losse of eternall life. Stechus thinketh that none can interpret it, and Pauus Sargensis, that none can translate it. The Chaldeans, Arabians, Graecians, Latines, and the New Testam-chy* and Grynolus observe, that the name of God in all Nations is Tetragrammaton of four letters. In Dutch and English, they therefore double the last consonant, and learned Master Selden interpreteth the Pythagorian oath, iud Tetrapactur, by *Tetragram-

in him as a roote, from whence it is first in the being; next in the vnderstanding; thirdly, in the writing or laying of the creature. True he is in himselfe, in his workes ordinary, and extraordinary, and in his Word reucaled by the Prophets and Apostles. What should I adde of his goodnesse, grace, loue, Mercie, Iustice, and other his Attributes and names not yet mentioned? as Alonius, which signifieth the dominion of G O D due to him; by Creation, by purchase, by mutual couenant: Saddai, which signifieth his All-sufficiency, and others. Yea in one Chapter o Petrus Galatinus rehearseth threecore and twelue names of G O D out of the Rabbines workes, multiplyed and diuersified in tenne sorts, which make in all seven hundred and twenty names. To dilate of these at large would aske to many large Commentaries, and yet euen then should we still find this G O D incomprehensible; of whom we may, in respect 10 of our capacite, rather say what he is not, then what he is; whose goodnesse is not to bee distinguished by qualitie, or his greatnesse discerned by quantitie, or his eternitie measured by time, or his presence bounded by place: p of whom all things are to bee conceived, a beyond whatfour we can conceiue.

The Persons which communicate in this Diuine Nature, are three: This is their owne witnesse of themselves; There are three which beare record in Heauen, the Father, the Word, and the Spirit, and these three are one. This mytery was manifested in the baptesme of Christ, and in our Baptesme in the name of the Father, Sonne, and Holy Ghost. The Angels vnto this glorious Trinitie: sing their Holy, Holy, Holy: the Scripture it selfe applying that which there may be interpreted of the Father, both to the Sonne, Ioh. 12.41. and to the Spirit, Act. 28.25. These with other places doe also signifie their personall distinction. The Creation was not onely the Fathers worke, but also of the other Persons, as appeareth by that Nowne plurall, ioyned to a Verbe singular, in the first word of Moses, and otherlike plurall appellations, Es. 44.24. and Es. 45.5. 2. Sam. 7.23. and many such places. The Apostles apply the couenant, worship, and workes of G O D mentioned in the Old Testament, To the Sonne, and Holy Ghost in the New, neither can the one be the Sonne, or the other the Spirit of G O D, naturally and in proper manner of speech, but they must also subsist in the same Nature with the Father, which being infinite, spirituell, immutable, can be but one, which must wholly, or not at all, be communicated. In a word, the equalitie, the names, the properties, the workes, the worship peculiar to G O D, are applied to the Sonne and Holy Ghost, equally with the Father. Which they that list, may learne in such as especially treat of this subiect: where this myterie of the Trinitie is suerred against all Heretikes, Iewes, and Infidels: Yea, by some 30 also, out of their owne authentike Authours, whether they receiue Scriptures, Rabbins, Philosophers, or any other. I intend onely to anoint the doore-posts of this house with this Discourse, that I may make a fitter entry thereinto, leauing the fuller handling of this myterie, to such as purposely frame their whole Edifice with large Common-places hereof; which yet alway must be more certainly receiued by Faith, then conceiued by reason: according to that of Iustin Martyr, *Vnitatis in Trinitate intelligitur, & Trinitatis in Vnitate posuitur: id vtro quomodo fiat, nec alios seruari velim, nec ipse mihi possum * satisfacere.* Thinke 40 of y one, a threefold light will dazell thee; distinguish into three, and an infinite Vnitie will swallow thee. *Vnus, & si dici debet, vni sumus, faith * Bernard.*

Hauing thus with trembling hand written of that dreadful Myterie of the Trinitie, of which we may say, Cum dicitur, Non dicitur: It is not told with telling, nor can be described by description; The next to be considered are the Workes of G O D, which are either inward and immmanent, or outward and transient. The inward are eternall and vnchangeable, indeed no other but himselfe, although accounted and called workes, in regard of their effects in the World, and of our conceiuing. For * all the properties of G O D are infinite, as they are immanent in himselfe, yet in their transiuite and forren effects are stinted and limited to the modell and state of the Creature, wherein the same effects are wrought. Such an immanent worke we conceiue, and name that * Decree of G O D touching the Creation of the World, 50 with his ioudicent disposing all and euery part thereof, according to the Counsel of his own will, and especially touching the reasonable creatures, Angels and Men, in respect of their eternall flate in Salvation or Damnation. The outward workes of G O D are, in regard of Nature, Creation and Procreation: in regard of Grace, Redemption and Salvation, in the fullnesse of time performed by our Emanuel, G O D manifested in the flesh, true G O D and perfect Man, in the Vnitie of one Person, without confusion, conuerfion, or separation. * This is verie G O D and life eternall, Iesus Christ, the Sonne of G O D, our Lord, which was conceived by the HOLY GHOST, borne of the Virgin MARY, suffered vnder Pontius Pilate, who was crucified, dead and buried; descended into Hell: rose againe the third day; he ascended into Heauen; where he sitteth at the right hand of G O D the Father Almighty, 60 from whence he shall come to iudge the quicke and dead. And to such as are sonnes, G O D

the word Heauen to a larger fignification, therein comprehending thofe three Heauens, which the Scriptures mention : (one whereof is this lower, where the birds of the Heauen doe flye, reaching from the Earth to the Sphere of the Moone : the fecond, the vifible Planets and fixed Starrs, with the firft Moueable : the third, called the Heauen of Heauens, the third Heauen and Paradife of God) together with all the Hoft of them. By Earth, they vnderftand this Globe, confifting of Sea and Land, with all the creatures therein. The firft Verfe they hold to be a generall propofition of the Creation of all Creatures, & vifible and inuifible, perfected in fixte dayes ; as many places of Scripture teftifie : which as concerning the vifible, Mofes handleth after particularly, largely, and plainly, contenting himfelfe with briefe mention of thofe inuifible creatures, both good and bad, as occasion is offered in the following parts of his Hiftorie. In the prefent, he omitteth the particular description of their Creation, left fome (as Iewes and Heretikes haue done) should take occasion to attribute the due colours, be carryed to worshipping of Angels : a fuperftition which men haue embraced, towards the vifible creatures, farre in feriouf both to Angels and themfelves.

Mofes proceedeth therefore to the description of the firft matter, and the creatures thereof framed and formed. For touching thofe inuifible creatures, both the Angels and their hea-uenly habitation; howfoeuer they are circumscribed, and haue their proper and moft perfect fubftance, yet according to the interpretation of Diuine, their nature differeth from that of other creatures, celeftiall or terreftriall, as not being made of that firft matter, whereof thefe confift. Let vs therefore labour rather to be like the Angels in grace, that we may be like vnto them in glory, than prie too curioufly into their Nature (to our vnderftandings in manner the Bleffed, than bufie our wits too bufily in defcrying or defcribing it. Only thus much wee may obferue thereof, that it is beyond all reach of our obferuation : in regard of fubftance not fubiect to corruption, alteration, paffion, motion : in quantitie, many dwelling places, moft fpacious and ample ; in quality, a Paradife, faire, fhining, delightfome, wherein no euill can be prefent or imminent ; no good thing abfent ; a meere transcendent, which eye hath not feene, nor ear heard, nor the heart of man can conceive. Where the Tabernacle of God shall be with men, and he dwell with them, and shall be all in all vnto them ; where the pure in heart shall fee him, and euen our bodily eyes shall behold that moft glorious of creatures, the Sunne of righteoufneffe, and Sonne of God, Chrift Iefus.

Embracing thefe things with Hope, let vs returne to Mofes his defcription of the fenfible World : who faweth, that that Heauen and Earth, which now wee fee, were in the beginning, or firft degree of their being, an Earth without forme and void, a darkned depth and waters :
 a matter of no matter, and a forme without forme ; a rude and indigelted Chaos, or confufion of matters, rather to be beleued than comprehended of vs. This is the fecond naturall beginning. For, after the expreffing of the matter, followeth that which Philofophers call a fecond naturall Principle, Prination, the want of that forme, of which this matter was capable, which is accidentally a naturall principle, required in regard of generation, not of constitution.
 Heere defcribed by that part next vs, Earth, which was without forme, as is fuid, and void.
 This was the internall constitution : the external was, darknesse vpon the face of the deepe.
 Which Deepe comprifeth both the Earth before mentioned, and the vifible Heauens alfo, called a Depth, as to our capacite infinite, and plant to the Almighty hand of the Creator :
 called alfo Waters, not becaufe it was perfect waters, which was yet confufed, but becaufe of a certaine relemblance, not only in the vniformity thereof, but alfo of that want of flabi-lity, whereby it could not abide together, but as the Spirit of God moued vpon thefe waters, to fufstaine them ; and as the Hen fitteth on her egges to cherifh and quicken, as He-rome interpreteth the word, fo to maintaine, and by his mightie power to bring the fame into this naturall order. Heere therefore is the third beginning or Principle in Nature, That the Spirit of God, the third perfon in Trinitie, (not ayre or wind, as fome conceiue, being things which yet were not themfelves formed) by that action framed it vnto, and after more particularly effected.

This interpretation of the Spirit mouing vpon the Waters, agreeth with that opinion which fome attribute to the Stoikes. That all things are procreated and gouerned by one Spirit, which Democritus called the foule of the world, Hermes and Zoroafter, and Apollo Del- phicus call a Fire, the maker, quickner, and preferrer of all things ; and Virgil moft elegantly and diuinely figneth, feeming to paraphrafe on Mofes words :

milie est, ab aereo pendet, hic à calidi, in à sole & aëre : hic vero ab Empyreo : Empyreus à luminis calore : hic ab animario : hic ab intelle-ctuali : hic a vitali ; rimario : hic quoque primario essentiali : hic itidem ab ideali, qui in Deo habitat & à Deo parte est derivatus, Panceo J. 5.
 The interpretation of this myfticall Philofophie, wee may borrow of himfelfe in his Panegy. Panegy. Panegy. Panceo, more agreeing with Zoroafter, Hermes, and fome Platonikes, then the Scriptures, which fhew that all things were immediately created in the beginning by God.

THE THIRD DAYES WORKE.

And thus were the Ethericall, and Ayre parts of the World formed: in the Third Day followeth the perfecting of the two lowest Elements, Water and Earth, which as yet were confus'd, untill that mightie Word of God it did thus both diuorce and marry them, compounding of them both this one Globe, which he called, Dry Land and Sea. I call it a Globe with the Scriptures, & the best Philosophers, 1 for which respect Namab built the Temple of Vesta round, Neither yet is it absolutely round and a perfect Sphaere, but asquasid rather, as Senabo asmeth, hauing (saith a Scaldier) σφαίρας ἑξ ἑσφρας, dep'rell'd Vallies, extend'd Plaines, swelling Hillockes, high-mounting Mountaines, long courses of Riuers, and other varieties of Nature and Art, which all in fo huge a masse rather beautifie the roundnesse, then take it away. The Eclipse of the Moone later scene in the East then in the West, the round shadow of the Earth, which darkeneth it, the rising of the Sunne and Starres, sooner in the East then West, the vnequall eleuation of the Pole, and the Northerne Constellations appearing to vs, the Southerne continually dep'rell'd: all these observing due proportions, according to the difference of places and Countreies; yea, the compasing of the Earth by many Mariners, argue the round compasse thereof, against Pa-tristius & his disformitie, or that deformitie which other Philosophers haue ascribed thereto. The equalitie or inequality of dayes according to the neerenesse or farennesse from the Equinoctiall, holding proportion as well by Sea as Land (as doth also the eleuation of the Pole) and not being longer where it is a quarter of the World is Sea, then if it were all Earth, doe confute the pretended disformitie by Hills, Dales, Waters, compar'd with the Diameter of this Globe, is not so much as the inequality in an Apple, or a camed Bowle, or quilted Ball, which yet we call round. And this diuersitie serueth not onely for ornament, but for more largenesse of Habitation, varietie of Ayre and Earth, and for pleasure and profit. Thus doth this Globe swell out to our vse, for which it enlargeth it selfe: and seemeth large to vs, being in respect of the Vniuerselle lesse then little. How much thereof is couered with waters: How much not at all discouered? How much desart & desolate? And how many millions are they, which share the rest of this little among them? And yet how many thousands glorie of the greatnesse of their possessions? All this Globe is demonstrable to be but a point, and in comparision nothing, to that wide wide Canopie of Heauen; a mans possession but a point, and as nothing to the Earth, a man of possessions, but a point, and in a manner, nothing to his possessions; and (as Socrates & said sometimes to Alcibiades) few can shew their Lands in a vniuersall Map, where a whole Region occupieth a small roome: and yet how couetous, how proud is dust and asbes of dust and earth, notwithstanding the little we haue while we liue, and that lesse which shall haue and possesse vs in a Prison of three Cubits being dead? Well did one v compare this our groffer and drossier World to an Ant-hill, and men the Inhabitants to so many Psimires, in the varietie of their diuersified studies, toying and tymorieling themselves therein. Scipio seemed alham'd of the Romane Empire, as seeming but a point of the Earth, which it selfe was but a point. And yet how readie are many to sell Heauen for Earth? That largenesse and continuance beyond all names of time and place, for this momentary possession of almost nothing, although they haue Hell and Deuill and all in the bargain? Let this morall obseruation entertaine our Reader, perhaps tyred in these rigid Disputes: and now let vs returne to the naturall disposition and constitution of this Globe, in which the Earth was couered with varietie of Plants and Fruits, which had bene before couered with slimy waters.

God commanded and the Waters which yet oppressed, and by their effusion and confusion did tyrannize, rather then orderly subdue, and gouerne this inferior myrie masse, were partly receiued into competent channels, and there also gathered on swelling heapes, where, though they menace a returne of the old Chaos, both by their noyse and waues, yet hath God sta-bilish'd his Commandement upon it, and set barres and doores, and said, Hiberto stabit thus come ad no further, and here shall it stay thy proud waues. Or therwise, The Deeper which then covered it as a Garment, would now stand above the Mountaines. At his rebuke they flee, who with fetters of sand (to shew his power in weaknesse, with a Miracle in Nature) chaineth vp this iraged highest Hill to be but tame Furlongs, Cleomeides 11, which holdeth proportion (in their iust Diameters) to the Earth, but of one to 3218, sayth Ra. Hues de Globis. v. By the like magnitudes of Starres in all places, by the shadowes,

Tyrant,

Tyrant, that the Creatures might have a meet place of Habitation. Thus did not only the dry Land appeare, but by the same hand was enricked with Herbes and Trees, enabled in their mortall condition, to remayne immortall in their kind. And here beginneth Moses to declare the Creation of compound bodies; hitherto buied in the Elements.

THE FOURTH DAYES WORKE.

NOW when the Lord had made both Plants, Trees, and Light, without the influence, yea, before the being of the Sunne, Moone, or Starres, he now framed those fiery Balls, and glorious Lights, whereby the Heavens are beautified, the Ayre enlightned, the Seas ruled, and the Earth made fruitfull. Thus he did the fourth day, * after those other things created, left some foolish Naturalist should binde his mightie hand in Natures Court. That shining before dispersed these Lights now become the chiefe Officers in Natures Court. That shining before dispersed was vnited in these bodies, whether by refraction of those former beames, by these solid Globes, or by gathering that fiery substance into them, or by both, or by other meanes, I leave to others coniectures. * Many are the Dreames of Philosophers, some esteeming them Fire; some Earth, others Clouds, and others Stones, fired; Heraclides, and the Pythagoreans deemed each starre a World. They are commonly holden Round, simple, lucide bodies, the most compact and condensate ^b parts of their Orbs, or of that Ethereall Region, of, and in which they are: bright flames, not of this our fire which deuoureth and consumeth (for the whole Ocean would not serue the Sunne alone for a Draught, nor the Earth with all her store for a Breake-fast) but quickning and nourishing. Let vs a little consider of their Greatnesse, Swiftnesse, Number, Influence.

For the first, Ptolomey measured the Sunnes greatnesse 166 $\frac{1}{2}$ times as much as the whole Terrestriall Globe: Copernicus, whom Scaliger ^c calleth Alterum cui nostri Ptolomeum 162. Tycho Brabe ^d 140. The Moone is holden by Ptolomeus 39. times lesse then the Earth, by Copernicus 43. by Tycho 42. A bareginus and Alfaganius have added their opinions of the rest, therefore diuiding them into fixe ranks or formes of differing magnitudes: wherein as they somewhat differ from each other, so much more from Tycho Brabe, that Learned Dane, whose costs and * paines, in this Science are admirable. But Salomon (wiser then they all) had fore-told, ^e that the Heavens in height, and the Earth in depnesse, and the Kings heart, none can search out: that is, exactly and absolutely, as appeareth in the differing opinions, both of the Earths ^f Circuit and Diameter, and of the Altitude of the Heavens, and consequently of the quantitie of the Starres, which must presuppose the former. They agree not in the order of the Planets, nor how many Semi-diameters of the Earth the Heauen is cleaued, which after Ptolomeys Hypotheses are 20000. after Tychos reckoning 14000. Hence it is, that the quantitie and the swiftnesse ^h is much more after the former, then after this later opinion, which doth better salue the incrediblenesse thereof, then sayning a Giant-like labour (as Ramus ⁱ calleth it) of the Earths continuall rolling.

The number ^k of Starres, some haue reckoned 1600. others 1022. and Tycho Brabe more. The Iewes out of their Cabalists reckon 290160. Galileus his Glasse hath made them innumerable, in descrying infinite numbers, otherwise not visible to vs, and especially the Galaxia full of them. Yea, God himselfe propounds it to Abraham, ^l (whom Iosephus calls a great Astronomer) as a thing impossible to number them. It is his owne Royall Prerogatiue, ^m He counteth the number of the Starres, and bringeth out their Armies by number, and calleth them all by their names. The end why God placed them in the Firmament, Moses expresth, To separate the Day from the Night, and to be for signes and for seasons, and for dayes, and for yeares, and for lights in the Firmament of the Heavens, to give light vpon the Earth. Their influence and effects are in Scripture ⁿ mentioned: neither can any iustly deny the same in the Elements and Elementary bodies: The Stoicall Fate, the Chaldean, Iewish, and Arabian Fancies, are now dischymed euen by those ^o Learned, which maintayne in our dayes Iudiciall Astrologie, or commend the same. Neither can it agree with Christian Religion, to subiect the will of Man to any externall naturall force, nor with reason in matters contingent, and casuall to make them naturall Arbiters: nor will I easily beleue that particular euent can be fore-told from generall causes, especially in the affaires and fortunes of men. Where the numbers, substances, faculties, actions of these starrs are weakly or not at all known vnto vs (as hath bene shewed) it is like as to say, how many and what kind of Chickens a Hen will hatch, when wee see not all, nor scarce know any of the Egges vnder her. Angels, pierce the Center of the Earth in darkness, to discern the infernall Regions and Legions, beneath and above them all, searcheth into the Divine Nature: whereby, * Adam was, without study, the greatest Philosopher, (who at first sight knew the nature of the beasts, the originall of the Woman) and the greatest Divine (except the second Adam) that ever the Earth bare. The will also, in free choice of the best things, in * righteous disposition towards man, and true holiness towards God, was conformed to his will, for whose will sake it is; and was created. The body cannot so lively expresse the vertue of him that made it, but as it could; in that perfect constitution, (* so fearfully and wonderfully made) and as the Organ of the soule, whose weapon it was to righteousness, had some shadow thereof. The whole Man in his naturall Nobility beyond, and Princely Dominion over the other Creatures (that we mention not the hope of future blessedness) sheweth after what Image Man was created, and to what he should be renewed. The end whereunto God made Man, is God himselfe, who hath * made all things for himselfe: the subordinate end was Mans idlest happiness, the way whereunto is religious obedience.

Moses addeth, * He created them Male and Female, thereby to shew, that the Woman in Oeconomical respect is the Image and glory of the Man, being created for the Man, and of the Man, but in relation to God, or the World, She, as a Creature, was also framed after the same Image. As for that monstrous conceit of the Rabbins, that the first man was an Hermaphrodite, it deserueth not confutation or mention. The order of the Womens Creation is plainly related. God * finding not a meete helpe for Adam, in his sleepe tooke one of his ribs, wherof he built the Woman. This in a Mystery signified that deally sleepe of the heavenly Adam on the Crosse, whose stripes were our healing, whose death was our life, and out of whose bleeding side was by Divine dispensation framed his Spouse the Church. This may be part of the sense, or an application thereof, * as some say, to this Mystery; or the signification rather of the * thing it selfe here declared, then of the words, which properly and plainly set downe the Historie of a thing done, after the litterall sense to be expounded.

According to this sense Moses expresth the Creation, the making and marrying of the Woman. The Maker was God, the matter a Rib of Adam, the forme a building, the end to be a meete helpe. The Man was made of Dust, the Woman of the Man, to bee one fleish with the Man, and of a Rib, to be a helpe and supporter of him in his calling, which requirith strength: neyther could any bone be more easily spared in the whole body, which hath not such variety of any other kind: nor could any more designe the Woman her due place; not of the head, that she should not arrogate rule not of the feet, that the husband should not reckon her as his slave, but in a meane betwene both, and that neere the heart, in which they should (as in all Divine and Humane Lawes else) bee fast ioyned. The building of this body of the Woman, was in regard of the Progeny, which was in that larger room to haue the first dwelling. The soule of the Woman is to be conceived * as the soule of the Man before mentioned, immediately infused and created by God, hether equall to Man.

Being thus made, he is married by God himselfe vnto Adam, who brought her vnto him, to shew the sacred authority of Marriage, and of Parents in Marriage: A mutuall consent and gratulation followeth betwene the parties, lest any should tyrannically abuse his fatherly power. And thus are two made one fleish, in regard of one originall, equall right, mutuall consent, and bodily coniunction. And thus were this goodly couple glorious in nakedness, not so much in the ornaments of beautie, which made them to each other amiable, as of Maestie which made them to other creatures dreadful: the Image of God, clothing that nakedness, which in vs * appeareth filthy, in the most costly clothing. God further blessed them both with the power of multiplication in their owne kind, and dominion over other kinds; and gave them for food, * every herbe bearing seed which is upon all the earth, and every tree wherein is the fruit of a tree bearing seed. He doth (as it were) set them in possession of the Creatures, which by a Charter of free gift he had conveyed to them, to hold of him as Lord Paramount.

But lest any should thinke this but a niggardly and vnequall gift, whereas since the Flood more hath bene added, and that in a more vnworthinesse through mans sinne: let him consider, that since the Fall * the Earth is accursed, whereby many things are hurtfull to mans nature, and in those which are whollome, there is not such variety of kinds, such plentie in each variety, such ease in getting our plenty, or such quality in what is gotten, in the degree of goodness and sweetness to the taste and nourishment: which had they remayned in this sickly and elder Age of the World, we should not need to enue Cleopatra's vanity, or Heliogabalus his Superstition and curiositie. And had not Man sinned, * there should not haue needed the death of beasts to nourish his life, which without such stay should haue bene immortall: the vs whereof was after granted, rather to supply necessity when the Flood had weakened the Earth, then to minister a greater abundance then before it had; and least of all to satiate the greedie and curious appetites of more then beastly men.

Liberal

Liberrall and bountifull was Gods allowance, which yet as man abused in eating the forbidden fruit, so whether any sinfull man did transgresse by eating the flesh of beasts, as iniquity increased, it is vncertaine. And yet it is likely, that when the Earth was filled with carnellie, as men escaped not beaſtly butchery, ſo beaſts escaped not butcherly inhumanitie; and men that ſay not now for commiſſion to cate mans fleſh, would then much leſſe aſke leaue to feed on beaſts. Then did the goſly Patriarchs liue many hundred yeares without ſuch food, whereas now we reach not to one with this helpe, that I ſpeake not of thoſe, which by abuſe hereof are as cruell to themſelues (in ſhortning their dayes by ſurfets) as to the Creatures, making their bellies to become Warrens, Fiſh-poolles, Shambles, and what not, ſaue what they ſhould bee. Had not Man bene Deuillith in ſinning, hee had not bene beaſtly in feeding, nay; the beaſts had abhorred that which now they praſtiſe, both againſt their Lord, and their fellow-ſeruants. The Wolfe ſhould haue dwelt with the Lambe, the Leopard ſhould haue lye with the Kid, and the Caſſe, and the Lyon, and the ſat Beaſt together, and a little Child might leade them. And this in the time of the Flood appeared, when all of them kept the peace with each other, and dutifull allegiance to their Prince in that great Family and little moueable World, Noahs Arke.

The place of Adams dwelling is expreſſed by Moses; And the Lord God planted a Garden Eaſt-ward in Eden, and there he put the man whom hee had made, Genſ. 2.8. Maruell it is to ſee the conſuſion which ſinne bringeth, which appeareth not only in the bodie, ſoule, dyet, and other Prerogatiues of our firſt Parents; but in this place alſo, then a place of pleaſure, a Paradiſe and Garden of delights: after, a place prohibited, and kept by the blade of a ſword broken: now the place cannot bee found in Earth, but is become a common place in mens braines, to macerate and vex them in the curious ſearch hereof. Some doe conuert this Hiſtory into an Allegory, as did the Manichees and the Originiſts, conſuted by Marthodius, as Epiphanius witneſſeth. q Hierome in Dan. 10. ſaith, that ſeeking for ſhadowes in the truth, they ouer-terne the Truth it ſelfe. Umbras & imagines in veritate quarentes, ipſam conantur enerrare ueritatem, ut flumina, & arbores, & Paradifum putent Allegoria legibus ſe debere ſubnere. Such Myſticall, Miſt-all, and Miſſe-all Interpreters are our Familiſts in theſe times, by vnſeaſonable and vnreaſonable Allegories, rayling myſts ouer the Scripture-ſenſe, which thereby they miſſe and cannot find. Augustine relateth three opinions, that Allegorically, which he conſuteth: the literal, and that which followeth both the one and the other, as himſelfe doth. The Hermians and Seleucians are ſaid to denie, that there was any ſuch place: and the naked Adamites accounted their Church to bee Paradiſe. Others are ſo prodigall & aſcribe hereunto all the Earth, which was a Paradiſe, till ſinne brought in a Curſe. Thus holdeth Wolfgangus Wiſſenburg, Goropius alſo & Vadianus are of like minde, That mans exile was but the alteration of their happy cōdition, that the fiery ſword was the fiery Zone, A great while it went for currant, that it was a pleaſant Region, by a long tract of Sea and Land, ſeparated from our habitable World, and liſted vp to the Circle of the Moone, where by it was out of the reach of Noahs flood, as a truly perhaps as Patricius and others haue found another World in the Moone, with men and beaſts therein; of greater ſtature and longer life then here with vs. Thus hath Petrus Compoſitor, and Strabus, and many Trauellers in old times haue trauelled with this conceit of their Fooles Paradiſe, and brought forth a lie, as appeareth by their Legends. That Saint Brandon ſayled thither from Ireland, is as true as that he met Indu in the way, releaſed from his paines, (as he was alway from Saturday to Sunday Euen-ſong:) or that they made fire on a fiſh (ſuppoſing it to bee an Iland) as that Legend telleth. It ſhould ſeeme the Mai in the Moone called him, and ſhewed him the way to this Paradiſe, or that Dimas, which (according to the Relations of Antoninus Diogenes) trauelling beyond Thule, went ſo farre North that hee came to the Moone, which ſeemed a ſhining Earth, where he ſaw many ſtrange ſights, as credible as the former: or elſe great Lucifer himſelfe, who (as a later Traueller reporteth) hath lately bequeathed a Lieutenant to Ignatius and his Colony of Ieſuites in the New Hell, in that New-found-World of the Moone; the care of the foundation whereof he committeth to that Iebuiticall ſocietie. But let vs deſcend from this Lunaticke Paradiſe.

Others place it Eaſtward, in the higheſt top of the Earth, where the foure Riuers, mentioned by Moses, haue their originall, whence they runne, and are ſwallowed vp of the Earth, and after riſing in diuers places of the World, are knowne by the names of Nilus, Ganges, Tigris, Euphrates, Hugo de S. Victore and Adrichomius are of this opinion; yea, the great Cardinall Caietane and Bellarmino place Henoch and Elias in Earthly Paradiſe, yet liuing there vntill the time of Antichriſt, which wood he cannot ſee (being in the miſt of it) for Trees. But the diſcouery of the World by Trauellers, and deſcription thereof by Geographers, will not ſuffer vs to follow them (to the want of which Art, I meane Geographie, ſuch fantasies may be imputed) whereby alſo is conſuted the opinion of them which place it vnder the Equinoctiall Circle, as Durandus and Bonauentura.

g Tigris is both the greater River, and a smaller, which runneth out of Euphrates into Tigris which is here meant.

4 Others account so much to Paradise as those four Rivers doe water, even the chiefe part of Affrike and Asia: and some confine it in streighter limits of Syria, Arabia and Mesopotamia, as if Adam had been so covetous as his Posteritie, or so laborious as to husband so large Countries. The false interpretation of those Rivers to bee Nilus, Ganges, &c. was the cause of this error; the e Septuagint translating in stead of Sicor (which is Nilus) Gibon the name of one of these streames.

Moses as it were of purpose by an exact Chorography and delineation of the situation, doth meete with those errors, and with other the like, which I doe not here relate. Neither is their opinion to be followed, which drowne all altogether in the Deluge, seeing that after that time Moses wrote this. Franciscus Junius in his readings on Genesis hath largely and learnedly handled this matter, and added a Map also of Heden in which it stood, and the course of the Rivers with the Countries adjacent. In him the Reader may find satisfaction. He sheweth out of Curtius, Plinie, and Solinus, the miraculous fertilitie of that part of Babylonia, which Prothomy calleth Ananitis, or Andanitis, easily declined from Heden, the name given by Moses, mentioned after Moses time, 2. Reg. 19. 12. and Esay 37. 12.

For the four Rivers he sheweth them out of Palomy, Syrach, Plinie, Dion, Marcellinus, &c. to be so many diuisions of Euphrates, whereof Baharsares, or Neharsares is Gibon, that which passeth through Babylon, is for the excellencie peculiarly called Perath or Euphrates, Nehar-malca, or Basilius, Pishon, Tigris, & Chiddkel. For the fiery sword he obserueth out of Plinie, lib. 2. c. 106. a certaine miracle of Nature in Babylonia, where the ground is seen burning continually about the quantitie of an Acre. But this place will not serue to dispute this point. If those Rivers doe not now remaine, or haue altered either channell or names, it is no new thing in so old a continuance of the World. It is more then probable, that here in these parts Paradise was, although now deformed by the Floud, and by Time consumed, and become a Stage of Barbarisme.

Mappe or Topography of Paradise.

Neither hath the place alone been such a pitched field of Opinions, but the fruit also which Moses expresseth to be the instrument and occasion of Adams ruine, hath set some mens teeth on edge, who tell vs what it is, as if they had lately tasted of it, a certaine signe indeede, and fruit of that once vnlawfull tasting. ^h Coropius a man addicted to opinions, which I know not whether he did hold more strangely or strongly, though he enlargeth Paradise ouer the World, yet he maketh Adam an Indian (maruell he placeth him not in Dutchland, for that was his language, if Becanus be to be beleued.) About the Riuer Acefiner, betwixt Indus and Ganges (saith he) groweth that admirable Figge-tree, which beate Large descibeth out of Plinie, Theophrastus, and Strabo, whose branches spreading from the bodie, doe bend themselves downewards to the earth, where they take hold, and with new rooting multiply themselves, like a maze or wood. One told ⁱ Clusius that hee himselfe hath bene one of eight hundred or a thousand men, which had hidden themselves vnder one of these trees, adding, that some of them were able to couer three thousand men.

Strange is this tree, and Becanus is with conceit hereof rauished into the pleasures of Paradise. This tree ^k Linschoten describeth, growing about Goa, and (to bring vs out of Coropius Paradise) saith, that it hath no fruit worth the eating: but a small kind like Oliues, which is food onely for birds. He telleth vs ^l of another Indian Figge-tree, growing rather like a Reed then a Tree, a mans height, a spannethicke, the leaues a fathome long, and three spans broad: The Arabians and Indians suppose this to be that dismall fruit. The cause of this opinion Paludanus in his Annotations vpon Linschoten, ascribeth to the pleasantnesse of the smell and taste. Being cut in the middle, it hath certaine veines like a Crosse, whereon the Christians in Syria make many speculations. Yea the same Author telleth of a hill in the Ile of Seilan, called Adams hill, where they shew his foot-print, to prooue that hee liued there: of which reade our discourse of that Island. ^m Bohier in his Ara cali, citeth out of Moses Barcephas, That wheate was the Tree of Knowledge of good and euill; and so doe the Saracens hold: so curious and vaine is blind Reason without a guide. And the Cabilists (saith ⁿ Ricinus) say, that Eues sinne was nothing but the wringing out of grapes to her husband; which yet he interpreteth allegoricall.

But I thinke I haue wearied the Reader, with leading him thus vp and downe in Paradise; small fruit, I confesse, is in this fruit, and as little pleasure in this Paradise, but that varietie happily may please some, though it be to others tedious. And for a conclusion, it is (I thinke) worth the noting, that M. Cartwright an eye-witnesse, by the counsell of the Nestorian Patriarke at Mossul or Ninine, visited the Ile of Eden, still so called, and by them holden a part of Paradise, ten miles in circuit, and sometime walled: which it be not part of that Garden-plot mentioned by Moses, yet it seemes to be part of that Countrey sometime called Eden, in the East part whereof Paradise was planted, and not farre (according to Iunius Map) from that happy vnhappy place.

CHAP. IIII.

Of the World Religion, and of the Religion of our first Parents before the Fall.

AVING thus made way to our History of Religions, the first (and therefore best) Religion, is in the first place to be declared. Onely somewhat may be not vnfitly spoken before of the word. Religion in it selfe is naturall, written in the hearts of all men, which will (as here we shew) rather be of a false then no Religion: but the name whereby it is so called, is by birth a forreiner, by common vie made a free-denizon among vs, descended from the Romanes, which by their Swords made way for their Words, the Authors both of the thing it selfe, and of the appellation, to a great part of this Westerne world. But as the Latines haue accustomed themselves to multiplicity and varietie of Rites, so haue they varied not a little about the Parents, (as I may say) of this child (as the Grecians sometimes about Homers birth-place) some giuing one Etymologie & derivation of the word, and some another, that there needeth some Herald to shew the true pedigree, or some Grammarian Dictator to cease the strife.

^a Seruius Sulpitius (as Macrobius citeth him) calleth that Religion, which for some holiness is remoued and separated from vs, quasi relictam a relinquendo dictam. Seruius desireth to be relinquished, and his opinion remoued and separated euen with an Anathema, if hee would remoue and separate Religion from vs, which is the life of our life, the way to our happinesse. The like is added of Ceremonia a carendo dicta, a iust name and reason of the most of the present Romish ceremonies, whose want were their best company. Masserius Sabinius

in A. Gellius hath the like words. Religio, with Tully is Cultus deorum, the worship of the gods, hereby distinguisht from Superstition, because they were, faith he, called Superstitious, that spent whole dayes in prayer and sacrifices, that their children might be Superstitious, furiatours after them: or rather as Lactantius, * Qui superstitem memoriam defunctorum colunt, aut qui parentibus suis superstites celebrant imagines eorum domi, tanquam Deos penates. But they which diligently vied and perused the things pertaining to diuine worship, & tanquam relegentes, were called Religious. Religiosus ex relegendo tanquam ex elegendo elegentes, intelligendo intelligentes. * Saint Augustine better acquainted with Religion then Cicero, commeth nearer to the name and nature thereof, deniung it * a relegendo, of choosung againe, hunc eligens, vel potius relegentes, amiseramus enim negligentes, unde & religio dicta peribetur. This word Religens is cited by Nigidius Figulus in Anulus Gellius; Religenter esse oportet, Religiosum nefas; Religiosus being taken in bad sense for Superstitiosus. The same Father elsewhere, in his booke de vera Religione * acknowledgeth another original of the word, which Lactantius before him had obserued, a relegendo, of fasting, as beeing the bond betwene vs and God. Ad Deum tendentes, faith Augustine, & ei uni relegentes animas nostras, unde religio dicta creditur. Religet ergo nos Religio uni omnipotenti Deo. Lactantius his words are; Diximus nomen religionis a vinculo pietatis esse deductum, quod hominem sibi Deus reliquerit & pietate constringent, quia seruare nos ei ut Domino & obsequi ut patri, necesse est. Melius ergo (quam Cicero) illud nomen Lucretius interpretatus est, quia ait se religionem nado exoluere. And according to this Etymology is that which M. Camden faith, * Religion in old English was called Ean-faste, as the one and onely Assurance and fast Anchor-hold of our soules health.

* This is the effect of sinne and irreligion, that the name and practise of Religion is thus diuersified, els had there beene as one God, soone religion, and one language, wherein to gine it with iust reason, a proper name. For till men did relinquere, relinquish their first innocencie, and the Author, of whom, and in whom they held it, they needed not religere, to make a second choice, or seeke reconciliation, nor thus relegere, with such paines and vexation of spirit to enquire and practise those things which might religare, bind them furer and faster vnto God; and in these respects for seuerall causes, Religion might seeme to be deriued from all those fountaines. Thus much of the word, whereby the nature of Religion is in part declared, but more fully by the description thereof.

Religio est, faith Augustine, que superioris cuiusdam naturæ, quam diuinam vocant, curam ceremoniarum, offert. Religion is here described generally (whether false or truly) professing the inward obseruation, and ceremoniall cult and worship of that which is esteemed a higher and diuine nature. The true Religion is the true rule and right way of seruing God. Or to speake as the case now standeth with vs; * True Religion is the right way of reconciling and reuniting man to God, that hee may be saved. This true way hee alone can shew vs, who is the Way and the Truth; neither can we see this Sunne, except he first see vs, and giue vs both eyes to see, and light alio whereby to discern him.

But to come to Adam, the subject of our present discourse: His religion before his fall, was not to reunite him to God, from whom he had not been separated, but to vnite him faster, and daily to knit him neerer in the experience of that which nature had ingrafted in him. For what els was his Religion, but a pure streame of * Originall Righteousnesse, flowing from that Image of God, whereunto he was created. Whereby his mind was enlightened to know the onely very God, and his heart was engrauen, not with the Letter, but the life and power of the Law, louing and proving that good and acceptable and perfect will of God. The whole man was conformable, and enlaueured this holy practise, the body being pliant and flexible to the rule of the Soule, the Soule to the Spirit, the Spirit to the Father of Spirits, and God of all Flesh, which no lesse accepted of this obedience, and delighted (as the Father in his Child) in this new modell of himselfe. How happy was that blessed familiarity with God, societie of Angels, subiection of Creatores, enuied onely of the Deuils, because this was so good, and they so wicked? Nature was his Schoollmaster, or if you will rather, God vs Visiter, that taught him (without Learning) all the rules of Diuine Learning, of Politicall, Oeconomical, and Morall wisdom.

The whole Law was perfectly written in the fleshie Tables of his heart, besides the speciall command concerning the trees in the midst of the Garden, the one being an vniuersall and euerslasting rule of righteousness, the other by speciall authority appointed, as the manifestation of God vs diuine prerogative in commanding, and a triall of mans integritie in obeying. For the first part hereof, since it was so blurred in our hearts, it was renewed by the voyce and finger of God on mount Sinai, giuen then immediately by God himselfe, as God ouerall; whereas the other parts of the Law, containing the Ceremoniall and Politicall ordinances, were immediately giuen by the Ministerie of Moses, as to that particular Nation.

Neither

Neither know I any that make doubt of this whole Law naturally and originally communicated: save only that some make question of the Sabbath. However, I must confesse that I fee nothing in that Commandment of the Decalogue prescribed, but is Natural and Morall; for, both the Rest is so farre Morall, as the outward acts of Divine worship cannot be performed without suspending for a while our bodily labours: although Rest, as a figure, bee lawfull, and in it selfe is either a fruit of wearinesse or idleness. And that the seventh day observation is naturall (I meane the observing of one day of feuen in euery weeke) appeareth both by the first order established in Nature, when God blest and sanctified the seventh day; ^k the frame of Interpreters, especially the later, running and ioyning in this interpretation, (the Elder being somewhat more then enough busied in Allegories;) by the reason in the Commandment, drawne from Gods example and Satisfaction in the Creation: by the obseruation of a Sabbath, before this promulgation of the Law, Exod. 16. and by the diuision of the dayes into weekes, ^l both then and before by Noah, Gen. 1. 10. 12. by the necessitie of a Sabbath, as well before the Law in the dayes of the Patriarkes, as in the times of David or Salomon: by the perfection of the number of feuen in the ^m Scriptures; by the generall consent of all, that it is Morall to set apart some time to the Lord of times, and an orderly set time to the God of order, which men might generally agree on for their publike deuotions: which the Patriarkes practised in their Sacrifices and Assemblies: the Heathens blindly, as other things in their Feasts. Thus saith Philo: This is a feast day, not of one Citie or Region, but of the whole world; and may be properly called the generall birth-day of the world: And Clement Alexandrinus sheweth out of Plato, Homer, Hesiod, Callimachus and Salomon, that the seuenth day was not sacred alio to the Hebrewes; but to the Greekes also: and how mystical was the number of feuen, not only among the Iewes, but also among the Heathens, both Philosophers and Poets: as Philo, ⁿ Macrobinus, and others have related,

Hereunto agreeeth the Iudgement of Aquinas, in Præceptum de Iustificatiōe Sabbathi ponitur inter præcepta Decalogi, in quantum est præceptum morale, non in quantum est ceremoniale. The Precept of Justifying the Sabbath, is set amongst the Precepts of the Decalogue, as it is moral, not as it is ceremonial Precept. It hath pleased him, a fourth M. Hooker, as of the rest, so of Times to exact some parts by way of perpetual homage, never to be dispensed withall, nor remitted. The Moral Law requiring therefore a seventh part throughout the age of the whole world to bee that way employed, although with some day bee changed, in regard of a new revolution begun by our Saviour Christ, yet the same proportion of time continueth which was before, because in reference to the benefite of Creation, and now much more of renovation thereunto added by him, which was Prince of the world to come, wee are bound to account the Justification of one day in seven, a duty which Gods immutable Law doth exact for ever. Thus saith Hooker.

This indeed in the Sabbath was Iewish and Ceremoniall, to obferue onely that laft and feuenth day of the weeke, and that as a figure, and laftly, with thofe appointed Ceremonies, and that manner of oblation. Thus laith Aquinas, 1. Habere aliquod tempus deputatum ad vacandum diuinis, cadit fub precepto morali. Sed in quantum, &c. To haue fome f特 time for the feruice of God is morall: but fo ferue this Precept is ceremoniall, as in it is determined a fpeciall time, in figne of the Creation of the World. Likewife it is ceremoniall, according to the Allegoriical fignification; in as much as it was a figne of the Reft of Chrift in the grave, which was the feuenth day. And likewife according to the morall fignification, as it fignifieth a ceafing from every act of finne, and the Reft of the mind in God. Likewife according to the Analogiical fignification, as it preferveth the Reft of the fruition of God, which fhall be in our Countrey.

To these oblations of Thomas, we may adde that strictnesse of the obseruation, That they might not kindle a fire on the Sabbath, and such like. And howsoever some testimonies of the Fathers be alledged against this truth, and to prooue that the Sabbath was born at Mount Sinai, as of Tertullian, Iustin Martyr, Eusebius, Cyprian, Augustine, which deny the Sabbathizing of the Patriarchs before that time, and account it typical: Why may not we interpret them of that Sabbath of the Jewes, which we haue thus distinguished from the Morall Sabbath, by those former notes of difference? Broughton in his Conent alleadgeth the Conent of Rabbins, as of Ramban on Gen. 26. and Aben Ezra vpon Exod. 10. That the Fathers obserued the Sabbath before Moses. And Moses himselfe no looner cometh to a fourth day, but he sheweth that = God reiteth, blessed, sanctified the same.

It reſteth therefore, that a time of reſt from bodily labour was ſanctified vnto ſpiritual deuotions from the beginning of the world, and that a ſeuenth dayes reſt began, not with the Moſaical Ceremonies in the Wilderneſſe (as ſome men will haue it) but with Adam in Paradiſe. That which is morall (ſay ſome) is eternall, and muſt not giue place; I anſwer, That the Commandmentes are eternall, but yet ſubordinate. There is a firſt of all the Commandements, and there is a ſecond like to this, like in qualitie, not in equallitie; and in euery Commandement the Soule of obedience (which is the obedience of the soule) taketh place of that body of obedience, which is performed by the body. Mercie is preferred before sacrifice, and charitie before outward worship: Paul & staith his preaching to heale Eutychus: Christ patronizeth & his Disciples, plucking the eares of Corney and affirmeth, That the Sabbath was made for Man, and not Man for the Sabbath. Although therefore both rest and workes of the Sabbath give place to such duties, which the present occasion presenteth, as more weightie and necessary to that time, yet doth it not follow, that the Sabbath is not morall, no more then the Commandement of Almes is not morall, because (as Baynard oblieteth) the prohibitive Commandement of stealing is of greater force, and more bindeth. And in a word, the Negative Precepts are of more force, and more vniuersally bind then the affirmative. A man must hate his Father and Mother for Christs sake, and breake the Sabbath rest for his Neighbour in cases of necessitie. And therefore such scrupulous & fancies, as some obtrude vnder the name of the Sabbath, esteeming it a greater sinne to violate this holy Rest, then to commit Murther, cannot be defended.

Pardon this long Discourse, whereunto the longer Discourses of others haue brought me. But now me thinkes I heare thee say, And what is all this to Adams integrity? Doubtlesse, Adam had his particular calling, to till the ground: his general calling also, to serue God; which as he was spiritually to performe in all things, so being a body, he was to haue time and place set apart for the bodily performance thereof. And what example could hee better follow, then of his Lord and Creator? But some object, This is to slacken him running, rather then to incite and prouoke him; to bind, and not to loose him; cannot be a spur, but a bridle to his deuotion. But they should consider, that we do not tie Adam to the seventh day onely; but to the seventh especially, wherein to performe set, publique, and solenne worship. Neither did Daniel, that prayed thrise a day, or David, in his seuen times, or Saint Paul, in his inunction of praying continuall, conceiue that the Sabbath would hinder men, and not rather fur: her them in these workes. Neither was Adams state so excellent, as that he needed no helps: which wofull experience in his fall hath taught. God gaue him power to liue, yea with euermlasting life: and should not Adam therefore haue eaten, yea and haue had contentment time for food and sleep, and other naturall necessities? How much more in this perfect, yet flexible and variable condition of his Soule, did he need meanes of establishment, although euen in his outward calling, he did not forget, nor was forgotten? Which outward workes, though they were not irksome and tedious, as sinne hath made them to vs, yet did they detain his body, and somewhat distract his mind, from that full and euire seruice which the Sabbath might exact of him. Neither doe they shew any strong reason for their opinion, which hold the sanctification of the Sabbath, Genes. 2. to be set downe by way of anticipation, or as a preparatiue to the Iewish Sabbath, ordained 4243. yeares after.

If any shall aske, Why the same seventh day is not still obserued of Christians; I answer, This was figuratiue, and is abolished; but a seventh day still remaineth. Lex naturalis est, conuictam habens ceremonialem designationem diei (saith Iunius.) The Law is naturall, hauing adioyned thereto the ceremoniell appointment of the day. But why is this day now called the Lords day? I answer, euen therefore: because it is the Lords day, not changed by the Churches Constitution Mercie, as some seeme to hold: except by the Churches authority they meane Christ and his Apostles: not defended to vs by Tradition, as the Papists maintaine, seeing the Scriptures, Alt. 20. 7. 1. Cor. 16. 21. Apoc. 1. 10. mention the name and celebration by the constant practice of the Apostles: yea, Christ himselfe as he rose on that day, so did he vially appear on that day to his Apostles before his Ascension. Christ therefore and his Apostles are our Authors of this change. And the Church euer since hath constantly obserued it. The Fathers teach, yea the Papists themselves acknowledge this truth. So Bellarmin de Cultu Sancti. l. 3. c. 11. faith, Ius diuinum requirebat, ut unus dies Hebdomade dicaretur cultui diuino: non autem conueniebat ut seruaretur Sabbathum: itaque ab Apostolis in diem Dominicum versum est. I am in the Primitive Church called the Lords day, the day of Bread and of Light, because of the Sacraments of the Supper and Baptisme there in administred, called Bread and Light. And how it may be ascribed to Tradition, & Bellarmin, the great Patron of Traditions, sheweth out of Iustin Martyr, who saith, Christus hac illis (Apostolis & Discipulis) tradidit, Iustin in fine 2. Apology. He there also reporteth, That they had their Ecclesiasticall Assemblies euery Lords day, The Rhemists, which ascribe it to Tradition in Annot. Matth. 15. acknowledge the institution thereof, in Annot. 1. Cor. 16. 2. Ignatius may be allowed Arbitrer in this question of the Sabbath, who thus writeth to the Magnesiani: Non Sabbathismus, Let vs not obseue the Sabbath after the Iewish manner, as delighting in ease, For he that worketh not, let him not eat: but let euerie one of vs keep the Sabbath spiritually, not eating meat dressed the day before, and walking set paces, &c. But let euery Christian celebrate the Lords day, consecrated to the Lords resurrection, as the Queene and Princede of all dayes.

Now for the particular Commandement, which was given him as an especiall proofe of his obedience, in a thing otherwise not vnlawfull, it was the forbidding him to eate of the fruit of the Tree of Knowledge. For in the midst of the Garden God had planted two Trees, which some call * Sacraments, and were, by Gods Ordinance, signes vnto him; one of life, if he obeyed; the other of death, by disobedience. Not as the Iewes thought, and Julian scoffed, That the Tree had power to giue sharpnesse of wit. And although some thinke signes needlesse to so excellent a creature; yet beeing mutable, subiect to temptation, and each way flexible to vertue or vice, according as he vsed his naturall power of free-will; I see not why they should deny God that libertie to impose, or man that necessitie to need such monitories, and (as it were) Sacramentall instructions. For what might these Trees haue furthered him in carefulnesse, if he had considered life and death, not so much in these Trees, as in his free-will, and obeying or disobeying his Creator.

These Trees, in regard of their signification, and euent, are called the Tree of Life, and the Tree of Knowledge of good and euill: which was not euill or hurtfull in it selfe, but was a visible rule, whereby good and euill should be knowne, and that by reason of the Commandement annexed, which he might by this Precept see to be grounded in obeying or disobeying the authority of the Law-giuer. An easie rule, and yet too easly broken. For when as God did hereby challenge his own Soueraignty, by imposing so easie a fine, which might haue forbidden all but one (as contrariwise he allowed) and fore-signified the danger, that he might continue his goodnesse to man, continuing in obedience; yet did man herein shew his contempt, in reiecting so easie a yoke, and so light a burthen. I will not reason whether these two Trees may properly be called Sacraments: of which (say some) the one was but for the bodily life, and better neuer to haue touched the other: this we know, that in eating of this he lost both bodily and spirituall life, which the name and institution thereof forewarned, and should haue preuented: otherwise, in eating of the other, immortallitie had been sealed both in soule and body, to him and his for euer. Strange it seemeth, that he should need no monitorie signes to preuent that, which, euen with these helps added, he did not eschew.

CHAP. V.

Of the Fall of Man: and of Originall Sinne.

Therto we haue beheld the Creation of the World, and of our first Parents, the liuely Images of the Creator and the Creature; whom we haue somewhat leisurely viewed in a naked Maiesty, delighting themselves in the enamelled walks of their delightfull Garden. The Ruers whereof ranne to present their best offices to their new Lords, from which they were forced by the baker streames, greedily of the sight and place which they could not hold: The Trees stouped to behold them, offering their shady mantle, and varietie of fruits, as their naturall tribute: each creature in a silent gladnesse reioyced in them, and they enioyed all mutuall comforts in the Creator, the Creatures, and in themselves. A blessed Payre, who enioyed all they desired, whiles their desire was worth the enioying: Lords of all, and of more then all, Content, which might in all they saw, see their Makers bounty; and beyond all they could see, might see themselves comprehended, where they could not comprehend, of that infinite Greatnesse and goodnesse, which they could not but loue, reuerence, admire and adore. This was then their Religion, to acknowledge with thankfulness, to be thankfull in obedience, to obey with cherefulness, the Author of all this good: to the performance whereof, they found no outward, no inward impediment, Sicknesse, Perturbation and Death (the deformed issue of Sinne) not yet being entered into the World.

In this plight did Satan (that old Serpent) see, disdain and enuy them. It was not enough for him, and the deuillish crue of his damned associates, for their late rebellion, to be banished Heauen, but the inferior world must be filled with his venome, working that malice on the Creatures here, which he could not there so easly wrecke on their Creator. And because Man was here Gods Deputy and Lieutenant, as a petty God on the Earth, hee chooseth him as the fittest subiect, in whose ruine to despise his Maker. To this end he vseth not a Lion-like force, which then had been bootlesse, but a Serpentine sleight, vsing that subtil creature as the meekest instrument to his Labyrinthian projects. Whereas by inward temptation he could not so easly preuaile, by insinuating himselfe into their minds, he wendes himselfe into this winding Beast, disposing the Serpents tongue to speak to the Woman (the weaker Vessel) singled from her husband, and by questioning doth first vndermine her. The * Woman

* It is by all affirmed, that the fall was very soon after the Creation, as appeareth by circumstances of the narration, by Satans malice, the womans virginity, and many hold, it was the very day of their Creation. 2. lib. 1. li. 1. cap. 1.

(whether he had not yet experience of the Nature of the Creatures, or did admire so strange an accident, and would satise his curious mind in the further tryall) entertained discourse, and was presently snared. For though he held her to the Commandement, yet the threatening annexed, he did somewhat mince and extenuate. What she seemed to lessen, he feared not to annihilate, and wholly disannull, propounding not onely impunity, but aduantage. That they should be as Gods, in the enriching of their minds with further knowledge. This he periwaded by the equivocating in the name of the Tree (the first equivocation we read of, ^a otherwise plainly termed a lye) charging G o d with fallshood and malignitie.

Thus he that abode not in the Truth himselfe, but was a Man-slayer from the beginning, and the Father of Lying, which he no where else borrowed, but had of his owne, periwaded her by his great subtiltie, first to doubt of G o d s Truth in his Word (the first particular sinne that euer mans heart entertained; for the other were but occasions and inducements; disobedience and vnthankfulness are more generall) after that, she vnlawfully lusted after this new knowledge, bewitched with the pleasantness of the fruit to the taste and sight, shee sooke, and did eate, and gave to her husband likewise. The highest power of the soule is first entrapped, the lusting and sensible faculties follow after, iustly plagued by a correspondent inward rebellion, that the sense now ruleth the appetite; and this the reason in our corrupt estate, which hence proceeded.

No marvell then if such a combination of so many sinnes in one, wrung from the iustice of G o d, such a multitude of iudgements on them and theirs, in the desacing that goodly and glorious Image of G o d; subtilling (in stead thereof) the Body to Sicknesse, Cold, Heat, Nakednesse, Hunger, Thirst, Stripes, Wounds, Death; the Minde to Ignorance, Doubtings, Vanitie, Phancies, Phrenzies; the Will to Vnchastnesse, Pas-sion, Perturbation; the Whole Man is made a slave to Sinne within him, to the Deuill without; whence he must expect Wages futable to his Worke, Death; Spiritually, Naturall, and Eternall: an infinite punishment, for offending an infinite Maiesty.

Thus had they put out their light to obscure darkenesse: and if they were not presently cast into vttter darkenesse, it was G o d s mercy (not their merit) which suspended the first and naturall death, to prevent that second and eternal. But spiritually they were euen already dead in sinnes, as appeared by the accusations of their conscience, whereof Moser saith, The eyes of them both were opened, and they knew that they were naked. Conscience, before Verities keeper, was now become Hells Habenger, then flashing lightnings in the face of their minds, to shew, that their nakednesse did now appeare filthy in G o d s light: Lightnings indeed, which could onely lighten to terrifie, not enlighten with instruction and comfort: Which sparke remaineth after the fire of Gods Image extinct, by the mercifull prouidence of G o d, in some to bee a bridle of Nature, lest they should runne into all exesse of vanitie, and not leaue a face of the world in the world, and to be to others, by disposition and working of a higher and supernaturall Light, a preparatiue to, and a preferuatiue in that light of Life. So much the greater is their sinne, that seeke to flash out these flashings: and whereas they cannot read the booke of Scripture, and will not read the booke of the Creature, labour to extinguiish also this Light of Nature, that with seared consciences, they may more freely in darkenesse commit the workes of darkenesse. And euen this did Adam seeke, if G o d had not brought him out of his Owles nest. For what could a Fig-leave hide from G o d? and did they thinke the innocent Trees would conspire with them to concale Traytors? Was there any darkenesse which was not Light to him? Or could Breaches and Trees couer their Soules, which received the first and worst nakednesse; till which, Nakednesse to the body, was a Clothing of Beauty, a Luery of Bounty, an Ensigne of Maiesty? Such broken pipes seeke they that forsake the Fountain of li-

And yet when G o d commeth into Iudgement, and s makes the winde to vsher him vnto his priuate Sessions in Paradise; to those shiftable shifts they added worde, impiously accusing G o d, vncharitably charging one another, to put from themselves that blame, which thus claued faster to them. A medicine worke then the disease, or a disease in stead of a medicine, hypocrisie, that will not see her owne sicknesse, and seekes rather to couer, then to cure; to couer by charging others, then recover by discharging and discouering it selfe; as if equite pretended were, not iniquitie doubled. G o d proceedeth to sentence, a sentence worthy of G o d, shewing at once his infinite iustice in the punishment of sinne, and no lesse infinite mercie, to prouide an infinite price to redeeme vs; by his infinite power bringing good out of euill, euill, and by his misifull Wife, me taking that wife one in his craftineffe, who in the destruction of Man, had fought Gods dishonour, so good is it that euill should be, when this Soueraigne goodneffe purpofeth to effect his good will by wicked instruments, out of their darkeneffe, producing his owne maruellous light: as appeared in this worke of Sathan an aduersary, intended to his defpite; in, and by the promised Seede, difpofed to his glory. The Serpent hath a bodily curle in his future bodily difficulties; which still continue, for his instrumentall and bodily employment.

The *old Serpent and spirituall Enemy, with a spirituall and eternall curse, the breaking of his head by that Seed of the Woman, that should once lead Captiuitie captiue. Our Parents are cursed, yet so, as their curse is turned into a blessing, all things working to the best: In sorrow shall be the Womans conceptions, but recompensed with the joy which followeth (and as it were, the Mid-wife in their travail) because of fruit borne into the World; and more then recompenced, in that they are saued by bearing of children, if they continue in the faith, and live in holinesse with modestie. Adam is set to labour, not as before, with delight, but with paine and difficulty; the Earth also being cursed for his sake: yet by this narrow way, by this crosse-way, he is guided to Heaven; the hope wherof was given him before Paradise was taken from him. So true is it, that in iudgement he remembereth mercy, if we can learne to live by faith, and not by sight.

This, that Moses telleth of the fall of Man, Experience doth in manner proclaime through the World, in the manifold effects thereof, which we daily see. For whereas the World was made for Man, as before is shewed, who alone, in regard of his bodily and spirittuall nature, can need and vie it, no creature in the world is in his kind so imperfect as man. Hee that was before an earthly God, is now become an incarnate Deuill, and for aspiring to be like his Lord, was made a seruant of his seruants; the noblest part in him becomming a vaine Officer to degrade him, Reason it selfe dejected at the feet of Sense, to be a slaue, and a very Bawd to sensuall pleasures, a very Broker for dung-hill profits. And what is this but to metamorphose man into a beast? vnsleife that some in a lower degree, liuing onely to liue, suffocated with eating, drinking, sleeping, are degenerated into plants? And if he descend not lower, to become torpid and liuellesse, yet doth he participate the imperfections of those things, and that without their perfections, as if with an imperfect retrograde hee would returne into his first elements, or in a perfected imperfection, to his first nothing. What stone so hard as mans heart is rentlesse, remorselesse to his best good? What dust more subiect to the wind, or water more flexible, then hee to temptation and sinne? But those things remaine in their nature, or natural place; Man is a fuming smoke, a passing shadow. And yet if wee could stay at our Elements, it were somewhat better; but wee are seruants and drudges beneath all names of basenesse, vnbowelling the Earth, and our selues in the earth, for a little hardened earth, that neuer had the dignitie to see, no not to be seen of the Sunne. We seeme to rule the Skie, Winds, and Seas; indeed we aduenture our liues to their mercy, and not three fingers thickelesse doth separate vs from death, that we may bring home an idle discourse, or somewhat, almost lesse then nothing, that we call a Jewell. Once, we inuirt Nature, subuert others, peruert our selues, for those things which sometimes kill the body, and alway (except a power, with whom all things are possible, preuent) the Soule: And yet? Thou Foole, this night may they fetch away thy Soule; and whose then shall these things be? And whose then, and where then, shalt thou be? Thou gainst faile to loose thy selfe, to be taken with thy taking, to bee thus bad to others, that thou mayst be worse to thy selfe: and when-as (like an Ase) thou hast been laden all the dayes of thy life with those things, which euén in hauing thou wantedst, now to be more intolerably burthened, now to be in Hell, which will neuer bee satisfied in thee, whose Character was before engrauen in thy unsatiable heart. Tell me not then of the reasonable power of our soules, whereby we resemble God so, seeing that reason may tell thee and me, that by abusing it we are like, and are of another Father the Deuill. That erected countenance to be full growling in, and poring on the Earth; that immortal soule to mind onely such things as haue not the imperfect priuilege to be mortall; those high excellencies to be abused to mischief, blaspheming, denying, forswearing God and all for the basest of the basest creatures! Well might this deluge of corruption moue that Cynick, in a throng of men to make search for a Man, this Man which is now left vs, being but the ruines, the carcase of himselfe. We might tell the Greekes call this body of ours, oúvra quasi oúvra, the Sepulchre of the soule; the Latines Corpus, whereby reason of mans fall from his first estate, the first syllable is false off, Cor, the heart is gone, we are Deceard, Seecord, onely pus remains, corruption and filthinesse; and doe not wee call it body, because both die, the soule also hereby inte-fected, and that both deaths, internal and external? The Spirie, the better part of man, is spirit indeed, a pure and vaine blast of empinnesse, animus ardens, a winde that passeth, that passeth the wind in vanitie. But what needs all this? Why are we fallen into so long and tedious discourse of our fall? Euen because some are fallen further, beyond all sense and feeling of their

their fall, and beleueed not that man was euer any other creature, then now they see; that if their goodnesse cannot, yet their wickednesse might teach them, that so perfect a World should not haue bene framed for so imperfect a wretch, now onely perfect in imperfection. Our fall must teach vs to rise, our straying to returne, our degeneration a regeneration. And therefore was not that Image of God wholly done out, but some remainder continued to the Posterity, to conuince them of miserie in themselves; that so denying themselves, they might take up their Crosse, and follow the second Adam vnto a durable happinesse.

But how (may some aske, as ¹ the Pelagian did) came this misery to vs? Non peccat ille qui genuit, non peccat ille qui condidit, per quas igitur rimas inter tot presidia innocentie singulis peccatum ingressum? Doth it agree with diuine Iustice, that if the Fathers haue eaten lowre Grapes, the Childrens teeth should be set on edge? I answer, We are Heires of our Father, we need not seeke some secret cranie, we see an open gate, ² by one man sinne entred into the World, and death by sinne. A little leaue let vs borrow to cleere this difficultie. Sinne is ³ a transgression of the Law, or a defect of conformitie to the Law, (si aliquis non in aequa) and cannot properly be said to haue an efficient, but a deficient cause, being in it owne nature and subsistence, intra se ipso. The ⁴ Schoole-men say, in sinne are two things to bee considered, the substance and the qualitie, essence and priuation, the act and defect, whereof that they call the Materiall, this the Formall part of sinne, being nothing else but a deformitie, irregularitie and vnlawfulness in our natural condition and conditions, as easily to be distinguished, though not to be diuided, from the action, as limenesse from the working hand, or iarring in an Instrument, both from the Instrument and sound. The Sinner is termed nequam, ⁵ as nequicquam naught, as not ought. Not that sinne is simply nothing, Non negatiue, sed priuatiue Nihil; nor is it a meere and pure priuation, but to bee considered with that subiect, wherein, and whereof it is such a distortion and destitution: the want of this consideration draue the Manichees to their Hereticall opinion of two beings and beginnings. Sinne was first seene in the Deuill, who voluntarily strayed from the right way, and as hee abode not in the Truth himselfe, so hee beguiled our first Parents, from whom, by the Conduict of Nature, it is conueyed to vs. I speake of Original sinne, which is our inheritance; for actuall finnes are our owne purchase and improement, and yet bought with that stocke which our Parents left vs: Our first Parents are to bee considered, ⁶ not as singular persons onely, whereby they defiled themselves, but as the roote of Mankind, which had receiued Original Righteousnesse, to keepe or to lose to them and theirs, as a perpetuall inheritance. As in the Bodie Politike, the Act of the Prince is reputed the Act of the whole; the consent of a Burgesse in Parliament bindeth the whole Citie which he representeth: and ⁷ as in the naturall Bodie, the whole bodie is lyable to the guilt of that fault which the head or hand hath committed: as a roote to his branches, a Fountaine to his streames, doth conuey the goodnesse or badnesse which it selfe hath receiued: So stands it betwix vs and Adam our naturall Prince, the Burgesse of the World, the Head of this humane Bodie and Generation, the Root and Fountaine of our Humanity. When hee sinned, hee lost to himselfe and vs that Image of God, or that part of the Image of God, ⁸ which hee had receiued for himselfe and vs; not the substance, nor the faculties of bodie or soule, but the conformitie in that substance and faculties to the will of God, in ⁹ righteousnesse and holinesse of trum.

Not to much therefore are wee here to consider the ordinary course of Nature, wherein ¹⁰ the soule that sinneth, it shall dye: as the Ordinance of God, who appointed the first Adam, the Well-spring of Nature, which he receiued incorrupted; the second, of Grace; that as men, we all by Generation, are of the first, and with the first, ¹¹ one old man, in whom we all sinne; of, and with the second Adam we are all one new man in the Lord, even one Bodie; one Spirit, one Seed, one Christ, in whom, and with whom, wee, as members of that Head, obeyed the Precepts, and suffered the cutte of the Law. ¹² Other finnes of Adams are not our naturall, but his personal, because he could be no longer a publike person, then while hee had some what to laue or lose for vs; all being already forfeited in this first sinne. The Authour then of Original sinne, is the Propagator of our Nature: his actual sinne is originally ours, the Guilt being deuied by imputation, the Corruption by naturall generation. First, that Person corrupted Nature; after, Nature, infected our Persons. The matter of this Original corruption, in regard of the subiect, is All and euery man, and All and euery part of all and euery man, subiect to all sinne, that if all be not as bad as any, and the best as the worst, it must be ascribed to God ¹³ restraining, or renewing, not vnto vnequall degrees in this originall blame. In regard of the Object, the matter of it is the want of original Righteousnesse, and a contrary inclination to Euill, ¹⁴ The imaginations of our hearts being ouerly euill continually. No Grapes can grow on these Thornes. The forme of this corruption is the deformitie of our corrupted Nature, not by infusion or imitation, but by default default of that first instrument, by which this Nature descendeth. It is the roote of a ctual finnes: and whereas they, as fruits, are transient, this still remayneth; vntill Christ by his dearely destroyeth this death in vs.

But here ariseth another difficulty; How this sinne can bee deriued by Generation, seeing it is truly beleued, that God is Father of Spirits, the Former of our Soules, which doth by infusion create, and by Creation infuse them: corruptible Elements, being vnable to procreate an incorruptible substance, or generation to produce incorruption. Neither standeth it with reason, that he which communicateth not the substance, should communicate the accidents; or with Iustice, that an innocent Soule should necessarily be slayned by inuoluntary infusion into a polluted body.

10 I answer hereunto, That although the Soule be not traduſſed (as they terme it) and by Generation confered; yet is it coupled to the body in that manner and order which God had appointed for the conjunction thereof, though man had not sinned? Neither was it the Soule alone in Adam, or the body alone, but the Person, consisting of both, which sinned. Neither can we be partakers of Natures sinne, till we be partakers of humane Nature, which is not, till the Soule and Body bee vnited. Wee are not so much therefore to looke to the conspiscence, and lust of the Parents in generation, as Lumbard teacheth vs, but to the Person; which, Scotus saith, is filia Ade, & debitor inſtituta originalis. And although the Soule be not in the seed, yet it is communicated to the Body (saith Aquinas) by a dis-

20 positive or preparative power of the Seed, which disposeth and prepareth the Body to the receiuing of the Soule, where it is receiued (after the generall rule) according to the measure and nature of that which receiueth. The Farther is then a perfect Father, not because he begetteth the Soule, but because he begetteth the Person, or at least all whatsoever in the Person is begotten: and though he doth not beget the substance thereof; yet, as it is ſuch a subsistence, he may be said to procreate it, because his generation worketh towards the vniō of the Soule and Body; which vniō is made by the Spirits, Animall and Vitall. And these Spirits are procreated by the Seed, and consist of a middle nature, as it were betwixt bodily and spirituall: so that the production of the Soule, and incorporating thereof, may be counted in the middle way betwene Creation and Generation. And therefore this

30 original corruption did not reach to Christ Iesus, although hee were true Man, because hee was the Seed of the Woman, and did not descend of Adam by generation (per feminalem rationem, tanquam à principio actiue, saith Aquinas) but was miraculously framed in the wombe, and of the substance of the Virgin, by the power of the Holy Ghost.

Thus haue I presumed to offer my rude and rude Meditations to the wise World, about the deriuation of Originall sinne, which it selfe is the cause why we can no better see it, as darkenesse hideth it selfe. But the whole Citie of Mankind being herewith set on fire, it behooueth euery one to be more carefull to quench it, then ouer-curiously to enquire how it came: It is sufficient, that nothing descended hereby to vs by corruption, or was made ours by imputation, which is not fully cured by Christ: who is made vnto vs (both by 40 imputation of his actiue and passive obedience, and by reall infusion of his Spirit) Wisdomes, Righteousnesse, Sanctification, and Redemption; if wee haue faith to receiue it, and Charitie to expresse it: an absolute renewer and perfecter of the Image of God, beyond what wee had in our first Parents loſt.

CHAP. VI.

Of the Reliques of the Diuine Image after the Fall, whereby naturally men addit themselves vnto some Religion: and what was the Religion of the World before the Flood.

His sinne of our first Parents, whereby they were almost no sooner made then marr'd (being as some suppose, formed and deformed in one day; so interpreting the Psalme, That he lodged not one night in honour, but became as the beasts that perish). This sinne (I say) did not wholly deprive vs of the Image of God, whereunto wee were created. A remainder and stumpe thereof continued, like to the stumpe of Babylon, whose head and hands were cut off by his fall; or like the stumpe of Nabuchodonosors Tree, whose rootes were left in the Earth, bound with a band of Iron and Brass among the grass of the field. So was mans head and hands fallen off before the Ark, that his Wildome remayning was foolishnesse with God; not sufficient to one good thought, not able either to will or to doe that which might pleaſe God. And though the ſlumpe remained (the ſubſtance and the faculties of Body and Soule) yet was this ſlumpe left in the earth, ſaſt bound with yron and braſſe, his earthly mind captived and chained with worldly vanities and deuilſh villainies. Or to vie Lumbards compariſon, ⁴ he was like the man fallen among cheeues, wounded and ſpoiled:

wounded in his naturall parts, ſpoiled and robbed of the gifts of Grace, which God by eſpecial grace added to his Nature, in that firſt beautifying of this his Image.

In the ſtate of Creation, Man was made able ⁵ to commit no ſinne; in the ſtate of Corruption he cannot but ſinne: vntill a third ſtate of grace doe free him, not from the being, but from the raigning and imputation of ſinne, whereby he is prepared to a fourth ſtate of glory, wherein ſhall be no poſſibilitie of ſinning, or neceſſitie of ſtriving againſt ſinne. And howſoeur in this corrupt ſtate of Nature, in our ſpirituall actions, which meerey concerne the Kingdome of Heaven, we cannot but ſinne, yet hath not God left himſelfe without witneſſe, even in this darkeneſſe to conuince vs of ſinne. Such are thoſe notions, ſowne by Natures hand in euery of our hearts: according to which euidence, Conſcience as a Witneſſe, Patron, or Iudge within vs, ⁶ accuſeth, excuſeth, condemneth, or abſolueth; that hereby God may bee ⁷ iuſtified, and all the World inexcuſably ſinnefull; and that hereby alſo a way may be left in Gods infinite mercy for Mans recovery. His intent was ⁸ not to deſtroy vs vtterly, (as iuſtly he might, and as it befall the rebellious Angels) but by this puniſhment to recall vs to ſubiection; not to breake vs to pieces in his wrath, but by wrath to reclaim vs to mercy.

Thus Nature ſuggeſteth, Reaſon conuinceth, and is conuinceth. That there is a God: that that God hath created the World (as we before haue ſhewed) and that for Man; that Man, to whom all things ſerue, is to ſerue God, who hath ſubjected them to him. Doth not Nature teach the Sonne to honour his Father, and the Seruant his Lord? ⁹ If he then bee our Father, where is his honour? if our Lord, where is his ſerue? Nature inferreth, Reaſon vigeeth this, and from that ground of Reaſon doth Scripture reaſon, the nature whereof in our nature is written. Euen by Reaſons Principles we learne, That ſo perfect a hand, as made all theſe inferi-our things in ſuch perfection, would not haue been ſo imperfect in the perfectest of them all, ſo to haue left him in the Creation, as wee now ſee him in Corruption. The ¹ Philoſophers ſaw, Man was a little World, for whom the greater was made, who himſelfe was made for more then the World: and that he, for whom ſo durable and ſubſtantiall a thing was made, muſt needs be made for another then this fraile and wretched life; that is, for the euerlaſting life with him, that is the Euerlaſting. And that is the foundation of all Religion. For what elſe is Religion, but the Schoole, wherein we learne Mans dutie towards God, and the way to be linked moſt ſtraightly to him? And what are all the Exercises of Religion, but acknowledgements of the Godhead, of the Creation of the World, of the prudent order therein, and ordering thereof, of the Soules immortallitie, of Mans fall and imperfection, of our Soueraigne and ſupreme good to be fought out of our ſelues? Of all which, Nature and Reaſon are wit-neſſes, not to the learned alone, whoſe teſtimonies in this kind may eaſily be produced, but euen to the Vulgar and rudeſt Idiots; yea, whereas neither Art, nor Induſtry, nor ciuill Society hath bound men as men together, yet the grounds of theſe things haue bound them as men, by the meere bond of humane Nature, to God, in ſome or other Religion.

God, Man, and Religion, are neceſſarily linked, as a Father, a Sonne, and Obedience, as a Lender, a Debter, and a Bond. The Wit no ſooner conceiue that there is a God, but the Will interreth that he ought to be worſhipped. What Philoſophers, or what Politicians euer taught the Eaſterne and Weſterne Iſlands, diſcouered in this laſt Age of the World, this ne-ceſſitie of Religion? And yet (as followeth in this Hiſtory to bee ſhewed) they which neuer wore clothes on their bodies, neuer furniſhed their mindes with Arts, neuer knewe any Law (beſides Reaſon growne almoſt lawleſſe) or Magiſtrate, but their Fathers: which, when they ſaw other men, could not tell whether they were ¹⁰ heavenly Wights, or earthly Monſters, the yet wearied themſelues in Superſtitious; ſhewing it eaſier to put off our felues, then to put the Principles of Religion out of our ſelues. Yea, among all the Leſſons which Nature hath taught, this is the deepleſt indented: not Arts, not Politie, nay, not Rayment, not Food, not Life it ſelfe eſteemed ſo deare, and that naturally, to men, as their Religion.
Hereof let this Hiſtorie enſuing be witneſſe, which will ſhew the Reader, euery where, in manner, ouer the World, this naturall zeale of that which they eſteeme Religion, beyond all things elſe eſteemed moſt naturall.

Some in the guilty conſcience of their owne irreligion (as Aſops Foxe, that beeing by ca-ſualtie deprived of his tayle, fought to perſwade all Foxes to cut off theirs, as vnprofitable burthens) would tell vs that which they ¹¹ cannot tell to themſelues, which they dare not tell, but (as they dare) whiſper, That Religion is but a continued Cuſtome, or a wiſer Politie to hold men in awe. But where had Cuſtome this beginning? And what is Cuſtome, but an vniſorme manner, and continuance of outward Rites? Whereas Religion it ſelfe is in the heart,

heart, and produceth those outward ceremoniall effects thereof. In one Country men obserue one habite of attire, another in another: So likewise of dyet: and yet it is naturall to bee clothed, more naturall to eate, but naturall most of all, as is said, to obserue some kind of Religion.

The Grecians burned their dead Parents, the Indians intombed them in their own bowels: Darius could not by great summes procure the Grecians to the Indian, or these to the Grecian custome: yet was that which mooued both, and began either Custome, one and the same principle of pietie and religious dutie, how soeuer diuersly expressed. Yea, euen the most lasciuious, cruell, beastly, and Deuillish obseruations, were grounded vpon this one principle, That God must be serued: which seruice they measured by their owne crooked Rules, euer where disagreeing, and yet meeting in one Center, The necessitie of Religion.

As for Police, although it is before answered; yet this may be added, That whereas men with all threatnings, promises, punishments, rewards, can scarce establish their politicall Ordinances; Religion inlinateeth and establisheth it selfe: yea, taketh naturally such rooting, that all politicall Lawes and tortures cannot plucke it vp. How many Martyrs hath Religion, yea, superstition yielded: but who will lay downe his life to seale some Politicians authority? And so farre is it that Religion should be grounded on Police, that Police borroweth helpe of Religion. Thus did Numa father his Romane Lawes on Ageria, and other Law-givers on other supposed Deities, which had been a foolish argument, and vnreasonable manner of reasoning, to perswade one obscurity by a greater, had not Nature before taught them religious awe to God, of which they made vse to this cuill obedience of their Lawes, supposed to spring from a Diuine Fontaine. Yea, the fallhoods and varietie of religions are euidences of this Truth: seeing men will rather worship a Beast, Stocke, or the basest Creature, then professe no Religion at all. The Philosophers also that are accused of Atheisme, for the most part, did not deny Religion simply, but that irreligious Religion of the Greeces in idolatrous superstition, Socrates rather wearing by a Dog, or an Oke, then acknowledging such gods. It is manifest then, that the Image of God was by the Fall deprauid, but not vtterly extinct: among other sparkes this also being raked vp in the ruines of our decayed Nature; some science of the God-head, some conscience of Religion: although the true Religion can bee but one, and that which God himselfe teacheth, as the onely true way to himselfe: all other Religions being but strayings from him, whereby men wander in the darke, and in labyrinth of error: like men drownings, that get hold on euerie twig, or the foolish fish that leape out of the frying-pan into the fire.

Thus God left a sparke of that light couered vnder the ashes of it selfe: which himselfe vouchsafed to kindle into a flame, neuer since, neuer after to be extinguished. And although that rule of Diuine Iustice had denounced morit morieris, to die, and againe to die a first and second death; yet vnasked, yea, by caulling excuses further prouoked, hee by the promised seed erected him to the hope of a first and second resurrection; a life of Grace first, and after of Glory. The Sonne of God is promised to be made the seed of the Woman: the Substantiall Image of the invisible God, to be made after the Image and similitude of a Man, to reforme and transforme him againe into the former Image and similitude of God; and whereas God had made man before after his owne Image, and lost him; he now promiseth to make himselfe after Mans Image to recouer him: euen that he, which in the forme of God thought it not robbery (for it was Nature) to be equall with God, should be made nothing to make vs something, should not spare himselfe that hee might spare vs, should become partaker of our Nature, flesh of our flesh, and bone of our bone, that hee might make vs partakers of the Diuine Nature, flesh of his flesh, and bone of his bone. This was that Seed of the Woman, that hath broken the Serpents head, which by death hath ouercome death, and him that had the power of Death, the Deniall who submitted himselfe to a death in it selfe bitter, before men shameful, and of God accursed, that hee might bring vs to a life peaceable, glorious, and blessed, beyond what eye hath scene, or heart can conceive.

This promise of this Seed, saime from the beginning of the World, was the seed of all true Religion, the soule of Faith, the life of Hope, the well-spring of Charitie. True it is that all receiued not this promise alike: for a seed of the Serpent was fore-signified also, which should bruite the heele of the Womans feede. And this in the first seed and generation of Man soon appeared: Caine and Abel were hereof liuely examples. It appeareth that God had taught Adam how hee would be worshipped, as it were ordering and ordaining him the first Priest of the World, which function he fulfilled both in instructing his Wife and Children, in prayer with and for them, and in the rites of Sacrificing. His children accordingly in proceesse of time, brought and offered their Sacrifices.

As concerning Sacrifices, some hold opinion (according to their owne practice) that Nature might teach Adam this way of seruing God; as if Nature were as well able to finde the way, as to know that she is out of the way, and were as well seen in the particular manner, as in the general necessity of Religion. We cannot see the Sunne without the Sunne, nor come to God, but by God, to whom Obedience is better then Sacrifice; and to hearken, better then the fat of Rams. A B S L, saith the Scripture, offeredy faith, without which faith it is impossible to please God: but faith hath necessary relation to the Word of God, who otherwise will be weary of our solemnities, and asketh, Who hath required them at our hands. These sacrifices also, besides that they were acknowledgements of their thankfulness, and real confessions of their sinne and death, due to them therefore, did lead them by the hand to Christ that Lamb of God, that should take away the sinnes of the World, figured by these slain beasts, confirming their faith in the promise, and their hope of the accomplishment: of which Nature could not once have dreamed, which hath rather the impression of some confused notions, that wee have lost the way, and ought to seeke it, then either light to discern it, or wisdom to guide vs in it.

Of sacrificing, there were from the Beginning two kinds, one called Gifts, or Oblations of things without life: the other Victims (so our Rhemists have taught vs to English the word Victime) were Sacrifices of Birds and Beasts. Again, they were propitiatory, confessorie, Eucharistical, and so forth, whose kinds and rites Moses hath in his Bookes, especially in Leuiticus, so plainly declared, that I should but powre water into the Sea, or light a candle to the Sunne, to dilate much of them: these being the same in signification with the Leuiticall, and little (if little) differing in the manner of doing. Caine brought his offering, being an Husbandman, of the fruit of the ground. Abel a Shepherd, of the fatest of his Sheep: God respected Abel and his offering, (the tree first, and then the fruit: the worker, and then the worke) which he signified either by voice, or by fire from Heaven, according to Theodotians translation, as in the Sacrifices of Aaron, Gideon, Manoah, David, Solomon, Elias: or by some other meanes, both comfortable to Abel, and enuied of Caine, who therefore slew him; thus in this member bringing the beele of that blessed seed, as a type of that which the Head himselfe should after suiteine.

Here is the first Apostasie after that first Evangelicall promise, and the first division of Religion, Caine being the first builder of the first Earthly Citie, not that which he called after the name of his Sonne, Henoah, but of that spiritual City of the Wicked, the seed of the Serpent, which he founded in his Brothers blood: even as that later Compensism thereof, which called her selfe Caput mundi, the head of the World (and indeed the World is usually in Scripture applied to that seed of the Serpent, as it is opposite to the seed of the Woman) was by Romulus her first Founder, by like example of Fratricide in the murder of Remus, dedicated (as it were) to the future mystere of iniquitie, the seat of the Beast, and of the Whore, (by whose authority, Christ himselfe was slain) drunken after with the blood of his Saints: and still breathing blood and slaughter, to every Abel that will not communicate in her spiritual whooredoms: that will not with her offer the fruits of the ground (the Sacrifice of Caine) which neither came from heaven, nor can guide to Heaven, being earthly, sensual, devilish.

Caine was for this his fact conuicted by that All-seeing Iustice, who both by open sentence and inward terrors accused and accused him, continuing his life, even for the same cause that other Murderers loose it, that he might live an example (which then in that unpeopled world by his death he could not have been) to the future generation; branded also by the Lord with some sensible marks, to exempt him, and terrifie others from that bloody cruelty: this mercy being mixed with this iudgement, a longer time of repentance. God before cursed the earth for Adam, he now cursed Caine from the earth, to be a runnagate, and wander thereon. For how could he, that had so forsaken God, but be forsaken of the Earth, and of himselfe? the stable and mercifull earth, which before had opened her mouth to receive his Brothers blood, shrinking, and (as it were) grudging to support such wicked feet, and by denying him her strength, forcing him to his manifold shifts, and shiftlesse remoouing. Wretched man, always bleeding his brothers blood; not daring to looke vp to Heaven, fearing to looke downe to Hell, the World without him threatening a miserable life, his Body branded to contempt and shame till his death, his soule become a stage of Anguill, Feare, Horrour, and other Furies the Harbingers of Hell: not able to suffer (which yet he cannot but suffer) the guilt of passed wickedness gnawing him, the weight of present misery pressing him, the dread of a death, and a death attending him: restless in himselfe, hated of the World, despairing of reliefe from God: a lively Map of the deadly and damnable state of sinne and sinners, (without Christ) dead while they live, moouing sepulchres, the Devils captiues, helts heires, exiled from heauen, and vagabonds on the earth, euen on that which they call their owne land.

Caine, more vexed with the punishment, then at the fault of his sinne, departed from the presence of the Lord, which is meant either of his iudiciall conuicting him, or in regard of the visible visible societie of the Church, cradled yet in his Fathers household, where God did especially shew his present providence, protection and grace, who otherwise fillerth the Heauen and Earth, of whom & in whom they are: from hence, as Adam before out of Paradis, so Cain was, as it were, excommunicated, expelled, & out-lawed, and dwelt in the Land of Nod, which some take to be appellatively spoken, as if his miserie had giuen name of Mooing vnto the place where he dwelled, or roamed rather: Josephus saith, hee built Naida, applying it to a proper place, which was either Eastward from Eden, or Eastward towards Eden from Canaan, where Adam is supposed to haue dwelt, and after with his Wife to haue beene buried at Hebron. Afterward, his posteritie beeing multiplied (his Wife, Epiphanius out of Leptogenesis calleth Shane, & Comeflor calleth her Chalmana, & Philo, Themech) he built a Cite which he called by the 10 name of his sonne Henoch, to crosse that curle of his wandering to and fro on the earth, or to arme him against others, which his guilty conscience caused him to feare, of to be a receptacle and store-houle of those spoiles, which, Josephus saith, hee robbed from others by violence, when as the earth was barren to him. Philo (if we may so entitle that Author which hath written of the Antiquities of the Bible) ascribeth vnto him other Cities, Mauli, Lech, Tebe, Iesca, Celei, Iebbat, adding that hee liued 730. yeeres. These things may bee probable, although that Author be otherwise fabulous, considering that men did ordinarily line many hundred yeeres in those times, and were also exceeding fruitfull, especially after that Polygamy was embraced of that Family. And if that in Abrams posteritie, the seed of Isaac in Iesse then three hundred yeeres was multiplied to so great a people, it is like that the Canaanites were no lesse populous, liuing in more freedom. Hee first (saith Josephus) found out weights and measures, and assigned proprieties in possessions of Land, before common as the ayre and light, and was Author to lewd persons, of a lewd and vngodly life. Probable it is, that the Cite was called Henoch, because the Curle suffered not the father to stay in a place, but to leave a hasty inheritance to his Son to finish and rule it. Isabal and Iubal and Tubalcain were inuentors of Arts: the first to dwell in Tents and keepe Cattell; the second of Musickall instruments: the third of working in Mettals, and making of Armour, which some thinke to be Vulcan, by the neerenesse of name and occupation. His Sister Naamah is accounted by some Rabbines, the first inuentor of making Linnen and Woollen, and of vocall Musique; yea, 30 they make her the wife of Noah also.

Thus let vs leave this Family multiplying in numbers, in Sciences, in wickednesse, Euouring nothing diuine, or at least nothing but humane in their Diuinitie (therefore called the sonnes of men) and let vs looke backe to Adam, who in this wicked fruit of his body, might read continual Lectures of repentance for the sinne of his soule. Adam begat a child in his own likeness, that is, not in that likeness of God, wherein he was created, but like vnto himselfe, both in humane nature, & natural corruption, his name he called Seth, of whose posteritie the whole world was by Noah re-peopled. Vnto Seth was borne Enosh. Then began men, saith Moses to call upon the name of the Lord. This some interpret of the beginning of Idolatry, that men began to profane the name of the Lord: some to call the name of the Lord, that is, after Rabbi

40 Salomo, to apply the name of God to Images, Stars and Men: But the more likely opinion is, that when Adam had obtained a more holy posteritie, which was now multiplied in diuers families, & Religion which before had been a private In-mate in Adams household, was now brought into publike exercise, whereof Prayer hath alwaies been accounted a principall part, and God himselfe in both Testaments calleth his house a house of Prayer; the values of the lips, and the ejaculations of the heart being the body and soule of Diuine worship, whereof Sacrifices were in a manner but the apparell, fashioned to that infancy of the Church. Of the names of the posteritie of Adam, and his hundred yeeres mourning for Abel, of Seth his remouing after Adams death to a mountaine neere Paradise, and such other things, more fauouring of fabulous vanity in the false named Metobius, Philo, and others that follow them, I list not to write. And wel might Genebrard haue spared his paines in searching for the antiquitie of Po-

50 pery in this first Age of the World. Easily may we grant a Church then, truly Catholike in the Posteritie of Seth, instructed partly by Reuelations, partly by Traditions, concerning the Creation, the fall, the good and euill Angels, the promised Seed, the Vnitie and Trinitie, Purnishments and repentance for sinne, publike and private Deuotions, and other like Articles gathered out of Moses: but for the Rabble of Rabbinicall Dreames which hee addeth here-vnto, we had need of the implicit faith of some simple credulous Catholike to receive them: as namely, Purgatory resembled in the fiery Sword at the entrance of Paradise, Free-will an Allegorical sense may be

Hus wee haue ſeene in part the fulfilling of the Propheſie of the Seed of the Woman, and of that other of the Serpent, in the Poſteritie of Caine and Setb. The Family of Caine is liſt reckoned, and their forwardneſſe in humane Arts, ^a as the children of this World are wiſer in their generation, in the things of this life, which they almoſt onely attend, then the children of light. As for the ^b Jewiſh Dreames, that Lamech was blind, and by the direction of Tubalcaine his ſonne guiding his hand ſlew Caine, ſuppoſing it had bene a wilde beaſt, which when he knew, ſo enraged him, that he killed his ſonne alſo, they that liſt may follow. Moſes reckoneth the Generations according to the firſt-borne in the Poſteritie of Setb, as enioying the Principallitie and Prieſthood, that ſo the promiſed Seed of the Woman (after ſuch a World of yeares coming into the World) might iuſtifie the ſtableneſſe of Gods promiſes, his Lineall Deſcent from Adam with a due Chronologie, being declared. After Setb, Engh, Kenan, Mehalaſel, Iared was Enoch the ſeventh from Adam, who walked with God, whom God tooke away that he ſhould not ſee death. This before the Law, and Helias in the Law, are Witneſſes of the Reſurrection; being miraculoſly taken from the Earth into Heauen, not by death, but by ſupernatural changing of their bodies. That hee ſhould bee ſill in ^c an Earthly Paradiſe. and that hee and Elias ſhould come and preach againſt Antichriſt, and of him be ſlaime, is a Popiſh Dreame; the Scripture ^d ſaying, that Еночи не даде away that he ſhould not ſee death; of Elias, that he is ^e already come in the perſon of Iohn Baptiſt: the Spirit and power, or ſpiritual power of walking with God, reforming Religion, and conuerting ſoules, being communicated to many of thoſe Miniſters which haue lien ſlaime in the ſtreets of that great Citie.

This his Allimption is ^f ſuppoſed to be viſibly done. Hee was a Prophet, and Iude doth in his Epistle cite a teſtimonie of his, ^g which ether by ^h Tradition went from hand to hand, as it ſeemeth the whole Word of God was deliuered before the dayes of Moſes; God by Viſions and Dreames appearing vnto the Patriarkes; or elſe it was written and ſince is loſt. Some hold it was penned by ſome Iew vnder the name of Enoch. ⁱ Auguſtine thinketh that the Booke entituled Enoch was forged in his name, as other Writings vnder the names of Prophets and Apoſtles: and therefore calleth it Apocrypha (as ^k Hierome doth alſo) ^l Chryſoſtome and Theophilaſt account Moſes the firſt Pen-man of Holy Scripture. Although it ſeemes that Letters were in vie before the flood, if ^m Ieſeph his teſtimonie monie be true, who affirmeth that Adam hauing prophesied two vniuersall destructions, one by fire, another by water, his Posteritie erected two Pillars, one of bricke, another of stone, in bath which they writ their inuentions of Astronomie; that of stone was reported to remaine in his time. Some ⁿ ascribe this to Serb, as also the first naming of the seuen Planets. ⁿ Othe Heurn, The Science of Astronomie, they say, was much furthered by Enoch, who (saith Eusepiemon) ^{lib. 1.} was by the Greekes called Atlas, to whom they attributed the inuention thereof. ^o Plinie ^o Plin. l. 7. c. 56. was of opinion that Letters were eternall.

Howfoeuer, it is more then apparant, that the Booke bearing Enochs name, is very fabulous, which, because the Tales therein professe antiquity (although they were later dreames)

10 I thought it not vnfit to borrow out of P. Scaliger somewhat of that which he hath inserted in his Notes vpon Eusebius, the Greeke Copie being, as the Phrase testifieth, translated out of Hebrew, which had beene the worke of some few: the Antiquity appeareth, in that Ter- tullian citeth it. The words are these:

And ^r it came to passe when the sonnes of men were multiplyed, there were borne to them faire Daughters, and the Watch-men (so he calleth the Angels out of Dan. 4.) lusted and went astray after them; and they said one to another, ^t Let vs choose vs Wiues of the Daughters of men of the Earth. And Semixas their Prince said vnto them, I feare me you will not doe this thing, and I alone shall be debter of a great sinne. And they all answered him and said; We will all sweare with an Oath, and will Anathematise or Curse our selues not to alter this 20 our minde till we haue fulfilled it, and they all sware together. These came downe in the dayes of Jared to the top of the Hill Hermion. And they called the Hill Hermion, because they sware and Anathematized on it. These were the names of their Rulers; Semixas, Atarcub, Ara- chiel, Chababiel, Orammame, Ramiel, Saplich, Zakiel, Balkiel, Azazel, Pharmaros, Samiel, &c.

These tooke them Wiues, and three Generation were borne vnto them: the first were great Gyants; the Gyants begat the Naphelims, to whom were borne Eliud; and they taught them and their Wiues Sorceries and Inchantments. Ezael taught first to make Swords and Weapons for Warre, and how to worke in Metals. He taught to make Womens Ornaments, and how to looke faire, and iewelling. And they beguiled the Saints; and much sinne was committed on the Earth. Other of them taught the vertues of Roots, Astrologie, 30 Diuinations, &c. After these things the Gyants beganne to eate the flesh of men, and men were diminished: and the remnant cryed to Heauen, because of their wickednesse, that they might come in remembrance before him. And the foure great Archangels Michael, Gabriel, Raphael, and Uriel hearing it, looked downe on the Earth from the holy places of Heauen: and beholding much bloud-shed on the Earth, and all yngodlinelie and transgression committed therein, said one to another, That the Spirits and Soules of men complaine, saying, That yee should present our Prayer to the Highest, and our destruction. And the foure Archangels entring, said to the Lord, Thou art God of Gods and Lord of 40 Lords, &c. Thou seeest what Ezael hath done, hee hath taught Mysteries, and revealed to the World the things in Heauen, &c. Then the Highest said, The Holy one, The Great one spake and sent Uriel to the sonne of Lamech, saying, Goe to Noe, tell him of the end approaching, and a flood shall destroy the Earth, &c. To Raphael hee said, Goe Raphael, and binde Ezael hand and foot, and cast him into darknessesse, and open the Wildernesse in the Desert of Dodoel, and there cast him, and lay vpon him sharpe stones to the Day of Iudgement, &c. And to Gabriel, hee said, Goe, Gabriel, to the Gyants, and destroy the sonnes of the Watch-men from the sonnes of men, let them one against another in warre and destruction. To Michael, hee said, Goe, Michael, binde Semixas and the others with him that haue mixed themselves with the daughters of men (vntill seuentie Generations) to the hils of the Earth; vntill the day of their iudgement, till the iudgement of the World bee finished, and then they shall be brought into 50 the confusion of fire, and vnto tryall, and vnto the Prison of the ending of the World, and whosoever shall be condemned and destroyed, from hence-forth shall be cast together with them till the finishing of their Generation, &c. And the Gyants which were begotten of the Spirits and flesh, they shall call them euill Spirits on the Earth, because their dwelling is on the Earth. The Spirits that depart out of their bodies shall bee euill Spirits, because they were engendered of the Watch-men and men.

But it were tedious to recite further. The antiquity of it, and because it is not so common, and especially because ^u some of the Ancients and of the Papists haue beene misled by these Dreames (refused iustly by Ierome and Augustine) interpreting the sonnes of God in Moses to be spoken of Angels (as their Translation did read it) haue moued me to insert those Tales. Notable is the diligence of the Purgatorie Scavengers, who in Vines notes 60 vpon Ang. de Ciu. Dei, Lib. 1. cap. 23. haue in their Index Expurgatorius, set the Seale of their Office vpon a testimonie alleged out of Eusebius de Prep. Euang. Lib. 5. cap. 4. as if they had beene Vines his owne words, to be left out in the Impression. The words, because they sauiour of the former errour, haue I heere placed, *Non ergo Deus, neque bonos demones, Gentiles, sed periciofos solummodo venerantur. Quam rem magis Plutarchus confirmat, dicens fabulosas de diuinationis res quasdam significare, a demonibus antiquissimis gestas temporibus, & ea que de gigantibus ac de Titanibus decantantur, demonum fuisse operationes. The Angels are sometimes called the sonnes of God: but that name is communicated to men, who by nature children of wrath, by faith in the naturall and onely begotten Sonne of God, haue this prerogative to bee the sonnes of God, and fellow-heres with CHRIST. But some of the children of the Kingdome shall bee cast out, because they haue rebelled against their Father that begot them, professing themselves to be the sonnes of God, but doe the workes of their father the Deuill: and of these Hypocrites and Apostates it is said, that louing pleasure more then God, they matched themselves in Caines Family: a procreation so mightie to euill, that strong Samson and wise Solomon are witnesses, that the strong men are slaine by this weaker sexe. This was the Serpents policie at first, Balaams policie after, Babels policie now; e and Balaams wages doe moue many fill to make such Linsey-woolsey Marriages, that the children speake halfe Asdod, and whilset the Father professeth one Religion, the mother another, the children become Gyants, to fight against all that is called God, and to make litle or no profession (at least in their lues) of any Religion at all.

I denie not that then there were Gyants also in regard of bodily stature, e whom the Scripture calleth, because they were great and fearefull, Rephaim and Emim; of their pride Hanani, of their strength Gibborim, of their tyrannic Nephilim, of their naughtinesse Zannanim. Such were Og an Goliath after the flood. Yea, such haue bene in all Ages: which (to omit other Ethnike Authors) f Augustine affirmeth, that at Vrica hee saw a mans tooth as great as an hundred of the ordinary life. Vines on that place, saith he saw one as bigge as a mans fist. Nicephorus telleth of two men in the time of Theodosius, the one not so admirable for his height, which was five Cubits and an hand, as the other for his finalnesse, like to a Partrich in bignesse, yet wittie and learned. Our Histories of e Arthur, little Iohn, Corey Earle of Vlster, and one in our times, 1581. scene in London, doe shew some such here and there, now and then in the World, which Georgius in his Gigantomachia, affirmeth of his owne sight: and euen whole Families of these monstrous men are found at this day in Ame-rica, both neere to Virginia, as h C. ptaine Smith reporteth; and especially about the Straits of Magellan, i neere which he found Gyants, and in the same Straits were such scene of the k Hollanders ten foot in height, whereas yet other Families were but of the ordinary greatnesse. One Thomas Turner told mee, that neere the Riuer of Plate, hee saw one twelue foot high, and others whose hinder part of their head was flat, not round. l Authors tell of Maximinus the Romane Emperour, that he was eight foot and a finger high, whose wiues Bracelets might serue him for Rings, that he often in one day drunke an Amphora, which is almost fixe Gallons of Wine, and ate fortie pounds of flesh: Cordus saith sixtie; hee could breake a Horse legge, or strike out his teeth with a blow of his fist, &c. Which occurs in Nature no doubt haue giuen occasion to some of further fabling. Qui de magnis maior loquuntur. m We reade in Pliny of one of fortie fixe Cubits, in Crete, pulled by the force of an Earth-quake, breaking the lull wherein he stood, supposed to bee Orion or Orus: more credible is that he telleth of one Gabbora in Claudius time, nine foot and nine inches; and in Augustus time of another halfe a foot higher.

Howsoeuer the bodies of these men before the Flood were composed, certaine their minds were disposed to all monstrous inhumanitie, which hastened their destruction. This made God to repent that he made man vpon the Earth, not that there was any change or repentance in him, but because a change for want of repentance happened to them. In long iustice he gaue them an hundred and twentie yeares space, in which Noah might be a Preacher of righteousness; yea, the Arke it selfe, which Noah that while was prouiding, might preach to them repentance, that their teares might haue quenched his wrath, and preuented tempo-

rall drowning and eternall burning. Adam liued till Henochs time, a witnesse and Preacher of the promise he himselſe had receiued. Henoch himſelſe is made, not a verball but a ſcall Preacher, whilſe his ſonne Methuſelaſh, and his Nephew Lamech the father of Noah liued : that G o d might haue witneſſes to conuert ſome and conuince others. But whilſe the World becommeth worſe and worſe, ⁿ (Ætias parentum peior auis tulit Hor nequiores, mox daturos Progeniem vitioſorem) a deluge of ſinne firſt, and a deluge of iudgement after, drowned the World.

For the circumſtances of the Flood, Mofes hath more plainly related them, then that I ſhould here expreſſe them. Noah with his three ſonnes and their wiues entred the Arke at G o d's appointment, to which by diuine inſtinct reſorted both birds and beaſts : of the cleane ſeuē, and of the vncleane two in every kind. If any maruell at this diſtinction of cleane and vncleane in theſe times, ſuppoſing that G o d firſt in the Wilderneſſe made this partition-wall : it is answered, that G o d before this had appointed Sacrifices of beaſts, which might make the difference ; for which cauſe alſo there was a ſeuēth of every ſuch creature, reſerued for Sacrifice after Noahs going out. Beſides, G o d had now purpoſed to adde the fleſh of beaſts vnto mans dyet, for which thoſe, called by the Iſraelites cleane, were moſt fit, and moſt in uſe : and in that reſpect more of ſuch kinds were reſerued, as more neceſſary for mans uſe in food, clothing, and ſome of them alſo for labour. Otherwiſe no creature is vncleane in it ſelſe, the Hoofe and Cudde being by Nature (G o d's Hand-maid) and not by their owne vice, ſuch as made this diſtinction. And after the flood G o d made no Law of difference, vntill the time of Mofes, although each Countrey hath obſerued their owne peculiar cuſtome in this food, ſome lothing that which others eſteeme dantie, not for Religion, but for naturall and ciuill cauſes. As at this day to the Tartars, Horſe-fleſh is royall fare ; to the Arabians, Camels ; to ſome Americans, Serpents, and other fleſh to others, which our appetite more then our faith, our ſtomacke more then our ſoule, abhorreth.

Concerning the Arke, diuers doubts haue bene moued, through curioſitie and vnbeliefe of ſome, who by diuine Juſtice were in a manner deſerued of ſenſe and reaſon, hauing before through Deuilliſh wickedneſſe loſt their conſcience and Religion. Thus ^o Apelles one of Marcions Diſciples, could not finde the Arke (after Mofes dimenſion) to bee capable of foure Elephants in ſo ſmall a quantitie ; Ceſſus contrary to him (yet agreeing in a ſoollh impietie and impious folly) thought ſo great a veſſell was too great for mans handy-wooke. Thus, like Samſons Foxes, their heads are diuers wayes, but they are tyed together by the tayles, agreeing in diſagreeing both from Mofes and themſelues.

But might not reaſon teach Ceſſus, that the direction of G o d might teach a man in an hundred and twentie yeares ſpace to frame ſo mighty a Fabricke ? doth not ſenſe and experience ſhew buildings not much leſſe both on the Sea and on the Land ? And what Arithmetick or Geometry, nay, what wit or common ſenſe had Apelles in his Aſſertion ? The Arke was too little (ſorlooth) for ſo many creatures and their prouiſion for a yeare. Wee need not ſeek for ſhifts from helpe of the Geometrickall Cubite knowne to Mofes in his Egyptian Learning, of three, fixe, or nine foot to the Cubite : as Origen and ^p Hugo doe : nor of the ſacred Cubite, imagined twice as much as the common : nor of the larger ſtature and Cubites of men in thoſe youthfull times and age of the World. The length hereof three hundred Cubites, and the breadth fiftie, doe make of ſquare meaſure by common Rules of Art, fifteene thouſand Cubites. Three floores or roomes were therein of that quantitie, each containing ten foot in height. As for the beaſts ; a floore of fifteene thouſand Cubits might yeeld fifty Cubits ſquare to three hundred ſeueral kinds, many more then are knowne by relation of the moſt Writers, Ariſtotle, Plinie, Gefner, &c. which ſcarce reckon halfe that number, and but fortie kinds or thereabouts that would take vp any great 9 roome. The height might yeeld commodious roomes for the fowles on Perches : and all this might one roome or floore afford. Iudge then whether two other roomes of equall bigneſſe, might not be ſufficient for all other neceſſary employments ? Beſides, the rooſe is not to bee thought vnproportionable, fitted for ſo long and tempeſtuous ſtormes, and therefore not vniſited with roome for diuers neceſſaries. And if any accuſe me for adding this of the rooſe to Mofes deſcription, I ſay, that ſo it is tranſlated by ^r ſome, Et in cubiti longitudinem conſummato eius tellum ſuperne, vnderſtanding thoſe words not of the window (as many doe) but of the rooſe it ſelſe, which elſe is no where deſcribed, which ſhould ouer-hang the Arke a Cubite breadth to defend it the ſafer from raines ; as in our houſes the eues and ſlope-rooſes are commodious both for roome within, and againſt the weather without. But if any would entertaine longer diſpute about this, he may (among others that haue handled this queſtion) reſort vnto ^f Georgius Bocanius his Gigantomachia, whom in this point I would rather follow, then in many other his Beceſſical Paradoxes.

were opened, and the windowes of Heauen: the two store-houses of waters which God had separated in the Creation, beeing in a manner confounded againe, the Seas breaking their sinde barres, and breaking vp by secret vndermines the priuie pores and passages in the Earth: the Cloudes conspiring with the Waters, and renewing their first league and naturall amitie, to the confusion of Nature and the World. The heauenly lights hid their faces from beholding it, and clothed themselves with blacke, as bewailing the Worlds Funerall; the Ayre is turned into a Sea, the Sea posseffeth the Ayrie Region, the Earth is now no Earth, but a myrie lump, and all that huger World is contracted into a briete Epitome, and small a-bridgement in the Arke, euen there but a few inches distant from death. Thus do all Creatures detest Sinne, which hath made them subiect to Vanie; thus would the Elements wash themselves cleane from it, and the committers thereof: but the Arke preuaileth ouer the preuailling waters: a figure of the Church, the remnant of the elder, and Seminarie of the new World.

This drowning of the World hath not bene quite drowned in the World, but besides Moses, many other Writers haue mentioned it: the time thereof being referred to that which in each Nation was accounted most ancient; as among the Thebans to Ogiger; in Theffalia, to Deucalion; among the Americans (although a Mercator thinke, that the Flood drowned not those parts, because they were not yet peopled, and because the beasts there are most what differing kinds from these in our World) the people haue retayned the tradition hereof; Minaseus among the Phœnicians, Berosus a Caldæan, Hieronimus Egyptius, Nicolaus of Damascus, the Poets Greeke and Latine, adding Fables to the Truth (which without some ground of truth they could not haue added) all mention the Flood; howsoever confounding the lesse and later with this first and vniuersall.

I might adde the testimonies of Eusepius, Molon, Abidennus, Alexander Polybistor, out of Eusepius, Iosephus, and others. Lucian in his Dea Syria, telleth the opinion of the Hierapolitans, but a little corrupted from Moses Narration, that Countrey wherein Noah liued most likely retayning firmer memorie of this Miracle: so plainly doth he attribute to his Deucalion the Arke, the resort and safe-guard of the Lions, Bores, Serpents and Beasts: the repairing of the World after this drowning thereof, which he ascribeth to periurie, crueltie, and other abominations of the former people. That Berosus which we now haue, is not so much as the ghost, or carcasse, and scarce a few bones of the carcasse of that famous Caldæan Author, mentioned by the Ancients, but the Dreames of Annius (no new thing in this last Age) coined for the most part in his name. Some fragments of Berosus wee haue cited in other Authours that conuince this Ballard.

Among others, somewhat of the Flood hath escaped drowning: his testimonie whereof set downe in Polybistor and Abidennus, is in Eusepius. He affirmeth, that Saturne gaue warning to Sisuthrus of this Deluge, and willed him to prepare a great Vessell or Ship, wherein to put convenient food, and to saue himselfe and his kindred and acquaintance; which hee builded of length five furlongs, of breadth two. After the retyring of the waters, hee sent out a Bird which returned: after a few dayes he sent her forth againe, which returned with her feet bemired; and being sent the third time, came no more: with other things to like purpose, which Polybistor there, and Abidennus citeth out of Berosus. Plutarch hath also written of this Doue, sent by Deucalion out of the Arke, which returning was a signe of tempest, and sying forth of faire weather.

OW GOD remembered Noah, saith Moses; not that God can forget, but that hee declared his Diuine Power, whereby Noah might know hee was not forgotten. Then did the Heauens remember their wonted influence in the Elements: then did the Elements remember their naturall order: God made a winde to passe in Commission, and, as a common Vmpire, to end their vnaturall strife, forcing the Waters into their ancient precincts aboue and beneath the Firmament. (* Ambrose interpreteth this Winde of the HOLY GHOST, Rupertus of the Sunne. hand of God.) Then did the Earth remember first inheritance, being freed from the tyrannicall inuasion and vsurpation of the Waters. And what could then forget or be forgotten, when GOD remembered NOAH and all that was with him in the Arke.

And in the fiftenth & Moneth, the fiftenth day of the moneth, the Arke refted vpon the Mountaine of Ararat. This fell out in the yeere from the Creation 1656. The 2^d Septuagint, and the Fathers that followed them, reckon farre otherwife: which error of theirs differing from the Hebrew verity, Agulfine ascribes to the first Coppies of that Translation: others to their own set purpose, that they might contend with other Nations in the challenge of Antiquitie: for that caule, and least the often halting of ages should trouble the faithlesse, faith Master Broughton, they saie Cainan, betwixt Arphaxad and Selah: in which account it is Luke in his Genealogie had followed them, it is to be ascribed to them which would correct Luke by their corrupt translation of the Septuagint, for some Copies of the Gospel haue wanted it. The place is commonly thought to be Armenia. The Sybillic Oracles (if at least we may so call those eight bookes in Greeke verse, translated into Latine by Cassiodorus) doe place ¹ Ararat in Phrygia, and say, it is the Hill whence the River Marlyas issueth. But Scaliger censureth our Sybil to be counterfeited, inuented with zeale to vp-hold the Truth by falsehood: in which our late Legendaries haue followed them.

20 Go goropus after his wont paradoxically, holdeth it to be the Hill Parapanifus, or Paropanifus, a part of the Hill Taurus (vnpiously ascribed to Caucasus, which rifteth betwene the Euxine and Hircan Sea) supposed the highest part of the Earth, called now v Naugracot. He imagined, that the place first inhabited after the Flood was Margiana, whence those Colonies called that with Nimrod built Babylon. His reason is, because m they went from the East to the Plaine of Shinar, whereas Armenia beareth somewhat Westward from thence. As though that journey had been presently after the Flood, which was an hundred yeares after: in which space it is likely they followed the Mountainous Countries Eastward a long time, and from Adlyria Adiabene, turned backe into that fertile Plaine, where pride, fulnesse of bread, and abundance of idleness, set them on worke against God. I hold it not meet, that a fewē coniectures should counterpoize the generall consent of all Ages. Iosephus saith, the place in Armenia was called Apobaterion, of this their going forth of the Arke; and alleadgeth Berosus testimonye, that a part of this Arke was then laid to remaine in the Cordyean (or Gordyean) Tels, the pitch whereof some scraping away, wore the same for Amulets. And out of Nicb. Damascenus lib. 96. There is (saith he) about the Region of the Minyæ, a great Hill in Armenia, by name Baris, wherein, they say, many suied themselves in the time of the Flood, and one, brought in an Arke, there stayed (the remnants of the wood thereof continuing there long time after) which happily was he that Moses the Iewish Law-giuer writ of. This mountain or mountainous Region the Caldean Paraphrast calleth n Kardis; Curtius, Cordis montes; Protopemus, Gordici; the people are called Cardaii, or Gordaii. In this Tract (saith Epiphani) there is one high Mountaine called Lubar, which signifieth the descending place (Lubar in the Armenian and Egyptian language signifying the same that descensus before mentioned) and the

The Armenians through all ages have (as it seemeth) referred the memorie hereof: and euen in our daies there standeth an Abbey of Saint Gregorie Monkes neere to this Hill, which was able to receive ¶ Shaugh Thomas, and a great part of his Armie. These Monkes, if any lift to beleue them, say, that there remaineth yet some part of the Arke, kept by Angels; which if any feeke to ascend, carrie them backe as furre in the night, as they have climed in the day. Carmwright, an eye-witnesse, saith, that this Hill is alwaies covered with snow; as the foote thereof islie a thousand Springs: there are adioyning three hundred Villages of the Armenians. He saith also that there are seene many ruinous foundations, supposed to be the workes of this first people, that a long time durst not adventure into the lower Countreys, for feare of another flood. ¶ Avidenus saith, that the Ship or Arke was fill in Armenia (in his time) and that the people vied the wood thereof against many diseases with marvellous effect.

After that Noah had obtained his deliverance, and was now gone out of the Ark; his first care was Religion; and therefore he hee built an Altar to the Lord, and tooke of euery cleane beast, and of euery cleane fowle, and offered burnt offerings vpon the Altar: And the Lord smelled a fauour of rest, and renewed the auncient blessings and promises to Noah and his posteritie. The liuing creatures were also permitted to their food, and submitted to their rule, by whom they had in the Ark escaped drowning. Onely the blood was prohibited to them, as a ceremoniall oblation to instruct them in lenitie and hatred of cruelty: the political Ordinance being annexed touching the blood of man, against man or beast that should shed the same. This difference being alleaged of the life of Man and Beast, that the life of the Beast is his blood, the life of Man is in his blood, Not that the blood which we see shed is the life life of the beast: for that is properly Cruor, not Sanguis, that is, the matter, whose forme was the life or vitall spirit, which being separated from the body, is seuered also from the forme or life. And the life of Beasts hath no other forme, but that which is vnited with the blood, as the life of trees is the sappe of trees; their blood being (as it were) their soule. But the life of man is in his blood, hauing his seate therein, liuing when it is by death separated from the blood; meane while the Spirits being the purest part of the blood, as conduits conueying life to the bodily members, and as firme bands of a middle nature, between the body and soule, vniting them together; which bands and carriages being broken by effusion of blood, the soule subsisteth a spirituall substance without the body, not subiect to substantiall corruption or mortalitie.

God did also make a couenant for Man with the beasts of the field, infusing into the Nature of all things, a dread and feare of man, whereby they feare the power, the snares, and slights of man; and therefore flee, or else submit themselves, not by that willing instinct, as to Adm in innocencie, but rather with a seruile feare. And although by hunger, or prouocation, or feare of their owne danger, they sometimes rebell, yet otherwise there remains some impre son of this naturall decree in them, as experience in all places hath shewed. Euen the Lyon, King of Forrests and sauage Creatures, doth not easily giue on-let but on such occasions yea, the Moores meeting with this Beast, doe rate and brawle at him; this magnanimous beast passing by with a leering countenance, expresseing a mixt passion of dread and dilaine, fearing the voice of one, that feareth not the weapons of many, and which himselfe, by the terrour of his voice, maketh the beasts to tremble. Hereunto the Lord addeth the Raine-bow, a newe Sacrament, to seale his mercifull Couenant with the Earth, not to drowne the same any more; which yet at last shall be burnt with fire, so to purge the Heauens and Earth of that vanitie, whereto mans sinne hath subiected them. And thus much doe I some reade in the colours of the Raine-bow, of a waterish and fiery mixture, as a continued signe of the double destruction of the World; the first outward as already past, the other inward as yet to come. Well, indeed, may this Bow be called the Child of Wonder, both for the naturall constitution, and diuine ordinance: not that there was before no such Creature, but that then this vie of the creature was ordained. The reflexion or refraction of the Sunne-beames in a watery cloud, the brightnesse from the Sunne, and the cloud meeting together, the varietie of colours proceeding from the varietie of matter; the fumish and dryer part of the cloud yeelding a purplish, the waterie a greenish Sea-colour, &c. borrowing the roundnesse from the Sunne halfe E:clipsed by the shadow of the Earth, are accounted the naturall causes of this wonder of Nature; sometime also by reason of abundance of matter, the same being doubled, one Bow within the other, their colours placed contrary, for that the one is the Image (by reflexion) of the other. Neither is it to be thought, that there was no Raine-bow before the flood, any more then that there was no water, bread, or wine, before the institution of our Christian Sacraments, which name and dignitie, not Nature, but Vie, by the appointment of the God of Nature and Grace, doth giue vnto them. For not in the cloudes alone is this Bow to be seen, but as further witness of the naturall causes and constitution thereof, the same effect may be shewed by concurrence of like causes in the Waters and Rockes where Riuer haue their falls; yea, on the buildings of men: as I my selfe haue seen a perfect Raine-bow by the reflexion of the Sun-beames on a boarded wall of a Water-mill, the boordes thereof being very wet with the fall of the water, and opposite to the Sunne.

The finnes of Noah were Sem (which because of Diuine priuiledge, from whose loynes Christ was to come, according to the flesh is first named) Ham or Canaan, and Japheth, who seemeth (as I learned men gather by the 4 Text) to be the eldest. Fabulous Methodius, contrary to Moses, speaketh of another Sonne Ionithus after the Flood, whereas the Scripture saith, That of those three all the Earth was replenished.

To shew directly which Nations descended of each of these three, were a hard taske: and now after this confusion of Nations by warres, leagues, and otherwise, impossible. But for the first beginnings of Nations, before that Colonies were by violence of Conquerours, or by themselves, in their exceeding multiplying, voluntarily translated from one place to another, they are by Moses faithfully related, although the confusion of Languages and of Peoples do make the matter hard and harsh to vs. Yet the Names of Nations in the Greeke histories do in great part agree with the names of these first Patriarkes, as M. Broughton hath shewed, by laying downe the names of Noahs house, which, vnvowelled, may admit sumdry pronouncings, setting against them such names as Heathen Authors haue mentioned. Out of him, and Arias Montanus his Phaleg, and others, what I thought likeliest, I haue here inserted.

Of Iobab, Arias Montanus coniectureth Parias in the West Indies to haue come, but with little probability which I can see. And of the most before named we haue probable coniectures, not certaine proofes, as appeareth by the difference of opinions of Authours concerning them. Neither may we thinke that Moses intended so much a Geographicall Historie of all the Nations of the World, many of which were not, long after this time, planted or peopled; but of the first Fathers, who peopled the places by degrees, as they increased in multitude which were neerest that Armenian Centre: and especially hee relateth and dilateth of them, whom it most concerned the Israelites to know, as the Canaanites, whose bounds and Nations are exactly described. I could adde much touching the seuerall Nations descending of these three Brethren, and the bounds of their Habitations, in which Africannus sometime tooke profitable paines, and Enstebius out of him, although both be in this part lost: somewhat hath bene barbarously translated into Latine by an unknowne Authour, for the Solacismes, tedious, for the substance of History profitable to the Reader: and therefore by Sealiger in his Edition of Enstebius communicated to the World. But the vncertaintye maketh me vnwilling to proceed in this Argument further.

Of this vncertaintye no greater cause can bee alleged, then the diuision and confusion of Tongues, the Historie whereof Moses declareth. For whereas God had giuen to Man two Priviledges and principall Prerogatiues, whereof other creatures are no way capable, his inward Reason, and abilitie to utter the same by Speech: this benefit of God in Nature was turned into a Conspiracie against God and Nature. They said one to another, Come, let vs make Bricks for stone, and sume had they in stead of mortar. Also they said, Let vs build vs a Citie and Tower, whose top may reach vnto the Heauen, that we may get vs a name, lest we be scattered vpon the whole Earth. This was their vaine arrogance and presumption, that when their guiltie consciences threatened a dissipation and scattering by diuine Iustice: they would thus hearten and harden themselves against God and Man: in stead of thankfulness to God, and honouring his Name, they would winne themselves a name and honour: in stead of preventing punishment by Repentance, they would in this Gyant-like fighting against God prevent future iudgements. But euen that, by which they intended to keep them from scattering, was the true and first cause of their scattering. So doth God scatter the counsels of his Enemies, and taketh the wise in their craftinesse. Babel, or confusion, is alway the Attendant of Pride. Sibylla alleged by a Iosephus (for the Sibyls which we haue in Greeke Verse, translated by Castalion into Latine, are but counterfeits, if Sealiger iudge rightly, Pseudo Sibyllina oracula, quæ Christiani gentibus obiciebant, quæ tamen à Christianorum officina prodissent, &c. but that more ancient Sibylla) testifieth of this confusion of Tongues in these words. When all men before vsed one speech, they erected a high Tower, as it they would ascend to Heauen: but the Gods by Tempests ouerthrew their Tower, and gaue to each of them severall Languages, whereof the Citie was named Babilon: According to that of Moses, I Therefore the name of it was called Babel, because the Lord did there confound the Language of all the Earth. From thence then did the Lord scatter them vpon all the Earth. The Atheists and Naturalists dreame the World to eternall, and conceiue that all men could not be of one; because of this diuersitie of Languages. If such had bene at Hierusalem, and heard the Apostles (not the expertest men in their owne vulgar) speake all Languages: they might then haue seene the like power in a contrarie effect to this of Babilon. Mans sinne caused this, Gods meerie that: the one came from Babilon, the other from Hierusalem, that old Hierusalem giuing a taste and earnest of that, which the new Hierusalem shall once fully accomplish, when all shall be made new, all shall become one, and God shall be all in all. It appeareth that these Builders lost the vnderstanding of their owne speech, and were endued with other Languages, whereto their Vnderstandings and Tongues were framed, in stead of that former.

What his former Language was, hath bene doubted, either of ignorance, or of curiositie and idle-lore. Theodoret esteemeth Syrian the first Language, and that Hebrew beganne with Moses, taught him by God as a sacred Language. Ioseph Sealiger affirmeth, that the Syrian Marites attribute greater Antiquitie to the ancient Syrian, then to the Hebrew, which is all one, saith he, as if one should contend, that the Italian Idioms were ancienter then the Latine. Hee concludeth, that the Bible was writen in the most ancient Language, which at first was pure Assyria, but by Merchandize and Warres corrupted. For Assyria, Gyth he, was first inhabited both before and after the Flood: and from thence were Colonies sent into Syria and Phœnicia, which held their Language pure, by reason few Strangers had recourse to them till after the time of the first Temple, as appeareth by

 heard, who should at times put Goates to them to giue them sucke, without euer hearing humane voyce. After two yeares they vttered the word Bee, Bee, which was the voyce that they had heard of their Nurses the Goates; but not so interpreted by Psammetichus; for hee inquiring in what Language Bee was significant, and hearing that the Phrygians called Bread, ascribed to them the prioritie of all Nations and Languages. Melabdom E- chebar, the great Magor (as the Iesuites Epistles declare) made the like tryall of thirtie Children, whom hee cauled, without hearing of man, to be brought vp, setting Guards 10 to obserue the Nurses that they should not speake to them: purposing to bee of that Religion whereto they should additt themselves. But neither could * they euer speake, or would hee euer additt himselfe to one certaine Religion. * Goropius by a few Dutch Etymologies grew into conceit, and would haue the World beleue him, that Dutch was the first Language; which if it were, wee English should raigne with them as a Colonie of that Dutch Citie, a streame from that Fountaine, by Commerce and Conquests since manifoldly mixed. But his euidence is too weake, his authoritie too new.

The common and more receiued opinion is, that the Hebrew was the first, confirmed also by Vniuersalitie, Antiquitie, and consent of the Christian Fathers and Learned men, grounding themselves vpon this Reason, That all the names mentioned in Scripture 20 before the Diuision, are in that Language onely significant: besides, it is not like, that Schem conspired with these Babylonians, and therefore not partaker of their punishment. Now it is very probable and almost manifest, that hee was c the same which after is called Melchisedech, King of Salem; betwixt whom and Abraham, in that familiaritie, it is not likely, that there was much dissonance in Language. Hee is also called the Father of all the Sonnes of Heber, by a peculiar proprietie, although hee had other Sonnes, because the puritie of Religion and Language remayned in Hebers Posteritie. And why should Heber call his Sonne Peleg (Diuision) but of this Diuision which then happened? The Nation and Language of Israel borrow their name (Hebrew) of him. And if it had happened to himselfe, why should hee more then others, 30 haue fo named his Sonne?

Domini est terra & plenitudo ejus, orbis terrarum, & uniuersi qui habitant in eo. Psalm 24.

WE have all this time been viewing one Nation which alone was knowne in the Earth, vntill confusion of Language caused diuision of Lands; and haue taken notice of the Heads and Authours of those Peoples and Nations, that from that time were scattered ouer the World, and after settled in their proper Habitations. We haue not followed the opinion of some, both of the

^a Ancients, and later Writers, in defining the number of Nations and Languages through the World, reckoned by them seuentie two. For who seeth not, that Moses in that tenth of Genesis is most careful to describe the Posteritie and bounds of Canaan, which God had giuen to Israel, which it were absurd to thinke in so small a Territorie to bee of so many (that is, eleuen) seuerall Languages? And how many Nations were founded after that by Abrahams Posteritie (not to mention so many other Fountaines of Peoples) by the sonnes of Hagar, and Keturah, and Esaue the Sonne of Isaac? Neyther could the World so suddenly bee peopled: and of that, which then was peopled, Moses writing a Historie of and for the Church, so farre mentioneth the Affaires and Nations of the World, as it was meete for the Church (and especially that Church of the Israelites) to know, according as it was likely they should haue then, or after, more or lesse to doe with them.

^a Africanus hath reckoned the seuentie two by name. But how easie were it in these dayes to set downe seuentie two more, of differing Nations, both in Region and Language; and how little of the World was then knowne, shall presently be shewed. Besides it may bee a question, whether diuers of those, there mentioned, did not speake the same Language (as in Chaldaea, Syria, and Canaan) ^b with some diuersitie of Dialect, a little more then in our Northerne, Westerne, and Southerne English: Which may appeare, both by the Pilgrimages of the Patriarkes, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, in those parts (which had needed new Interpreters, by that rule, in euery two or three dayes trauell, except themselves had bene almost miraculously skilfull in Languages) and by the Chaldaean and Syrian Monuments and Bookes, which some obserue to come nigh to the Hebrew. ^c Doctor Willis proueth Philos opinion, That the Chalde and Hebrew was all one, because Daniel, an Hebrew, was let to learne the Chalde: or that the Syrian and Chalde, according to Mercerus opinion, was the same; yet grants, that in the first times the Syrian and Chalde little differed.

^d Scaliger (a fit man to speake of Languages, who could speake so many) saith, as before is obserued, That in Assyria was the first, both Man and Language, euen the same which thence passed with their Colonies into Syria and Canaan, where it remayned pure, euen then when in Assyria it selfe it was corrupted by entercourse of strangers. Abraham spake this corrupted Syrian, which tooke place only in the Tracts of Euphrates, at the first: but after, both he and his Posteritie vied the Language of Canaan; so that Laban, whose Kindred, Country and Language was the same with ^e Abrahams, yet spake another and differing Language from that of Jacob, one calling that Galed, which the other calleth Iegar sabadaba. Thus it appeareth by him, that the ancient Syrian, Assyrian and Chaldaean, were first that which is now called Hebrew, because the Hebrewes obserued and refayned it, and onely haue left Bookes to vs written therein, (whom the Cananites called Hebreues, as ^f Scaliger and Montanus affirme, because Abraham had passed ouer the River Euphrates vnto them) but after degenerated first in the parts neere Euphrates, where it was first spoken: and when the Tyrians and Sidonians had the Empire of the Sea, by reason of their Traffique, it proued impure there also, howsoever in the time of Elsa or Dido, the Phœnician or Punicke, which shee carryed into Africa, was pure Hebrew, as were also their Letters. The later Carthaginian Letters were read from the left hand to the right, as the Latine and Greeke, but those from the right hand; yet not the same which now are called Hebrew (but ought rather to bee called Iewish, as brought by them from their Babylonish Captiuitie) but the Canaan or Phœnician Letters, which the Samaritans still vse, and wherein Moses had innouated nothing, as some will haue him, neyther in the Letters, nor in the Language, but vied them as they were long before his times. Warres and Traffique could not but further alter those Languages in continuance of time: which appeared most after the Captiuitie, when the Iewes spake not Hebrew; but Syrian, and that also in likelihood more and more by time altered. Perhaps it was with these three Languages, as with the Francke & Language, when they first leated themselves in Gallia, and that which is now called ^h French, or the Saxon and the present English: for there were no lesse mutations and transmutations, by times and Warres; in those parts then in these. It seemeth therefore probable, that at the first diuision of Languages, they that most disagreed, did furthest separate themselves, and they that spake eyther the same, or neere in likeness to the same speech, obserued the same Neighbour-hood of Nation, as of speech; which, the names and words of the Phœnician, Syrian, Persian, Arabian and Egyptian Languages testifie. The diuision of Tongues was about an hundred yeares after the Flood, An-

no Mundi, a thousand seven hundred fiftie seven, as Calvisius and Buntingus account.

Now that wee have spoken of the first Authours of the principall and first Nations, let vs surveye the Lands and Inheritance, which God gaue vnto them, which was the habitable Earth. This Earth, together with the Waters, make one Globe and huge Ball, resting on it selfe, supported by the Almighty hand of God, to the roundnesse whereof, the high Mountaines in comparison of the whole, can bee small impediments, and are but as a few motes of dust sticking to a Ball. Possidonius, Eratosthenes, Hipparchus, Plinius, Prolemey, & others, skilfull in Geographie, haue endeauoured by Art to finde out the true quantitie hereof: and although there appeare difference in their summes, yet that is imputed rather to the diuersitie of their furlongs, which some reckoned longer then others, then to their differing opinions. But neuer had they so certaine intelligence of the quantitie of the Earth, as in our time, by the Navigations of ^k Spaniards, ^l English, and ^m Dutch, round about the same, is giuen vs; Art and Experience consulting, and conspiring together, to perfect the Science of Geographie. For whereas the Ancients deuided the World into three parts, ⁿ Asia, Africa and Europe, and yet neuer knew the East and North parts of Asia, nor the South of Africa, nor the most Northerly parts of Europe: not onely these three are by Land and Sea farre more fully discouered, but also ^o three other parts, no lesse (if not much greater) then the former, are added to them; namely, America Mexicana, and America Peruiana, and Terra Australis; or the Land lying toward the South Pole. As for the seventh part, which some reckon vnder the North Pole, because we haue no relation but from a Magician, a Fryer of Oxford, called Nicholas de Linna, which might with as good confidence lye to vs, as by Art-Magicke take view of those Parts (otherwise it is not certainly knowne, whether it be ioyning to Asia, or whether it bee Land or Sea) I therefore leaue it out in this diuision.

Europe is diuided ^a from Africke by the Mediterranean Sea; from Asia by the Egean and Euxine, Mæotis, Tanais, and a Line from the Fountaines thereof North-wards: on the North and West parts walshed with the Ocean; which running by the Straights of Gibraltar, floweth along the Coasts of Africke, to the Cape of Good Hope, and thence passeth all alongst on the East-side thereof into the Arabian Gulfe, where, by a Necke of Land, it is encountered: This Necke, the Mediterranean, and Ocean, doe limit the bounds of Africa: The rest of the old World is Asia. America Mexicana, or North, and the South called Peruiana, are seuered by the narrow straights of Dariene, in other places compasse by the Sea: The South Continent is very litle knowne, and containeth the rest of the World; not bounded in the former limits. But in their particular places wee shall heare of each of them more fully.

It cannot be without some great worke of God, thus in the olde and decrepit Age of the World, to let it haue more perfect knowledge of it selfe; which wee hope, and pray, may be for the further enlargement of the Kingdome of CHRIST IESVS, and propagation of his Gospell. And as in former times, in those then discouered parts, the Iewes were scattered, some violently, some willingly, through ASIA, AFRICA, and EUROPE, to vsher the Gospell into those parts, and make way for that which the most of themselves reiected: who knoweth, whether in the secret Dispensation of Diuine Providence, (which is a co-worker in euery worke, able euen out of euill to bring good) the Donations of Popes, the Navigations of Papists, the preaching of Fryers and Iesuites may be fore-runners of a further and truer manifestation of the Gospell, to the new-found Nations? for euen alreadie it is one good step of an Atheist and Infidell to become a Profelyte, although with some foyle: and againe, the Iesuites there cannot play the Statemen as in these parts, yea (themselves in their Relations being witnesses) they rather take Evangelical courses of those, which heere they count Heretikes, and by laying open mens sinne through the fall, and Diuine Iustice, onely by CHRIST satisfied, doe beate downe Infidelitie with diligent Catechising: althowg vpon that golden foundation they build afterward their owne Hay and Stubble, with their racke of Confession, and rabble of Ceremonies, and (the most dangerous to new Conuerts) an exchanged Polytheisme in worshipping of Saints, Images, and the Hofi. But if God shall once shew mercy to Spaine, to make them truly Catholike, and, as a diuine Inquisitor, condemne that Deuillish Inquisition to perpetual exile, how great a window may by that meanes be opened vnto this new World for their conuersion and reformation? And why may not the English Expedition and Plantation in Virginia, and the Navigations of other Protestants, helpe this way, if men respected not their owne pride, ambition, and couetousnesse, more then the Truth and Glory of God? But lye that by Fishers conuerted the olde World, and turned the Wildomie of the World into foolishnesse, subdued Scepters by preaching the Crosse, yea, by suffering it in himselfe and in his members, is able of those stones to raise vp Children to Abraham, and that by the robust & as triplex, thrice happy hee that could happily attchieue it) I confesse beyond my abilitie exactly to performe; but with the wisest, I hope that the daughtinesse of the attempt in a thing so full of varietie and hardnesse, shall rather purchase pardon to my slips, then blame for my rashnesse. And how can I but often slip, that make a perambulation ouer the World, that see with others eyes, that tell of matters past so many ages before I had a Being? Yet such is the necessitie of such a History, either thus, or not at all. But as neere as I can, I purpose to follow the best euidence, and to propound the Truth: my fault (where it is worst) I shall be rather mendacia dicere, then mentiri, and yet the Tale-man shall bee set by the Tale, the Authors name annexed to his Historie, to shield me from that imputation.

And first we must begin with ASIA, to which the first place is due, as being the place of the first Men, first Religion, first Cities, Empires, Arts: where the most things mentioned in Scripture, were done; the place where Paradise was seated; the Arke rested; the Law was giuen; and whence the Gospell proceeded: the place which did beare Him in his selfe, that by his Word beareth up all things.

ASIA (after some) is so called of Asia, the daughter of Oceanus and Thetis: which was wife to Lapetus, mother of Prometheus: Others fetch this name from Asius the sonne of Manens: both with like certaintie and credit. It is greater then Europe and Africa: yea, the Islands thereof are larger, if they were put together, then all Europe. It is compassed with the Easterne, Indian, and Scythian Oceans, on three parts: on the West it hath the Arabian Gulfe, that Necke of Land which diuided it from Africa, the Mediterranean. Aegean, Pontike Seas, the Lake Maeotis, Tanais, with an imagined line from thence to the Bay of S. Nicholas. Some make it yet larger; and make Nilus so diuise it from Africa, but with lesse reason. Taurus diuideth it in the middest: On the North side is that which is called Asia interior: the South is Asia exterior. More vnequall is that diuision into Asia the greater and the lesse, this being lesse indeed; then that it should sustaine a member in that diuision. Io, Baryus diuideth it into nine parts, Oriens into five, Magius into seuen, which are these, First, That part of Tartaria, betwixt Muscouia, the Northerne Ocean, the Riuer Ob, and the Lake Ky tai, and a line thence drawne to the Caspian Sea, and that Isthmus which is betwixt that and the Pontike Sea: secondly, the great Cham Countrey, from thence to the Easterne Sea, betwixt the frozen Sea and the Calpian; thirdly, That which is subiect to the Turke, all from Sarmatia and Partaria Southwards, betwixt Tygris and the Meditèranean Sea: fourthly, The Persian Kingdome, betwixt the Turke, Tartar, India, and the Red Sea: fifthly, India, within and beyond Ganges, from Indus to Cantan: sixthly, The Kingdome of China: seventhly, The Islands. These diuisions are not so exact as may be wished, because of that variety & vncertainty in those Kingdomes. Many things doth Asia yeeld, not elsewhere to be had; Myrrhe, Frankincense, Cinamon, Clouds, Nutmegs, Mace, Pepper, Muske, and other like, besides the chiefest Jewels. It hath also Minerals of all sorts: It nourisheth Elephants, Camels, and many other Beasts, Serpents, Fowles, wilde and tame, as in the ensuing Discourse, in their due places, shall appeare; yet doth it not nourish such monstrous shapes of men, as fabulous Antiquitie fained. It brought forth that Monster of Irreligion, Mabumet; whose Sect, in diuerse Sects, is fostereth, with long continuance of manifold Superstitions. It hath now those great Empires of the Turke, Persian, Mogore, Cathayan, Chinois; it had sometimes the Parthian, and before that, the Persian, Median, Assyrian, Scythian: and first (as it seemeth) before them all, the Babylonian Empire vnder Nimrod, which is therefore in the next place to be spoken of.

CHAP. X.

Of Babylonia; the originall of Idolatrie; and the Chaldeans Antiquities before the Flood, as BEROVS hath reported them.

Onfusion caused diuision of Nations, Regions and Religions. Of this Confusion (whereof is already spoken) the Citie, and thereof this Countrey tooke the name. Plinie maketh it a part of Syria, which hee extendeth from hence to Cilicia. Sirabo addeth, as farre as the Pontike Sea. But is vially reckoned an entire Countrey of it selfe, which Ptolomey doth thus bound. On the North is that Melopotamia, on the West Arabia Deserta; Susiana on the East; on the South, part of Arabia, and the Persian Gulf. Luke maketh Babylonia a part of Melopotamia: Ptolomey more strictly diuideth them: whereunto also agreeth the interpretation of the Land of Shinar, that it was the lower part of Melopotamia, containing Chaldaea and Babylon, lying vnder the Mount Sanger. In this Countrey was built the first City which were of after the Flood, by the vngodfull World, moued thereunto (as some thinke) by Nimrod, the sonne of Cush, nephew of Cham. For as Caines posteritie before the Flood, were called the sonnes of Men, as more fauouring the things of men then of God: more industrious in humane inventions, then religious deuotions: so by Noahs curse it may appeare, and by the Nations that defended of him, that Cham was the first Author, after the Flood, of irreligion. Neither is it likely, that he which denied his old Father, whom Age, Holinesse, Fatherhood, Benefits, and vberie great Funtion of Monarchy, Priesthood and Prophecie, should haue taught him to reuerence; That he (I say) which at once could breake all these bonds and chains of Nature and Humanitie, would be held with any bonds of Religion; or could haue an eye of Faith to see him which is invisible, hauing put out his eyes of Reason and Conscience. Had he feared God, had he reuerenced man, had hee made but profession of these things; in some hypocritical shew, hee could not so easily haue sidden downe at ease in that Chair of Scorning, whence we read not that euer hee rose by repentance. From this Cham came Nimrod, & The mightie hunter before the Lord; not of innocent beasts, but of men, compelling them to his subiection, although Noah and Sem were yet alive, with many other Patriarches.

As for Noah, the fabling Heathen, it is like, desired him. The Berosus of fabling Amisus, calleth him Father of the gods, Heauen, Chaos, the Soule of the World. Ianus his double face might seeme to haue arisen hence, of Noahs experience of both Ages, before and after the Flood. The fable of Saturnus cutting off his Fathers priuities, might take beginning of that act, for which Cham was cursed. Sem is supposed to be that Melchisedech King of Salem, the figure of the Lord, and the propagator of true Religion; although even in his posteritie it failed, in which Abrahams Father, as witnesseth ^h Ioshua, served other gods. Iaphets pietie causeth vs to perfwade our selves good things of him; Cham and his posteritie we see the authors of ruine. Philo ^h and Melchodus (so are the two bookes called, but falsly) tell, That in these daies they began to diuine by Starres, and to sacrifice their children by Fire; which Element Nimrod compelled men to worship: and that to leaue a name to posteritie, they engraued their names in the bricke wherewith Babel was builded. Abraham refusing to congregate with them (and good cause, for ^h he was not yet borne) was cast into their Brick-kil, and came out (long after from his Mothers wombe) without harme. Nabor, Lot, and other his fellowes, nine in number, sau'd themselves by flight. ^h Others adde, that Aram, Abrams, brother, was done to death for refusing to worship the Fire. Qui Basium non odit semet sua carmina Mani.

To come to truer and more certaine reports, Moses saith, That the beginning of Kimrods Kingdome was Babel and Erech, = and Acad and Calne, which three, some interpret Edessa, Nisibis, Callinifum. And whereas commonly it is translated in the next words, Out of that Land came Ashur, and built Ninineh: Tremellius and Iunius read it, Out of this Land, bee (Nimrod) went into Ashur, or Assyria, and built Niniue and Rehoboth, Calah, and Refen. But ^h most usually this is vnderstood of Ashur, the sonne of Sem, who disclayming Nimrods tyrannie, built Niniue, which after became the chiefe City of the Assyrian Empire, to which Babylon it selfe was subiected not long after. Xenophon de Equinoctis (if his authority be current) saith, That the eldest of the chiefe families were called Saturni, their Fathers had to name Caelum, their wiues Rhea: and out of a pillar, erected by Semiramis to Ninus, alleageth this inscription, My Father was Iupiter Belus, my Grandfather Saturnus Babylonicus, my great Grandfather Saturnus Aethiops, who was sonne of Saturnus Aegyptius, to whom Caelus, Phoenix Ogyges was Father. Ogyges is interpreted Noah, therefore called Phaonix, because of his habitation (as is thought) in Phoenicia, not farre from whence, in Ierusalem Sem reigned. Saturnus Aegyptius, may be the name of Cham, of whose name Egypt is in Scripture tearmed the land of Cham. Saturnus Aethiops is Cush, Nimrod, Babylonicus, the father of Belus, who begat Ninus. But this cannot be altogether true: For Niniue hath greater antiquitie then Nimrods Nephew (howsoever the Greeke Histories ascribe this to Ninus), and Babylon to his wife Semiramis) except we say, that by them these two Cities formerly built, were enlarged and erected to that magnificence, which with the growth of the Assyrian Empire they after obtained.

Eusebius ^h in the first booke of his Chronicle attributeth the originall of Idolatry to Serug, the Father of Nabor. Beda ^h saith, In the daies of Phaleg Temples were built, and the Princes of Nations adored for gods. The same hath ^h Isidore, Epiphanius ^h referreth it to Serug; and addeth, That they had not grauen Images of Wood or Metall, but pictures of men; and Thara the Father of Abraham, was the first Author of Images. The like hath Suidas. Hugo de S. Victore saith, Nimrod brought men to idolatrie, and caused them to worship the fire, because of the fiery nature and operation of the Sun; which errour the Chaldeans afterwards followed. These times, till Abram, they called Scythismus. The reason of their Idolatrie, ^h Eusebius alleageth, That they thus kept remembrance of their Warriours, Rulers, and such as had achieved noblest enterprises, and worthiest exploits in their life time. Their posteritie ignorant of that their scope (which was, to obserue their memorials which had been Authors of good things, and because they were their forefathers) worshipped them as heavenly Deities, and sacrificed to them. Of their ^h God-making or Canonization, this was the manner: In their sacred Bookes or Kallenders they ordained, That their names should bee written after their death, and a Feast should be solemnized according to the same time, saying, That their soules were gone to the Isles of the blessed, and that they were no longer condemned or burned with fire. These things lasted to the daies of Thara; who (saith Suidas) was an Image-maker, and propounded his Images (made of diuers matter) as gods to be worshipped: but Abram broke his Fathers Images. From Saruch the Author, and this Practice, Idolatry passed to other Nations: Suidas addeth specially into Greece; for they worshipped Hellen, a Gyant of the posterity of Iapheth, a partner in the building of the Tower.

Not vnlike to this, we read the causes of Idolatry in the booke of ^h Wisdom (supposed to be written by Philo, but because the substance is Salomons, professing and bearing his name) which of all the Apochrypha Scripture sustaineth least exception, attaineth highest commendation: When a Father mourned grievously for his sonne that was taken away suddenly, he made an Image for him that was once dead, whom now he worshippeth as a God, and ordained to his seruises Ceremonies and Sacrifices. A second cause hee alleageth, viz. The tyrannie of men, whose Images they made and honoured, that they might by all means flatter him that was absent, as though hee had beene bee present. A third reason followeth; The ambitious skill of the workman, that through the beauty of the worke, the multitude being allured, tooke him for a God, which a little before was honoured but as a man. The like affirmeth y Hierome, Cyprian, and Polydore de inuentoribus; * LACTANTIUS (as before is shewed) maketh that the Etymologie of the word Superstitio, Quia superstitum memoriam defunctorum colebant, aut quia parentibus suis superstitie celebrabant imagines eorum domi, tanquam deos penates; either because they honoured with such worship the flourishing memory of their dead Ancestors; or because flourishing and out-living their Ancestors, they celebrated their Images in their houses, as household gods. Such Authors of new Rites and Deifiers of dead men they called Superstitious: but those which followed the publicly-receiued and ancient Deities, were called Religious, according to that Verse of Virgil. Uana superstitio veterumq; ignara deorum. But by this rule (saith Lactantius) wee shall find all Superstitious which worship false gods, and them only religious which worship the one and true God. The same * Lactantius saith, That Noab cast off his sonne Cham for his wickednesse, and expelled him. Hee abode in that part of the Earth which now is called Arabia, called (saith he) of his name Canaan, and his Posteritie Canaanites. This was the first people which was ignorant of God, because their Founder and Prince receiued not of his Father the worship of God. But first of all other, the Egyptians began to behold and adore the heavenly bodies: and because they were not couered with houles for the temperature of the Ayre, and that Region is not subiect to clouds, they observed the Motions and Eclipses of the Starres, and whiles they often viewed them more curiously, fel to worship them. After that, they inuented the monstrous shapcs of beasts, which they worshipped. Other men scattered through the World, admiring the Elements, the Heauen, Sunne, Land, Sea, without any Images and Temples worshipped them, and sacrificed to them sub dio, til in procelle of time they erected Temples and Images to their most puiſſant Kings, & ordained vnto them Sacrifices & Incense so wandering from the knowledge of the true God, they became Gentiles. Thus saith Lactantius. And it is not vnlike that they performed this to their Kings, eyther b in flatterie, or feare of their power, or because of the benefites which they receiued from them, this beeing (saith c Plinie) the most ancient kinde of thankfulness, to reckon their Benefactors among the gods. To which accordeth * Cicero in the Examples of Hercules, Castor, Pollux, Esculapine, 30 Liber, Romulus. And thus the Moores deified their Kings, and the Romans their deceased Emperours.

The first that is named to haue set vp Images, and worship to the dead, was d Nimus, who when his Father e Belus was dead, made an Image to him, and gaue priuiledge of Sanctuary to all Offenders that resorted to this Image: whereupon, moued with gracelesse gratefulnesse, they performed thereunto diuine honours. And this example was practised after by others. And thus of Belor Belus beganne this Imagery, and for this cause (saith f Lyra) they called their Idols Bel, Baal, Beel-Zebub, according to the diuersitie of Languages. g Cyrillus calleth him Arbelus, and saith, that before the Flood was no Idolatrie amongst men, but it had beginning after in Babylon, in which, Arbelus (next after whom ranged Nimus) was worshipped. Tertullian h out of the Booke of Enoch, before mentioned, is of opinion, that Idolatrie was before the Flood. Thus to continue the memorie of mortall men, and in admiration of the immortal heauenly Lightes, together with the tyrannie of Princes, and policies of the Priests, beganne this worshipping of the creature, with the contempt of the Creator: which how they increased by the Mysteries of their Philosophers, the fabling of their Poets, the ambition of Potentates, the Superstition of the vulgar, the gainfull collusion of their Priests, the cunning of Artificers, and aboueall, the malice of the Devils, worshipped in those Idols, there giuing answers and Oracles, and receiuing Sacrifices; the i Histories of all Nations are ample Wiencesses. And this Romane Babylon, now Tyrant of the West, is the heire of elder Babylon (sometimes Ladie of the East) in these deuotions, that then and still Babylon might bee the mother of Whoredomes and all Abominations. To which aptly agree the Parallels of Babylon and Rome in k Orosius, the Empire of the one ceasing, when the other beganne first to haue a being; which hee further proletheth in many particulars.

But before we prosecute these Babylonian affaires after the Flood, it shall not be amisse to shew here the Chaldaean Fables of Antiquities before the Flood, out of Berossus a Chaldaean Priest, which liued in the time of Alexander. Polyhistor x citeth out of Berossus his first Booke this report of himselfe, and Tatianus m saith he was the Priest of Belus, and wrote his Chaldaean Storie to Antiochus, the third after Seleucus, in three Bookes. His name signifieth the Sonne of Osce.

Alorus raigned the space of ten Sari (Sarus with them is three thousand sixe hundred yeares) Alaparus three Sari, Amelus thurteen Sari; Amemus twelue; Metabrus eighteen;

Daorus tenne; Adorachus eightene; Amphis tenne; Otiartes eight; Xixubrus eightene: in his time, as is said before, the Flood happened. The whole space is an hundred and twentie Sari, which amounteth to foure hundred thirtie two thousand yeares. This I thought not vnfit (although incredible) to report from Berosus, both because my scope is to declare as well false as true Religions (it being not Theologicall but Historically, or rather Historically Theologicall) and because the Ancients, Cicero, Lactantius, Augustine, haue mentioned this monstrous Computation of the Chaldean Kalender, which yet they racke higher to foure hundred threescore and ten thousand yeeres. Here you haue the particulars out of Apollodorus and Abidenus, which both borrowed them of Berosus. ^a Polybistor addeth, that there came one out of the Red Sea, called Oannes and Anedotus a Monster (other-where like a fish, his head, feet and hands like a man, as saith Photius, but Al. Polybistor ascribeth two heads, one of a fish, and the other of a man) the Image whereof was vnto his times referred. This Monster liued without meate, and taught them the knowledge of Letters and all Arts, buildings of Cities, foundations of Temples, enacting of Lawes, Geometry and Husbandry, and all necessaries to mans life. Afterwards he returned to the Sea; and after him appeared other such Monsters. Foure of them came out of the Sea, saith Abidenus, when Daos (whom Apollodorus calleth Daorus) reigned; their names were Eudochus, Eneugamus, Enobonius, Anementus. Pentabiblus (it seemeth) was then their chiefe Citie. That Oannes the first did write of the first beginning: That all was darknesse and water, in which liued monstrous creatures, hauing two formes; men with two wings, and some with foure; with one body two heads, one of a man, and another of a woman, with the priuities of both Sexes: others with hornes and legs like Goats; some with Horle feet; some like Centaures, the former part Men, the after part Horses; Buls also headed like Men and Dogges, with foure bodies, &c. with many monstrous mixtures and confusions of creatures, whose Images were kept in the Temple of Belus.ouer all these ruled a woman, named Omorka, which signifieth the Sea, and by like signification of Letters, the Moone. Then came Belus and cut her in twaine, and made the one halfe of her Land, the other Heauen, and the creatures therein appeared. This Belus made men and beastes the Sunne, Moone, and Planets: these things reporteth Berosus in his first Booke; in the second he telleth of Kings (before mentioned) which reigned till the Flood: After the Flood also the same Polybistor out of him sheweth, That Sisubrus hauing by Saturnus warning before, built an Arke (as is before said) and laid vp all Monuments of Antiquitie in Sipparis Citie dedicated to the Sunne, and now with all his World of Creatures escaped the Flood, going out of the Arke did sacrifice to the gods, and was neuer scene more. But they heard a voyce out of the Ayre, giuing them this Precept, To bee Religious. His Wife, Daughter and Ship-maister were partakers with him of this honour, Hee said vnto them, the Countrey where they now were was Armenia, and hee would come againe to Babylon, and that it was ordaind, that from Sipparis they should receiue Letters, and communicate the same to men: which they accordingly did. For hauing sacrificed to the gods: they went to Babylon and digged out the * Letters, Writings, or Bookes, and building many Cities, and founding Temples, did againe repayre Babylon. Thus farre out of Alexander Polybistor, a large Fragment of the true Berosus.

Walls, Temples, and Images.

Leauing these Antiquities, rotten with Age, let vs come to take better view of this late Citie. ^a Herodorus, ^b Philostatus, ^c Plinie, and ^d Solinus report concerning the compasse of Babylon, That the walls contayned foure hundred and eightie furlongs, situate in a large Plaine, foure square, inuironed with a broad and deepe Ditch full of water. ^e Diodorus saith, That there were but so many furlongs as are dayes in the yeare, so that every day a furlong of the wall was built, and thirtie hundred thousand Work-men employed therein. ^f Sirabo ascribeth to the compasse three hundred and eightie furlongs: and ^g Curtius, three hundred fiftie eight, (ninetic furlongs thereof inhabited, the rest allotted to Tylchaud Husbandry.) Concerning the thickeesse of the walls, or the height, they also disagree. The 60 first Authors affirme the height two hundred Cubites, the thickeesse ^h fittie. They which say least, cut off halfe that summe. Well might ⁱ Aristotle esteeme it a Countrey rather then a Citie, being of such greatnesse, that some part of it was taken three dayes before the other

other heard of it. k Lyranus out of Herome vpon Esfay affirmeth, that the foure squares thereof containe sixteen miles a peece, wherein euery man had his Vineyard and Garden according to his degree, wherewith to maintaine his Family in time of siege. The Fortresse or Tower thereof he saith was that which had bene built by the Sonnes of Noah. And not without cause was it reckoned among the 1 Wonders of the World. It had a hundred Brazen gates, and two hundred and fiftie Towers. It was indeede a Mother of Wonders: fo many Miracles of Art accompanied the same, the workes partly of Semiramis, partly of Nabuchodonosor; which I would desire the Reader to stay his hasty pace, and take notice of. Euery where I shall not, I cannot, be so tedious in these kinds of Relations. m Diodor. thus adiecth of Semiramis; shee built also a bridge of fise furlongs. The walles were made of Bricke and Asphaltum, and slimy kind of Pitch which that Countrey yeeldeth, Shee built two Palaces, which might serue both for ornament and defence; one in the West, which inuironed sixtie furlongs; with high Bricke walles; within that a lesse, and within that a lesse circuit, which containeth the Tower. These were wrought sumptuously with Images of beafts, and therein also was game and hunting of beafts: this had three gates. The other in the East, on the other side the Riuer, containe but thirtie furlongs. In the lower Countrey of Babylonia she made a great square Lake containyng two hundred furlongs; the walls whereof were of Bricke, and that pitchie Morter; the depth thirtie fise foot. In the midst of the Citie she erected a Temple to Iupiter Belus (saith Herodotus) with Brazen gates (now in his time remayning) foure square: each square containyng two furlongs, in the midst whereof is a solid Tower, of the height and thickeesse of a furlong: vpon this another, and fo one higher then another, eight in number. In the highest Tower is a Chappell, and therein a faire bed couered, and a Table of Gold, without any Image. Neyther, as the Chaldean Priests affirme, doth any abide here in the night, but one woman, whom this God shall appoint. They say, the God himselfe there lyeth. In regard of this exceeding height, Diodorus affirmes, that the Chaldeans did thereon make their obseruations of the Starres. Hee also addeeth, that Semiramis placed in the top three golden statues; one of Iupiter fortie foot long, weighing a thousand Babylonian Talents, till his time remayning; another of Opt, weighing as much, sitting in a golden Throne, and at her feet two Lions, and iust by huge Serpents of silver, each of thirtie Talents: the third Image was of Inuo standing, in weight eight hundred Talents. Her right hand held the head of a Serpent, her left, a Scepter of stone. To all these was common, one Table of gold, forty foot long, in breadth twelue, in weight fiftie Talents. There were also two standing cups of thirtie Talents, and two vessels for Perfume of like value: three other vessels of gold, whereof one dedicated to Impiter, weighed twelue hundred Babylonian Talents: (euery Babylonian Talent is said to containe seuen thousand Drachme Attice, sixtie three pounds, nine ounces and a halfe, and halfe a quarter Troy weight.) All these the Persian Kings tooke away. Without the Temple, by Herodotus testimonie, was a golden Altar, and another huge one besides, for their solemn Sacrifices, the other being not to bee polluted with blood, except of sucking things. In that greater Chaldeans burnt yeerely in their sacrifices a hundred thousand talents of Libanus. One statue of gold twelue cubits high, Darius affecting spared; but Xerxes both tooke it, and slew the Priest that forbade him.

I might here also tell of those Pensile gardens, borne vp on arches, foure square, each square containing foure hundred foot: filled on the rooffe with earth, wherein grew great trees and other plants. The entrance was (as it were) a hill: the arches were builded one vpon another in conuenient height, still increasing as they ascended: the highest which bare the walls, were fiftie cubits high, and twelue in breadth: There were within these Arches, Innes. There was also a conueyance of water to the watering thereof. This Garden was made long after Semiramis time by a King, which herein seemed to lord it ouer the Elements, and countermaund Nature, being himselfe the seruant of his wifes appetite, so he in this lowly valley wherein Babylon stood, would faine haue some representation of her owne hilly and mountainous countrey of Media.

This King was Nabuchodonosor, as witnesseth o Berosus in Iosephus, who hauing conquered Egypt, Syria, Phoenicia, Arabia, enriched the Temple of Belus with the spoiles, and added a new Citie to the old, without the same. And providing that the enemy might not after turne the course of the Riuer, and approach to the Citie, he compassed the inner Citie with three Walls, and the vter Citie with as many, these of bricke, those also with bitumen, or pitchie slime of that Countrey, adding thereunto stately gates. And neere his fathers Palace he built another more sumptuous: and this hee did in fiftene dayes. Theteein hee rayfed stone-works like unto mountaines, and planted the same with all manner of trees; Hee made also a pensile Garden, Many more things (saith Iosephus) doth Berosus adde, and blameth the Greeke writers for ascribing the building of Babylon to Semiramis an Assyrian.

This

This fragment of Berosus cited by Iosephus, doth well serue vs to cleare both the holy and prophane Historie. In the one, Daniel ? induceth Nabuchodonosor walking in his royall Palace in Babel, with words answerable to his pride. Is not this great Babel that I have builded for the house of the Kingdome, by the might of my power, and for the honour of my maiestie? His words (euen in the speaking) were written in the Booke of GOD, and an enditement thereof framed in the highest Court; where he was adiudged presently the losse of Reason, which he had thus abused, Till hee knew that the most High bare rule ouer the Kingdome of men, giuing the same to whom hee will. Well might he say, he had built it, iniegar of this new Citie and Palace, with other miracles theof: with more truth then some Expositors, which accuse him herein of a lie, for arrogating that which Semiramis did. His wife also, for whose loue he did this, was (as Scaliger thinketh) Nitocris, mentioned by Horodotus; who also coniectureth that shee was the Daughter of Asiattus, that Daniel intendeth her, Dan. v. 10. that shee admitted the Kingdome in the time of her husbands madnesse, and in the times also of Enlmerodach and Balsasar: a woman no whit inferiour to Semiramis; that it may be said, Semiramis began Babylon, and Nitocris finished and perfected it, finishing and perfecting those workes which Nabuchodonosor for her husband before the time of his madnesse had beguene.

And for Semiramis, profane histories generally make her the founder of this Citie, and among others Annius his Berosus, who (contrary to this fragment of the true Berosus in Iosephus) saith, that Semiramis made Babylon of a towne a great Citie, that shee might be rather esteemed the builder thereof, then enlarger. Nimrod had before built the Tower, but not finished it, and did not found the Citie, which hee had designed and set out, and Belus his sonne had erected those designed foundations, rather of the Towne then the Citie Babylon. Moses testifieth that at the first building, they were (by confusion of language) forced to cease their worke, leauing a name of their shame, in stead of that renowne and name, which they had promised to themselves. It may be that Semiramis did amplify this: and happily so did other Assyrian and Babylonian kings, as Augustine and Avidenus asseme. Hanc quidem putant condidisse Babylona, quam quidem potius instaurare. Likewise Avidenus saith, that the wals being by inundation fallen, were built againe by Nabuchodonosor, and agreeeth in other things with Berosus. But the Grecians are children, in comparison of ancient Historie, and little of this matter can we asseme on their testimonie; their first Historian Herodotus liuing long after this age, in the time of the Persian Monarchie. Howsoever, Nabuchodonosor is hee which (by diuine and humane testimonie) there established that golden head of the Image, the seat of the Babylonian Monarchie, raising it to that high top of worldly excellence. Yea Daniel speaketh of one more sumptuous Image, then any mentioned by Herodotus and Diodorus, set vp by this King threecore cubits high, and six broad, enioying a Catholicke and vniuersall idolurie thereunto, which the three Saints Shadrach, Mesbach, and Abednego refused, and in a ferie triall were found both Martyrs and Confessors. Lyranus, Hugo Cardinals, Peterius, Pintus, Pellicanus, thinke that Nabuchodonosor set vp this Image for himselfe, requiring diuine honour to be giuen vnto it, as Caligula since amongst the Romans; but by his expostulation, Will ye not serue my gods? and the like answer of those three men: We will not serue thy gods, it seemeth to haue beene consecrated to Bel, or some other Babylonian Deitie. Which because it was erected in the plaine of Dura (this is thought to bee Dura in Susiana, mentioned by Psolomey) Daniel might haue good occasion of absence from thence, whose office was to sit in the gate of the King, at Babylon.

Strabo out of Megasthenes (whom Annius hath set out as truly as he hath done Berosus, saue that he liued in the name, and called him Metasthenes) saith of this King, whom hee nameth Nabuchodonosor, more esteemed of the Chaldeans then Hercules, that he came in his expeditions as farre as the Pillars of Hercules (the straights of Gibraltar) and as far as Tearon the Ethiopian, and that he conducted an army out of Iberia into Thracia and Pontus. This Tearon is he whom the Scripture calleth Tirhakah, which watted against Sennacherib.

But to returne to our pensile Gardens, which Diodorus and Curtius attribute to a Syrian King (which was no other but this Conquerour of Syria, Nabuchodonosor) and both they and Strabo doe at large describe and account among the worlds wonders, as were also the Bridge and the Walls of the Citie. And no lesse wonderfull was that Obeliske, or Needle: a square stone made spire-fashion, cut by Semiramis out of the mountaines of Armenia, one hundred and fiftie foot long, and foure and twentie thicke, on many Waynes brought to the River, thence to Babylon, and there erected. Plinius testifieth, that the Temple of Belus still remaineth in his dayes: and that Belus was inuentor of Astronomie.

This Temple was the same with the Sepulchre of Belus, which Strabo saith, was raised by Xerxes; yet not so, but that Alexander would haue repaired it; but in regard that it asked so much labour and time (for only the cleansing of the earth required ten thousand men two moneths worke) he was not able to finish that which he had begunne. In the description he saith lesse then Herodotus, that it was a Pyramis, or spire-worke, a furlong, or six hundred foot in height, and each of the foure squares containing as much. Arrianus affirmeth that Alexander had the same purpose of other Temples also. The Temples, sayth he, which Xerxes had ouerthrowne, he commanded to be repared, and amongst them the Temple of Belus, whom the Babylonians with singular Religion worship. f At his returne homewards Belus in thankfullnesse (it seemeth) sent his Chaldean Priests to meete him, and forbid him to enter the Citie, as he loued his life, whose Oracle Alexander contemning, there ended his dayes. The cause why he listned not to them, is thought a mistrust, that he conceiued of the Chaldeans. For whereas Xerxes, at his returne out of Greece, had razed this and all other sacred places of the Babylonians; Alexander minding the repaire hereof, hauing already remoned the rubbish, thought with his whole Armie to achieve this enterprise. But the reuenue which the Kings of Assyria had left for the maintenance of this Temple sacrifices, after the ouerthrow thereof, was shared among the Chaldeans; which they by this attempt were like to lose, and therefore were willing to want his presence.

Mentioned also by Sic. dot. Strabo in his traueils into Persia.

This Temple some suppose to be that Tower of Babel, mentioned by Moses, Gen. 11. and supposed still in part to remaine. For about seuen or eight miles from Bagdat, as men passe from Felugia a Towne on Euphrates, whereon old Babylon stood, to this new Citie on Tygris (a worke of eightene houres, and about forty miles space) there is scene a ruinous shap of a shapelesse heape and building, in circuit lesse then a mile (some say, but a quarter of a mile) about the height of the stone-worke of Pauls Steeple in London: the bricks being six inches thicke, eight broad, and a foot long (as master Allen measured) with Mats of Canes laid betwixt them, yet remayning as found, as if they had beene laid within a yeeres space. Thus master Elard, and master Fitch, master Carwright also, and my friend master Allen, by testimony of their owne eyes, haue reported. But I can scarce thinke it to be that Tower or Temple, because Authors place it in the midst of old Babylon, and neere Euphrates. Whereas this is neerer Tygris: Isidore affirmeth, that fitt after the flood, Nimrod the Giant founded Babylon, which Semiramis the Assyrian Queene enlarged, and made the wall with Bricke and Bitumen. The height of the Tower was six thousand one hundred seuen hundred foure paces, & Verhegan addeth, the passage to mount vp was verie wide and great, winding about on the out-side: the middle and inward part for the more strength being all masse: and by Cart, Camels, Diomedaries, Hories and Asies, the carriages were borne and drawne vp: and by the way were many Lodgings and Hosteries both for man and beast; yea fields also for graine and pasture; if yee can beleue it. But it is now, as wee see, come to confusion. Also there are yet beyond Tygris some ruines of a Temple, which is called the Temple of Bel, with high yron gates, as is reported.

Dominicus Niger hath these words: Seleucus in proceesse of time hath changed her state and her site. For it was on the westerne banke of Tygris, which a Cut from Euphrates flowed into; in which place are now scene the ruines thereof, where the shepherds haue erected their cottages: and on the Easterne banke haue the Barbarians built the Citie, and called it Bachdad, right over-against the old. If this be true, vaine is the conceit of credulous Trauellers, which suppose those ruines to be the monuments of Babylonis buriall, and confound against this later world, with the reports of Babels Tower.

The Bitumen of slime pitch which they vsed in stead of Morter in their building is as Dominicus Niger out of Trogus reporteth, common in those parts. Herodotus telleth, that eight dayesourney from Babylon was another Citie, named Is, with a small till of the same name, which runneth into Euphrates, carrying thither (as tribute) much of this slime matter. Niger mentioneth one place, where, out of a cliff or opening of the earth, proceedeth such a finke, that it killeth the Birds which flie ouer it. And at this day, two dayes journey from Bagdat at a place called Ait, is a mouth continually throwing forth boyling pitch, therefore by the Moores called Hel-mouth, which runneth into a great field, almost full thereof; and herewith they pitch their boates. The water, as my friend master Allen (who liued in Bagdat diuers moneths) told me, is warme, and accounted medicinable, for which cause he hath drunke largely thereof: the liquid pitch floateth on the top of the water, like cloured Creame: to vse his owne phrase,

The Countrey of Babylon hath beene the most fruitfull in the world, yielding ordinarily two hundred, and in some places three hundred increase: the blades of the Wheat and Barley about foure fingers broad. Plinius, somewhat otherwise: They cut faith he) or mow their corne twice, and seed it a third time in Babylon, otherwise it would be nothing but blade:

blader: and yet so their barren land yeeldeth fiftie, their best an hundred increase. Tygris and Euphrates overflow it, but bring not fainesse to the soyle, as Nilus in Egypt, but rather cleane that superfluous fatnesse which naturally it hath.

The soyle is of a rosenie clay, sayth master Allen, and would still retaine in likelihood his ancient fertility, if it were watered with like diligent husbandrie: In digging, it yeeldeth corrupt waters, fauouring of that pitchie slime. In the Citie anciently, it seemeth that in every Garden of any Citizen of fort, were rills made out of the River. The ruines from the Tower aforesaid to Bagdat (which some call Babylon) and beyond on the other side of the River, containe twentie two milles, yet to be seene: which happily are the ruines, not of old Babylon, so much as of the Neighbour towne here built Seleucia, Vologocerta, and Ctesiphon: which I rather thinke, because they reach beyond Tygris as well as on this side.

To returne to the religious places in Babylon: Celsus Rhodiginus tels, that in the Temple of Apollo, was found a golden chest of great antiquitie, which being broken by some accident, thence issued a pestilent vapour, that infected not those alone which were present, but the neighbouring Nations, as farre as Parthia. Ammianus Marcellinus hath the like Historie of the Image of Apollo Chomeus at Seleucia, which was brought to Rome, and there placed by the Priests in the Temple of Apollo Palatinus: and when as a certaine hole which the Chaldean Wise-men had by Art stopped, through the couetousnesse of certaine Souldiers breaking in thither for spoyle, was broken vp, the world was thence poysoned with a contagion, from Persia, as farre as France. Philostratus reporteth (but who will beleue his reports?) of Apollonius, that he saw at Babylon such stately Palaces, as scarce agree with the state of Babylon, in the time of Apollonius, which was while Domician reigned; amongst other things, hee saw Galleries full of Grecke Images, as of Orpheus, Andromeda, &c. He came also into a Gallerie, the rooof whereof was made bowing like the heavens, and couered with Saphire, so to resemble Heauen, and the Images of their gods, made of gold, were there set. From the rooofe there hanged foure birds of gold, representing the goddesse of Reuenge, which they called the torques of the gods, I know not by what art or mystrie, admonishing the King not to exalt himselfe.

CHAP. XII.

Of the Priests, Sacrifices, religious Rites, and customes of the Babylonians.

THe Chaldeans (saith Diodorus) were of reputation in Babylon, as the Priests in Egypt; Chaldean, being a name sometime applied to the whole Nation; sometime appropriated to the Priests, who spent their whole time in religious Services, and in Astrologie. Many of them by diuination foretold things to come, as wee haue shewed before in the Historie of Alexander; and the booke of Daniel witnesseth this their profession. By their auguries, or diuination by birds, by sacrifices and enchantments, they were accounted to doe good or harme to mankind. They were most expert in their sacred Rites, in the knowledge whereof they were brought vp from their child-hood; and continued in that course of learning all their liues, the child being instructed in his Fathers science. They professed the interpretation of dreames, and prodigious accidents in Nature. Their opinions were, That the world is eternall, without beginning and end: the order and furniture of all was done by diuine providence: all heauenly things were perfected, not by chance, of their owne accord, but by the determinate and firme decree of the gods. By long obseruation, searching the course and nature of the starres, they foretold things to come. But the greatest power they attributed to the fixe Planets, and especially to Saturne. They call them Mercuries, because when others are fixed, these haue their proper motion and shew future things, as the Interpreters of the gods, by their rising, setting and colour. Vnder their course they giue the title of gods to thirty other starres, the one halfe above; the other, vnder the earth, beholding all accidents. And in tenne dayes one of the higher is sent to the lower, as an Angell, or Messenger of the Starres, and one from them to the higher: And this course they take eternally.

They hold twelue principall gods, each of which hath his peculiar moeth, and his signe in the Zodiacke; by which the Sunne, and Moone, and fixe Planets haue their motion. These Planets they esteeme to conferre much good or euill in the generation of men, and by their nature and aspect, things to come may be foreknown. Many things they foretold to Alexander, Nicanor, Antigonus, Seleucus, and to priuate men, beyond the reach of men. They

And hence grew that custome yearly in the beginning of the monerh Tamuz, to renew that mourning for Tamuz. Other bookes of theirs are mentioned by him, one called Deizamechameche, a booke of Images, a booke of Candles, of the degrees of Heauen, and others falsly ascribed to Aristotle, and one to Alfermor, and one to Isaac, and one, of their Feasts, Offerings, Prayers, and other things, pertaining to their Law, and some written against their opinions, all done into Arabike. In these are set downe the Rites of their Temples and Images of stone or metall, and applying of Spirits to them, and their Sacrifices, and kinds of meates. They name their holy places sumptuously built, the Temples of Intelligible formes; and set Images on high mountaines, and honour trees, and attribute the increafe of men and fruites to the Starres: Their Priests preached that the Earth could not bee Tilled, according to the will of the gods, except they serued the Sunne and Starres, which being offended; would diminish their fruites, and make their Countreies desolate. They haue written also in the former booke, that the Planet Iupiter is angrie with the Deserts and drie places, whence it cometh that they want water and trees, and that Devils haunt them. They honoured Husband-men, and fulfilling the will of the Starres, in tilling the ground: they honoured Kine and Oxen for their labours therein, saying that they ought not to be slaine. In their festivals they vsed Songs, and all Muscicall instruments, affirming that their Idols were pleased with these things, promising to the doers long life, health, plentie of fruits, raines, trees, freedom from losses, and the like. Hence it is, saith R. Moser, that the Law of Moser forbiddeth these rites, and threatneth the contrarie plagues to such as shall obserue them. Teliy had certaine hallowed beasts in their Temples wherein their Images were, before which they bowed themselves and burned incense. These opinions of the Zabiy, were holden also by the Aramites, Chanaanites, and Egyptians.

They had their magickal obseruations in gathering certaine hearbs, or in the vse of certaine metals, or living creatures, and that in a set certaine time, with their set rites, as of leaping, clapping the hands, hopping, crying, laughing, &c. in the most of which women were actors; as when they would haue raine, ten Virgins clothed in hallowed garments of red colour, danced a procession, turning about their faces and shoulders, and stretching their fingers towards the Sunne: and to preuent harme by haile, foure Women lay on their backs naked, lifting vp their feete, speaking certaine words: And all Magickal practises, they made to depend of the Starres, saying, that such a Starre was pleased with such an incense, such a Plant, such a metall, such words, or workes, and thereby would be, as it were hired to such or such effects, as to driue away Serpents, and Scorpions, to slay womes in nuts, to make the leaves fall, and the like. Their Priests vsed shauings of the head and beard, and linsey wolsey garments, and made a signe in their hand with some kind of metals. The Booke of Centir prescribeth a woman to stand armed before the starre of Mars, and a man clothed in womans attire painted, before the starre of Venus to prouoke lust. The worshippers of the fire made men beleue that they which would not cause their children to passe through the fire, should lose them, and easily perswaded them thereunto as a thing easie, saith the Rabine, for they did not burne them (although herein both diuine and humane testimonies make me beleue the contrarie.) From hence, with hee, descended the customes, obserued by women, in holding and mouing their children ouer the fire or smoke.

Moloch and
See Cap. 18.

They had their diuersities of Processions; and when they hallowed a tree to an Image, one part of the fruit thereof was offered, and the other eaten in the house of the Idoll: the like they did with the first fruits of euery tree; making men beleue that otherwise the tree would become vprofitable. They had their magickal enchantments in the planting or grafting of trees, with obseruations of the starres, incenses, words: but this most Diabolically, that in the houre when one kinde was to be ingrafted into another, the science which was to be ingrafted, should bee holden in the hand of some beautifull woman, and that some man should then carnally, but vnaturally, haue knowledge of her, the woman in that instant putting the science into the tree. They vsed also to make circles when they planted or sowed, and went about the sames, some fiew times, because of the fiew planetes, some seuen, in regard of the Sunne and Moone, added to that number. For this cause the Jew not vnprobably thinketh that mixtures in garments, feedes, and the like, were forbidden by the Law of Moser, with other rites any way resembling these.

Ave Arum

They further worshipped Devils, beleueing that they appeared to men in the formes of Goates, and therefore called their Devils Kids, and held it vlawfull to sheare or to eate their kids: but especially they abhorred the killing of Kine, but performed much worship to them, as they also doe in India to this day. They sacrificed Lyops, Beares, and wilde Beasts, as is mentioned in the Booke Zenit. They held bloud in much abomination, accounting it a great pollution, and yet did eat it, because (they said) it was the food of Deuils, and they which did eat it, should haue communion with them: and that they would come to such and reuale vnto them things to come. Some, whose nicer stomackes could not indure to eat it, receiued the same, when they killed a beast, ^h in a Vessell or in a ditch, and did eat the flesh of that Sacrifice, being placed about that blood, thinking that the Deuils did eat the blood, and that thus by this as it were eating at the same table, was entertained betwixt them and the Deuils mutuall familiaritie and societic. They beleued also that in their sleepes, the Deuils came and reuealed secrets vnto them. Concerning a monstrous woman their custome was, that shee should sit alone in a house, and that the places where shee set her feet should be burned; whoseuer talked with her was vncleane, yea if he but stood in the wind of her, the wind from her did pollute him. Likewise these Zabians thought, whatsoever went from their bodies was vncleane, as nailes, haire, blood; and therefore Barbers and Surgeons were holden polluted: and after cutting off their haire, vied much washing for expiation. But it needeth some expiation that I insift so long in these narrations, and haue need of some Barber or Surgeon to ease me of superstitious, if that can be superfluous which fitteth so to our proiect, and in the iudgement of the learnedst of the Iewish Rabbines in many ages, seemed the cause of so many prohibitions in Moses his Law, lest they should conforme, themselves in religious obseruances to these superstitious Zabians.

But let vs now returne to Diodorus, who affirmeth that the Chaldeans numbred fortie three thousand yeeres, vntill the coming of Alexander, since first they had begonne their obseruations of the Starres. These yeeres Xenophon de agniucis interpreteth of moneths; for so (sayth he) the Chaldeans reckoned their antiquities; in other things they kept their computation according to the Sunne. But of their fabulous antiquities wee haue heard before: where wee haue touched, that one beginning of Idolatrie did arise of this curious and superstitious Starre-gazing, especially in the Countries of Egypt, where not at all vssually; and in Chaldaea, where diuers moneths¹ together, they haue neither raines nor cloudes.

Strabo diuiddeth the Chaldeans into sects, Orchemi, Borsippeni, and others, diueltly opinionate of the same things. Borsippa was a Citie sacred to Diana and Apollo. Plinie ^h addeeth the Hippareni. Daniel ⁱ reckoneth vp foure kind of Wise-men among the Chaldeans: the first are called Chartummim, which were Enchanters; Asbaphim, Astrologers; Adcasbapim, Sorcerers or Iuglers, deluders of sense; and Chasdim, Chaldeans, which, howsoever it were a general name of that Nation, yet was it appropriated vnto a certain sect and profession of learning among them which seemed to excell the rest, and were their Priests, Philosophers, and Mathematicians, as you haue heard. In the seuen and twentieth verse of the same chapter are mentioned also Cachimim, Wisards, which by coniectures and casting of lots did ghesse of things to come: and Gazrin, of the word gaz-ar, to cut; these opened, and diuined by the entrals of sacrifices. The vanitie of their diuinations appeareth in that Prophet, howsoever they haue beene renowned therefore among the Heathens: as in the foretelling of Alexanders death, and before that, when ^{*} Darius had changed his Scaberd into the Greeke fashion, the ruine of that Empire by the Greeks. When Faustina ^h the Emperesse, wife to M. Antonius, had fallen in loue with a Fencer or sword-player, and being sicke confessed the same to her husband, the Chaldeans were sent for, who gaue counsell to kill the Fencer, and that shee should wash her selfe in his blood, and then accompanie with her Husband: which was done and Commodus begotten, who in qualities resembled that Fencer vpon this occasion (as the people reported) though others esteemed him a Bastard. Plutarch ⁱ sheweth how vainely the Romans depended on their predictions. Thus Iuvenal reproues them:

Many Edicts were after made against them. Orho Heurnius ^o laboureth to bring the Grecian Philofophie from the Chaldeans: yea Aristotle himselfe, as hee had receiued the Persian and Indian Philofophie by tradition of Pythagoras and Democritus, and the Egyptian and Iewish learning from Plato, so was hee instructed (sayth hee) in the Babylonian sciences by Callisthenes. But Calus Rhodiginus ^p and Iosephus Scaliger ^q thinke them rather corrupters of learning, whereof they had no solid knowledge, and that the Greekes attained attained thereunto by their owne industrie, without borrowing of the Chaldeans. Pencer deemeth * them too Philosophicall, the peruersers of Religion into Theoricall speculations of Nature, and confuteeth their fue kinds of prognosticating. But their estimation could not haue bene such in Daniels time, if they had not bene very learned: and some what was added, as wee may well coniecture, to their learning by him, who by Nabuchodonosor was † set ouer them. For besides the gifts wherewith hee was enriched, and the ciuill authoritie wherewith he was dignified, he was exalted also to this Ecclesiasticall iurisdiction ouer the Schooles of the Wise-men, (as after Iunius and Oflander, D. Wyllet hath obserued) as it were their Superintendent: which though Caluin thinketh hee refused, yet it appeareth by the title which the King * after gaue him, that hee accepted it. In which his Superintendentship, sayth our Author *, such laudable sciences as might safely be learned, he promoted and furthered; such corruption and superstitions as were practised among them, he corrected and reformed: but such abuses as could not be taken away, hee forbore, and kept himselfe free from them. And here haue we a testimonie of their Hierarchie, which Nature taught these and all people, contrarie to the Noueltie of Partite. In the dayes of Hesecchiah, when the Sunne went backwards, it appeareth how studious the Chaldaean Nation was, in that * their Princes sent their Ambassadors into Iudea to enquire thereof. Yea the Delphian Oracle, as Theodorēt citeth it out of † Porphyrie, ascribing the finding out of that learning which leadeth to the gods, not to the Greekes, but to the Egyptians, Phenicians, Chaldeans, and Hebrewes; in which the Chaldeans (as that Father out of Daniel obserueth) were furthered by the Hebrewes.

Some 2 doe call the Babylonian Priests, Magi: but because they were by this name best knowne, and most esteemed among the Persians, which in that vicinitie of Regions had as neere Neighbourhood in Religions, wee will speake of these Magi, in our Persian Relations. And it is thought that the Persian Magi came from these Chaldeans. Morneau 2 reckoneth among the Chaldean opinions, that of Oromasdes, Mitris, and Ariminus, that is to say, God, Mind and Soule: which hee applieth to the Christian doctrine of the holy Trinitie. The Oracle of Apollo, pronounced the Chaldeans and Hebrewes to bee onely wise.

30 The Chaldean opinion concerning iudicial Astrologie, was not recieved of all the Chaldeans, as Sirabo reporteth. And Bardeanes Syrus, the best learned of the Chaldeans is Eusebius ^b testimonie) doth at large confute that opinion (which yet many Wisards, earkfakes of Christians still follow.) He affirmeth that in those things which a man hath common with a beast, eating, sleepe, nourishment, age, &c. a man is ordered by Nature, as the beasts are. But man having also a reasonable soule, and freedom of will, is not subject to that naturall feruitude; which at large hee proooveth by the diuers customes of men, both in diuers, and in the same countries, in diet, gouernment, and Religion; as the Reader, willing to reade so worthie a discourse, may find related at large in Eusebius.

40 Alexander Polyhistor, & out of Eupolemus telleth that in the tenth generation after the flood, in Camyrine a Citie of Babylonia, which other call Yr, Abram was borne, which excelled all in knowledge, and was the inventor of Astrologie among the Chaldeans. Hee by diuine precept went into Phenicia, and taught the Phenicians the course of the Sunne and Moone: and when the Armenians, warring vpon the Phenicians, had taken his brothers sonne prisoner, hee by a band of his seruants recovered him, and freely dismissed the captiues, which he had taken. Hee after liued with the Priests at Heliopolis in Egypt, and taught them Astrologie; confessing that he had receiued that Art by succession from Enoch. Hee added that Belus reigned the second in Babylon, and was called Saturne, the father of a second Belus, and Canaan; which Canaan was the father of the Phenicians and the Ethiopians, brother of Mizraim the Author of the Egyptians: with many other things not much differing from the diuine Historie.

Aftronic in all likelihood was knowne to Abraham, to whom the heavenly starres might be Remembrancers of that promise, so shall thy seed bee: his countrie also, where it was practised, might therein further him, and the excellence of the science in it selfe. But this star-gazing definie, Iudiciall, Coniecturall, Genethiacall Astrologie, Reason and experience, God and Man have condemned. Vt significth light, which agreeth to the Fire, the Chaldeans deitie, 4 which the Persians and Chaldeans fained to haue receiued from heauen, and kept euer burning; as the Vestals in Rome. They held Water and Fire to be the beginning of all things. They made a challenge of their fiery god *, to contend with any other gods of the godlesse Heathen: an Egyptian encountered and ouercame them: 60 thus: he cauled his Canopus to be made full of holes stopp'd with waxe, and hollow in the middle, which hee filled with water: and the Chaldeans putting their fire vnder, the waxe melting, opened a quier of watric arrowes, that cooled the heat of their deuouring god, and deuoured him. They had yet a more foolish god, euen an Onyon which they worshipped. They obserued diuers wicked Sciences of diuining, by Fire, Aire, Water, Earth, consulting with the dead, and with wicked spirits, — Chaldaea vocatis Imperat arte dyis, sayth Clandian.

Every day the King is offered a Horse, furnished, vnto the Sunne; as did also the Persians. Philoftrat. sayth, that it was a white Horse of the Nisiran race, sumptuously trapped lib. 1. cap. 20. They obserued a feast in Babylon (Athenaus h citeth it out of Berosus) on the sixteenth Calends of September, which continued fve dayes; in which the Masters were subiect to their seruants, and one of them royally attired, was caried out of the house, whom they called Zoganes, Baruch cap. 6. in the Epistle of Ieremie (Apocrypha) rippeth vp their idolatrous Rites, Idols, Processions, bearing Idols on mens shoulders, the people before and behind worshipping: their Priests collutions to make gaines of the Idoll offerings, together with their Priests shauer heads and beards, their rent cloaths, their roaring before the Idoll: their Temples wherein they stood with scepters, axes, or other weapons in their hands, hauing candles lighted before them, with other such rites; that, in the reading, one would thinke hee were telling the discourse of the mysteries of mysticall Babylon in the West; so euently they accord. The Chaldzans invoke their Belus, to doe miracles also, sayth hee, invoking a dumbe Idoll to giue speech vnto another, which himselfe wanteth. But aboute all, one Beasly rite was in vse among them. The women, sayth hee, 1 sit in the wayes girded with cords of ruybet, and burne straw: and if one of them be drawne away, and lie with any such as come by, shee cusseth her neighbour in the teeth, because shee was not so worthily reputed, nor her cord broken. This was their glorie their shame. 1 Herodotus will yeeld vs a Commentarie on this place. The Babylonians haue an abominable law (sayth he) that all their women once in their life doe sit at the Temple of Venus to haue familiaritie with strangers: the richer sort comming in chariots, richly furnished and attended to this vngodly purpose. Their manner of sitting is, crowned on their Temples with garlands, their retiring places distinguished with cords, by which the stranger may haue access to which of them hee liketh best. And thus doe these Votaries of Venus sit, holding it religion to bee irreligious, none of them euer returning home, till some guest haue cast money into her lap, whom it is not lawfull for her to refuse, but to accept of him and his price, whatsoever he be, and follow him aside from the Temple, where hee desleth her. At the giuing of the money hee vseth these words, Tanta tibi deam Mylittam implo-ro, that is, at this price, or for so much, 1 implore vnto thee the goddesse Mylitta (so the Assyrians call Venus m) and this money is consecrated to a sacred vse. After this, with the goddesse good leaue, shee may retorne home, although for no great price againe (saith our Author) to be hired. By this means the fairest are quickly dispatched, the rest endure a restless and irksome penance, sometime a yere, two, or three, before they can be discharged of their homelike and the law together, and hence might arise that former ambitious vpbraiding in Baruch.

Among their many Idols, 1 Bel bare the bell, not here alone, but in all the countries of Assyria, and adioyning thereto; as appeareth in the Historie of the Bible: where Bel or Baal is so often mentioned, as the Idoll of so many Nations and the sinne of the apostaticall Synagogue. They o built vnto him high places: or else in stead thereof vset the roo-fes of their houses to his worship: they built him houses, they made him Images, erected Altars, planted Groves, bended to him the knees, and kissed him in token of subiection, vsed perfume and incense, offered to him holy dayes, cut and lanced themselves in his seruice, with other extaticall furies, and religious frenzies, with ornaments of gold and jewels, inuocations and immolations, yea of their owne children; he had also his peculiar prophets and priests. These and such like doth the Scripture mention of this Babylonian Idoll, whose contagion infected the East with a Catholike Idolatrie that could plead Antiquitas, Vniuersalitate, and Consent, by euidence of Scripture-historie (which later Babylon cannot doe) and yet was but Catholike and generall error.

Bel was, sayth Plinius v, Inuentor fidei scientia, the inuentor of Astrologie, which (Hemmus addeth) hee defiled with impure Magicke, as did his daughter Semiramis, who watched vpon Zoroaster, in enuie of his greater learning: *Bel*s magicke appeared in his sepulchre, which Xerxes opening, found a vessell of glasse, and therein a carcasse swimming in oyle, which reached not to the brim by a hand-breadth. In a little pillar iust by was engrauen, that he should deately repent it, which opening the sepulchre, did not fill vp the vessell: this Xerxes assayed to doe in vaine, and therefore departed very heauie, finding in his Grecian Expedition the truth of *Bel*s prophetic. The like is said to happen, when Darius in hope of treasure o opened the sepulchre of Semiramis, hee found a chift, which being opened, a venomous pestilence issued, that consumed the third part of men.

the name Bel or Baal to be a generall name, agreeing to all the gods of the Gentiles, according to the signification of the word, to wit, a Lord, ^c It was a name generall to their Idols, when it was put alone, but particular with some addition, as Bel-zebub, Baal-zephon. There were so many Baals in Syria, sayth ^d Druſius, as there were Regions, and almost as many as Cities. The Moabites had their Chamos, the Ammonites Moloch, the Sydonians Astaré, in Gaza Marran, in Hamath Asima, &c. all called Baal in like sort as the Europeans varied the names of Iupiter: as Iupiter Capitolinus, Iupiter Ammon, Stygius, Olympius, and the rest, many gods and many lords, sayth Saint Paul ^e, yet in the Easterne Dialecticke wee may reade many Baalim, and in the Westerne many Ioues, the Greeke Iao, Iao αἰὲς, Iao, and the Latine Iouis the ancient nominatiue, Iouis pater, Iouis pater, and by contraction Iupiter, (not as Tully, Lactantius and others, quasi inuans pater) being all deriued, that wee may note this by the way, of that ineffable name which wee pronounce Iehoua. And had they not intended the true God, when they vsed Baal or Ioue absolutely without addition, neither ^f had the Lord prohibited thou shalt call mee no more Baali, that is, my Lord; nor Paul applied that speech of Araus, ἡ δὲ γὰρ ἐξ ἑσθῶ. Wee are his generation, hauing foure verses before begunne his booke with in dñō agnoscenda. vnto the true God. Seruius is ^g Author, that Belus the father of Dido descended of that ancient Belus the first King of the Assyrians, which people worshipped Saturne and Iuno, which were after worshipped in Africa, whereupon the Punicke called God, Bal, (from whence came those names, Hannibal, Adherbal, and such like) whom the Assyrians in some respect call Bel, and Saturne, and the Sunne. This opinion that in Bel they worshipped the Sunne, is followed by Tremellius and Iunius in their notes on Esaias, Chap. 46. 1. because the Assyrians, Persians, and Babylonians, accounted the Sunne the greatest God, and worshipped the Fire as a partide thereof: To him the Iewes, with this borrowed forreine Idolatrie, dedicated Horses and Chariots, which ^h Iosias abolished, together with the Altars on the rooffe of Ahas his house, & the high places, where their god might feare their deuotions. Hierom, on that place of Esay sayth, that Bel was Saturne, which Suidas confirmeth. Augustine ⁱ relateth the vnuall opinion (on those words, Iud. 2. They serued Baal and Astaroth) that Baal in those parts was the name of Iupiter, and Astaré of Iuno, and produceth the Punicke language, in which Baal samē signifieth the Lord of Heauen; and for Astaroth (which he readeth Astaribus) he sayth it is in the plural number, in regard of the multitude of Iunior Images, each bearing the name of Iuno. This also is exemplified in the blessed Virgin ^k by Ribera, sometime called our Ladie of Loretto, sometime our Ladie of Monteferato, &c. according to the diuersitie of places, wherein they worship, not Marié the Virgin, but their owne Idols; the daughters of their whorish mother Babylon. For the Tyrians, Sydonians, Philistims, and other Syrian, and Assyrian Nations, the Scripture brandeth them with this Bel or Baal-Idolatrie: in hatred of which name, the Iewes called the Prince of Deuils, as the Acaronites did their principall Idols, by the name of Beelzebub.

Thus the Greekes and Latines hath confounded the Assyrian and Tyrian Bel, which by Iosephus ^l Scaliger, (who not vnworthily is called ^m the Dictator of knowledge, and great Prince of learnings state) are distinguished and made two: the one (sayth he) is written בל and the later בלל and reproued Hierome for making Belus, the father of Ninus, and the Virgilian Belus to be one. But in his notes on the fragments of Berosus and other ancient Authors, he sayth, the Tyrians and Sydonians called him בלל which the Greekes made Belus: and so M^r Selden also is of opinion, that these names בל and בלל differ onely according to the proprietie of the language, and not indeed: for the Grammarians obserue, that the Chaldeé words often lose that middle letter. Elias in his Theſis obserueth, that Baal signifieth the act of generation, which may well agree with those beastly Baal-rites before mentioned. Baal is read in the feminine gender Tob. 1. 5. Rom. 1. 14. In Phoritis ⁿ is mentioned, that the Phœnicians and Syrians called Saturne HA, and בל, EL, and Bel, and Bolathes. Lilius Giraldus ^o out of Seruius affirmeth that HA, in the Assyrian language signifieth the Sunne, from whence the Greeke ἥλιος is deriued: some attribute this to the Phœnician tongue, in which Hal signifieth God. The Assyrians named Saturne and the Sunne, Hel. The Indians called that Hercules, which Tully de Nat. Deor. numbred the first Belus. But we find no end of these Labyrinths.

D. Wiler in his Comment vpon Daniel hath these words: The Chaldeans had fise Idols, three gods and two goddesses. Their first god was Bel, a name contracted of Bebal, which cometh of Babal, which signifieth a Lord: to whom was built that Temple before mentioned. The second was the Sunne, which they called Rach, that is, a King; because he is chiefe among the Planets: and the Persians call him Mithra, as Iustinus Martyr sayth, Dialog. in Tripbon. The Priests of this Idoll were called Raciophante, Observers of the Sunne, Their third god was Nego, the Fire; so called of the brightness: this was carried about among among them: the Priests were called Ortophanta. Their first goddesse was Shacha, which was the Earth, worshipped also of the Romans, vnder the name of Tellus and Ops: of the Syrians called Doreetha. In the honour of this goddesse, they vied to keepe a feast five dayes together in Babylon; during which time, the Masters were vnder the dominion of their seruants: one of which was vially set ouer the rest, and royally clothed, and was called Sogan, that is, great Prince (our Lords of Misrule seeme to deriue their pedigree from hence). This festiuall time was called Shache, whereof Babylon was called Sheshach, of keeping this Feast, Ierem. 25. 27. and 51. 41. Their other goddesse was Mulitta, which was Venus, whose Priests were called Natita, or Natophanta. Put the chieftest of their Idols was Bel. Hee also interpreteth these words, Dan. 1. 4. Whom they might teach the learning and tongue of the Chaldeans, of Schooles whetein youth was brought vp in good letters, to bee after employed in the State. So among the Egyptians they had the like vse, where Moses was taught the learning of the Egyptians. Among the Israelites eight and fortie Cities were appointed for the Leuites, which were as the common Schooles and Vniuersities for the whole Kingdome; Samuel and Elizus had their Schooles and Colledges of Prophets; yea, the rude Indians had their Gymnosophistes; and the Romans had their Colledges of Augures. This Bel or Baal Idolatricke passed out of Asia into Europe, euen as farre as these parts of Britaine. For the Celts and Britanni worshipped Abellio, Belenus, or Beltius, as appeareth by inscriptions in Lipsius and Scaliger; and our famous Antiquarie Mr Camden mentioneth an Altar in Cumberland, inscribed Deo sancto Belatucadro. And on the Coynes of Cunobelinus, the Brittish King, was stamped Apollo, or Belenus (which in heathen myseries are the same with the Sunne) playing on a Harpe: and the name Cunobelinus makes euident to our purpose. Heliogabalus is another Syrian idolatrous title for the Sunne, as appeareth by an inscription Soli Alagabalus; for so also is that name witten. Neither is Gabalus from any other deriuation, the name of the Romane Emperour, Priest of that god, whose name he vsurped, deriued from the Hebrew Abgol Baal, that is, the Round or Circular Lord, either in respect of the Sunnes Circular bodie and iourney, or of that round Stone which the Syrians conceited (as the Troians of their Palladium, and the Ephesians of their Diana, to haue diuinely descended.) Such Stones (as Mr Selden in relation of those things obserueth) were the Batalia; or Betuli, of the Ancients dedicated to diuers deities, somewhat of fashion like fire, round and sharpe vpwards, the beginning of which Betuli, some deriue from Iacobs Stone at Bethel.

In the seuenteenth Chapter of the second Booke of Kings, is mentioned Succoth Benoth an Idoll of the Babylonians. Beda interpreteth it the Tabernacles of Benoth, and so the word Succoth vsed, Amos 5. 25. is by Saint Stephen. Act. 7. 43. interpreted. And so doth the i Gloss on that part of the Kings interpret; where Lyra, k according to the signification of the words (a Tabernacle of wings) relateth out of Rab. Sal. that this Idoll was made like to a Hen brooding her chickens: which Idols the Babylonians framed in worship of that constellation, called by the vulgar, the Hen and chickens, and of the learned Pleiades; as others did to the Sunne, others to the Moone. Some l applie it to the myserie of their Idoll, (which Christ the Truth, truly sayth of himselfe) protecting his worshippers, as a Hen her chickens. My learned friend, Mr Selden hath gathered by the signification of Succoth Benoth (the Tabernacles of the daughters) that thereby is meant the Temple of Venus, Mylitta or Urania, where the daughters of the Babylonians sate, as before is said, to personne their filthy deuotions; yea, by an easie deduction hee deriueth the name of Venus from this Benoth: B and u, easily exchanged, the moderne Iewes pronounce it like o Venor; Suidas also calls her Binos. And in Africa was a Citie called Sicca Veneria, a name transported by the Punikes from this Succoth, or Succoth Benoth, where was a Temple of like nature, in which the women purchased their marriage-money by prostituting their bodies. It seemeth the Idolatrous Priests carried the Tabernacle of their Idoll on their shoulders, in apish imitation of the true Priests; and Leuites: for so Amos sayth, m Yee carried Succoth, or Succoth your King, Chinen your Images, which Drusius n interpreteth Moloch and Hercules.

In the fourteenth Chapter of Daniel (as the Latines read) is a large historie both of Bel, a dead statue, and of a liuing Dragon which the Babylonians worshipped. The Priests of Bel were seuentie, besides their wiues and children, whose fraud and cozenage Daniel detected, making it manifest by their foot-steps in the ashes, which hee had strewed in the Temple, that they were the deuourers of that huge portion of fortie sheepe, twelue measures of meale, and sixe great pots of wine, daily consecrated for Bels breake-fast. Hee after slew the Dragon also; for which the Babylonians forced the King to lodge him five dayes among the Lions. But howeuer generally more authoritie is to be ascribed to the Apocryphall bookes, then to any humane Historie, or other Ecclesiasticall Authors, as o Zancchi chius religiously holdeth, yet for this fragment of Daniel, it is accounted ^p the worke of Theodotion a bad man, who soyled it into his translation. And not onely the Reformed Churches account it as it is, but Driedo a learned Papist, Erasmus a Semi-christian (so Bellarmino calleth him) Julius Africanus of old, and the Iewes generally, reiect it out of the Canon, as the Cardinall himselfe ^q hath obserued: and he is saue to tell vs of another Daniel, of the Tribe of Leui, to maintaine the credit hereof. But Huerone in the Preface of his Commentaries stileth them, Belis Draconis que fabulas, quæ uerum autopsito, eoque ingulante subijciunt, ne uideretur apud imperitos magnam partem voluminum detruisse: and allegeth Eusebius, Origen, Apollinaris, and other Ecclesiasticall Doctors, which were of his mind, and thought they needed not to answere Porphyrus, who had hence raked some obiections against the Christians for these things which had not authority of Scripture.

As for Pyramus and Thise, with Cyparissus and such like, I leaue them: Ouid and the Poets. It seemeth worthy relation that fell out at Assus, a Babylonian Citie, where a Dolphin folowed a boy, that following too far after their wonted sportings, he stucke fast in the sands: ^t which Alexander interpreting to be ominous, preferred the Boy to the Priesthood of Nephtune.

For the present Saracenicall Religion, now obserued in these parts, our third booke shall largely relate thereof. Concerning other Babylonian customes: Herodotus. l. 2. telleth of three families in Babylon which liued on fish. It may bee the Cathusians of our Westerne Babylon are of their offspring: for whose sparing, their fellows may eate the more flesh, with which those of old, and these later, may not (forsooth) pollute themselves. ^u Curtius telleth generally, that for fleshy vices, the Babylonians were most corrupt. They prostituted their wiues and daughters to their guests for rewards. They were addicted to excessiue banquetting, and drunkenesse. In the beginning of their feasts, their women were modestly attired; by degrees they stripped themselves of their clothes, beginning with the vppermost, till nothing was left to couer their shame, or forbid their shamelesse. And not their Curtizans alone, but their Matrons, (yea, in token of ciuility) did thus prostitute themselves to those flames of lusts which haue come from hell, and carrie thither. Heere was Alexander, manly and victorious armie made effeminate, vnfit after to haue encountered with a strong enemy.

Some ascribe the loose liues of the Babylonians, to a law of Xerxes, who to chastise them for a rebellion, enacted that they should no longer weare armes, but addist themselves to Musicke, riot, and such like.

40 WE haue before shewed the prodigious Chronologie of the Chaldeans, reckoning the reignes of their Kings before the flood, 432000. yeeres. They tell also after the flood of diuers Dynasties or gouernments in this Countrey of Babylon.

First, ^b the Chaldeans, Enechoos reigned 6. yeeres, Chomusboles 7. ^c Poros 35. Nechus 43. Abios 48. Oniballos 40. Zinzairos 45.

The space of these two Dynasties is reckoned foure hundred and fortie yeares. Thus Scaliger relateth: but in my mind, as the former was beyond all possibility of truth (which they tell of before the flood) so this hath no great likelihood, at least for so long space before Belus, with whom the most histories beginne their relations, and Scaliger his ^e third Dynastie, of one and fortie Kings in this order.

f The Median Dynastie. The fourth Dynastie was ^f of the Medes, begun by Arbaces, who depriued Sardanapalus; he reigned 28 yeeres, his sonne Mandaces 50. Sofarmus 30. Artayes 50. (In the 19. yeere of this King Nabonassar, the Babylonian rebelled, and began a new Dynastie in Babylonia. And in the 43. yeere of his raigne Salmanassar captiued the ten Tribes) Arbaces or Cardaces 22. Arfacs or Deioes 40. Artayes called also Phraortes 22. Atiabaras or Cyaxares 40. Spandus alias Astages 40. In all 322. yeeres.

g The Persian Dynastie. The fifth ^g Dynastie was of the Persians, begun by Cyrus, which ouerthrew Astages, and reigned 30. yeeres; His sonne Cambyses 8. the Magi 7. moneths, Darius sonne of Hystaspes 36. yeeres, Xerxes 20. Ariabanus 7. moneths, Ariaxerxes Longimanus 40. Xerxes 2. 20 moneths, Sogdianus 7. moneths, Darius Norbus 19. yeeres, Ariaxerxes Mnemon 40. yeeres, Ariaxerxes Ochus 26. Artes 4. Darius 6. In all, 231. yeeres.

h The Macedonian Dynastie. The sixth ^h Dynastie was of the Macedonians, the first of which was Alexander, who after the conquest of Darius reigned 6. yeeres, Antigonus 12. Selenus Nicator 32. Antigonus Soter 19. Antigonus Theos 15. (In the 12. yeere of his raigne, Arfaxes the Persian rebelled) Selenus Callinicus 20. Selenus Ceraunus 3. Antiochus Magnus 36. Selenus Philopater 12. Antiochus Epiphanes 11. Antiochus Eupator 2. Demetrius Soter 12. Alexander Bala 10. Demetrius Nicator 2. Antiochus Sidetes 9. Demetrius D.F.A. Antiochus Grypus 12. Antiochus Cyzicenus 18. Philippus 2. In all 237. And from the beginning of the first Dynastie 2633. These I haue heere inserted out of Scaliger, rather to shew the continued succession of the Eastern Empire, then with any intent to perfwade, that all these were Kings, and ruled the Country of Babylonia. For after Arfaxes rebelled, the Parthians dispossessed the Syrian Kings, of these parts; and before, the Babylonians often rebelled; as in the time of the Persians, when Zopyrus by a strange stratagem, recited by Iustin and others, restored them to Darius; but especially in the times of the Medes, whose Dynastie was much disquieted: sometime the Scythians (sayth ⁱ Orosius) and sometimes the Chaldaean, and sometimes the Medes preuailing. Sometimes also (as the Scripture witnesseth) the Assyrians renewed their ancient power. Yea in the time of the Assyrian Dynastie, the Chaldaean are said to warre (in the raigne of Paryas) against the Phœnicians, which argueth that they were then free.

The Scripture and other Histories speake of Phul, Teglab-Phalasar, Israh, Sargon, Salmanassar, Senacherib, Asar-haddon: which were great and mighty, not onely strong enough to defend themselves against the Medes, but to invade forren Nations, yea did translate people from one Kingdome to another, and ^k seated the captiues of Israel in the Cities of the Medes, and sent Babylonian Colonies to Samaria; which they could not doe, if they had not commanded both Assyria, and Media, with Babylonia.

Nabonassar rebelled, as is said, against Artayes, and began the Chaldaean Dynastie, from whom, for this restitution of liberty, the Chaldaean began their Astronomical computations: hee reigned 14. yeeres, Nassrus 2. Chimzerus and Porus 5. Dilaulus 5. Mardokempadus 12. 1 He sent Ambassadors to Hexekiah. Arkanus 5. (In the fourteenth yeere of his raigne, hee sent his sonne Nabuchodonosor in Syria with an Armie.) Nabuchodonosor 30. Eulmerodach 6. Neregalissarus 5. Nabonidus 17. This was a Mede by linage (not as some ^m say King of the Medes,) sonne of Xerxes a Mede, but borne at Babylon, and by conspiracie raised to the kingdome: not invading Babylon with Cyrus, but reigning in Babylon, till Cyrus depriued him. Megasthenes calls him a Mede, and the Scripture Darius Medus. Cyrus came against him in the nineteenth yeere of his raigne, and eleven yeeres before the seuenty of the Captiuitie were ended; in which space Cyrus had enough to doe to besiege and conquer Babylon, and Borsippa where Darius was. thians continued 479. yeeres: the last of them Artabanus being slaine. These Kings & the times of their reignes, are not easie to set downe, and Omphrus is therefore reproved of Scaliger, for vnder taking this taske, in which authority sayleth him. Of them we shall speake in due place.

The Saracens succeeded, whose names and times you may see in our Sarcenicall relation. After the Saracens, reigned the Tartars; and since, sometime one family, sometime another, among the Persians, till Solyman dispossessed the Sophian of the Babylonian dominions; vnder which Turkish scruitude it groweth till our daies.

I dare not take vpon me to be vmpire and decider of those many alterations among Chronologers: but haue simply followed Scaliger, whose very name is able to shield me from contempt, if not to yeeld mee commendation. Let others that haue more lust and leasure transcribe these matters at their pleasure: my intent is, most of all, the Historie of Religions; and the successions and alterations of States. I haue lightly touched: but precisely to determine in what yeere of the world euerie King beganne his reigne, and to dispute the same with all opinions, would be some what tedious to the Reader: to me (perhaps in these varieties of opinions) impossible. Leaving therefore the more studious to the Chronologers, let vs take a little reuiue of some principall occurrents in the former Catalogue.

Africanus begins the Assyrian Monarchie at Belus, and not, as the most, with Ninus: That Belus some thinke to bee the same with Nimrod, whom Ninus, as wee said before, consecrated. Semiramis is reported to bee the first that caused Eunuchs to bee made. Ninias which succeeded, left not like monuments off is great exploits, as his Predecessors before him. Buntingus thinke him to bee that Amraphel King of Shinar, mentioned Genes. 14. and that Arich King of Elasar was his sonne. How euer, it breedes much difficulty, to reconcile the ancient Historie of the Babylonian and Assyrian great and long continued Empire, with the Kingdomes and Kings in that Chapter by Moses mentioned. Eupolimus, as before is cited out of Eusebius, saith that those Kings were Armenians; Diodorus Tarsensis, as Peterius affirmeth, reckons them Persians; Iosephus, Assyrians. Peterius himselfe thinke them vassals, and tributaries to the Assyrian: Ghebrard suspects the Historie of the Assyrian greatnesse: and truly, not altogether vnjustly: they ther doe wee read in all the Historie of Moses and Iosua, of any Kings in those parts, for ought can be gathered, yeelding subiection to Babylon. And the Sodomite and his neighbours had bene the tributaries of Chedorlaomer King of Elam, and not of Amraphel King of Shinar; vnlesse we say, that violent things are not permanent, and the yoke imposed before by the Assyrians, was now in Ninias daies relaxed: Semiramis being weakened with her Indian expedition; and Ninias by killing her, giuing occasion or discontent to her followers, the men of warre, which might hereupon (contemning this effeminate King, who had suffered his mother to possesse the Scepter so long) fall to sharing for themselves; and erect petty Kingdomes. Arus (happily) restored the Emperie thus decayed, if it be true that Buntingus writeth, that he was a great Warriour, therefore called Arus and Mars; and, as the god of warre, inuocated by the Assyrians. When Tumamus reigned, a Diodor lib. 3. testifieth that Priamus, then besieged by Agamemnon, as vassall and tributary to the Assyrians, sent to him for ayde, who sent to his succour Memon, with twenty thousand souldiers.

But to descend vnto times neerer both vs and the truth, and to view the ruine of that great estate: we read in the same Author, and in others, that Arbaces (whom Iustin collecteth Arbaces; Orosius Arbafus) was by Sardanapalus made Captaine of the Armie, which was yeerely sent to Nina, or Ninive, where a conspiracy was contracted betweene him and Belesus a Chaldean Priest, Captaine of the Babylonians, who by his Chaldean skill in diuination, had forsooke Arbaces this destined Empire, and was promised for his share the Babylonian principality. Thus the Medes, Babylonians, and Arabians, enterprising rebellion, assembled to the number of foure hundred thousand, whom Sardanapalus ouerthrew in battell twice; but being still animated by Belesus predictions, which (said he) the gods by the Stars fore-sigified; and by corrupting of the Bactrian Armie, sent to succor the King & adioyning themselves to the enemy, they at the third battell ouerthrew the forces of Sardanapalus, led by Salamemus his wifes brother. The King fled into Ninive, trusting to a prophesie, That the Citie should neuer bee taken, till the River were enemy to it. After two yeeres siege, by extreme raines, the River swelling, overflowed part of the Citie, and cast downe twenty fur-

Whereupon despayring, (as seeming to see God and man against him) he which before had chambered himselfe with women, and accustomed himselfe to the distaffe, in a womans both heart and habite; now in a manly resolution (if it may not more fitly be called a Feminine Dissolution, which thus runneth from that danger which it should encounter) gathered his treasures together, and erecting a frame in his Palace, there burnt them, himselfe, his wiues and Eunuches together. The Askes, vnder pretence of a Vow thereto made to Belus, Belesus obtained of Arbaces the new Conquerour and Monarch, to carry to Babylon. But the coozenage being knowne, and Belesus condemned for the treasures, which with the ashes hee had conueyed, Arbaces both gaue them, and forgaue him; adding the praefecture of the Babylonians, according to promise. * Some say that Belesus, whom they call Phul Belech, shared the Empire with him, Arbaces raiguing ouer the Medes and Persians, the other ouer Ninive; and Babylon: following herein the forged Metasthenes, who (as Annius maketh him to say) out of the Sufian Librarie penned his Historie, hauing before fabled a Catalogue out of Berosus of the ancient Kings, contrary to that which out of the fragments of the true Berosus before is deliuered.

The Babylonian Empire tenewed by Nabonassar, continued till Cyrus, of which times we haue little record but in the Scripture, as neyther of those Assyrian Kings, which before had captiued Israel, and invaded Iuda. Senacherib is famous, euen in the Ethnike history, although they had not the full truth. For thus Herodotus * telleth, that Senacherib King of the Arabians & Assyrians warred on Egypt, where Sethon (before Vulcanus Priest) then reigned: who being forsaken of his Souldiers, betooke him to his deuotion, amidst the which hee fell asleepe. And the god appearing, promised ayde, which hee performed, sending an Armie of Mice, into the Armie of Senacherib, which did eate his Souldiers quiuers, and the leathers of their shields, and armour, insomuch, that the very next day they all fled. In witness whereof, the Image of the King, made of stone, standeth in the Temple of Vulcan, holding a Mouse in his hand, vittering these words, Hee that looketh on mee, let him bee Religious. This Historie the Egyptians, in vanity and ambition, had thus peruerced and arrogated to themselves.

Fuencius of Osiander made Nabopolassar and Nabuchodonosor to bee one and the same, and diues Commenters vpon Daniel hold the same opinion, whom Scaliger and Caluissus confute at large. Nabopolassar is supposed to begin his raigne Anno Mundi 3325, which hee continued nine and twentie yeeres: in his * seuenteenth yeere Nebuchadnezer (so the Masoreties misse-call him, saith Scaliger) or Nabuchodonosor his sonne was sent by him, to subdue the rebellious Egyptians, Iewes, and Palcstinians: at which time he carried away Daniel into captiuitie. ^b He began his raigne Anno Mundi 3354. and in the yeere 3360. destroyed Ierusalem. In the yeere 3386. Eutimercadab his sonne succeeded him, whom Neriglossorus (as Scaliger * affirmeth) slew, thereby to aduance his owne sonne the Nephew of Nabuchodonosor, called Laborsorachadus, to the Scepter; which himselfe swaled as Protector in the minoritie of his sonne. But he being dead, and his sonne more fit for a chamber then a Throne, Throne, Nabonidus conspired against him, and slew him. This Nabonidus, sayth he, is Darius Medus, and Laborosarchadus is that Baltasar mentioned by Daniel, after Scaligers interpretation of the Prophet out of Berosus and Megasthenes.

It is a world to see how the Catholickes (so they call themselves) sweat in finding out that Nabuchodonosor mentioned in Judith 1. Pinus would make it a common name to the Babylonian Kings, as Pharas to the Egyptians; Peterius will have two of the name; others will have him to be Cyrus; others, Cambyses, Ariaxerxes, Ochus; Once, Babel is a Mother of confusion to her children, and makes them babble, while they will Canonize Apocryphal Scriptures.

D. Wiler holdeth otherwise, com. in Dan. 6.

10 Cyrus ended the Babylonian Monarchie, and having wonne Babylon, and taken Darius Medus at Borsippa, he gaue him his life, and the government of Carmania. An. Mund. 3409. As Nabuchodonosor had by Edict proclaimed the God of Daniel, so Cyrus ended the captiuitie of his people; giuing libertie to such as would, to returne. But many Iewes abode there still, and thence sent their yeerely offerings to the Temple. In the time of Artabanus the Parthian (when Caligula tyrannized at Rome) Asimans and Anilans, brethren of the Iewish Nation, grew mightie, and haughtie withall, forgetting God and themselves, which caused the Babylonians to conspire against them, and (after the death of the brethren, with thousands of their partakers) and slew in Seleucia fiftie thousand of the Iewish Nation. Neerda and Nibisis were then much peopled by the Iewes, And thus Religion partly held the ancient course, partly was mixed (according to the custome of Conquests) with the Persian, Macedonian, Parthian, besides the Iewish and Syrian, vntill the Apostles preached here the Christian veritie. About the same time, Helena and her sonne Izates King of Adiabena (which is in these parts of Assyria) became Iewish Profelytes.

30 Seleucia built by Seleucus (as it were the marriage-Chamber of Euphrates and Tygris, which there meete and mixe their waters; Nature being by mans industrie forced to yeeld to the match as Plinius sayth, for that purpose) emptied Babylon of her Inhabitants, and inherited her name also, with her people. It was from Babylon ninetie miles, or, as some read it, fortie, inhabited with sixe hundred thousand Citizens. To spoile the spoiler, the Parthians built Ctesiphon three miles from thence, and failing of their purpose, Vologesus built another Towne by, called Vologesocera. Yet did Babylon it selfe remaine (but not it selfe) in the time of Ammianus Marcellinus, and after.

e Seleucia was built by Seleucus Nicator on a channell, digged out of Euphrates into Tygris. Plin. l. 6. cap. 26.

Ortelius thinketh that Bagdat was called Babylon (as Seleucia before had beene) because it stood neere to the place where Babylon had stood. For that old Babylon in Pausanias time, had nothing left standing but the Temple of Bel, and the walls; sometimes, sayth he, the greatest Citie that euer the Sunne saw.

f Pausanias Arch. lib. 8.

In Ieromes time, within those walls were kept beasts for the Kings game. It was after inhabited with many thousands of Iewes, and was laid euen with the ground, as Ios. Scaliger affirmeth in the yeere, after the Iewish account 4797. and after the Christian, 1037. Master Fox hath a little lengthened the date and fate thereof, shewing that Almaricus King of Ierusalem rased and ruined it, and that it was neuer after inhabited Ann. 1170. But in Beniamin Tudelensis his dayes, which seemeth to be somewhat before Almaricus, this Citie was vtterly subuerted, as in his Itinerarie is related, in these words: One dayes journey from Gehiagan anciently called Refen, is old Babel, containing thirtie miles space, now vtterly ruined, in which the ruines of Nabuchodonosors palace are yet seene, not accessible for diuers hurtfull kinds of Serpents and Dragons there breeding. There now remaineth nothing but the small part of that great Tower, either of ornament, or of greatness, or of place inhabited.

The storie of this Bagdet or Baldach, and her Chalifs, ye may reade in our Saracenicall Historie. Authors agree, that Haalon the Tartar sacked it, about the yeere one thousand two hundred and threecore, Musfratzem being then Chalipha, the foure and fiftieth, and last of those Saracenicall Popes. Hee found a miserable death, where others with miserable nesse feeke a blessed life, being shut vp and starued amidst those Treasures, whereof he had store, which niggardie forbade him to disburse in his owne defence.

60 There is yet a bone left of this Calipha's carkasse, or some ghost and shadow of that great and mightie bodie, I meane that ancient name and power of the Calipha's, which magnificent Solymen the Turkish Emperour, in his conquest 1534. would seeme to acknowledge knowledge, in accepting the royall ensignes of that new conquered state at the hands of their Caliphs: a ceremony which the Soldans in Egypt and Persia used, more for forme then necessity; this Assyrian and that Egyptian Caliph having but gesture and vesture, the Soldans themselves enjoying both bodie and soule of this authoritie.

In the yeere one thousand one hundred fiftie nine, the River Tygris over-flowed Bagded, and desolated many Cities. Barrius [†] affirmeth out of the Arabian and Persian Targh, which he saith he had seene, that Bagded was built by the counsell of an Astrologer, a Gentile named Nobach, and hath for ascendent Sagittarius; was finished in foure yeeres, and cost eightene millions of gold. These studies of Astrologie did there flourish. One Richardus [†] a Frier Preacher sayth, That here was a Vniuersitie, the Students whereof were maintained at publike charge, of which number himselfe was one. That Caliph that founded it, for the preventing of sects, banished Philosophie out of these Schooles, and accounted him a bad Saracen which was a good Philosopher. The reason whereof grew from some, which, in reading Aristotle and Plato, relinquished Mahomet.

Marco Polo [†] or Paulus the Venetian saith, that they studied here in his time, the Law of Mahomet, Necromancie, Geomancie, Phisognomie, Physicke, and Artonomie: And that it was then a great Staple of the Indian Commodities. This was within few yeeres after the Tartar had wonne it. He addeth, that there were many Christians in these parts; and that in the yeere one thousand two hundred twentie and fve, in derision of the Gospell, the Caliph commanding by a day that the Christians should remove a mountain in testimonie of their faith, according to the words of Christ, or else to abide the perill: this was effected by a Shoemaker, and the day in remembrance thereof yearly solemnized with fasting the Euen.

CHAP. XIII.

Of Ninive and other neighbouring Nations.

WE have hitherto spoken of Babylonia, but so, as in regard of the Empire, and some other occurrents, necessitie now and then compelled vs to make excursions into some other parts of Assyria, Mesopotamia, &c. And I know not how, this Babylon causeth confusion in that Sea of affaires, and in regard of the diuision of the pennes (as sometimes of tongues) of such as haue written thereof. Hard it is to distinguish betweene the Assyrian and Babylonian Empire, one while vnited, another while diuided, as each partie could most preuaile: and no lesse hard to reconcile the Ethnike and Diuine Historie touching the same. Ptolemy a straitneth Assyria on the North, with part of Armenia neere the hill Niphates; on the West with Mesopotamia; on the South with Susiana, and Media on the East. But her large Empire hath enlarged the name of Syria, and of Assyria (which names the Greekes did not well distinguish) to many Countries in that part of Asia. The Scripture deriueth Syria from Aram, and Assyria from Asbur. Both were in their times flourishing, and mention is made from Abrahams time, both of the warres and kingdomes in those parts: yea before, from Asbur and Nimrod, as alreadie is shewed.

Mesopotamia is so called, and in the Scripture Aram or Syria of the waters, because it is situate betwene Euphrates and Tygris: the countries Babylonia, and Armenia, confining the same on the North and South. Whereas therefore wee haue in our former Babylonian relation discoursed of Assyria, extending the name after a larger reckoning: here wee consider it more properly. Euphrates is a Ruer very swift; for they which goe to Bagdet, buy their boats at Birra, which serue them but one voyage, and sell them at Felugia for seuen or eight which cost little, because they cannot returne. But Tygris is swifter; the Armenians bring victuals downe the same to Bagdet, on rafts made of Goats skinnies, blowne full of wind, and boords laid vpon them, on which they lade their goods; which being discharged, they open the skinnies and carrie them backe on Camels. Dionysius and Strabo tell of this River, that it passeth through the Lake Thonitis without mixture of waters by reason of this swiftnesse, which also giueth it the name; for the Medes call an Arrow Tygris. Lucan sayth it passeth a great way vnder ground, and wearie of that burthenesome iourney, riseth againe as out of a new fountaine.

It had (I borrow the words of our reuerend Diocesan) an c ancient testimonie long before in the Booke of d Genesis. For thus Moses writeth, That Asbur came from the land of Shinar, and built Niniveh and Rehoboth, and Calah, and Resin. At length he singeth out Nimue from the reit, and setteth a speciall marke of preeminence vpon it, This is a great Citie: which honour, by the iudgement of the most learned (though standing in the last place) belongeth to the first of the foure Cities, namely, to Ninue. Others e imagined (but their coniecture is without ground) that the foure Cities were closed vp within the same walls, and made but one, of an vsuall bignesse.

Some ascribe the building of Ninive to Ninus the sonne of Belus: of whom it tooke the name, to be called either Ninus, as wee reade in Plinie; or after the manner of the Hebrewes, Nimue. They conceiue it thus, That when Nimrod had built Babylon, Ninus disdaining his gouernment, went into the fields of Asbur, and there erected a Citie after his owne name, betwene the riuers Lychn and Tygris. Others suppose that the affinity betwixt these names. Ninus and Nimueh deceived profane Writers touching the Author thereof, and that it tooke to name Nimueh, because it was beautifull or pleasant. Others hold opinion that Asbur and Ninus are but one and the same person. And lastly, to conclude, the iudgement of some learned, is, that neither Asbur nor Ninus; but Nimrod himselfe was the founder of it. But by the confession of all, both sacred and Gentile Histories, the Citie was very spacious, hauing foure hundred and foure score furlongs in circuit, when Babylon had fewer almost (as some report) by an hundred: and as afterwards it grew in wealth and magnificence, so (they write) it was much more enlarged. Raphael Volaterranus affirmeth, That it was eight yeeres in building, and not by fewer at once then tenne thousand workemen. There was no Citie since, by the estimation of Diodorus Siculus, that Diodorus telleth out of Ctesias, that Ninus, after he had subdued the Egyptians, Phœnicians, Syrians, Cilicians, Phrygians, and others, as farre as Tanais, and the Hyrcanians, Parthians, Persians, and other their neighbours, he built this Citie. After that, hee led an armie against the Bactrians of seenteene hundred thousand footmen, and two hundred thousand horse; in which Expedition he tooke Semiramis from her husband Menon, who therefore (impatient of love and griefe) hanged himselfe. Hee had by her a sonne of his owne name, and then died, leaving the Empire to his wife. His Sepulchre was nine furlongs in height (each of which is sixe hundred fete) and ten in breadth. The credite of this Historie I leaue to the Author, scarce seeming to agree with Moses narration of the building of Ninive, any more then Semiramis building of Babylon. Some write, That Semiramis abusing her husbands love, obtained of him the swaying of the Empire for the space of five dayes; in which shee deprived him of his life, and succeeded in his estate.

But lest the name of this Citie call vs backe againe too much to those Assyrian Relations, before dilated, as much as concerneth our purpose; let vs see what can be said of their Religion here. Of this wee find little, but as before is shewed of the Babylonians.

Nisroch was the Idoll, in whose Temple Senacherib was slaine by his owne sonnes. But what this Nisroch was, I cannot find. Certaine it is, that hee which had vpbraid confidence in the true God, finds his Idoll, even in the place and time of his worship, his Traytor; and he which had blasphemed the God of heauen, finds Heauen and Earth, and his owne Bowels, against him. Venus Urania is reckoned among the Assyrian deuotions, and Adad was their chiefe god, which they interpret One, (and Macrobius, the Sunne, which, as before is said, they worshipped, and may well agree with that Latine Etymologie, Sol quasi solus) and Atargatis, the Earth. Belus also was here worshipped, as witnesse Dion, Ensebinus, and Cyrellus. Lucian sayth, That the Assyrians sacrificed to a Doue; the touching of which Fowle required much ceremonie for expiation: Whereto accordeth the fable, that Semiramis was turned into a Doue.

Concerning Adad and Atargatis, Macrobius sayth, That the Assyrians ascribe all power to these two. The Image of Adad shined with rayes or beames downwards, designing the Sunnes force: That of Atargatis, with beames upwards, as it were ascribing to the heavenly influence all her plenie: vnder the same Image were the shapes of Lions, as also the Phrygians faigned the Mother of the gods, that is, the Earth, to be borne on Lions. But of this Atargatis more in the next Chapter.

Ienas was sent to preach to the great Citie of Ninive, as some thinke, in the dayes of Sardanapalus his next Predecessor. Broughton (with some other) thinketh in the dayes of Pul, or Phul-assur. Their repentance saide that iudgement. Nabum after denounced the like iudgement, which accordingly came to passe. Phraortes King of the Medes (mentioned in the former chapter) besieged it. His sonne Cyaxares succeeded in the kingdome, and in this siege. After that, the Scythians invaded Media, and held it eight and twentie yeeres, according to the Prophecie of Jeremie 49. 34. and in the same Expedition obtained Ninive. But Cyaxares after preuailed against the Scythians, and Ahyages his Sonne ouer-turned and destroyed Ninive, that it should no more bee a receptacle or encouragement to the Assyrians, to rebell against the Medes. Nabum threatned opening of the gates of the River, and destruction to the Temple, as Tremellius readeth it, noting thereon the casting downe of the Ports on Tygris, and amongst them the Temple of Belus there erected; out of whose notes on the first Chapter of Nabum, I inserted the former Relation. Herodotus in the Historie herof sayth, That Phraortes there perished in the siege, with most part of his armie. Cyaxares, to reuenge his Fathers death, renewed the siege, but was not able to hold his owne against the Scythians, vntill, after eight and twentie yeeres, that the Scythians had enjoyed the Empire of Asia (vnder pretence of feasting being entertained in a banquet) the most of them, in their drunkenesse, were slaine by the Medes: and so the Scythians losing what before they had gotten, Cyaxares recouered the Empire, and destroyed Ninive. Thus was that Citie destroyed, whose Riches, Beautie, Antiquitie, Largenesse, and Puissance, the Scripture so often mentioneth.

A man may compare Ecbatana of the Medes, Babylon on Euphrates, and Ninive on Tygris, to the Triumviri at Rome: So did they both emulate and share the Easterne Empire, as each could make her selfe strongest; now Babylon, another while Ninive, and sometime Ecbatana preuailing; which is the cause of no small difficultie in these Histories. Mr Carwright, an eye-witnesse, hath beheld (he sayth) the ruines of this Citie, and agreeth with Diodorus

Diodorus

Diodorus in the equalitie of the sides: two of which contained an hundred and sitie furlongs, the two other but fourescore and ten on a side.

Mosul is supposed to be Ninive, haply for the neereness, or for that (as a posthume issue) it hath sprung from the former. The asses yet haue not yeelded such a Phœnix as the former was, rather a witness of the others mightinesse, saith St. Anthony Sherley, and Gods iudgement, then of any magnificence in it selfe. ¶ Mosul is in fame for Cloth of Gold, and Silke, for fertilitye, and for the Patriarchall Sea of the Nestorian Christians, whose authoritie stretched to Cathay and India. Merdin, a towne on the same Riuer, is also a Patriarchall Sea of the Chaldees (or Mahumetane Sect.) In Paulus Venetus his daies * they were in the Province. of Mosul, partly Mahumetans, partly Christians: and in the Mountaines dwelt the Curdi, that were Participle or Mungrels in Religion, professing partly Christ, partly Mahumet, in practice robbers and wicked. The Christian Patriarch hath Archbishops and Bishops vnder him, as the Romane Pope. The Mahumetans are called Aratric.

Assyria (saith Magnum) is now called by Niger, Adrinia; by Girana, Azemia; by Pinetus, Mosul; by Mercator, Sarh; and of Cassaldus, Atzerum. It sometime contained the Provinces Arpachite, Adiabena, and Sitacne, now called (after some) Botan, Sarcia and Rabia.

Boemus ^b telleth of a strange fashion, anciently vsed in Assyria; That the maids which were marriageable, were yearly brought forth in publike, and set to sale to such as would marrie them. The monie which was giuen for the fairest, was giuen to the more deformed for their portion in marriage.

The Assyrian vsed to wash themselves daily, but chiefly after carnall companie.

As for the Saracenicall Religion, we shall more fully handle the same by it selfe, then reidiously repeat the same things. For this therefore, and other Countries subiect to Turkish or Persian seruitude, the Reader may reade of their superstitions in their due place, when we speake of the Saracens, Turkes, and Persians. The relation of their Christian Rites belong to another Tome.

But let vs come out of Assyria into Syria; the Histories of which are not a little, as is said, confounded together, and many Rites were common to them both, and to all these parts, from the Persian gulfes to Asia the lesse, as being so often subiect to one Empire or rather still part of that one Empire, which receiued often alterations vnder the Assyrians, Babylonians, Medes, Persians, Macedonians, Scythians, Parthians, &c.

CHAP. XV.

Of Syria, and the ancient Religions there: Of the Syrian Goddesse, and her Rites at Hierapolis: Of the Daphnean, and other Syrian Superstitions.

SYRIA is called in Scripture, Atam, of Aram the sonne of * Shem, as before is said. And Strabo calleth the Syrians Arammæi. Hence also his * Arimæi are deriued, and Arami (lib. 13.) It is diuersly bounded by diuers Authors: some confounding the names of Syria and Assyria. Enstathius doth reckon these fixe parts thereof, Commagena, Seleucide, Cœlesyria, Phœnicia, and Iudea. * Mela extendeth it further, and * Plinius nameth as part of Syria, Palæstina, Iudea, Cœle, Phœnicie, Damascena, Babylonia, Mesopotamia, Sophene, Commagene, Adiabene, Antiochia. And in this large sense doth * Possellus and Brocardus stretch it beyond Tygris Eastward from the Mediterranean Sea, and from Armenia to Arabia. But Dom. Niger, and before him * Ptolemie (whom wee especially follow) make it to abut on the North vpon Cælicia, and part of Cappadocia, by the mount Amanus; on the South, vpon Iudæa, and part of Arabia Petrea; on the East, vpon Arabia Deserta and Euphrates; on the West, vpon the Syrian Sea.

This countrie is thought to haue bene the habitation of our first Parents, before the flood, and of Noah and his sincerer Familie (as wee haue said) after. Yet how soone, and how much, they degenerated in the wicked off-spring of cursed Cham, whose posteritie peopled a great part hereof, till they were thence by the Israelites expelled, the Scripture is sufficient record. Yea, euen from Noahs time did they deriue their Idolatrie, as appeareth by Lucians Narration of the Syrian goddesse, which he partly saw with his eyes, and partly receiued of the Priests report.

This goddesse was with godles Rites serued and obserued at Hierapolis; which (although

There was another Hierapolis in Phrygia, wherein was a famous Temple of Apollo, with a Caus or Vault vnder it, deadly to all entrers but the Priests yea, to he birds also which flew ouer it. Damas. in vita Iulian. ap. Phot. 124.

Strabo h placeth it beyond the Riuer in Mesopotamia) is by i Plinie accounted in Caelo-syria, called also Bambyce, and, of the Syrians themselves, Maggog; and by Ptolemie named among the Syrian Cities of the diuision Cirrisfica, 71. 15 Longit. and 56. 15. Latit. And Lucian who himselfe was there; (k he calleth himselfe an Assyrian, and was borne at Samofata in Commagena) placeth it on this side the Riuer. Plinie and Strabo (decyued in the name) mention the worship of Atargatis (called of the Greekes Dercesio) in this place: Athenagoras in his Apologie for the Christians, hath these words: Semiramis the daughter of Dercesio, a lecherous and bloody woman, was worshipped by the name of the Syrian goddess; but Lucian (other-where a scoffer, here an Historian) at large describeth it, making this difference betwene This and That, Atargatis was halfe a filii, but the Syrian goddess wholly resembling a woman.

The City he thinketh to haue receiued the name Hierapolis (Holy City) of these holy things here obserued; in which respect it giueth place to none other place in Syria: hauing a stately Temple, enriched with gifts, statues, and (as they esteemed them) miracles. Arabia, Phoenicia, Babylonia, Cappadocia, Cilicia, and Assyria, brought her presents, and celebrated her solemne Feasts.

This Temple was (in the Syrians opinion) first founded by Dencalion, whose Historie you would thinke Lucian had learned of the Hebrewes, not of the Syrians, or Greekes; so liely doth hee expresse the Infidelity and cruelty of the old world; the manner of the flood; the Ark wherein, with himselfe, his wife and children, he saued also all other creatures that liued on the earth, which came to him by couples, by dispensation of Iupiter. Hereunto these Hierapolitans adde, That in their Territorie was made a great Clift, which swallowed vp those waters: which Clift (but then verie little) was shewed to our Author: to whom also they reported, That in memorie hereof, Dencalion instituted that Rite, which to his time continued; That twice euery yeere, not the Priests only, but many out of all Syria, Arabia, and beyond Euphrates, went to the Sea, and from thence brought water, which they powred downe in the Temple, that he had built ouer that Clift vnto Iuno, all which water was receyued into the same.

Some ascribe the building of this Temple to Semiramis in honour of her mother Dercesio: others to Aster, for the worship of Rhea: which Aster was a Lydian, and was Author of the Superstitions of Rhea, to the Phrygians, Lydians, and Samothracians: but the opinion most probable was, that Dionysius or Bacchus was founder of it; two substantiall witnesses, besides others, affirming the same, namely two, Phallus or Priapi (huge Images of the priuie part of a man) erected at the entrie of the Temple, with an inscription, That Bacchus had consecrated them to Iuno. That ancient foundation being consumed by time, this later Temple was erected by Queene Stratonice, who being in a dreame enioyned this office of Iuno, and for neglecting the same, punished with sicknesse, vowed vpon her recovery to performe it. The King ioynd in Commission with her, as Generall of his Armie, and ouer-seer of these holy works, a beautifull young man, named Combabus, who fearing what might happen, gelded himselfe, and closing those his dismembred members (first for their preservation embalmed) in a boxe sealed, as some great treasure, he committed to the Kings fidelitie, to be safely referred to his vie. Which his practice saued his life accordingly, being after produced to cleare him of adulterie with Stratonice, which had bene laid to his charge by his eniuous accusers, and by the ialous King greedily apprehended. In memorie whereof, a brazen statue of Combabus was set vp in this Temple, and both then (whether to solace Combabus, or by inspiration of Iuno) and yeerely euer after, many in this Temple gelded themselves, and put off together the nature and habit of men, attyring themselves like women. These man-women Priests were called Galli.

The Temple was built in the midst of the Citie, compassed with a double wall; the Porch looking Northwards, almost an hundred fadome high; where flood those Priapi aforesaid, about the height of three hundred fadome; vp to one of these, one ascendeth twice a yeere, and abideth in the top thereof seuen dayes. He carrieth with him a long chaine which hee letteth downe, and thereby draweth vp to him such things as hee needeth. Many offer gold, and silver, and brasse, and one appointed receiued their names, which hee sheweth to him aboue, and he maketh his prayers for euery of them, sounding, while hee praith, a little Bell. The temple within shieth with gold, and the Roofe is wholly of this metall. it yeeldeth so fragrant a smell, that the garments of those, which come thither, retaine this sent long after.

There is also another inner Roome or Quire, whereinto the chiefe of the Priests onely haue entrance; yet is it open without any dore. In this Sanctuary are the Images of the gods; Iupiter, supported with Bulls, but Iuno sitteth vpon Lyons, holding in one hand a Scepter, and in the other a Distaffe, in some thing or other resembling diuers other goddesses, by the gyptians, Indians, Armenians, Babylonians, Ethiopians, and Medes, adorned with many Jewels: and among the rest, shee hath on her head a stone called the Lampe, of the effect, yeelding light in the night season, as if all the Temple were hanged with Lamps. This statue goeth twice a yeere to the Sea, for the water before mentioned: neyther of the Syrians is called by any name, but onely the Image, not expressing of whom.

In the Temple is the Image of Apollo clothed with a beard, (contrarie to the custome of the Greekes) and in a farre more glorious manner giuing forth Oracles: for it moueth it selfe; which, the Priests espying, lift it vp aloft (otherwile it sweateth and moueth it selfe forward neuerthelesse) and being thus supported, it turneth it selfe and them about, and leapech from one place to another. Then doth the chiefe of the Priests, make supplication and request for all things: which if it misliketh, it goeth backwards: if it approueth, it carrieth them forwards: and without these Oracles they enterprife nothing, neither priuate nor sacred: and Lucian saith, he saw it leauing the Priests (the supporters) and mouing it selfe about in the aye. Here are also the statues of Atlas, Mercurie and Lucina, and without a great brazen Altar; and many brazen Images of Kings and Priests, and many others recorded in Poets and Histories. Among others standeth the Image of Semiramis, pointing to the Temple with her finger, which (they say) is the signe of her repentance, who hauing giuen commandment to the Syrians to worship no other god but her selfe, was by plagues (sent from heauen) driuen to reuoke that former Edict, and thus seemeth to acknowledge and point out another Deitie. There were also places inclosed, wherein were kept and fed sacred Oxen, Horses, Eagles, Beares, Lyons;

The Priests were in number about three hundred, some for killing Sacrifices: some for offering: some ministering fire to others at the Altar; their garment all white; their head covered; and euery yeere was chosen a new High-Priest, which alone was clothed with purple, and a golden head-tire. A great multitude there was besides of Musicians, Galli, and Prophetical women: they sacrificed twice a day, whereat they all assembled. To Iupiter they vse neyther song nor instrument, in sacrifice; as they doe to Inno.

Not farre hence was a Lake of two hundred sadome depth, wherein were preserved sacred Fishes, and in the middelt thereof an Altar of stone, crowned alwaies with Garlands, and burning with odours. They haue a great feast, which they call the going downe to the Lake, when all their Idols descend thither.

Their greatest and most solemne Feast was obserued in the Spring, which they called the fire: they solemnized it in this sort. They felled great trees, and laide them in the Church-yard (as you may terme it) and bringeth thither the Goates, Sheepe, and other beasts, they hanged them on these trees; together with them, fowles and garments, and workes of gold and silver, which being set in due order, they carrie the Images of the gods about the trees, and then set all on fire. They resort to this Feast out of Syria, and the coasts adioyning, and bring hither their Idols with them; and great multitudes resorting to the sacrifices, the Galli, and those other sacred wights beate and wound each other. Others play on instruments, and others rauished by diuine furie, prophesie: and then doe the Galli enter into their orders: for the furie rauisheth many of the beholders. Whatsoeuer young man commeth prepared to this purpose, hurling off his garments, with a great voyce, he goeth into the middelt, and drawing his sword gold th' himselfe, and runneth thow the Circle, carrying in his hands, that which he would no longer carry on his body. And into whatsoever house he casteth the same, he receiue h from thence his womans lib habite and attire. When any of them die, his fellowes carrying him into the suburbs, couer him and his horse with bones, and may not enter into the Temple in seuen dayes after: nor after the sight of any other carcase, in one day, but none of that family where one hath died, in thirty dayes; and then also with a shauen head. Swine they hold for vndeane beasts. And the Doue they esteeme so sacred, that if one touch one against his will, hee is that day vndeane. This causeth Doves in those parts to multiply exceedingly: neyther doe they touch Fishes: This becaufe of Derecto, halfe a woman, halfe a fish; that, for Semiramis which was metamorphosed into a Doue, Iulius Hyginus hath this fable, that an egge of maruellous greatness fell out of heauen into Euphrates, which the fishes rolled to land; on the same did Doves fly, and hatched thierout Venus, who was after called the Syrian goddesse, at whose eat not their Fish nor Doves, but number them amongst their gods. Their superstition concerning Herrings and Doves was ridiculous, esteeming that the Syrian goddesse did fill the bodies of such as had eaten them with biles an vlcers, causing also the fore-part of the leg and the liuer to consume.

Many are the ceremonies also to be performed of the religious Pilgrims or Votaries that visit this holy City: for before hee setteth forth, hee cutteth off the hayre of his head and browes, he sacrificeth a sheepe, and spreading the fleece on the ground, hee kneeleth downe on it, and layeth vpon his head the head and feet of the beast, and prayeth to bee accepted:
 the rest he spendeth in the banquet. Then doth he crowne himselfe, and his fellow Pilgrims, and after sets forward on his pilgrimage, vsing for his drinke and washing cold water, and sleepeth alwayes on the ground till his returne home. In this Citie were appointed publike Hostes, for diuers Cities diuers, called Doktors; because they expounded these mysteries: They haue also one manner of sacrificing, to hurle downe the beasts destined here-unto, from the top of the porch, which die of the fall. They haue a like rite to put their children in a Sacke, and carrie them downe, branded first on the necke or palme of the hand: and hence it was, that all the Assyrians were branded. The young men also consecrated their haire from their Natiuitie, which being cut in the Temple, was there preserued in some boxe of gold or siluer, with the inscription of the owners name thereon. And this did I (saith *Luto me. Certaine it is that Leahs daughters had not quite lost all their Syrian superstition, as appears by Rachels stealing her fathers Theraphim, & Idols which (Kimchi and Aben Ezra think) were made according to Astrologicall superstition, capable of celestiall influence and prediotion, therefore stolne (as they conceiue) that her father should not consult with them touching their way in this flight. The like doth Malmesbury report of Gerbertus, which by inspection of the starres made an Idolls head, with which hee vsed consultations: (this was Siluester the second the Necromancer and Pope, An. Do. 998.) and the like tale is related of

Frier Bacon. That Dea Syria before mentioned, was worshipped in the times of the Roman Empire: here also in this Island, as appears by an inscription, which Sir Robert Cotton hath DEAB SYRIAE, and diuers altar-stones inscribed DEAE MATRIVS, mentioned by Master Camden; which are thought to be the same with the Syrian goddesse, whose image was iust the same with that of Berecynthia, or the mother of the gods, interpreted also the Earth, and Heauen: For it is no vnusall thing with superstition; scalo terram miscere, to make a hellish confusion of all things: Yea, the Ashtaroth before mentioned, are thought to be the same with Syria Dea, and these Dea matres. This Asarte is also accounted Suno, and the Moone (as her Bull-head with horns in stead of a crowne, wherewith they paint her, argue) and Minerva and Venus, Io, and Lucina, and Myllina, or Alytta, and Mitra, and Aphroarche, and Caelesie, or Urania the Queene of Heauen, and all things, and nothing; for an Idoll is indeed nothing in the world: but the very being thereof is but the distracted, vaine, various, imagination, fancie, and phrensie of the Idolater. This is also the cause of ascribing difference or communitie of sexe to their Deities, as this Asarte, sometimes feminine, sometimes masculine, as Venus likewise in some of the Greeke and Latine Poets, and the Egyptians mysterie of the Moone or Isis, with both sexes, as hath beene already touched.

Antiochia built by Selenus, (to whom, in honour of his memorie, in mount Cassius they obserued sacred solemnities, as to a semi-God) Some times the seat royall of the Syrian Kings, third Citie of the Roman Empire, third seat of the Christian Patriarchs, and first, where that melodious name of Christian was heard, is now the Sepulchre (sayth Boterus) of it selfe, or (as Niger) a greater wilde nesse, wherein it selfe is the least part of it selfe, being left but a small Village (sayth another) in the midst of its owne walles.

About fise miles from Antiochia, was that faire and sacred Daphne, which Ortelius in his Theater hath presented to the Spectators, with a peculiar description, and of which the elder Authors "haue plentifully written. It was ten miles about: a place euery way enuironed with many stately Cypresses, besides other trees, which suffered not the Sunne to kisse their mother (Earth) whose lap was according to the diuersitie of the season replenished with varietie of flowers, her breasts flowing with streames of watery nourishment: A spring there was, deriuing (as men supposed) her water from the Cassalian fountaines, to which, ancient (superstition and therefore superstitious Antiquitie) attributed a diuine facultie with like name and force to that at Delphus. This also was furthered by the Legend of Daphne,² recorded by the Poets, beleueed (and what will not Superstition beleuee, but the truthne?) by the credulous multitude: who was said to haue fled from Apollo, and here turned into a tree. But thus could not Apollo be turned from his loue, which he continued both to the Tree and place. This was Lettice futable to the lips of vaine youth. Et quis consimilem Inserat (sayth amorous Chares, of Iupiter in the Comicke)

Ego homuncio hoc non facerem?*

There needed no other lecture of sensualitytie to them, then this Legend, especially in this schoole, where euery place might be a place of argument (vnder pretence of reason and religion) to shut true Religion, and reason out of the place, especially with schollers greedy of this conclusion. Here you might haue heard the whisking winds in a murmuring accent breathing this lustfull Oratorie: the Enamelled floor did offer her more then officious curtesie (a soft, sweet, and inlayed bed) to lie on; the ayre with temperature, seemed to further Intemperance. The eye of the day, and watchmen of the night, were prohibited by the Cypresse rooffe, with their vnwelcome light, to testifie those workes of darknesse, which those guiltie boughs covered from discovering: Once, the concurring objects of each sense, did in silence speake and perswade to sensuall pleasure, inso much that by a generall Decree, Temperance and Temperate men were hence exiled, and scarce would the vulgar allow him the name of a man, which here would be transformed into a beast, or would presume, without a Curtezane, to tread on this holy ground. Needs must they goe whom the deuil drieth: such god, such religion.

Here were erected sumptuous buildings: the Temple of Apollo Daphneus, with a stately Image therein; the worke (as was thought) of Selenus: also Dianas Chappell and Sanctuary. Iulius Capitolinus writeth, that Vernus a voluptuous Emperour spent foure Summers here, and wintered in Laodicea and Antioch. Senecus (more truly answering his name) did to death certaine Tribunes, by whose negligence the Souldiers here were suffered to riot.

riot. The Oracles added renoune to the place, which were deliuered out of these Daph- nian waters by a certaine wind or breath. Adrian the Emperour is reported to haue hence receiued the facultie of Diuining, by dipping a Cypresse leafe in the Fountaine. Julian resorted hither often for that purpose. But his elder brother Gallus, (whom Constantine had called to be Cesar, and after, sayth Ammianus, for his outrages executed,) had in the time of his abode at Antioch, remoued the bones of Babylas their Bishop, and other holy Ma-tyrs his companions in suffering, to this place, where also he built a Church. Now when as Julian in his Persian expedition had sent others to visite all the other Oracles in the Roman Empire, himselfe here consulted with Apollus, (an Apostata Emperour with an Apo-stata Angell) about the successe of those warres. But all his sacrifices obtained no other answere, then that he could not answere, by the countermand of a more diuine power there liuing in those dead bones. Hereupon Julian command the Christians to remoue those ill neighbours; which they did (sayth Theodoret,) with a solemne procession singing the Psalmes, and dancing with the heart, of David; making this the burthen and foot of each verse, Confounded bee all they that worship grauen Images: wherewith, Julian enraged, persecuted the Christians. Enagorius affirmeth, that hee built a Temple in honour of Babylas:
 how truly, I know not. But the true God confounded both the Idoll and Idolater, shortly after, calling the one to giue account of his ill employed stewardship; vncertaine whether by diuine or humane hand: and for the other, his Temple was consumed with fire from aboue, together with the Image, one pillar whereof remained in Chrysostomes dayes. The Pagans attributed this fire to the Christians: and so marvell: for what did not that fire of blind Idolatrie (kindled with zeale) attribute to the innocent Christians? herein testifying that it came from hell, and must to hell againe, by that hellish Character and impression, of so great fire, and as great darkenesse. Such is Hell, and such is ignorant Zeale: a fire, but no light. Apollus's Priest by no torments could be forced to confesse any author thereof; and the officers of the Temple affirmed it was fire from heauen, which certaine Countreypeople confirmed by their owne sight. Julian, to satisfie his rage, caused some Temples of the Christians to be burned, Nicephorus telleth of the continuance of this Daphnians groue, honoured with buildings and spectacles, by Mammianus and Cosroes. Apollus's Image was made of wood, couered ouer with gold. Theodosius forbad the cutting of any of those Cypresses.

Orontes is a River which ariseth in Coelesyria, and payeth tribute to all the three brethren: it visiteth Pluto's Palace, running with a long tract vnder the Earth, and then heauing vp his head, maketh his gladfom homage to Iupiter; and after his custome payed to the Antiochians, in fine powreth himselfe into the lappe of Neptune, entering the Sea neere to Seleucia. It was called Typhon, vntill Orontes, building a bridge ouer it, caused it to be called by his name. They had here a tale of Typhon, a huge Dragon, which diuided the earth, as hee went seeking to hide himselfe, and perished by the stroke of a thunderbolt.
 Thus did he indent a passage for this River. Not farre hence was a sacred Caue, called Nymphceum; also Mount Casius, and Anticasius, and Heraclia; and nigh thereto the Temple of Minerva. In Laodicea was this goddesse honoured, to whom they offered a yeerely sacrifice, in old time a maid, after that in stead thereof a Hart.

I may here mention also that, which Tacitus reporteth of the Mount Carmel (as hee placeth it) betwixt Iudea and Syria, where they worshipped a god of that name with Eth-nicke rites. They had not any Temple or Statue to this god, an Altar onely and Reuerence was here seene. Vespasian did in this place offer sacrifice, where Basilides the Priest viewing the entralls, foretold him of his good successe. Damasius in the life of Isidorus, mentioneth a Syrian goddesse, named Babia, of whom infants newly borne, were by the Syrians, especially at Damascus, called also Babia: perhaps they were esteemed vnder her tutelage; and our English word, Babes, may hence borrow the originall.

CHAP. XVI.

Of the Syrian Kings, and alteration in Government, and Religion, in those Countries.

SYRIA quickly grew into Peoples and Kingdomes; although Time hath long since deuoured both them and their memories. Of Menon the husband of Semiramis (mentioned by Diodorus) is spoken before. Adadzer was in Davids time, a King of Aram Zoba, which some take for Chobal in Syria, some for Sophene in Armenia, and some for the Nabci: whatsoever they were, David made them tributarie, Anno mundi 2903. Benhadad, Hazael, and others, the Scripture also mentioneth: but certaine succession, we find not recorded of these Syrian Kings, till the time of Alexander, which conquering all from Macedonia, to India, by his unexpected death, left his huge Empire to bee shared among his chiefe followers. Seleucus, the sonne of Antiochus, a Macedonian, first master of the Elephants; then Tribune; after that Deputie of the Babylonians, at last obtained the Kingdome of Asia, Anno Mundi 3638. of whom Appianus thus writeth: The first King of Syria after Alexander, was Seleucus, called Nicator, because he was of very great stature; and as a wild bull had in a sacrifice of Alexander broken loose, hee held him with both his hands. Hee built sixteene Cities, called by the name Antiochia, of his father Antiochus; and fixe Laodicea's, in memorie of his mother Laodice: nine Seleucia's of his owne name: three Apamea's, and one Stratonicea, after the names of his two wiues. He prospered in his warres, tooke Babylon, subdued the Bactrians; pierced to the Indians, which had slaine Alexanders Governours (placed amongst them) after Alexanders death. He slew Lyfimachus, and seuen Moneths after was circumcised and slaine of Ptolemei, (whose sister Lyfimachus had married) being seentie three yeeres old.

To him succeeded his sonne Antiochus, sur-named Soter. Anno 3667. who had obtained Stratonice his mother in law, of his father (moued thereunto by his soines violent loue, and his Physicians subtile perswasion.) His sonne Antiochus Theos was (contrarie to his name) poysoned by his wife: whose sonnes Seleucus, Callinicus and Antiochus succeeded: and after them Antiochus Magnus, the sonne of Callinicus, who much enlarged his Empire, adding thereto Babylon, Egypt, and Iudea: but inuading Græcia, prouoked the Romans against him, with whom he compounded on base and meane conditions: Hee did yet comfort himselfe for his losse among his friends, saying, that he was beholding to the Romans, that eased him of so weightie a burthen, and lessened his cares of government: (for they had cooped him in a corner of his Kingdome beyond Taurus.) After this, hee was slaine: exhibiting in himselfe a true example of the worlds fallshood, that playeth with Scepters, and vyeth Disaems, vsing men like Counters or Figures, in numbering and casting accounts, where the same, with a little difference of place, is a pound, shilling, or pennie, one, ten, or an hundred. And yet as earthly happinesse herein comes short of heauen, that it is neuer meere and vmixed, but hath some soure sauce to relish it: so falleth it as farr short of hell, that not onely hope, but the most miserable hap, hath some glimpse of comfort.

But to come to our Historie. Antiochus his sonne, sur-named Epiphanes, and after, Epimanes for his furious inselence, (who beganne his raigne Anno mundi 3774.) was first sent to Rome in hostage, for securitie of his fathers faith: and after that Seleucus his brother (which sent Heliodorus to rob the Temple at Ierusalem) had a while warned the Throne, succeeded in the Syrian Kingdome. Of him and his tyrannie Daniel had long before prophesied in the interpretation of Nabuchodonosors Image, whose legs are interpreted to be this Syrian, and the Egyptian kingdomes, both heauie and hard neighbours to the Church in Iudea, lying betwixt them: but more especially in his 8 Visions in the seuenth Chapter. Where, after other things, he fore-telleth of the ten hornes, which are the eight Kings afore-named, and two Egyptian Ptolemies, Evergeter, and Philopater, in their times preuailing in Syria, and infecting Iudea. And the last shall subdue three Kings, which were Ptolemie of Egypt, driuen out of Syria, Seleucus his brother, and Demetrius, to whom, after Seleucus, the right of the Scepter belonged. His policie, and blasphemie, and tyrannie, are also by Daniel plainly fore-signified, and in their euent as fully in the Historie of the Maccabees related. There you may reade his wicked life, and wretched death: He tooke Ierusalem Anno mundi 3781. and slew fourescore thousand people, robbed the Temple of eigh-teene hundred talents, and of the holy Vessels, polluted the Temple; forbade the Sacrifice, named it the Temple of Jupiter Olympius; forced men by tortures from their religion; with other execrable outrages, which would require a lust volume to describe.

As he was thus made and raging against the true Religion: so Athenaus sheweth his vanitie in his owne, whose pompous solemnitie at the Daphnean Feast hee thus relateth. Antiochus, in emulation to Paulus & Emilius, proclaimed this solemn feast in the Cities of Greece, and performed it at Daphne. First, passed in order five thousand men, armed after the Roman manner: next followed five thousand Myrians, and three thousand Cilicians, with Crownes of gold: of Thracians three thousand, of Galatians five thousand, of whom, some had shields of silver. Twentie thousand Macedonians, and five thousand with shields of brasse: after these, two hundred and fortie couples of champions which should fight in single combat. There followed one thousand Piszan horse-men, and three thousand of the Citie, the most whereof had Crownes and Vials of gold, other trappings of silver: Next came the band, called Socia, nothing inferiour in pompe or number: then a thousand extraordinarie, and another thousand in the band called Agema. Lastly, the barded horses fiftene hundred, all these in purple vestures, which many had embroidered, or embossed with gold: Chariots drawne with sixe horses, one hundred and fortie drawne by foure; one drawne by Elephants, attended with six and thirtie other. The rest of the pompe is incredible and tedious: eight hundred youths with golden crownes: a thousand fat oxen, and three hundred persons to attend the sacrifices: eight hundred Elephants teeth, There were also the Images of all the gods, and Hereser that can be reckoned, some gilded, some clothed with golden vestures, their fabulous histories being with great pompe annexed. After all these, the Images of Day, Night, Earth, Heaven, Morning, and Noone. Then came a thousand Boyes, each having a piece of plate of a thousand drams: sixe hundred with vessels of gold: eightie women were carried in chaires footed with gold, and five hundred in others, footed with silver, very sumptuously attired: two hundred of them out of basons of gold strewed odours. These spectacles lasted thirtie dayes. A thousand (and sometimes twelue hundred.) Halls or dining roomes, were furnished for bankets, the King himselfe affecting too officious familiaritie therein, visiting the tables of the baser people, yea, and that as a base Minstrell with musick; not of the best instruments, but such as the poorer sort vied for want of better, as learned Cassaubonus hath on that place of Athenaus observed. So base is the Pride of Ambition, tempering a confused distemper; according (in a strange harmonic) the harshest discord of proud-aspiring, and dejected baseness; where a base and ferule mind begetteth pride, and pride produceth a ferule baseness, a changeling which the doting World fathereth on Humility.

Of the death of this Antiochus, the former and second bookes of Machabees seeme to disagree: and, which is more strange, the second booke in the first chapter saith, * hee and his company were destroyed in the Temple of Nanza in Persia: and in the ninth chapter saith that in Media, at Ecbatana, hee was smitten with an vncouth disease, and a fall from his Chariot, whereof he died. Some I that would haue this history Canonically, apply it to two Antiochs, as Lyra, and Rupertus, and after them Carnus: but Bellarmino = seeing that they will not agree with the times of any other, but Epiphanes, proueth himselfe Epimachus, and runneth mad with loue of that Trent-Minion: affirming, that in the Temple of Nanza he fell but escaped (as = the King of Sodome is said to fall, when Lot was captiued, and yet was not slaine) and after perished, as in the after part of the historie is expressed; whereas, it is there said, that they slew the doers on him, and cut him and his fellows in pieces, and made them flourish by the heads: who yet after this (forsooth) could goe into Media and there haue a fall from his Chariot. They must haue no delicate stomacks, that will be Iesuits, any thing must down when they will vp, especially, if Trent or the Vatican command, I enuie not the red Hat with these labels. Wel fire that modestie of the Author * that confesseth his weaknesse: but Anathema is they that Anathema's that enact p contradictions to be Canonically.

The rest with the times of their raigne are before expressed, Pompey set an end to these Seleucidian Kings, and the Romans enjoyed the Countries of Syria, till the Saracens dispossessed them; whose history you may reade ^f in their due place. The Turkes displaced those Saracens; the Christians of the West, by warre, made those parts Christian; but were expelled againe by the Turkes, and they by the Tartars. The Mameluke ^g slaues, and their Egyptian Soldan after, held held the Syrian Dominion, vntill Selim the great Turke subdued it to the Ottoman Empire, vnder which it still groweth. Of these things this our History will acquaint you in the proper reports of these Nations.

Aleppo is now chiefe Citie of Syria; but Damascus both in elder and later times hath borne the greatest name, being the head of Aram, as Esay affirmeth, called of Isaiah, the Citie of Iupiter, and eye of the whole East, Holy and Great, called also the Thropee of Iupiter, because he there had conquered the Tittans. It is interpreted drinking blond, by Hierom, who telleth (from the Hebrews tradition) that in this field Kain slew his brother; Chyren expoundeth it succus sanguinis; Walphius deriueth it of two words, signifying blond, and to spoyle: which in the times of Hazael and Benhadad, and of Rezin it performed: but neuer so much, as when the Saracens made it the sinke of blood and spoyle, which they executed on the Christians: Noradine, Saladine, and the Turkes, fitting themselves and this Citie to the name, before the Egyptian Sultans, and Ottoman Turkes, were Lords of it. Stephanus ascribeth the name to one Ascu a Giant, which cast Dionysus there into the River: Or because Damascus, the soune of Mercury comming hither out of Arcadia built it: or because Dionysus there sleid off the skin of Damascus, which had cut vp his Vines.

The Turkes now call it Lennclanius, and Chyren testifie, Scham, and so is the whole Region called in the Arabian Chronicle, whose extract you may find in our Saracenicall history.

The Armies of Dauid, Ahab, Teglat Phalasar preuayled much against it. The Babylonians subuerted it: After that, the Protonneys repayed it: Pompei yannet, Paul hallowed it: The Saracens (as is sayd) polluted it. The Christians in vaine besieged it, in the yere one thousand one hundred forty and seven. Haalon the Tartar, one thousand two hundred threescore and two, obtained it, and about one thousand foure hundred, Tamerlane besieged it: and as he had done at Aleppo, filling the ditch with the bodies of captiues, and slain carkasses, cast wood and earth vpon them, and at last forced it and the Castle. Hee placed the Citie for the Temples sake, which had fortie Porches in the circuite, and (within) nine thousand Lamps, of Gold and Silver. But the Egyptians by a wile possessing it, he againe engirt it, and recovered it. Hee commanded Mahomet the Pope or Chalie, and his priests, which came to meete him, to repayre to the Temple, which they did with thirteene thousand Citizens, where he burnt them all: and for monument of his victory, left three Towers erected of skuls of dead men. The Egyptians regained and held it till Selim the Turke dispossessed them 1517.

Now in thus many alterations of State, who doubteth of diuersity in Religions in Syria? First, the true Religion in the times of Noah, and the first Patriarkes. Next, those superstitions of Rimmon, and the rest before related, in the Assyrian, Babylonian, Persian, Macedonian and Roman gouernments: After which length, the Sunne of Righteousnesse shone vnto the Syrians, and made a more absolute Conquest then all the former, not by Legions and Armies, but by a haddspall of Fishermen, (manifesting his Power in their weakenesse) the Reason of Men, and Malice of Devils, not being able to withstand their Euangelicall weapons, which were mighty through God to cast downe holdes, and bring into captivity euery thought to the obedience of Christ, inso much, that hence the Christian World receyued first that name. And, how sweet would thy name remaine, O Syrian Antiochia, euen now in thy latest fates, which first was christned with the name Christian, haddest thou not out-liued thy Christianity, or rather, (after the soule departed) remained the carkasse of thy selfe; which ceasing to be Christian, hast long since ceased to bee, had not the Diuine hand referred a few bones of thy carkasse to testifie this his iustice to the world! And what harmonic could haue beene more grateful to the Gentiles eares, then thy memorie (Damascus) where the Dollor of the Gentiles was first taught himselfe, and made a Teacher of others? But in thee was the Chayre of Preilence, the Throne of Sathan, the sincke of Mahumetan impietie to the rest of the world, infecting with thy contagion, and subduing with thy force more Nations, then euer Paul by preaching conuered. Syria, first in the first and principall Priuiledges of Mankind, embracing in her rich armes (if so be right Surciours) the promised Possession (the Seale of a further and better inheritance) was with the first subdued to Saracene seruitude: vnder their Caliph, vnder the Turkes, vnder the Christians from the West, vnder the Tartars from the East, vnder the Mamalukes from the South, and from the North the Ottoman, by new successions and vicissitudes of miseries and mischiefs, become a common Stage of blood and slaughter. And in all these later changes of State, and chaunces of Warre. Religion was the life that quickned those deaths, and whetted those murdering swords: no crueltie or sacriledge against God, or man, so irreligious, and inhumane, but Religion was pretended to be the cause, and bare the Standard to destruction; a new Religion alway erected with a new Conqueror.

Phœnicia is the Sea coast a of Syria, after Plinie, or that coast or tract bordering on the Sea from Ortholia (now Tortola) to Pelusium. This Sea coast (saith Andreas Masius) b was of the Greekes called Phœnicia, and of the Hebrewes peculiarly stiled Chanaan, and the Inhabitants Chananites. So the Spies tell Moses, the c Chananites dwell by the Sea. The woman in the Gospell which Matthew calleth a Canaanite, is by Masius named a Syro-phœnician: and the Septuagint in this place, for the Kings of Chanaan read the Kings of Phœnicia. And in the Scripture it is appellatively vied for a Merchant, because the Phœnicians or Chananites were famous for Merchandize, as appeareth both by diuine and prophane testimonie. Most properly the Northerly part is Chanaan Phœnicia, the Southern Palestine, although it is sometime extended, as wee haue said euen to Egypt. Dionysius (which maketh the Phœnicians the first Mariners, Merchants, and Astronomers) placeth Gaza and Ioppe in Phœnicia. Sachoniatho a Phœnician, supposed to haue liued before the Trojan warre, wrote in his owne language, the History of his Nation, which Philo Biblinus line translated into Greeke. This Philo in the beginning of his worke sayth, That his Author, Sachoniatbo, as he was generally learned, so especially he searched out those things which Taautus, called of the Egyptians Theuth, of the Greekes Mercure, the first Inuenter of letters, had written: hee also blamed those, that by Allegories and Tropologies peruert and obscure the Historie of their gods: affirming plainly, That the ancient Phœnicians, Egyptians, and others adored those men for gods, that had bene the Authors of good things to men, applying to them also the names of those Natural gods; the Sunne, Moone, &c. for making some gods mortall, some immortall. According to this Taautus therefore, the first beginnings of all things were a darke disordered Chaos, and the spirit of the darke ayre. Hence proceeded Moth, which we may interpret Mire, from whence issued the feedes and generation of all creatures in the Earth and Heauen; the plants first, and from them the reasonable Creatures called Thophasunin, that is, the beholders of Heauen, formed in the shape of an Egge. From Moth also came the Sunne, Moone, and Starrs. The Sunne by his heate separating these new-formed Creatures, their conflict in the ayre produced Thunder, which voyse awaked, and caused to leape out of their earth, this slimie generation; after of the Winde Culpia and Baan (which signifieth Night) were borne men, named Age and First-borne; Age, taught men to liue of the fruites of trees: of these came Kind and Generation, who being troubled with heate, lifted vp their hands to the Sunne, which they tooke for a god, calling him Beelsamen (which signifieth the Lord of Heauen) whom the Greekes call Iupiter.

 20 Kind begate Light, Flame, Fire. This last by rubbing of slickes together found out fire: From these descended in succeeding generations those Giants, that left their names to the hills where they dwelt, Cassius and Libanus, that contended against their brother Vson, who first aduencured the sea in the bodies of trees burned (in which manner the Indians, euen yet, make their canoes or boats) and he erected two Statues to the Wind and the Fire, whom hee adored with the blood of beasts.

These first men after their death had Statues consecrated to them by posteritie, and yearly solemnities. To these succeeded others, Hunter and Fisher, which had two Sonnes, one of which was named Chusor a great Magician: From these descended Amyrus and Magus, Authors of Sheepe-cotes and flocks, or herds of Cattell. These were the Tuans, Inuenter of Arts, hunting, fishing, building, yron-works, tents and such like. To Misor, one of these was borne Taautus, first Author of Letters. At that time was borne Elius, and Beruth his wife, which dwelt in Biblos, the Parents of Calus and Terra (his wife and sister) who deified with rites and ceremonies their father Elius being come of wilde beasts. To these were borne Saturne, Batilus, Dagon, and Atlas.

But Celus taking other wiues, there arose a great quarrell betwixt him and his former, ayded herein by her sonnes; of whom Saturne the eldest, created Mercurie his Scribe, by whose Magicall Arts, and by those weapons (first by him, and Minerva the daughter of Saturne deuised) Calus was ouerthrowne: who, after two and thirty yeeres warre betwixt them, was taken by his sonne, and deuiued of his genitories.

30 Saturne had issue (besides his daughters Minerva and Proserpina, Amor, Cupido, Saturne Iupiter, Belus and Apollo, of his Sisters, Astarte, Rhea, Dione. Then also were borne Typho, Nereus, Pontus, the Father of Neptune. Saturne suspecting his brother Atlas, buried him in the ground, and cast vp an high hill ouer him: where, not long after, was a Temple erected to him. Dagon was inuenter of Tillage; and therefore called Iupiter of the Plough. But Saturne becoming a great Conquerour, bestowed Egypt on Taautus or Mercurie, who first made a mysterie of their Theologie, as the Sonne of one Thalon, the Phœnician Priest, first did among the Phœnicians; applying allegoricall interpretations thereof to Nature; and instituting Rites to posterity. This allegoricall Theologie of Taautus was interpreted by Sarmobolus and Thurro. It followeth in the History, That it was then a custome in great calamities, for the Prince to appease the angry Damon with his best beloved sonne, and thus (in the time of a perillous warre) was Leid the Sonne of Saturne, by a Nymph, named Anobrieth, clothed in royall apparell, offered on an Altar erected for that purpose. This was practised long after by the King of Moab, who being besieged by three Kings of Israel, Iuda, and Idumæa, sacrificed his eldest sonne: which yet some interpret of the eldest sonne of the King of Idumæa. Taautus ascribed Diuinitie to the Serpent, as being of a most fierce and spiritiual nature, mouing it selfe swiftly, and in many formes, without helpe of feet, and a creature which renemeth her age. The Phœnicians and Egyptians followed him herein, they calling it a happy Spirit of God, these Eneth; and framed thereto the head of a Hawke of which in his place wee haue spoken. And thus farre haue wee bene indebted to Eusebius.

60 In the time of those warres betwixt Saturne and Calus was borne Hercules: to whom was a Temple of great Antiquity at Tyre. To Hercules were also celebrated games at Tyrus every five yeeres, to which Iafon sent three hundred drams for a sacrifice. ^m Hiram in Solomons time pulled downe the old Temples of Hercules and Astarte, and built new. He first erected a statue to Hercules, and in the temple of Iupiter consecrated a golden Pillar.

The Sydonians also worshipped Astarte, in a stately and ancient Temple to her builded: whom some interprete Luna, & some Venus, and one of her Priests, to ^q Lucian, Europa. She was worshipped of the Punicks (a Phenician colony) by that name of Iuno. But Philo also Iuso was Venus; and Luna also after Lucian. And so it appeareth by her homie head wherewith Philo saith, shee was painted; the Arabians called her Alilat, the Chaldeans Militta. The same is called also Beltis, or Baltis, and Belsama in an old Inscription, thar is, Iuno Olympia, or Queene of Heauen; Shee ware on her head in stead of a Crowne a Bulles-head; whereby what else could be meant but the Moone, Queene of the night; as the Sunne Baal-famen is King of Heauen or Lord of the day. But the manifold names giuen to the same Deities brought in confusion, and a numberlesse Polytheisme: nor can wee well distinguish betwixt Almerua, Iuno, Venus, Luna, and other names of their mystic mysteries. Shee is called also Astroarche, Iuno, Lucina, Libyia, which hath her mid-wife-mysteries, borrowed together with the name from the Iewish Lilith, (of which we shall after speake) as the name Alilat also is. The Syrian goddess before related, and the Persian Mithra (which some deriue of Mader, that is in the Persian alfo, a mother) is no other but this Astarte Vrania, or as Tertullian calls her Celestis, or what other name before mentioned you please to giue her: which I know not how mystically, is also called Cybele, Berecynthia, and (with a confused mixture of Heauen and Earth) THE EARTH. Astarte a word plural is exemplified in the European Iunones, mentioned in Inscriptions, and in those altars in Maister Camden, and Maister Selden, inscribed DE AVVS MATRIBVS, diuers of which haue bene found in this Island, intended by them (as were also the Bete) which made vows, DIS SYRIS.

Lucian sayth, that he saw also at Biblos the Temple of Venus Biblia: wherein are celebrated the yeerely rites of Adonis, (who they say, was slaine in their Countrey) with beatings and wofull lamentings; after which, they performe Obsequies vnto him, and the next day they asseme him to be alieue, and shaueth their heads. And such women as will not bee shauen, must prostitute their bodies for one day vnto strangers, and the money hence accrewing, is sacred to Venus. Some asseme that this ridiculous lamentation is made, not for Adonis, but Osiris; in witnesse whereof, a head made of Paper once a yeere in seuen dayes space comming swimming from Egypt to Byblos, and that without any humane direction: Of which Lucian reporteth himselfe an eye-witnesse. This is called the mourning for Thamuz, which Iunius interpreteth Osiris, whence the fourth moneth (commonly their Harueit) is called Tamuz. For Isis which instituted these rites, was their Ceres. Hierom interpreteth it Adonis; but it seemeth the difference is more in the name than the Idoll or rites. Women were the chiefe lamenters, if not the onely, as Ezechiel testifieth, and the pronenesse of that sexe to teares, and to superstitious deuotion also, (which they seeme to acknowledge, whose praying stile is, pro deuoto fac meo sexu) likewise Ethnike Authors are witnesses. Plutarch sayth, the women kept the Adonia, or feast of Adonis, euery where through the Citie, sitting forth Images, obseruing exequies and lamentation. Ammianus reported of this festiual solemnized at Antiochia, at the same time when Julian entred the Citie, then filled with howlings and lamentings: and elsewhere compareth the women which lamented the death of their young Prince, to the women which obserued the rites of Venus in the feasts of Adonis. Iulius Firmicus affirmeth, that in most Cities of the East Adonis is mourned for, as the husband of Venus, and both the smiter, and the wound is shewed to the standers by. For, Mars changed into the shape of a Bore, wounded him for the loue of Venus. Hee addeth, that on a certaine night, they lay an Image in a bed, and number a set bead-roll of lamentations: which being ended, light is brought in, and then the Priest anointeth the chappes of the Mourners, whispering these words, Trust in God for we haue saluation or deliuerance, from our grieues. And so with ioy they take the Idoll out of the Sepulchre. Was not this mourning, thinke wee, sport to the Deuill? especially when this Adonia was applied vnto the buriall and resurrection of Christ, the Pageant whereof followeth the Good-Friday, and Lenten fast of the Papists. Yet is this worse then the former, not onely because Corruptio optimi pessima, the best things by abusing are made worst; but also because the treason of Iudas and Peters deniall is propoised in action to the peoples laughter, & inter tot cachinnos & ineptias solus Christus est ferius & feruens, saith L. Vines, complaining of this great wickednesse of the Priests (magno scelere atque impietate Sacerd.) but here and elsewhere often, when he telleth tales out of Schoole, the good mans tongue is shortned, and their Index purgeth out that wherewith hee seeketh to purge their leauen. But let vs backe from Rome to Blos: Hereby runneth the Riuer Adonis also, which once a yeere becommeth red and bloudie:

bloudie: which alteration of the colour of the water, is the warning to that their Mourning for Adonis, who at that time they say is wounded in Libanus: whereas that rednesse ariseth indeed of the winds, which, at that time blowing violently, doe with their force carry downe alongst the streame a great quantity of that red Earth or Minium of Libanus, whereby it passeth. This constancy of the wind might yet seeme as marvellous as the other, if diuers parts of the world did not yield vs instance of the like. In Libanus also was an ancient Temple dedicated to Venus by Cyniras.

Astarte or Asharoth was worshipped in the forms of sheepe, * not of the Sydonians only, but of the Philistims * also, in whose Temple they hanged the armour of Saul. And wife Salomon was brought by doting on women, to a worse dotage of Idolatry † with this Sydonian Idoll among others. And not then first did the Israelites commit that fault, but from their first neighbour-hood with them, preclutely after the dayes of Ishmael. * This Sydon, the ancient Metropolis of the Phenicians (now called Saito) in likelihood was built by Sidon, eldest Sonne of Canaan, ‡ and fell to the lot of Asher, whence it is called Great Sidon. It was famous † for the first Glasse-hops, and destroyed by Oechus the Persian. This faire mother yeelded the world a Daughter farre fairer; namely, Tyrus, now called Sur, (whose glory is sufficiently blazed by the Prophets, Esay, and Ezekiel) being situate in an Iland seven hundred paces from the shoare, to which Alexander in his siege vniited it; whom it held out eight moneths (as it had done Nabuchodonosor thirteene yeeres, which long siege is mentioned in Ezek. 26.7) in nothing more famous, then for helping Salomon vnder Hiram their King, * to build the Temple, a hundre d fiftie yeeres before the building of Carthage. This Hiram (* Iosephus reports it out of Dims a Phenician Historiographer) enlarged the Citie, and compassed within the same the Temple of Iupiter Olympius, and (as he addeth out of Menander Ephefius) therein placed a golden Pillar : he pulled downe the old Temples and built new, and dedicated the Temples of Hercules and Astarte. Ishobalus, a Starte priest, slew Phobes the King, and vsurped the Crowne. He was great Grandfather to Premalion the brother of Dido, Founder of Carthage.

The Phenicians, famous for Merchandize and Marinership, sailed from the red Sea round about Africke, and returning by Herenus pillars, arrived againe in Aegypt the third yeare after, reporting (that which Herodotus ^b doubted of, and to vs makes the Storie more credible) that they failed to the South-ward of the Sunne: They were sent by Pharaoh Neco. Cadmus a Phenician was the first Author of Letters also to the Greekes. At Tyrus was the fishing for purple; not farre off was Arad, a populous Towne, seated on a rocke in the sea, like Venice.

Alongst the shore is Protemais, neere which runneth the River Belus, and nigh to it the sepulchre of Memnon, hauing hard by it, the space of an hundred cubites, * yielding a glassie sand; and how great a quantitie soeuer is by ships carried thence, is supplied by the Winds, which minister new sands to be by the nature of the place changed into glass. That would seeme strange, if this were not yet stranger, that this new glass, if it bee cast vpon the brinks of this place, recieueh the former nature off sand againe.

Belus and Hercules Tyrius, and the Sunne, called of them Heliogabalus, were Phœnician Deities. When Alexander the great employed the greatest of his force and cunning to winne Tyrus, and to pluck it out of the armes of Neptune, a flatter friend unto her then ever Hercules, or Heliogabalus had beene; one of the Tyrians dreamed, that Apollo (so the Greekes call Heliogabalus) meant to forsake the Citie, who was therefore presented with a golden chaine, wherewith hee wastied to the Image of Hercules (whom superstition honoured as their most assured Patrone) from which golden thraldome Alexander freed him in the conquest of the Citie. Glorious Alexander, shall I admire thy greatnesse, to become a Patron and Freer of the gods? or rather the blindness and vanitie of Superstition, which acknowledged such Patrones of freedome, whom friends can binde, or enemies free; so making somewhat more colourable Alexanders ambition of Deity, to whom his Fortunes had made former Deities indebted for libertie. ^d Dryinus is of opinion that diuers of these Phœnician Idols were deriued from names vsed in the Scriptures, so interpreting the words in 1. Macc. 3. 48. Taanis of the Phœnicians, and the Egyptian Thoth from Thobis, and Baan from Bobus, Bel from Baal, as Bosjanan; also Ashtaré, Asithoré, from the flore of sacrifices offered to her. ^e Eusebius relateth other Phœnician abominations, both bloudie and beastly: the one in yearly sacrifice of the dearest pledges of Nature to Saturne: the other in that Temple of Venus, built in the most secret retreat of Libanus, where Sodomé (burned with fire from above, and drowned in dead sea) seemed to reuue: such was their practice of impure lusts, intemperately vsing the Natural lxxe, and vnaturally abusing their owne: worse in this then the Sodomites, that these intended fenulencie; they pretended Religion. Constantine raised these suburbs of Hell, and destroyed both the cultomes, statues, and temple in selfe. ⁱ Augustine saith, That the Phœnicians prostituted their daughters to Venus, before they married them. Of Melanchor, Vser, and other their gods (sometimes men) I forbear to speake. Alexander & ab Alexandro, affirmeth, That the priest of the Sunne in Phœnicia, was attired with a long sleeved garment, hanging downe to the fete, and a golden Crowne.

Saturn. lib. 1. c. 11.

Wee may adde to these Phœnician superstitions, their mystical interpretation by h Macrobius. Hee expoundeth Venus and Adonis, to signifie the Earth and the Sunne. The wild Boare which wounded Adonis, is the Winter, which for the absence of her Louer maketh the Earth to put on her mourning weedes (at whose approach shee alter putteth on her new apparell, saith ⁱ our English Arcadian Oracle;) This was shadowed in a certaine Image in Mount Libanus, pourtrayed in mourning habite. And to this sence hee applyeth the Egyptian rites of Osiris and Isis, and of Orus, which is Apollo or the Sunne, and likewise the Pirygian mysteries of Atinis, and the mother of the gods. Hee saith that they abstained from Swines fleth.

The Philistims and all that Sea-coast, by ^k Strabo and Plinie, and Dionysius (as is said) are reckoned to the Phœnician. Their originall is attributed to Misram, whose posteritie the ^l Castubim and Caphorim chased the Avims, which formerly had inhabited Palestina, and by dint of sword purchased their Countrey. They had fivie principall Cities, Afcalon, Accaron, Azotus, Gath, Gaza. Of their sheepish Astarte yee heard euen now, and of their Legend of Dagon. Their Superstitions the Scripture often ^m mentioneth. What this Dagon was (saith ⁿ Martyr) is not well knowne. But by the derivation of his name (which signifieth a fish) it seemeth hee was a Sea-god. For such Sea-deities had the Greeces and Latines, as Neptune, Leucothea, Triton: about his belly hee was of humane shape, beneath like a fish. Such is Idolatrie, diuine it will not bee, it cannot content it selfe with humane, but purreth monstrous; in the vglie and deformed Image, exhibiting the character of the true Author of this falsehood. When Cicero ^o saith, the Syrians worshipped a fish; it may be construed of this Dagon. Happily (saith ^p Martyr) they intended Neptune, or I know not what Deuill. ^q Tremellius thinketh Triton. That which in the tenth Chapter is spoken of that Monster Oannes fitly agrees to this Dagon: yea and all the legend of Atergatis and Derecto: for wee need not repeat how little constant they arein the fexes of their ^r gods, which they made male, female, or Hermaphrodites at pleasure. This may wee see and say, when men are giuen ouer to themselves, when they become beasts, monsters, deuils: yea worse then such, for while they worship such, they professe themselves (as Clients and Votaries) to be worse and baser then their Deities. Dionysius derieth not this Dagon of Dag a fish; but of Dagon, which signifieth Wheat, whercof Ensebius saith, Dagon inuento frumento & aratro vocatus est, ἡ δὲ ἀρχὴ αὐτοῦ; & Philo Biblus, Dagon, ἡ δὲ αὐτοῦ ἀρχὴ: that is, is called Wheat or Bread-corne. But Scaliger ^s blameth Philo for that interpretation, and agreeeth to that fish deitie: for Dagon (saith hee) is one, and Dagan another. He addeeth that they worshipped gods in the likenesse of stones, which they called Betul or Baitul, whence came the fable of the stone giuen to Saturne in stead of his children, to be deuoured. This (as wee haue said) seemeth borrowed from Jacobi anointing the stone at Bethel. Saturne had many names, Il, Israhel, Melchom. The Tyrians worshipped his starre; Amos 5. 26. not the planet Saturne, but Lucifer. They had their purifications in the midst of their gardens to Adad, of which is spoken before.

When the Philistims had placed the captiued Arke in Dagon's Temple, hee fell on his face before the Arke: But they placing him againe in his roome, with a second fall, his head and hands were cut off upon the threshold: The stumpe (or as Tremellius and Psalmus read it) Dagon, or that part of him which resembled a fish, remained. And, therefore the Priests of DAGON, and all that come into DAGON's house, tread not on the threshold of DAGON. Derecto or Dagon's Image Lucian ^t saith hee saw in Phœnicia, not vnlike to that which is reported of the Mermayde, the vpper halfe like a woman, the other like a fish: (therefore of Plinie called ^u Portiofca;) in reuerence of whom the Phœnicians were said to abstaine from fish. felues did eate; and it is not to be doubted but the metall-mawes of those Otriges could also digest the other.

Diodorus Siculus ¹ telleth, That hard by alake full of fish, neere vnto Ascalon was a Temple dedicated to this Fish-woman: her Storie followeth, That shee yeelding to the lust of a young man, had by that copulation Semiramis, whom (now too late repenting of her follie) shee exposed on the rockes, where shee was nourished by Birds: of which Birds (called in their language Semiramis) shee receiued that name. The Shepheards after espying this hospitality of the Birds, found the childe, and presented her to Simma the Kings Shepheard, who brought her vp as his owne daughter. The mother (not able to swallow her shame and griefe) cast her selfe into the lake to bee swallowed of the water, but there by a new Metamorphosis, was turned into a Fish, and hallowed for a goddess; and (for company) the fishes of that lake, and the Birds of that Rocke were canonized also in this deifying deuotion.

In Ascalon was a Temple of Apollo: and Herod Father of Antipater, a Grandfather to Herod the Great, hence called Ascalonita, was setuato to Apollo's Priest, At Ascalon was worshipped Beelzebub, that is, the Lord of Flies, * either of contempt of his idolatric, so called; or rather of the multitude of Flies, which attended the multitude of his sacrifices, where from the sacrifices of the Temple at Ierusalem, as some say, were wholly free: or for that hee was their Larder-god (as the Romane Hercules) to drue away flies: or for that a forme of a Flie, in which he was worshipped, as Naxianzene against Julian reporteth. He was called Swinthus, and as some say, Myiodes, and Myiagnus, howlouer one of these names cometh from Mice, and the other from Flies: such moule-eaten, flie-blowne diuinity did they professe. Nec Muscam quarent deum Ascalon, saith Naxianzene, of this Baal or Beelzebub. The Arcadians ^b sacrificed and prayed to Myiagnus, and by that meanes were freed from danger by Flies. Plinie * reporteth, that at the Olympian games, they sacrificed a Bull to Myiodes; which done, clouds of Flies departed out of that temitone. And in another place ^a he sheweth that the Cyrenians sacrificed to the god Achor (haply the god Ascalon here mentioned) when the multitude of Flies caused a pettilence, all which Flies thereupon presently dyed. The Iewes ^c in detestation of this Idoll tearmed him Beelzebub, that is, dung-hill, or dung-Iupiter. Yea Scaliger saith, ^d the name Beelzebub was in disgrace also, and that the Tyrians and Sydonians did not so call him; Baal or Belus, being a common surname to their gods, which they distinguished with some addition, as Iupiter was named Beelamen Lord of Heauen: but the Hebrewes (and not the Phœnicians) in contempt called him Beelzebub or fly-Lord. This was Iupiter Olympius. So Iano was intituled Iegria or Heauenly. Shee was painted at Carthage sitting on a Lyon with a Thunderbolt in her right hand, in her left a Scepter. But for Beelzebub, he was there Esculapins or Physicke-god, as appeareth by Athanasius ^e who sent to consult with him in his sicknesse. And perhaps for this cause the blaspheming Pharisees rather applied the name of this then any other Idoll to our blessed Saviour, ^f whom they saw indeed to performe miraculous cures, which superstition had conceiued of Baalzebub: and if any thing were done by that Idoll, it could by no other cause bee effected but by the Deuill, as tending (like the popish miracles) to the confirmation of Idolatry.

What the deuill had at Beelzebubs Shrine to this end performed, blinded with rage and malice, they imputed to the miracles of Christ, which, in regard of the Efficient, were more excellent then could be Satans impostures, as countermaunding him and all his proiects: for the matter, were meereley supernaturall; in the Forme were acted by his will, signified by his naked word: and for the end (which is ¹ the onely touch-stone for vs to trie all miracles) were to seale no other truth then was contained (for substance) in the Law and the Prophets, which hee came not to destroy, but to fulfill. If an Angell from heauen, yea with heauenly miracles, (if it were possible) should preach vnto vs otherwise, Paul biddeth vs to hold him accursed: and curbed be that deuill of Hell, that vnder colour of miracles (one of Antichrists enignes) ² hath taught the World to worship the ¹ Liptian, ^m Lauretan, and I know not what other Ladies: not that Virgin, on Earth holy, in Heauen glorious; but their Idol-conceits, and idol-blockes of her. Our Lord hath taught vs plainly in Matthew, to ferue God only, without sophisticall distinctions.

As for the Heathenish and Popish, and all those other packets of miracles, which were receiue by the Iesuits annuall relations from the East and West Indies; I esteeme them with Doctior Hall (a hall of Elegance) That they are either falsely reported, or falsely done, or falsely miraculous, or falsely ascribed to Heauen. But I know not how (pardon it Reader) I am transported to Hale, Zichen, and Loretto, from our Phœnician ports. The name of Beelzebub had bene occasion of this parentthesis. But the power of Beelzebub (I feare) hath induced Bel-larmine ⁿ to fall downe, and thus to worship him, for his purple aduancement. For amongst the Notes of the Church, he hath reckoned for one, this of miracles, minus ipse miraculorum: a greater greater miracle hee, that now will not beleue without miracles that Gospel, which at first was thereby sufficiently proued. We read that the o Iemes seek for signes, and are therefore called, p an euill and adulterous generation; and not onely falsē Christs and falsē prophets, and Antichrist himselfe, but the heathens had their Legends of miracles: as the whole course of our Historie will shew. Gee now and reckon a Catalogue of miracles through all Ages, euen to the time of blessed Ignatius and his Societie: and aske of vs miracles for prooue of our doctrine. Our doctrine hath alreadie by the Apostles and Prophets (Pen. men of holy Scriptures) beene proued that way; and we leaue to you the stile of Mirabiliſij Miracle-monsters, which Augustine for like bragges of things miraculouſly wrought by them, giueth the Donatists. With vs, Miracles muſt be proued by the Truth and the Church, and not they by miracles. But let vs come backe to Phœnicia.

The Phœnicians are accounted first Authors of Arithmetick and Astronomie; as also of the Art of Navigation (Prima ratem ventis credere doctā Tyrus, saith Tibullus) and obserued the North-ſtarre to that Sea-skill. The Sydonians are reputed first authors of Weights and Measures, q Herodotus affirmeth, that the Phœnicians, which came with Cadmus into Greece, taught the Græcians both other Sciences, and also Letters: which before that time they knew not. These letters after changed their sound and forme, being by the Ionicks principally learned, who called them Phœnician, and called their Skins or Parchments biblos (haply of Biblos in Phœnicia). Hec saw the Cadmean letters engrauen in a Temple at Thebes, much like the Ionike, then the onely Greeke letters, out of certaine old inscriptions, much resembling the present Latine Letters; and the auncienter Phœnician (I may say with him, the auncientest) vsed by the Canaanites and Hebrewes of old, and by the Samaritanes at this day: For those which the Iewes now vse, he affirmeth to be new, corrupted from the Syrian, and these from the Samaritan. His learned discourse thereof were worthy the reading, but here would be too prolix.

Heurnius (I know not by what authoritie) saith, that the Phœnicians before the Israelites departed out of Egypt, vsed Hieroglyphicall letters, which hee thinketh they learned of Abraham, the same with Seth and Henoch had vsed before. Moses (if yee beleue it) receiued the first Alphabetary letters in the table of the Decalogue; and from the Hebrewes the Phœnicians. Out of an old booke he citeth these verses which I thought not very worthy the transcribing, concerning the first Authours in inuentors of letter.

Quas Latini scripturam edidit Nicofrata:
Abraham Syriæ & idem reperit Chaldaicæ:
Iſis arte non minus protulit Ægyptiæ:
Gulſila pr. mpsu Getarum quas videmus vltimas.

He addeth also that the ancient learning which the Phœnicians had received from the Hebrewes and Chaldees, passed into Europe by Cadmus who founded Thebes, and into Africa by Eliffa (after her selfe inflicted death called Dido, i. Vrugo, a woman of resolution & courage) who fleeing Pigmalion, first feyzed on the Iland Cothone, and nine yeeres after tooke Tharfus, which the posteritie of Gomer had there built, which she called Karthada, that is, halfe citie, because the one halfe thereof were Phœnicians: to which she agreeth the testimony of Salustianus, that Carthage had in it Schooles of liberal Arts and Philosophie. Hec citeth Aristoteles testimony of Hog a Phœnician Philosopher, whom hee thinketh to bee that King of Bashan which Moses conquered. Dyſius Cretensis (if his testimony be authenticall) testifieth that the Græcian Gallians which besieged Troy, chose Agamemnon for their Generall, writing his name in Punike Letters, and this storie was also written in Punike letters, as the Interpreter affirmeth.

But how the posteritie of Letter-inuentors were by letters circumvented, it will not bee an vnwelcome stratageme to our Reader. When the Christian forces in the time of Ludouicus Crassus besieged Tyrus by sea and land, a Doue was seene to come flying, and deemed by expert men which had seene experience of the like, to eary letters to the besieged: whereupon a terrible shout was raised through the armie, which rent the aire with such violence, or else so amazed the feely Doue, that downe shee fell; They tooke her letter from her, wherein was contained that the Tyrians should be of good courage, and shortly reliefe should be sent. This tooke away and fastned another of contrarie tenure to this swift carrier, which presently conueyed the same to her home at Tyrus, and with her counterfait newes caused the Tyrians to yeeld. Diomys Alexandrinus called Tyrus Συρσολα for the Antiquitie. The Greekes, because they could not pronounce the letter Tsadi, called it Tyrus, for Sur, or Tsur, as it is there called.

Of the Phœnician Kings here might be inserted a large Historie; but I feare tediousnesse. Of Palestina, and the first inhabitants thereof, the Sodomites, Idumeans, Moabites, Ammonites, and Canaanites, with others.

30 Palestina is stretched by some (as you may reade) euen to Egypt, all alongst that Sea-coast, and in that respect partly, and partly becaule they obserued some reuerence in Religion, I haue adioyned the Philistims to the Phœnicians: howbeit, others doe confine Phœnicia betwixt the Riuer Valania and Mount Carmel. out Phœnicia, bounded as aforesaid, to make a part of Syria by it selfe. Of this Region I purpose to make larger discourse in the next Chapter; here intending to rake out of their dust the ancient Nations which inhabited this Land, before the Israelites were Lords thereof. The Sodomites sometimes inhabited a pleasant and fertile valley, watered by Jordan, which Moses compareth b to the garden of the Lord, and the Land of e Egypt, for pleasure and plenty. To the Sodomites I reckon also those other Cities partakers of the same both fertilitye and vengeance, Gomorrha, Adma, Zeboim, and little Zoar, saved at the request of Lot. Their Kings and their Warres are mentioned, Gen. 14. Their wickednesse in many places of Scripture; which Ezechiel c reduceth to these foure heads, Pride, Gluttonie, Idleness, and Crueltye or hard-heartednesse. Their Iudgement both Moses and others, and the place it selfe doe record. Their Religion was an irreligion, and prophane contempt of God and man. Europe (I would I could not say England) can now yeeld the like: sauing that in our subtiltye, and more warie age, Policie, hauing eaten vp Religion, hath with the blood thereof dyed her cheekes, and would seeme more shamelackt then those former Sodomites. Thus did d Esay speake to the Princes of Sodome (in his time) and the people of Gomorrha, in respect of that their wickednesse, which suruiued them, and hath fructified vnto vs, among whom yet the Lord of Hosts (as with them) hath reserved a small remnant from this worse plague then Sodom brimstone, a Reprobate sense. The difference betwixt ours and theirs, is that they were more open, ours more close, both in like height, but not in like weight of wickednesse; our darkenesse excelling theirs both in the sinne, and in the punishment, in as much as a greater light hath shined, which we with-hold in unrighteousnesse. And if you will have the maine character of difference betwixt these and those; the one are beastly Men, the other are Devils in the flesh.

g Iordan run-

without issue
to the Ocean,

They being dead, yet speake, and the place of their buriall, is a place to our memorie, being turned into a Sea (but a Dead Sea) which couereth their sinnes, that it may discouer ours; which, as astonished at their vnaturalnesse, hath forgotten her owne nature. It drowneth the Earth, which it should haue made (as whilome it did) fertile: it staies it selfe with wonder and indignation, and falling in a dead swowne, smothereth downe with horrore, not wakened, not mooued with the windes blustering; refusing the light of the Sunne, the lappe of the Ocean, the Commerce of strangers, or familiarity of her owne sand (as it happeneth in deepe passions, the colour goeth and commeth, changing three times every day: it gaspeth forth from her dying entrailes a stinking and noysome ayre, to the neere dwellers pestiferous, sometimes voyding (as it were excrements) both lighter ashes, and grosse Asphaltum: The neighbour fruits participate of this death, promising to the eye toothsome and wholesome fooode, performing only smoake and sties. And thus hath our God shewed himselfe a consuming fire, the Lord of anger, to whom vengeance belongeth; all Creatures mustering themselves in his sight, and saying, at his first call to execution, Loe, we are here. That which I haue said of these miracles, still liuing in this dead-Sea, is confirmed by testimonie of many ² Authors. Brocard telleth of those Trees with ashes growing vnder Engaddi, by this Sea; and a vapour, rising out of the Sea, which blaisteth the neighbour-fruits; and the ³ slimie pits on the brinkes of the Sea, which hee saw. Neither strangers nor her owne haue access there, where Fishes (the naturall inhabitants of the Waters) and Water-fowles (the most viall guests) haue no entertainment; and men, or other heauie bodies cannot sinke. Vespasian prooued this experiment, by casting in some bound, vnskillfull of swimming, whom the waters (infested with swallowing her owne) spewed vp againe. This is mentioned by Aristotle ⁴ also, who saith that the saltnesse thereof is the cause why neither man nor beast (though bound) can sinke in it, nor any fish liue therein; which yet in the salt-sea we see no other wound. The Philosophers could see no further then reason, nor all that neither: but Aristotle guideth vs beyond Philosophie to diuine vengeance, which thus subuerted Nature, when men became vnatural.

1 Vertomannus saith, That there are the ruines of three Cities on the tops of three Hills: and that the Earth is without water, and barren, and (a greater miracle) hath a kinde of bloody mixture, somewhat like red waxe, the depth of three or foure cubites. The ruines of the Cities are there seene still. Georgius Cedrenus in his Greeke History written about five hundred and fiftie yeeres since, writeth, that hee had seene this dead-Sea, and reckoned thereof these maruells: That it produceth no quicke Creature; that dead carcases sinke therein; a liuing man can scarcely diue vnder water; lamps burning swimme, but being put out, they sinke; there are fountaines of Bitumen; allume also and salt, but bitter and shining. Where any fruit is found, nothing is found but smoake. The water thereof is wholesome to such as vie it, but differing from other waters in contrarie accidents. Not long after his time Fulcherius Carnotensis (in the beginning of the Westerne kingdom in these parts) tellieth the vtolerable saltnesse of this sea from his owne taste: And that neere the same is a hill, which in diuers places thereof is like wise salt, shining therewith like ice, and hard as stone: and ghesteth that the saltnesse of this sea proceedeth partly from that cause, partly from the intercourse which vnder the earth it holdeth with the greater sea. Compassing this lake on the South side, we came to a Village which they say is Segor, a bounding with Dates, where the Inhabitants were blacke. And there (saith he) did I see apples on the tree, which when I opened, I found blacke and dustie within. The like is read Sap. 10. 7. Of whose wickednesse euen to this day, the waste Land that smoketh is a testimony, and plants beare fruits that neuer come to ripenesse, and a standing pillar of Salt is a monument of an embelishing soule. They left behind them to the World, a memoriall of their foolishnesse, &c. And Moses, Deut. 32. 32. their vine is of the vine of Sodome, and of the vine of Gomorrah, their grapes are grapes of gall, their clusters are bitter, &c. Which allegorie must haue his foundation in the naturall disposition of those places and fruits. Later Trauellers (as William Lithgow, and and I have heard the like of Master Eldred) which haue scene these parts, say, there are now no such fruits: which may come to passe by that alteration which so long space may cause, or else, because they visited not those parts which Fulcherius mentions. Lithgow adds, that the water of this dead Sea (contrarie to the former report) beares nothing on the top, no not the weight of a feather. The water is blackish, and at sometimes presents terrible shapes; perhaps of bituminous matter congealed. There grows neither bush nor tree neere to Sodome by many miles: and in his Journey thither they passed such sands, that their Mules could not beare them, and lighting they waded therein sometimes to the middle, and sometimes over head and eares, the Arabs also at the same time molesting them with arrows shot from places of more secure footing.

Iudumza lieth Southward from Iudæa: it had name of Edom, the fir-name of Esau, sonne of Isaac. The historie of this people, and the Horites, whom the children of Esau expelled, succeeding in their inheritance, is related by Moses. It was subdued by Dauid, according to the prophetic, The elders shall serue the younger. They rebelled vnder Ioram, the sonne of Iehosaphat; as Isaac had also prophesied. From that time they continued bitter enemies to the people of God,^a till Hircanus, the sonne of Simon compelled them to accept both the Iewish Dominion and Religion: after which they were reckoned amongst the Iewes. Of the Iudumzans, were the Amalekites,^o destroyed by Saul. They were South from Iuda. Eliphas the Themanite, it seemeth, was of Esau his generation, and of the right Religion. The Iudumzins, Moabites, and Ammonites, are by some placed in Arabia, of which I will not contend: I here mention them, as both borderers and subiects to the Israelites; of which we reade much in the Scripture; little else where that maketh to our purpose. South from Amalek was Kedar, a Countrey abounding with flockes of Sheepe and Goats, But I may not now dwell in the Tents of Kedar, till I come to the Israelites.

On the East-side of the Lake of Sodome, is that Region which the Moabites (so often in Scripture mentioned) sometimes inhabited: and before them the Emims, which were Giants, tall as the Anakims, Dent. 2. 10. The Moabites were the posteritie of Lot, by incest with his daughter. Moab had on the East the Mountaines of Horeb; on the West the salt Sea, and part of Iordan; Arnon on the South, and the North border stretched from Iabbok to the Mountaines of Pilga. That part of their Countrey, betwene Iabbok and Arnon, Sihon King of the Amorites had taken from them, and lost againe to the Israelites. Balaac their King fearing to lose the rest, sent for Balaac the Wizard to curse the Israelites. Balaac by Diuine power, was forced to blesse them. Yet the lastre of Balaac promises so dazeled his eyes, that hee taught Balaac to put a stumbling blocke before the Israelites, and by sending amongst them their women to draw them to carnall and spiritual whoredome; so to prouoke the wrath of *God*s ieaousie against them. But the zeale of Phineas stayed it; and Balaac, in his returne homeward to his Countrey of Mesopotamia, was slaine by the Israelites among the Madianites, partakers with the Moabites in Balaacs idolatrous proiect. These Madianites descended of Abraham,^e by Keturah, and dwelt in a part of Arabia, neere to the Moabites, on the East. Some of them dwelt neere to Mount Sinai, Exod. 2. 15, and in the Desert, on the East side of the Red Sea. Their mightie Armie was miraculously destroyed by the Sword of the Lord, and Gedeon. The Moabites were subiect to Israel by Dauid, and so continued to the Kings of Samaria, till, that State being rent, they freed themselves. It seemeth they worshipped the Sunne: as the names Kircherezeb, Beth-Baalmon, and Balaac high places doe shew, and wee haue observed before in the worship of Bel and Baal. Chemosh was another Idoll of theirs, to which Salomon built an high place. Pebor also, and Baal-pehor, and the rest, whose Rites are now rotten, and the memorie worne out. This hisname, it seemes, was borrowed of the hill Peor, mentioned by Moses, Where it is likely hee had his Altars and Temple. Origen saith, the name Baal-peor signifieth filthinesse, but what filthinesse hee knew not: Salomon larchi writeth, that they offered to him ordure, placing before his mouth the likeness of that place which Nature hath made for egestion. Saint Ierome thought him to bee the same with Priapus, and worshipped of the women of Obscenit magnitudinem. And so Isidore. Moses mentions Beth peor, whereby it appeares hee had a Temple. Dauid ascribeth to him worship the eating of the sacrifices of the dead: such it is like as the Heathen offered in memorie of the dead. But some ascribe these conceits of dung-offerings to Iewish malice: and agree not to that Priapeian coniecture.

In their Rebellion against Iehoram King of Israel, hee and Iehosaphat King of Iuda, with the King or Vice-roy of Iudumza, went to recouer them by force. The Moabite, in despair, offered a bloudie Sacrifice of his eldest sonne and heire; or, as Tremellius readeth it, The King of Edoms sonne: which caused the Israelites to returne. Moabites might not enter into the Congregation of God, vnto the tenth Generation, because a they met not the Israelites with the bread and water in their way, when they came out of Egypt, and for hiring Balaam against them. Arius Montanus saith, that the Moabites were circumcised in imitation of the Israelites, but worshipped not their God, but their owne Idols.

The b Ammonites (their brethren in the euill both of Lot their father, and their owne) inhabited Northward from Moab; on the East were the hills Acrabim; on the West the Amorite; the hills Luth, Bafan, &c. made it a valley. Their chiefe Citie was Rabbath, after called Philadelphia. These Ammonites had bene troublesome to the Israelites, in the times of e Iephth and of a Saul. And after, Dauid in iust reuenge, for violating the Law of 10 Nations, destroyed them. Moloch, or Melechom, was their Idoll, which is supposed e to be Saturne, whose bloudie butchery sacrifices are before spoken of. The word signifieth a King: as Mithra signifies a Lord: and it is like, that these Easterne Nations intended, (as the *Pi*cenians also in their Adad) that One and Great God, Rex deorum: although as to the King of visible creatures, these mysteries were applied to the Sunne likewise. Certaine it is that these Moloch-sacrifices passed hence into Afrique, as there shall bee observed. It was a hollow Image (saith f Lyra) of Copper, in forme of a man. In the hollow concavities was made a fire, with which the Idoll being heated, they put a child into his armes, and the Priests made such a noise with their Timbrels, that the cries of the child might not moue the parents to compassion, but they should rather thinke the childs soule recieued to 20 the god into rest and peace: others s adde, That this Moloch had seuen Roomes, Chambers, or Ambries therein; one for Meale; a second for Turtles; a third for Sheepe; the fourth received a Ramme; the fifth a Calfe; the sixth an Oxe: if a man would offer sonne or daughter, the seventh was readie for that cruelty. Some interpret Moloch and Remphan, Alil. 7. to bee the Sunne and Moone. The Talmudists h would perswade men that they did not burne their children in this Moloch-sacrifice; but only the father tooke his children and moued them to and fro throw the fire, none otherwise then at this time on Saint Iohn Baptists day, when the Sunne passeth thorow Cancer, children vnto leape thorow bone-fires. But both Scripture and Heathen Authors write otherwise. Moloch is also i cal- 30 led Baal.

There was a valley neere Hierusalem (sometime possessed by the sonne of k Hinnom) where the Heb: ewes built a notorious high place to Moloch: it was on the East and South part of the Citie. It was also called Topheth, or Tymbrrell, of that Tymbrrell-rite, which those Corribantes and Idoll Priests did vnto; or else for the spaciouesness of it. 1 Jeremie prophesieth, That it should be called the Valley of slaughter, because of the iudgements for the idolatrous high places in it. Vpon the pollution hercof, by slaughter and burials, it grew so execrable, that Hell inherited the same name, called Gehenna, of this place: first, of the lownesse, being a Valley: secondly, for the Fire, which here the children, there the wicked, sustaine: thirdly, because all the filth was cast out of the Citie thither, it seemed they held some resemblance. The Ammonites also were (as Montanus affirmeth) = cir- 40 cumcised.

Canaan was the sonne of Cham, Father of many Nations, as n Moses declareth, Sidon and Heth, Iebusi, Emori, Girgathas, Hvvi, Arki, Sini, Arnadi, Zemari, H-mathi; the most of which were expelled their Country, slaine or made tributary by the Israelites. Their border was from Sidon to Gaza West, and on the East side from Sodom to Lasha or Callyrhoe. o Arius Montanus is of opinion, that according to the number of the twelue Tribes of Israel, so were the people of Canaan: and therefore to those eleven before rehearsed, he addeeth their Father Canaan, who left his name to them all; and where he liued, retained a part to himselfe, betwene the Philistines and Amorites. Of those his sonnes, Sidon, the eldest, inhabited the Sea-coast: and Eastward from him Heth, vnto the hill Gilboa: of 50 him came the Hittites. Iebus went further, on the right-hand: Emor inhabited the midland Country Westward from the Iebusites. The Girgathite dwelt about the Hittite, next to Jordan, and the lake Chinereth (so called, because it resembeth the forme of a Harpe) after called Genezareth. The Hevite or Hivite inhabited betwene the Amorite and the Philistim. The Atkite possessed the rootes of Libanus. The Sinite dwelt beyond the Hittite, Eastward, neerer to Jordan. Arnadi enioyed the Country next to the Wilderness of Cades. Zemari obtained the Hills, called of him Semariim. The H-mathite possessed the Country nigh to the Fountains of Jordan. As For the most notable Mountaines and Cities, which each of these Families enioyed, they which will, may reade further in the same Author.

Of these and their ancient Religions and Policies wee find little or nothing but in the Scripture, where the Lord testifieth, that for their sinnes, the Lord spued them out. Some of 60 them them (as some thinke) fled into Africa: where Augustine p saith, that the Countrey people, inhabiting neere Hippon, called themselves in their Punike Language Chanari. p Exposit. cv. ad Rom. incizat.

Procopius, in the fourth booke of the Vandale warre, affirmeth, That all the Sea-coast, in those times, from Sidon to Ægypt, was called Phœnicia: and that when Ishua invaded them they left their Countrey, and fled into Ægypt, there multiplied, and pierced further into Africa; where they possessed all that Tract, vnto the Pillars of Hercules, speaking halfe Phœnician. They build the Citie Tinge or Tanger in Numidia, where were two Pillars of white stone, placed neere to a great Fountaine, in which, in the Phœnician tongue, was ingrauen: Wee are Canaanites, whom Iouhua the Thiefe chased away. Which if it were so, the name of Hercules might therefore bee ascribed to those Pillars, as accounted the chiefe Phœnician Idoll.

Philo 9 (or the Author of those fabulous Antiquities) sayth, That the Israelites found among the Amorites, seuen golden Images, called Nymphes, which, as Oracles, directed them in their affaires, and wrought wonders: the worke of Canaan, Phut, Selah, Nebroth, Elath, Desbat, of admirable workmanship, yeelding light in the night, by vertue of certaine stones, which could not by metall be broken, or pierced, or be consumed by fire, but must needs haue an Angell to burie them in the depth of the Sea, and there let them lie.

This people was not vtterly at once destroyed, but sometime, as in the dayes of Iabin and Sisera, conquered their Conquerors, and retayned some power and name of a People, p Psal. 135. de Ant. Bib.
20 till the times of Dauid, who destroyed the Iebulites, and dwelt in the Fort of Sion, calling it after his owne name, ^f The Citie of Dauid. And in the dayes of Salomon, Pharao, King of Ægypt, tooke and burnt Gezer, and slue the Canaanites that dwelt in the Citie, and gaue it for a present to his daughter, Salomons wife. And all the people that were left of the 1 Iudg. 4. 2. 2 Sam. 5. 7.

OF THE HEBREW NATION, AND RELIGION, FROM THE BEGINNING THEREOF TO OUR TIMES.

THE SECOND BOOKE.

CHAP. I.

The Preface of this Booke: and a Description of the Region of Palestina, since called Iudea, and now, Terra Sancta.

IN the former Booke we haue traced the foot-steps of Religion, following Her in Her wanderings from the Truth, and Her selfe through diuers Nations, till we came into this Land, sometime flowing with Milke and Honey; whose first inhabitants we last tooke view of. The Hebrewes were, by the Soueraign Lord of all, made heires of their labours, and possessed both their place and wealth: Houses and Cities which they builded not, Vineyards which they planted not; and which is more, these were a type vnto them of the true and heavenly Countrey, which not by their merits, but by the meere mercy of the Promiser, they should enjoy. These did God choole of all the Kindreds of the Earth, to make vnto himselfe ^a a Kingdome of Priests, ^a a holy Nation, and his chiefe treasure above all people, though all the Earth be his: He made them the Keepers of his Oracles, bestowing on them the Adoption, and the Glorie, and the Covenant, and the giuing of the Law, and the Service of God, and the Promises: of whom were the Fathers, and of whom concerning the flesh Christ came, who is God ouer all, blessed for ever, Amen. These things were not onely communicated, but appropriated to them: ^d He shewed his Word vnto IACOB, his Statutes and his Iudgements vnto ISRAEL: He dealt not so with any Nation, neither had the Heathen knowledge of his Lawes: hee was their prerogative, and they his peculiar: ^e In Seir was God knowne, his Name was great in Israel: In Salem was his Tabernacle, and his dwelling in Sion. And Christ himselfe ratified it, acknowledging himselfe ^f sent to the lost sheepe of the house of Israel, ^g a Minister of the Circumcision, and said to the Cananite woman which besought him for her daughter, It is not good to take the childrens bread, and to cast it to Dogs. Such, in spirituall reputation before God were all people, excluded (as vncleane Dogs) out of his heavenly Ierusalem, till this ^h partition wall was taken downe, and they which had bene farre off, were made neere by the blood of Christ, who abrogated through his flesh that hatred, and made of twaine (Iewes and Gentiles) one new man in himselfe. So that the Gentiles (the name of all the World, excepting this people) which had bene without Christ, and aliens from the Common-wealth of Israel, strangers from the Covenants of promise, had no hope, and were without God in the world; were now no more strangers and foreigners, but Citizens with the Saints, and of the household of God; built upon the foundation of the Prophets and Apostles, Iesus Christ himselfe being the chiefe corner stone. Let it not bee tedious to heare of this, which the Angels reioiced to learne, ⁱ a Myserie which from the beginning of the world had bene hid in God: and vnto Principalities and Powers in heavenly places, was made knowne by the Church. But the Word (whereby we haue fellowship in this myserie) came out of Sion, and the preaching began at Ierusalem. This (and not Rome) by the confession of Eusebius, a late Antiochian, was Emporium fides Christianae, & Ecclesie Mater: The Mart of Christian faith, and Mother of the Church. ^k Yea, it was necessarie that the Word of God should first be spoken vnto them, which they by incredulitie put from themselves, and gave place to the Gentiles. ^l The fall of them became the riches of the World, and the dimming of them the riches of the

Gentile, as a Glasse, wherein may be hold the bountifullnesse and severitie of GOD, and in both the deepe of the riches of the wisdom and knowledge of GOD, whose Judgements are unsearchable, and his wayes past finding out. I may fitly compare them to Gideons Fleece, ⁿ which received the dew, when all the Earth besides was drie, and after, it was drie upon the Fleece only, when the dew covered all the ground. Sometimes they alone received all those Dewes, Showers, Rivers, Seas of fauing Bountie, and all the world besides was a parched welldemise. Now, ^e he turneth the fruitfull Land into barrennesse, for the wickednesse of the Inhabitants; but that Wilderness be turneth into Pooles of water, and the drie Land into water-springs. Hee hath ^p but called them his people which were not his people, and her beloved which was not beloved; and where it was said, ^q Yee are not my people, there they are now called the children of the living GOD. Thus haie hee ^r shut up all under unbelieve, that he might haue mercy upon all, that his free election might appeare (not of works, lest any should boast themselves, but) of grace. Behold therefore, all Atheists, and wonder! The Iewes branded with iudgement, wander ouer the World, the contempt of Nations, the skum of People, the hissing, derision, and indignation of men, for refusing Him whom they expect, denying Him whom they challenge, hating Him whose Name is in life and death vnto them, the sweetest tune, and most melodious harmonie; still waying for, and glorying in that Messias, whom (unknowne) they crucified and slue: and still pursue with the deadliest hatred in all his followers: GOD they please not, and are contrary to all men. Yet such is GODs manifold wilddome in his deepest Judgements, that his enemies shall fight for him, euen against themselves: the Midianites ^t shall sheathe their swords, which they haue drawne out against GOD, in their owne bowels, and Christian Truth shall preuaile, and let our enemies themselves be iudges. Out of their premisses, which they maintayne, as earnestly as thou (O Atheist) securely deridest, which they will scale with that which thou makest thy heauen, thy GOD; we will and doe conclude, against thee and them, that, in which, with which, for which we will liue and die. Let the old Testament yeeld the Proposition in prophesie, and the new Testament assume in Historie, and euen be thou the Iudge, if that Reason, which thou hast as a man, and peruerst as a Dewill, will not by force of their Scriptures, which they preferre before their liues, necessarily in the conclusion, demonstrate the Christian Truth. Neither (I appeale vnto our common Reason) canst thou more wonder at vs for beleecing, things in thy seeming incredible, absurd, and impossible, then at them ^u (upon such grounds which vs they hold) not ^v beleecing.

For what beleue we, but, for the maine and chiefe points of our Faith, are as plainly in their Euangelicall Prophets, as in our Prophetical Euangelists? All the Historie of Christ, in a more diuine way, seemeth rather told then foretold, a Historie, not a Prophecie; as is easie by conference of both to shew, and thou, if thou beest not idle, or wilfully malicious, mayest finde. That then which thou seest come vpon them, a spirit of slumber, eyes that they should not see, and eares that they should not heare; which yet haue the light of the first Scriptures (had they not a welle ouer their hearts) the same see in thy selfe, that when greater light doth offer it selfe, willingly shuttest thine eyes, as though there could be no light, because thou liuest in, and louest thy darknesse. It is the same hand that giueth vp both thee and them, ^w because yee will not beleue the Truth to be saved, so strong delusions, that yee might beleue lies, and be damned. To me, and all Christians, let the Iewes be both reall and verball teachers of the Truth, which they let fall, and we take vp; the one, in their Oracles of sacred Writ; the other, in their exemplarie iudgement. And to them, Let (O thou Lord of all, heare and grant it) let all Christians be that which Moses prophesied, ^x a pronocation to emulation, not of enuie and hatred, which hitherto hath bene in these, amongst all the Christian enemies, the most implacable and despisefull, but of imitation, that as ^y their casting away hath bene the reconciling of the World, their receiving may be life from the dead, which Paul seemeth plainly to fore-signe.

Thus much being premised as a preparation to our Iewish Historie, which, as of more importance then any other, deserueth more ample view; let vs in the next place survey that Countrey which their Progenitors had, with those priuiledges, and their Posteritie (together with those priuiledges) haue lost.

This Countrey was first called the Land of Canaan, after that the Posteritie of Canaan, the sonne of Cham, had possessed it. ^a Moses and Israhel conquered it to the Posteritie of Iacob, of whom it was called the Land of Israel: after the diuision of the ten Tribes, from the house of David, by Ieroboam, in the time of Rehoboam the sonne of Salomon, the name of Israel was more particularly appropriated to those ten rebellious Tribes, and the other two were knowne by the name of the Kingdome of Iuda. Yet Israel remaind in a general sentie, the name of them all, especially in the new Testament. Paul of the Tribe of Benjamin, ^b calleth himselfe an Israélite: and all Israel, saith he in that Chapter, shall be saved.

other wonders are told by ancient and later Writers, too long heere to relate. Bellonius y will doe it for mee; if any list to reade his Observation. Hee is not of their mind, which thinke there is now no true Balsam in the World (these in Iudæa being perished) but thinke in Arabia-Felix it groweth naturally, from whence some shruvs he saw in ^z Cairo. But I should be too tedious if I should insit on this Argument; That inslance of such a world of people, in such a patch of the world, doth sufficiently declare the fertilitie, when as David ^a numbred them an eleven thousand Isralites, and of Juda, foure hundred seutentie thousand, or as in 2. Sam. 24. 9. five hundred thousand which drew Sword; and yet Beniamin and Leui were not reckoned in this number: and in the dayes of Ieroboam, ^b Abia King of Juda, brought into the field foure hundred thousand, and Ieroboam eight hundred thousand, and on this part were slaine in one battell five hundred thousand all choise men; which Historie cannot bee matched with the like in all Ages and places of the world: that a Countrey, an hundred and sixtie miles long, and not above sixtie in bredth, should nourish at once, or lose in a battell such multitudes, not to speake of impotent persons, women and children. But this multitude by ciuill warres and inuasions of enemies decreased, till first the reliques of Isral, and after, the remnant of Juda were by the Assyrians and Babyloni-ans led captiue, and the Land enioyed her Sabbaths.

For the Kingdome of Isral consisting of ten Tribes, (some reckon Simeon also to Juda, because of his portion mixed with Judæa, as Beniamin was adioyning thereto, to whom ²⁰ the Leuites ^c like wife, and Priests forsaking their Cities, and all the religious Isralites annexed themselves) forsooke ^d not the house of David onely, but the house of the Lord, and let them vp Calues (Egyptian superstitions) at Dan and Bethel, and made Priests for their Idolatrous purpose. This their rebellion and apostasie, God ^e plagued with ciuill dis-sension and foren hostilitie, vntill at last, the Assyrians ^f remoued them altogether, and re-peopled those parts with new Colonies. Such is the end of religion, which hath not God ^g for the beginning; but is grounded on humane policie, a sandie foundation, Juda could not take warning, but prouoking God ^h by idolatrous courses, at last was carried to Babel, and thence after seutentie yeeres, returned. The historie of these things, so fully related in Scripture, I should but marre in the telling.

³⁰ After this their returne, the Land was not as before, named after the portions of the se-uerall Tribes; but was called by a generall name, ⁱ Judæa, and the people Iewes, because the Tribe of Juda had before inhabited those parts, or at least the principall of them, dilating themselves further, as they encreased in number and power. But more especially Judæa was the name of one ^j third part of the Countrey, by that name distinguished from the other two, Samaria and Galicia, which two last are sometimes referred to Phœnicia.

Galilea was the most Northerly, confining on Libanus and Antilibanus toward the North, Phœnicia Westerly, Cælosyria on the East, and Samaria, with Arabia, inclosing her Southerly borders; Jordan parteth it in the middest. It was diuided into the higher and lower Galilee: the higher called also Galilee of the Gentiles, contayneth the Springs ⁴⁰ of Jordan, and those Cities which Salomon gaue to Hiram. The lower was also called Galilee of Tiberias, that Citie giuing name both to the Lake and Region: in which Nazareth was famous, and the hill Thabor.

Samaria is seated betwixt Galilee and Judæa, much lesse then either of them. Judæa is the most Southerly: betweene the Mediterranean and Dead Seas, Samaria and Idumæa. Plinie ^b maketh Galilea a part of it, and Peræa another part, separated from the rest by Jordan. The rest he diuideth into ten Toparchies; Ierico, Emaus, Lidda, Ioppe, Acra-batena, Gophnitica, Thamnitica, Betholene, Tephene, Ornæ, in which was Ierusalem farre the fairest of the Cities of the East, not of Judæa alone: Herodium, with a famous Towne of the same name. Hee addeth vnto these the Region of Decapolis, so called of the number of the Townes, and the Tetrarchies; Trachonitis, Panæas, Abila, Arca, Ampelossæa, ⁵⁰ Gabe. Those ten Townes of Decapolis, were Cæsarea Philippi, Alor, Cedes Neptalim, Sephet, Corozain, Capharnaum, Bethsaida, Itatapata, Tiberias, and Bethsai, otherwise called Scythopolis, and before Nysa, where Bacchus buried his Nurse. But these are parts of those former parts aboue mentioned; and so may we say of the rest, suitaying in diuers respects, diuers diuisions, best fitting to the present policies, and little to our purpose.

Those things which of old were famous in those places, are mentioned in the Scripture: Those things which since haue beene more remarkable; I purpose in the next part of this Worke, of Christian Religions, to handle, and especially the rarities of Ierusalem, sometimes ⁶⁰ the holy Citie, and Citie of the great King, now a Den of Theeues; an habitation of Mahumetans, or rather now not at all: for this which is now, is a new Citie, called by the Founder Ælia Capitolina ⁱ, built by Ælius Adrianus, who caused the plough to passe through, and salt

falt to be sowne in the old, as testifying her eternall desolation, and fulfilling Christs prophesie to the vtmost, not leauing a stone vpon a stone, it Titus had not fully accomplished the same before. Arias Montanus in his Nehemias affirmeth, that Ierusalem was founded on three k hills; to wit, Sion, on which the Iebusites built their Tower; and which in Dauids time was further builded on, and called the Citie of Dauid. The second hill was Mount Moriah, which Dauid bought of Arauna, to erect thereon the Temple. The third was the higher Acra, called the Suburbe. These were compassed with one wall without, and within diuided with three walls, by which the Citie of Dauid, and Moriah, and the higher Acra, were scuerd. In the circuit of the walls were nine gates. Hee that desireth further to reade, or rather to see the old Ierusalem, with her holy Fabriques, let him resort to Arias Montanus his Antiquitates Iudaice, where he both relateth, and in figures presenteth these things. It is supposed that Melchisedech built it about the yeere of the World, 2023, and called it Salem. Hierome in his 129. Epistle hath these words: Ipsa Metropolis tua prius Iebus, postea Salem, tertio Hierosolyma, & nunc Aelia; As if it were called Iebus, before it had the name of Salem, which is not so probable. Yea, Ierome himselfe in his 126. Epistle confutes Iosephus, and the vulgar opinion that Salem was Ierusalem: and sayth, that Salem was a Towne neere to Scythopolis which remaineth to his time, where also were still the ruines of Melchisedech Palace, the monument of her ancient and antiquesplendor. The like Saint Ambrose in his Commentarie on Hebr. 7. The Kings thereof were anciently called Melchizedek, or Adonizedek, that is, Kings or Lords of Iustice, or of Zedek, which some will haue the first name thereof, and Salem the second; this signifieth Peace. Righteousnesse I indeede and peace did here kisse each other, when the Lord our righteousnesse here preached peace, and was made our peace and righteousnesse, the true Melchizedek, whose Kingdome is righteousnesse, peace, and ioy in the holy Ghost. It was after called Ierusalem by addition of the word Iereth, as some thinke, to the former name Salem. For so it is said of Abraham, when God tried his obedience in here offering his sonne, hee called the place Iehoua Iereth, the Lord will provide, from which and Salem by composition ariseth this name, so fitting both the Citie and mysterie. Iosephus sayth, it was first called Solyma, and by Melchisedech named Hierosolyma, of a Temple by him there built, as if Iehoua had beene the language of Ierusalem: else where he attributeth it to Dauid, from an Hebrew deriuation, which and other like Etimologies haue caused Masius to pronounce him ignorant of the Hebrew, and educated onely in the Greeke, as Scaliger somewhere affirmeth of Philo his companion in Nation, learning, and in that Grecian eloquence where in they neuer had companions, neither of their owne, nor scarce of any other Nation. The Iebusites after possessed (and of them some deriue the name Ierusalem, quasi Iebusalem) till Dauid expelled them: who had before reigned in Hebron (called Cariatharbe, the Citie of foure men, say some, because of Adam, Abraham, Isaac and Iacob, their both dwelling and buriall there; yet Adam, others say, was buried in mount Saluarie, with other speculations curious, and vncertaine.) Hee translated the highest feat both of spirituall and temporall Regiment to Ierusalem, where he reigned after, three and thirtie yeeres, to whom succeeded Salomon, and the rest in order. It then contrayned in circuit fiftie furlongs, compassed with a great ditch threecore foot deepe, and two hundred and fiftie broad. Nabuchodonosor destroyed it, Nehemias re-edified it, three and thirtie furlongs in circuit: The Machabees, Herod, and others, added to her excellence, till Titus besieged and tooke it; in which siege are said to haue perished eleuen hundred thousand people; and being now a Sepulchre of dead carcasses, was made a spectacle of diuine vengeance, for murdering the Lord of Life. But those struggling spirits, and small remnants of life, which remaineth in this forlorne carcaske of the sometime Ierusalem, breathed a new rebellion, in the time of Adrian, and thereby breathed her last, as before is said. Bernard de Breidenbach sayth, he neuer saw any place which had a fairer prospect then Ierusalem, presenting to the eye Arabia, the Plaine of Iericho, and the dead Sea. But what doe we now in Aelia or the now Ierusalem: whose rarities the Iournals of many s testifie. Concerning the former, The Historie of this Citie the Scripture hath recorded; and where Diuine Historie endeth, Iosephus and Hegeippus (that I speake not of late Writers) haue largely supplied, especially concerning her latest fates, and as I may terme it, in her funerall Sermon. Strabo, Iustine, and others, haue written of this people, but not sincerely. But the fountaines are cleere enough to acquaint vs with their true originall, which commeth next to be considered.

CHAP. II.

Of the Hebrew Patriarchs, and their Religion before the Law: also of their Law and Politie.

§. I.

Of the Patriarchs, and Religion before the Law.

THe name of Hebrewes some deriue from Abraham, as if they were called Hebrai, quasi Abrahai. Arius Montanus * telleth vs that this name of Hebrewes was not appropriate to any familie, but common to all such, as hauing passed ouer the Riuer Euphrates, fixed their Tents and abode betwene that Riuer and the great Sea. Hee gathereth this from the Hebrew word b, which signifieth to passe ouer. Such an one first of all was Heber, seeking a life answerable to his name: whose example (sayth hee) Thare imitated: and after, Abram for his twofold transmigration from Chalda, and from Haran, deserued that name, and left it to his posteritie. But * Iosephus, * Augustine and others, more fitly (in my mind) of Heber the fourth from Shem, the sonne of Noah, with whose familie, as wee haue sayd, continued the ancient Language of the world, called of his name, Hebrew: his sonne Peleg or Phaleg, bearing the name of that diuision, which at the time of his birth the rest of the world in their Languages sustained. This Peleg was grand-father to Serug, whom some affirme to haue bene the first maker of Idols, which were afterwards worshipped by Nabor his sonne, and Thare his Nephew, the father of Abram, who preached openly that there was but * one God, Creator, and Governour of all things; and by this doctrine provoking the Chaldaens against him, warned by Oracle, departed towards Canaan.

Bellarmino * so eagerly swalloweth this opinion, that he taxeth Caldine of heresie, for attributing to Abraham the contrary; namely, that Abraham, before God * called him out of Ur, was an Idolater: an opinion so much more probable then the other, as hauing better authority. For Iosua * obiecteth to the Israelites their fore-fathers Idolatrie, and nameth Abraham amongst them. And Genebrard * doth so interpret it; & Masius * in his Commentaries on that place, both zealous and learned Papists: yea, Lindanus * i specifies the Idolatrie, and collecth him a worshipper of Vesta. Suidas sayeth, that Abraham by the obseruation of the Creatures in his studie of Astronomie, listeth vp his mind about the starres, and by the glorie, and order of them, learned the knowledge of God, neuer ceasing that diuine search, till God * appeared to him. Which opinion may reconcile both the former: that first he was, and after ceased to be, an Idolater, before God appeared in vision to him. He alledgeth Philo for his Author, that at foueteene yeeres Abraham reprobeth Thara for seducing men vnto Idolatrie (moued by his priuate lucre) with Images: and seeing the Heauen sometime cleare, sometime cloudie, he gathered, that that could not bee God *. The like hee concluded of the Sunne and Moone, by their Eclipses (for his father had taught him Astronomie.) At last, God * appeared, and bade him leaue his Countrey. Whereupon hee tooke his Fathers Images, who (as before is said) was an Image-maker, and partly broke, partly burnt them, and then departed. Suidas further thinketh him the first inuentor of Letters, of the Hebrew tongue, and of the interpretation of dreames; which I leaue to the Authors credit. But for the fault of Abraham before his calling, and other blemishes after, in him and the rest of the Patriarchs; what * doe they else, but in abounding of mans sinne, set out the superabounding grace of God *? and are profitable, as learned Morton * in his answer of this cauilt, hath out of one of their owne * obserued against them, what he had obserued out of Augustine, to these foure purposes: Faith, Instruction, Feare, and Hope: the Faith of the Historic which flattereth, or concealeth the faults of none: Instruction to vertue, by seeing others faults taxed; Feare, for what shall Shrubs doe, if Cedars fall? and Hope; that wee imitate their repentance, by seeing their pardon.

But to returne to our Historic. Many of the Ethnike histories mention him: Herodotus commendeth him for his iustice, and skill in Astronomie. Nic. Damascenus sayth, that hee reigned at Damafcus, and that in his time, his house continued in Damafcus, and was still called by his name: Hecateus wrote a booke of him, and Alexander Polyhistor telleth, that hee was borne in the tenth generation after the flood in Camarine (or Vrien) a Citie of Babylon. Iosephus * addeth, that when famine draue him into Egypt *, hee dispoised with the

the Priests, and most learned Egyptians, in questions of Diuinitie; and in their diuided Sects, hauing confuted one by another, he communicated to them the truth, both in this, and in Arithmetick and Astronomie, whereof before the Egyptians were ignorant. Abram (sayth Master Broughton in his Consent) was borne sixtie yeeres later then the common account; & appeareth by computation of Terahs age, who died at two hundred and five yeeres, and after his death, Abram went from Chatan into Canaan, the threescore and fiftenth yeere of his owne life; and therefore was borne in the hundred and thirtieth, and not in the seuentieth yeere of his father, in the three hundred fiftie and two yeere after the Flood; whereas the common opinion reckoneth the two hundred ninety and two, To Abram God had giuen commandement, saying: Goe from thy Countrey, and from thy Kindred, and from thy Fathers house into the Land which I shall shew thee, and I will make of thee a great Nation, &c.

His Historie is fully related by Moses, and his progenie also; whereof Ismael his Sonne by Agar, and other his sonnes which he had by Keturah his second wife, he sent to inhabit the East Countrey (Arabia) in his life time; but Isaac was made his Heire, both temporall and spirituall: to whom Jacob succeeded in the promised blessing: who with his sonnes and familie went downe into Egypt, where his posteritie multiplied exceedingly, and were called sometimes Ebrewes, & their ancient pedigree; sometime Israelites, of the name Israël, giuen to Jacob by the Angell, Gen. 32. 28. Their whole Historie so largely and plainly in holy Writ recorded, I feare to make Mine, by euill reciting: Those Fountaines are more open to all, then that any should neede ours, or others Brookes, mixed with some myrie earth (at least) in the passage: (and my intent is to bee largest in relation of those things which are not in the Scriptures; onely touching those things briefly for order sake.) Their Religion, meane while, was the best amongst the best, though stayned in some, as Rachel, which false her father Labans Idols; and Jacob was forced to reforme his Familie in this respect; and after in Egypt they were corrupted with the Egyptian superstition, as Ezechiel protests against them. The manner of Diuine worship was not so straitly limited, as afterwards to persons and places. By Reuelation and Tradition they received the religious worship, wherein they instructed their posteritie: vntill that in their extremest thrall-dome God sent Moses and Aaron to deliuer them: vnder whose conduct they passed through the Sea and Wildernesse to the brinkes of Jordan, receiuing in the way that Law, which as a Tutor or Schoole-master, was in that their nonage to traine them vp, vntill that full and ripe age, when God sent his Sonne made of a woman, made vnder the Law, that hee might redeeme them that were vnder the Law, that wee might recouie the adoption of Sonnes.

2. II.

Of the Law of Moses, the twelue Tribes, and of Proselytes.

F this Law, although Moses hath giuen vs an absolute relation in Scripture, whereof he was the first Pen-man (of that at least which remaineth vnto vs) yet if wee shall out of him, bring them into their order, and ranke them vnder their severall heads, as Sigonius and others haue done; it shall not be, I thinke, ouertedious to the Reader. The Law is diuided vsually, into the Morall, Ceremoniall, and Iudiciall, as parts of the same: the first deliuered on the Mount Sinai, by the dreadfull voice of the Almighty God, and by the finger of God, written after in Tables of stone, called Ten words, summarily abridged into two Commandements, by the Law-giuer himselfe; The first and great Commandement enioyning the loue of God; the second, of our NEIGHBORS; that God, who himselfe is Charitie, imposing nothing but the louely yoke of Love and Charitie vnto his seruants. This Law is eternall, written first in the hearts of our first Parents, which being defaced, it was written againe in the stonie Tables of the Law, where it was but a killing letter, till Grace and Truth by IESVS CHRIST indited and indented it in the fleshy Tables of the Gospell, as Christis new Commandement written in renewed hearts, and shall for euer be then grauen in those spirituall Tables, when wee that here are Naturall men, shall rise againe Spirituall men; and shall be the Law of that holy Citie, the new Ierusalem; this being then perfected, when Faith, and Hope, and this World shall bee finished. The other parts Ceremoniall and Iudiciall, were (for the particulars) proper vnto that Nation, the one respecting the manner of Diuine seruice, the other of ciuill Government: not giuen (as the other) immediatly to the Israelites by God himselfe, but communicated in the Mount to Moses, that hee might acquaint the people withall. death of Christ they died, and had their consumption with his consummation est, the Iudicials remaying ever since dead, the ceremonies deadly: only they were as it were for their more honourable funerall after that their death, detayned some time about ground: and those ceremonies which before Christ were necessarie, in the times of the Apostles, till the Iewish Church might be instructed, became indifferent, but since meerely unlawfull; neither can it now be sacrilegious to violate the sepulchres of the dead.

This Nation was diuided, as is said, alcadie, into Tribes, according to the number of Iacob's sonnes, amongst whom Leui had no portion (but the Lord was their portion, they serving at the Altar, and living of the Altar) but eight and fortie Cities with their suburbs assigned for their habitation, amongst other Tribes, that being so dispersed, they might disperse also, and preach the Law to the rest: and were reckoned 8 to that Tribe with which they dwelled: and whereas others might not marrie ^h, for feare of alienation of their inheritances, into another Tribe, this of Leui either had, or tooke libertie herein, as Iudg. 19. and 2. Chron. 22. Ioiada married the Kings sister; and thus Elizabeth, wife of Zacharie the Priest, might be Cousin to Marie the Mother of our Lord. The number of twelue remained yet entire, in reckoning of these Tribes, because Ioseph had a double portion, and his sonnes, Ephraim and Manasse, made two Tribes. Neither were they alone reckoned Israelites, that naturally descended from some one of these twelue sonnes of Israel, but such also of other Nations as embraced their Ceremonies and Religion; being for distinction sake called Proselytes. The Hebrew word which is interpreted a Proselyte, signifieth extrahed, or drawne forth, because they esteemed such, drawne forth of Hell: whom yet they made the children of Hell, more then themselves, in burthening their consciences, not only with those Ceremonies whereunto the Law and their Tradition tyed them, but with diuers others also. The name Proselite, as Drusius affirmeth, ^h is either taken largely for any stranger, or strictly for a conuert to their Religion. A Proselyte was made with observation of three things, Circumcision, Baptisme or Washing, and Oblation. The first was a signe of the Covenant, in which they were receiued; the second as a badge of their cleanness; (for all the Gentiles were vnclane) the third, for the atonement with God. This was while the Temple stood, and now is not in force: but whether Baptisme be still vsed, I know not. Hee ought to be circumcised in the presence of three. And if by nature ¹ or accident hee were before circumcised, and wanted that fore-skin, yet did they cut him there, and made him bleede notwithstanding: and when his wound was whole, then before three witnesses was hee baptised, in which ceremonie they couered the whole body with water. This manner of baptising they vsed also in reconciling and receiuing penitents, which had giuen scandall by notorious offences, in token of repentance, & newnesse of life, hauing first before this washing testified their humiliation by fasting and prayer. Of this washing they were so scrupulous, that ^m Clemens Alexandrinus testifieth, they were often washed in their beds. A woman Proselite was admitted by Baptisme onely, and the offering of two Turtles, or two Pigeons. Serarius sayth, Baptisme and Circumcision are still required: the like is written by P. Ricinus and ⁿ Munster, who adde, that when any desired to become a Proselyte, they propound to him the hardest things of the Law, with the promises of future happinesse, as of the Sabbath, not eating fat, &c. with some penances that hee should not after say, had I wist; and they would seeme to bee willing by these meanes, to driue them from their Religion, as being corrupted by such new commers; but Christ affirmeth otherwise.

§. III.

Of the Hebrew Politie and ciuill Government.

He gouernement of this people was, as ^o Betramus thinketh, (before Ietro's aduice had brought in those Gouernours of thousands, hundreds, fifties, and tens) vnder seuentie Elders, according to the number of persons, which descended with ^p Iacob into Egypt: and that the seuentie assigned after to Moses for assistants in the gouernement, were continued in their former office with further ratification and increase of gifts, and not newly instituted. Yea this number, hee sayth, gouerned in Egypt, howsoever Pharaoh's tyrannie did afterward much eclipse their authoritie, and were by ^q Moses and Aaron assembled together, Exod. 4. 29. So that the thirtene Tribes consisted of seuerall Families, according to the number of the chiefe heads thereof mentioned by ^q Moses, to which the thirtene Princes of the thirtene Tribes being annexed, made vp the number. His reasons let such as will, learne of himselfe.

^q Num. 3. & 26.

The gouernement in that time of Moses was mixt the Monarchy being in Moses, but qualified with an Aristocracy in the seuentie, and the other Officers before mentioned; a Democratic also appeared in the Assemblies so often mentioned. In lighter matters the Chiliarchs, Centurions, Quinquagenarij, and Decurions iudged: in more weighty, the seuentie. Thus it continued in Ioshua's time, till they had conquered and inhabited Cities. And then each Cite had their Senate or Councell of the Chiliarchs, and other Officers before named, proportionable to the greatnesse thereof. Iosephus numbeth seuen Elders, and two Leuites in euery City, which seemeth more to agree with his time then this former. Euen in Bethlehem the least of the thousands of Iuda, Boaz assembled ten Elders about the matter of Ruth. It seemeth that they had Leuites assisting in the iudgements and Tribunals, as men learned in the Law: and so we reade of the times of Dauid and Iehoshaphat. But I had rather send my Reader for these things to the Scriptures, and to the labors of Betrarius and Sigonius: from all which it is also apparrant, that the State was after Moses and Ioshua, managed by Iudges of diuers Tribes, not by Election nor inheritance succeeding in that Office, but by appointment of God, till they desired a king, whereas before God was their king, and by his Law partly, partly by Oracle ruled the State, being, as some thinke, an Aristocracy. There were also in the times of these Iudges, Princes of each Tribe, and the heads of Families: There was also a gouernement in each City by the Elders or Senate, exercised in the Gates thereof, as before is obserued. They had accordingly their Councils or Assemblies, either of the whole Nation, or of a whole Tribe, or of some one Cite.

The kingdom of Israel, after it was diuided from the house of Dauid, continued the like forme of gouernement, as is most probable. After the Captiuitie, it appeareth by the Histories of Hezra and Nehemiah, that the chiefe sway was vnder the Lieutenant or Deputie of the Persian king, according to commission from him. Other Officers happily received some alteration in regard of their numbers and estate, weaker and lesse then in those former times of prosperity, so that what Iosephus hath written of seuen Elders in each City, and those things which in the Talmud are written of their Politie, had now first (as some thinke) their beginning. Concerning this, because it is not so common, let me haue leave for a larger discourse out of the Talmudicall Sanhedrin, which thus recordeth, * Matters which concernee goods are determined by three criminall cases by a Councell of three and twenty. But such things as belong to a whole Tribe, a false Prophet, or the high Priest, by the great Councell at Ierusalem of seuentie and one. The high Priest iudgeth and is iudged: he sitteth at Funerals on a little Seate, all the multitude sitting on the ground. The king iudgeth not and is not iudged, giueth testimony against none, nor none against him. He maketh Warrres, but not without consent of the Sanhedrin: he may not haue aboute eighteene wiues: he ought to haue the booke of the Law written, and hanging about his necke. In ciuill causes, each of the Litigants chooseth a Iudge or Arbitrator, and both these thus chosen choose a third. Of this Office are vncapable, Dicers, Vsurers, and such as practise dishonest courses for gaine: They also which are of neere kindred to the parties, may neither be Iudges nor Witnesse. Their Companions or Aduersaries may giue testimony, but not iudgement. Women and Seruants might not be witnesse, Ios. Antiq. 4. 7. Nor a Thiefe, Robber, Vsurer, Publican, Child, or keeper of Doues. Pb. Ferdinand. This last Ritus doch not mention, but addeth a Gentile, Foole, Deafe, Blinde. The ancientest witnesse is first examined: and that from his owne sight, or the debtors mouth, or else it is nothing. Thirtie daies after sentence giuen, the Defendant may allege what hee can for himselfe. The odde number is the casting voice. In criminall causes decided by three and twenty, one odde voice absoluteth, but there must be aboute twelue of the three & twenty to condemne; and when sentence is giuen, nothing may be alleged further for accusation, which for absolution is lawfull. And he which hath spoken for the accused, may not after speake against him. Ciuill causes are examined in the day, and sentenced in the night; but criminall only by day: and sentence of condemnation may not be pronounced the same day, and therefore on holy-dayes Euenes examinations are forbidden. Profelytes and Baitards may determine ciuill causes: Priests and Leuites with other Israelites, are required in criminall. These Iudges sate in a semicircle, * hauing one Scribe or Registor on the right hand, & another on the left: In the Session-house were present besides, three orders of Students which sate on the ground according to their degree, out of which the number of the Senators were supplied when neede was, so that one of the first order being made Senator, another was chosen out of the second order into his place, and out of the third in the roome of the second, and out of the people into that third Order. The witnesse must testifie only from their own sight, and that exactly, what a seuentie yeete of the Iubilee, what yeere of that seuenth, what moneth, what day of the moneth, and weeke, and in what houre and place hee saw it. to saue or lose an Israelite, is asmuch as to preserue or destroy the frame of the World; if one witness be ignorant of any of those circumstances, or contradicteth another, his testimony is vaine. None of the Students which sit by may be suffered to accuse, if they can say any thing in defence of the partie they may. If they cannot finde sufficient to absolve him that day, the Senators or Iudges scanne that matter seriously, two or three together all night, vsing a spare diet. If twelve condemne, and the rest cleere him, they adde to the number of Iudges till they make vp twenty and one to make further search. When sentence is pronounced, the condemned person is carried away, and brought againe foure or five times, to see whether hee or any other can say any thing for his purgation. And if nothing bee alleaged sufficient to reuerse the sentence, he is led to execution, ^b the Cryer going before him and proclaiming the crime and sentence and accusers, that if any can then say any thing in his behalfe, he may speake. When he cometh within ten cubits of the place of execution, he is admonished to confesse his fault, and so hee shall haue part in the life to come: and if he know not the forme of confession, it is enough for him to say; Let death be vnto me the remission of all my finnes. Being within foure cubits, he is stripped naked all but his priuities: if it bee a woman, shee is led forth in her clothes. The stoning place was built twice the height of a man, from whence by one of the witnesses he was cast downe head-long, the ground beneath being set with flints; and if he died not with the fall, another of the witnesses smote him neere the heart with a flint, which if it did not finish his death, the whole multitude cast stones at him. They might not condemne a boue one in one day, to death. He which was stoned, if he were a man, was presently hanged on a Gibbet, and after taken downe and buried with other persons which had before suffered in like manner. When the flesh was there consumed, his bare bones might bee laid in his owne, or his fathers Sepulcher. After this, his friends and kinsmen went to the Iudges and witnesses, and saluting them, acknowledged the iustice of their fact. Besides this punishment of stoning, ^c they punished with the fire, sword, or strangling. The manner of burning was, to put the condemned person in dung vp to the arme-holes, and one executioner on one side, and another on the other, grased him with a linnen cloth about his neck, pulling the same till they forced him to gape, and then a bar or rod of burning metall was thrust downe into his body. The sword was vsed in beheading. Strangling was done with a coarse peece of linnen, pulled close about his neck, till he were dead. It would be too long to shewe what faults were appropriated to each of these kindes of execution. If a man had defered two of them, he was to be punished with the most seuer. In some cases of homicide, the guilty person was put in a little-cage prison, where he was forced alway to stand, and was fed only with Barly till his belly rotted, and his bowels fell out. Any one might presently slay him which had stolne any of the holy Vessels, or blasphemed the name Iehoua. The Priest which exercised his function, while he was polluted, was not brought to iudgement; but other Priests, chosen to that purpose, led him out of the holy place and knocked out his braines. From the Sanhedrin was no appeal: They were also called Mohakehim, that is, Scribes or Law-giues, because whatsoeuer they deliuered or writ was receiued for a Law.

Their Colledge, saith Galatinus ^d, (who from their sayling prooueth that the Messias is come) represented that Scepter, by the holy Ghost in Iacob promised to Iuda: and therefore not only vnder the Kings and Iudges did exercise iudgement, but also when there was no King or Iudge in Israel. Of their qualitie it is thus written. They appointed none e (saith R. Iohanan) but men of wisdom, stature, and of goodly presence, and of old age, and cunning in exorcismes, and vnderstanding the seuentie Tongues, that they might not need interpreters. Their Stature and comlineffe, Rabbi Selomoh saith, was required to acquire them reuerence; and skill in enchantment, to conuince such Wizards. There were required the whole number of seenty and one, in determining the going to Warre, in adding to a Citie, or the reuenues of the Temple, or in conuincing the ordinarie Iudges of the Tribes: To constitute one of this number, they vsed imposition of hands (R. Iudas saith) of Ioseph, a Wolfe, Lyon, Beare, Leopard, and Serpent, were to be slaine by the three and twenty e.

The great Colledge called Sanhedre gbedola, consisted of seenty and one, the lesse of three and twenty. Hereby Galatinus gathereth, that in the Councell that condemned Christ, there was the whole number of seenty and one, which is true, if Herod had not before disannulled that society. The greater Sanhedrin ordained the lesse; for those seenty ordained all the Sessions of Iudges, which in other Cities and Places ruled the people: and to this Court of the seenty in Ierusalem they were all subiect. f Three Courts of Iudges in Ierusalem,

the Starre-chamber with vs.) Other Courts or houses of Iudgement, they had diuers, of the three and twenty. One of them fate in the Gate of the Mountaine of the Temple : another in the Gate of the Court : others in euery Citie. And when there was a controuersie, it was first brought to that Citie or Towne, and so to the rest, if occasion required (in order) to that in the Gate of the Mount, after to that in the Court-gate, and last to the Gazith Consistory, in which they fate from Morning till Night. On Sabbaths and solemne dayes they fate on the Wall.

But when Herod obtained the Scepter, he slew Hercanus and his sonne Antigonus, which had bene King and Priest, and also all of the seede Royall, and burnt the Genealogies of their Kings : And further to establish his Throne in blood, hee killed the Scribes and Doctors of the Law, and caused all the Sanhedrin to be doneto death. Because the Rabbanan (they are the words of the Talmud) had said according to Deut. 17. From among thy brethren thou shalt set a King ouer thee : He slew the Rabbanan or Masters, reseruing only Baba, the sonne of Bota, whole eyes hee after put out. And therefore the Sanhedrin perished : for, as is said, five, or at least after R. Ismael, three were necessary to the ordination by the imposition of hands. But there were by Herods permission, other Iudges instituted to be vnder the King, like the former Colledge, but had no authority of sentence in waighy and criminall causes : and therefore they said to Pilate, It is not lawfull for vs to put any man to death, & as some thinke. But others maintaine the contrary. Betrasmus taketh a middle course, that the Iewes might examine and condemne, but then went to present the condemned party to the Roman Magistrate for execution : except in the cause of floeing, wherein they tooke more libertie, as in the Acts of the Apostles, by Stephen and Paulus example appeareth. After this false sentence pronounced against Christ, they were expelled from the Consistory Gazith, forty yeeres before the destruction of the Temple; and afterwards, by the commandement of the Romanes, were all slaine. They being expelled Gazith, held their Consistory at Hamith, another place in Ierusalem; but, saith R. Abami, with the place they lost their power in criminall Iudgements, which might not bee given but in Gazith. So do the Rabbines interpret the words, Deut. 17. 10. According to the words which they of that place (hee thee, thou shalt doe). They had inferior punishments with the whippe for smaller offenses : In which the Law had flinted them at forty stripes, and they abated one of that number for feare of exceeding : as R. Paul saith, Hee had five times receiued forty stripes saue one. The whippe was of Calues leather, as Drusius affirmeth. Betrasmus saith, that they had in each Citie seuen Iudges in money matters, whereof three were principall, two Leuites, and one of the rest, from whence the number is said to be but three. They had also ten Aediles, Taskers or Iudges of the Market, one of which was of the Priestly Stocke. They had in Ierusalem an vnder-Prouost, or R. Capitaine of the Temple. In other Cities of their dispersion, they had Synagogues and Magistrates, as at Alexandria, Antiochia, Sardis and other Cities, where they had obtained priuiledges and immunities.

That which is spoken of their threefold Consistory, consisting eyther of 3. or 23. or 71. Enastorius thus relateth, that that of 3. was appointed in such habitations, which had vnder the number of 120. House-holders, and that it behooued alwaies two of the three to agree in their sentence. The other of twenty three was in greater Townes or Cities, and dealt in greater matters : the former in money matters, this in criminall, and in the Gates of the City, and was called the lesse Synedrion. The greater was at Ierusalem, where the wisest was chosen to bee President of the Councell, as successour to Moses, Caput Curie (so they called him and Nassi) the wisest of the other 70. was adioyned as his Colleague, called Ab-beth-din, The Father of the Consistory. These two fate alone, somewhat separate from the rest which made a halfe circle, so that these two might see them all. The manifold mutations of their State by the Babylonians, Persians, Macedonians, Egyptians, Syrians, Romans, and ciuill wars amongst themselves, did both then change the face of Governement, so and haue made it now to vs obscure and vncertaine.

§. IIII.

Of the Iewish Excommunications.

NOW concerning the Iewish Excommunications, Drusius hath obserued, that the Iewes had three kinds and degrees of Excommunications. Niddui, Herem, Sanathia : the first signifieth a Remouing; the second, Anathema; the third, the same 60 which the Apostles calleth Maran-atha. by the first they are made anathematized (of which is an example, Gen. 4. 4.) excommunicated from the Ecclesiasticall Assemblies. which was thus Excommunicated was called Menudde, and the denouncers Menuddim. There were foure and twenty causes for the which it was inflicted, If any died therein without repentance, they iudged him worthy of stoning, and therefore stoned his coffin: whereof they e giue example in one Elazer the sonne of Henoch. They might enter the Temple when they were excommunicated; but that they might enter the Synagogue is vnlikely. Thus they write, ^a Salomon made two doores in the Temple; one for mourners and excommunicates, the other for the newly married: At this, if any entred, the Israelites which came on the Sabbaths, and sat betwixt those doores, said; He whose name dwellerh in this house, glad thee with children. If any entred at the other doore with his upper lippe covered, they knew that he was a mourner, and said; He which dwellerh in this house, reioyce and comfort thee. If his lippe were not covered, they knew that hee was Menudde, Excommunicate, and said; He which dwellerh in this house, put into thy heart to heare the words of thy fellowes, &c. When the Temple was destroyed, they decreed that the Bridegroomes and Mourners should enter the Synagogue, and the men which saw them reioyed with the one, and sate on the ground with the other. If they did not amend, they were excommunicated with a greater curse, or Anathema: And if they persisted obdinate, they did Samatize them. The word Anathema is sometimes taken generally, but heere for a particular kinde. Maran-atba signifieth, The Lord commeth; and so doth Sem-atba, For by Sem, and more emphatically, Hassem, they vied to signifie the name, meaning that Tetragrammaton, and ineffable name of God, now commonly pronounced Iehonab, It ma also be compounded of Sama, after the Chaldee forme; or of Sam and miba, which signifieth; There is death. Some Authors ascribe this to the institution of Henoch: which they gather out of Iude. 14.

CHAP. III.

30 Of the Religious places of the Israelites: their Tabernacle, Temples, Synagogues.

IN the discovery of their ancient Religion, it seemeth fittest to discourse first of Places; secondly, of Times; Thirdly, of Rites; Fourthly, of Persons consecrated to Religion. And first of the first. Neither were the first men, a nor first Hebrews very Religious in this point of dedicating Places to Religion; as appeareth in Histories both holy and Prophane: And if for some vition; made vnto them in some places, they did for a time hallow the same with Altars and Sacrifices: yet neither were they alway, or only thus effected. But Hee, Whose is the Earth, and all that therein is did by his Law appoint, as it were, a place of his residence amongst these, whom he had chosen for his owne people. And commanded them to erect a Tabernacle in the wilderness, sitting that their peregrination. Afterward Salomon built him an house in Ierusalem: which therefore is called the holy Citie, and the Citie of the great King.

The TABERNACLE (a moueable Temple that might be taken asunder, and ioyned together againe) was, by Gods commandement, erected in the wilderness, in the same manner, and of the same matter, which God had both commanded and shewed to Moses in the Mount; the matter and forme whereof, with all that thereunto appertained; the Arke; the Candlestick, the Altar, &c. In the booke of Exodus are liuely declared. It was after (as we reade in the booke of Ioshua) with great solemnitie carried miraculously thorow Jordan, by the Leuites deputed to that seruice: And, after their conquest of the Countrey, e placed in Shilo, a Citie of Ephraim. There did Ioshua diuide the Land to her new Conquerors; there were their solempne Assemblies for State and religion. In the time of Hele they removed the Arke from the Tabernacle into the Arme, which they had gathered against the Philistims, of whom the Arke was taken. The Tabernacle in the time of Saul, was carried to Nob; and, in the time of Dauid, to Gibeon, where Salomon offered a thousand burnt offerings. The Philistims forced by Diuine iudgements, sent backe the Arke, receiued by the Bethsamites, curious to their coit; It was after placed in Kiriath-Iarim, in the house of Aminadab, next of Obed Edom, and then by Dauid in the place, which hee had fitted for the same in Ierusalem: Whence it was removed into the Temple, which Salomon had built; where it was till the time of the departation: in which time it was (saith the Author of the second booke of the Maccabees) hidden by Ieremie the Prophet. But that Author is be-

Atuary, and fortified it with the Castle Antonia; but some account this Hegesippus a counterfeit.

- Chryssosome* more probably vnderstands those words of the Jewes, Forty and six yeeres was this Temple a building, of the Herodian Temple : and herein Scaliger, Hospius, and the great Cardinal Baronius follow him : accounting exclusively from the eighteenth yeere of Herods raigne, which Funccius reckoneth An. M. 3947. to the yeere 3993. in which Iohn baptized, and Christ vntered these words : in all which they coniecture that some what was still a doing about the new building thereof, although the principall part thereof, was performed and finished by Herod, in eight yeeres. This they gathered by Iosephus his owne Testimony, that the building continued till the time of Nero, and in another place, where he affirmeth that the East porch, which Luke calls Salomons Porch, was still remaining of the ancient building ; in the dayes of Nero. For thus hee saith in the last booke of his Antiquities, speaking of the times of Albinus, fourescore and three yeeres after Herod began this worke, as Scaliger reckoneth. Now the building of the Temple was finished. The people therefore seeing eighteene hundred worke-men, which had before been wont to lye by that building, idle, and vnwilling that the money should be laid vp, lest it might become a prey to the Romans : careful also to provide for the worke-men : perswaded the King to reedifie the East Porch, which closed vp the outside of the Temple, hanging ouer a deepe and narrow valley, borne vp by a wall of foure hundred cubits height, and the length of euery Row was twenty cubits, the thickness six; the worke of King Salomon which first built the Temple, But the King, to whom Claudius Cesar had committed the building of the Temple, seeing that it required much time, great expence, &c. refused. Thus it is apparant, that all the Temple was not demolished till the final destruction thereof vnder Titus. Neither doe the Jewes in the Talmud speake of any third Temple : Nor can the Prophecy of Haggess be fulfilled ; That the glory of the second Temple, should exceede the glory of the former ; if Christ (of whose coming, it is interpreted) had not by his presence, preaching, and miracles, not only supplied the defects (before mentioned) but made it surmount the other in effects of Maiesty and glory. And the zeale vnto this Testimony, not the meaneit which the Christian vertice vrgeth against the Jewish Incredulitie and Apostasie (which is necessarily demonstrated and euinced, whilest yet they continue their vaine hopes of a Messias, so many Ages after the desolation of that Temple whereof Aggee prophesied) hath caused me to vife so many words in this matter. But to satisfie the fancies of great men, their great workees are commonly made greater : For howlouer it was very great in it selfe, that Herod should haue, eight yeeres together, many worke-men at worke (which Iosephus numbeth for some part of the time ten thousand and a thousand Priests) yet sustaining, no doubt, some intermission after his time, either wholly, or in part, it could not be so great as to haue accomplished it wholly from the foundation, wherein Salomon spent seuen yeeres : and besides, what any of the naturall Israelities performed in this worke, hee employed an hundred three and fifty thousand and six hundred worke-men of the Strangers, or Forrainers found in the Country. And whereas the second Temple was but halfe the height of the former, perhaps it is true, that (according to Iosephus) he perfected it to that height of an hundred and twenty Cubits, whereof twenty cubits sank downe in the settling of the foundations. If any yet will rather thinke this Temple the worke of Herod, then Zorobabel, as a thing which Iosephus by his owne eyes might obserue ; Scaliger doth neuerthelesse false that prophecy of Aggee, by distinction of the Building, and of the Continuall Sacrifice : Saying, that if it had bene ten times reedified, yet the continuall Sacrifice continuing, causeth that there is no interruption, and that it should still be called but one Temple. It was builded by Herod of white stones, fise and twenty cubits long, eight thick, and twelue broad. He that would further reade the particulars, let him haue recourse to Iosephus, in his fifteenth booke of Antiquities. This Temple was burned by Titus, in the sack of the City, the same day that before it had bene fired by the Chaldeans. Adrian the Emperour did after destroy the Reliques thereof, that a stone was not left vpon a stone ; and there, in the same place, dedicated another Temple to Iupiter, that former being ouerwhelmed with earth. Julian gaue leaue to the Jewes to re-edifie the Temple, in despite of Christian Religion, and contributed frankly thereto ; but Ammianus Marcell. 2. a Heathen Writer, witnesseth ; That fire issued out of the Earth, and burned both worke and worke-men : when as an Earth-quake (which had before, saith Zozomen, killed a great many, in the very attempting of this Worke) could not deterre them from proceeding in their purpose : And Croffes, miraculously fallen on the garments of many, did both teach them to forsake their Iudaisme, and to become Christians.

Chryssosome mentioneth this, and saith, That vnder Adrian the Jewes sought to recover their liberty, and lost their Country. Vnder Constantine they attempted the like, who there-therefore cut off their eares, and branded their bodies for Rebels, as the elder of you (saith hee to his Auditors) doe know. And in our daies, about twenty yeeres since, Julian the Emperour was at great expences, appointed Officers, sent for worke-men from all places, thinking to frustrate Christs Prophecie concerning the Temple, and to bring the Iewes to Idolatry. But so soone as they had attempted this businesse, and bared the foundation, had drawne forth the Earth, and were now ready to beginne their building; a fire burst forth from the foundations, and burned many, which caused them to cease. And if you now goe to Ierusalem you may see the foundations naked: hereof we all are witnesses. Neither did this happen vnder Christian Emperours, lest any should impute it to the Christians, but vnder an Ethnick, when Christianitie was persecuted. Thus much in effect, Chrysostome, Gregorie Nazianzen ^b also testifieth the same, affirming that the Earth (as it were taking a vomit from the Diuine hand) spued out the stones, which yet till this day had continued therein, and dispersed them to the great damage of the neighbour-buildings.

Other holy places they had, which the Scripture mentioneth as high places, which were high hills, or other open and lofty places, shaded for the most part with Trees: The Prophets enuy against them, and they were commanded to be destroyed, together with the Groves: some yet were permitted, either by extraordinary command for a time, as to Obedon ^d and to Manass ^e; or because of the Tabernacle at Gibeon, or of the Arke at Ierusalem. The not reforming this toleration of high places is reckoned as an eclipse of Ierophani and Asas glory; which Ezekiab and Iesiah quite remoued and polluted. These high and open places it seemeth were consecrated, as fitting to the celestiall bodies; to which, and to Baal (who is interpreted the Sunne) they vied for the most part on them to Sacrifice. They had also their Houses and Temples for Baal, in Israel and Iuda; and Dan and Bethel were by Ieroboam dedicated to his Egyptian Idolatry: and Gilgal was a place of request in this kinde. Salomon also built Temples or houses for his Idolatrous wiues, And to reckon euery particular in this kind, were a worke endlesse; in the 2. Reg.. 17. & 23. and other places enough is of them recorded.

Two other Temples were erected of some reputation: one by Sanballat at Samaria, on Mount Garizin, by licence obtained of Alexander the Great, whose part he followed, rebelling against Darius his true Lord. The occasion was, because Manasses, brother of Iaddi the High Priest had married, contrary to Gods law, Nicasa ^f daughter of Sanballat, and was forced either to leaue his Priests house or Heathenish bed. Whereupon Sanballat, hauing obtained licence to build that Temple aforesaid, constituted him the High Priest thereof, many other Priests for the like fault, resorting thither to him. But of these Samaritanes wee shall haue fitter occasion to say more, when wee come to handle their Sects.

Ptolemaeus Philometor ^g granted licence to Onias (the sonne of the high-Priest Onias, whom Antiochus had slaine, who for the same cause had here shrowded himselfe) to build a Temple, induced herunto by a false interpretation of the Prophecy of Esay at Leontopolis, in the shire, as I may terme it, or Nemus of Heliopolis: hauing Priests and Leuites ministering therein, and other things answering in some sort to that of Ierusalem. When the Temple of Ierusalem was burnt by Titus, this Temple was shut vp also by Lupus the Deputie, three hundred and thirty yeeres after it had bene builded: and after by his successor Pausanias viceroy despoyled both of the wealth and the Religion. The Citie was called of Onias, Onon. ^h It had a Tower and an Altar like that of Ierusalem, but in steade of a Candlestick, a Lampe of gold hanging on a chaine of gold; enriched by the Kings with large reuenues.

Synagogues ⁱ the Iewes had many, both in Ierusalem, where are said to haue bene foure hundred and fourescore, and all Cities of Iudea, and among the Gentiles where the Iewes were dispersed. When they first began to be builded, is vncertaine. Cornelius Berramus ^k thinketh; That the eight and forty Cities of the Leuites had their fit places for Assemblies, whence Synagogues had beginning. In these Synagogues the Archisynagogi were in place of Leuites and Prophets, sometimes diuers in the same Synagogue, as Sophanes and Crispus in that of Corinth, which on festiual daies did performe the publique prayers, and read the Law and the Prophets, expounding the same themselves, or authorising others herunto; so that they which first were called Prophets, were afterward Scribes and Lawyers, and in the Synagogues Archisynagogi. They had authority also, as it seemeth, of Iurisdiction in punishing offenders. The Cities of the Leuites were as Nurseries of learning, and Vniuersities for the studies of Diuinitie. And in the reformation of Religion by Elias and Elisha, the Schooles of the Prophets were as Colledges, and the sonnes of the Prophets students of Diuinitie, which had a Rector ouer them, as may seeme by 2. King. 6. and other places: where also their gesture in hearing their Lectures appeareth to be sitting; and therefore (saith ^d Hospinian) the Italian and Bohemian Clockes doe yet obscur. The day was not divided of the first Hebrewes (before the Babylonian captivity) into houres, but was distinguished by Vigilie, or * Watches, of which they had foure; the first began at evening, the second at mid-night, the third in the morning, the fourth at noone. Neither is there any Hebrew word signifying an houre, although some interpret the degrees of the Dyall of Abaz, & to be houres: some (as Tremell) halfe houres. Afterwards it was diuided into houres, twelue in the night, and as many in the day: not equall as ours, but longer or shorter, according to so many equall portions of the day or night; so that with them the first, second, third, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth, ninth, tenth, eleventh, and twelfth houre, was answerable with our houres of seven, eight, nine, ten, eleven, twelue, one, two, three, foure, five, and sixe, if we consider them in the Equinoctiall; otherwise they differed from our equall houres more or lesse, according to the vnequall lengthening or shortning of the daies, but so that an easie capacite may conceiue the proportion. These houres sometimes they reduced into foure, the first containing the first, second and third, or with vs, the seventh, eighth, and ninth houres: the second; the fourth, fifth, and sixth, or after our reckoning, ten, eleven, and twelue of the clock, and so forwards. This was the Ecclesiasticall Computation according to the times of Prayers and Sacrifices, imitated still in the Church of Rome in their Canonick houres. Thus is Marke reconciled to the other Euangelists, in relating the time of Christs passion, the first calling it the third houre when they crucified him, or led him to be crucified, whereas Iohn saith, That it was 6 about the sixth houre when Pilate delivered him. Thus may the parable of the Labourers in the Vine-yard bee vnderstood, Matth. 20. and other places of Scripture. The night also was diuided into foure Watches, each containing three houres accordingly. They had three houres of Prayer, the third, the sixth, the ninth, as both the Jewish and ^b Evangelicall Writers mention: the first of which they say Abraham instituted, the second Isaac (it began when it was halfe an houre past the sixth houre, and continued till halfe an houre after the ninth: at this houre the Disciples of the Wisemen tooke their meate, which before this Prayer lasted nothing) the third began when the former left, and continued till the Evening. And this was obserued both for their publike and private Prayers, although it be not likely that the whole time was that way spent, especially in priuate deuotions; for then their particular callings had bene frustrate, and cancelled by this exercise of the general.

Seven daies were a ^a weeke, whereof the seventh was called the Sabbath; others had no particular name, but were called the first day of the weeke, or the first day of (or after) the Sabbath, and so of the rest. The Christians called them ^k Feria, as the first second or third Feria, for Sunday, Munday, Tuesday: the reason whereof was, the keeping of Easter weeke holy. For that being made in their Calender the first weeke of the yeere, and by Law being wholly feriata, freed from working, and sanctified to holy vses; therefore the daies also of other weekes received that name from this first weeke. Touching which there is a Law of Constantine the great, to keepe both it and the weeke before it also diuulgata, without working, which for the later was by custome obtained, and by a Canon ^l enjoined, to spend it wholly in the Church with Psalmes and Hymnes and spiritual Songs. Yea, the ancient Christians obserued a continual ^m festiual from Easter to Whitsuntide, in which they neither kneeled nor fasted.

Their Moneths, as with vs and the Grecians, tooke their name of the Moone, and with them also their measure, reckoning the order of their daies according to the age of the Moone, and by course they conained, one thirty daies, the next twenty nine, and therefore were constrained euery second or third yeere to intercale, or add, as in a Leape-yeere one moneth of two and twenty daies, and in euery fourth yeere, of three and twenty daies. This they called ⁿ Veadar, because it followed the twelfth moneth Adar, for the supply of ten daies, one and twenty houres, and two hundred and foure couples, which the twelue moneths of the Moone came short of the yeere of the Sunne. And this they were forced to doe for the obseruation of the Passouer, and their other feasts. ^a Before their Babylonian thrall-dome, foure onely of these moneths were knowne by proper names; the first called Ethabnum, the second Eul, the fourth, which after was made the first, Abib; the eighth Zist; but afterwards the rest received names, which had bene before distinguished only by order, and the former names also were altered; that being reckoned the first moneth of the yeere, in which befell the fifteenth day of the Moone, after the Equinoctiall Vernall, and their names follow, Nisan, Iar, Siman, Thamuz, Ab, Elul, Tisbeiri, Marchesvan, Cisleu, Tebeth, Schebat, Adar. Thus Hospinian; but Sealiger and Ar. Montanus in his Daniel, or ninth booke of Jewish Antiquities, say, That the antient yeete had twelue moneths, as appeareth by the Historie of Noah: but those moneths had no proper names, but of their order, the first, second, third moneth, &c. Those names, which after they were knowne by, were Chaldeans; and so Elias in Thebis. They were all Chaldean or Persian names, not mentioned in any of the Prophets before the captivitie, and they also name but seven. But in Targum Hierosol. they are all expressed in their order. The Iaponites, Chinois, and Indians, have no names yet for their moneths, but name them by their order and number. The Romans also named some of their moneths by their order, others after their Emperours, as Julius and Augustus, to which Domitian added; Germanicus for September, his owne name for October. Commodus made an Edict, for the naming of August Commodus, September Horulens, October Inuictus, November Exuperatius, December Amazontus.

The Hebrew yeere before Moses, began at the new Moone next before the Autumnall Equinoctiall, that being supposed by some to be the time wherein the World was first created, every Plant and Tree having the fruit and seede ripe; and this reckoning of the yeere in ciuill affaires, is obserued of the Iewes vnto this day: and from hence they began their Iubilée and seuenth Sabbaticall yeere, lest otherwise they should have lost two yeeres profits, not reaping the fruit of the olde yeere, nor sowing in the next. Their Ecclesiasticall or Iesuiticall yeere began at the Spring, as we haue said afore, by the commandement of God, at, and in remembrance of their departure out of Egypt at the same time. Exod. 12. as with vs we haue an Ecclesiasticall yeere moueable, according to the full of Easter, differing from the Ciuill beginning at our Lady, as with others at Christmasse, or New-yeeres day.

- 20 P. Scaliger thus obserueth concerning the Iewish yeere. The Iewes (saith he vñ a double reckoning of their yeere; one after the course of the Moone, the other after the Tekupha's, or course of the Sunne. Tekupha anciently was that moment in which the passed yeere ended, and the following began. But the later Iewes diuided the yeere of the Sunne into foure equall parts, each whereof consisted of ninety one dayes, seuen houres and a halfe. And they diuided the said yeere into twelue equall parts, each containing daies thirty, houres ten, and thirty minutes. They began at the fifteenth of Aprill, moued by the authority of R. Sammel, an ancient Crittike, who ascribed the first Tekupha to that moneth which before they began in Autumne: the reason was, because at that time Moses led the Israelites out of Egypt.—The moderne Iewes are so superstitious in the obseruation of their Tekupha's, that they esteeme it danger of life to alter their reckoning of them. They also attribute to each of them his proper Element, as to the Tekupha Tamuz (the Summer Solstice) the Fire; and he which should drinke or eate in the moment of that Tekupha, they thinke should bee taken with a burning fever. Tekupha Nisan, is on the fifteenth of Aprill, Tekupha Tamuz, on the fifteenth of Iuly, Tekupha Tisri, on the fourteenth of October, Tekupha Tebeib, on the fourteenth of Ianuarie. In times past they obserued superstitiously the beginnings of every moneth, thinking, that then the Sun entred into that Signe which was attributed to that moneth. Now they onely obserue the foure Tropieall Signes. Such is their folly, as though now the entrance of Aries were not more then five and thirty dayes before the Tekupha of Moses. But their leaden braines know not what Tekupha is, nor why, nor when it was instituted. So much Scaliger.

- 40 If the new Moone happened after noone, then the moneth and their New-Moone-Feast began the next day, and the yeere likewise, which began at the New-Moone. They were so scrupulous concerning the Moone, that Clemens Alexand. out of another Author obiects the worship thereof vnto them. They thinke (saith he) that they alone know God, not knowing that they worship Angels and Arch-angels, and the Moneth, and the Moone; and if the Moone appeare not, they keepe not that Sabbath, which they call The first, nor the New-Moone, nor the Vnleavened, nor the Feast, nor the great Day. This fabulous Author cited by Clemens vnderstood not himselfe, saith Scaliger; for they still obserue the appearance or first sight of the Moone, not to ordaine the solemnitie thereby (which was done by a certaine rule) but to sanctifie it: and therefore as soone as they saw the New-Moone, they lay Good lucke (or a good signe) be it to vs and to all Israel. The same also do the Mohamedans obserue. By the first Sabbath he meant the New-yeeres day, called a Sabbath, because it was holy-day: by the Feast, Pentecost; by the great Day, that of Tabernacles. Although in regard of vñ, some daies were more holy then other, yet had euery day appointed sacrifices morning and evening.

- Their Feasts were either weekly, of which was the Sabbath; or monethly, euery New-Moone; or yeerely, of which were the Easter or Passouer, Pentecost, or Whitsuntide, the Feast of Tabernacles. These were chiefe, to which were added the Feast of Trumpets of Expiation, and of the Great Congregation. To these we may reckon the seuenth yeeres Sabbath, and

- 60 which was, with Ramban, to accomplish therein those kinds of ioy which required houses, and could not be done in B-orthes. Morh. Heb. lib. 3. cap. 44. On the next day was the Feast of the Lw, called also Blesing, because they read then the last Chapter but one of Deuteronomie. See Nehem. 9.

o Hoffmann, Ar. Montanus in his Daniel & others, begin the world in Autumne; but our English yeere doth (as also Scaliger did, who in the last Edition of Em.T. hath now altered his opinion, and agreeeth with the former) suppose the world was created in the Equinoctiall vernal. And of this opinion is R. Iosephus, B. 1. c. 1. Ambrast, Hist. romæ, de origine, B. 1. c. 1. Damascent, and other later Diuines, and Astronomers, whose reasons Hoffmann laboureth to confute & adduc sub iudice lū est. *P. the yeere of Jubilee. These Feasts God had prescribed to them, commanding, that in those three principall Feasts, every male (as the Jewes interpreted it, that were cleane and sound, and from twenty yeeres of their age to fiftie) should appeare there where the Tabernacle or Temple was, with their offerings, as one great Parish, Deut. 16. herby to retaine an union in diuine worship; and a greater solemnitie; with increase of joy and charitie; being better confirmed in that Truth, which they here saw to be the same which at home they had learned, and also better strengthened against the errors of the Heathen and Idolatrous feasts of Diuels. To these were after added vpon occasions, by the Church of the Jewes, their foure Feasts, in memory of their calamities received from the Chaldeans, their Feast of Lots, of Dedication, and others, as shall follow in their order.

They began to celebrate their Feasts at Euen: so Moses is commanded, From Euen to Euen shall ye celebrate your Sabbath; imitated in the Christian Euen-songs, on holy Euen; yet the Christian Sabbath is by some supposed to begin in the morning, because Christ did rise at that time. As for the causes of Feasts, many they are and great: That the time it selfe should in the revolution thereof, be a place of Argument to our dulnesse; This is the day which the Lord hath made, let vs reioyce and be glad in it. And what else is a festiual day, but a witness of times, light of truth, life of memory, mistesse of life? A token of publike thankfulness for greatest benefites passed, as purre to the imitation of our Noble Ancestrie, the Christian Worthies; a visible word to the Ethnieke and ignorant, which thus, by what we doe, may learne what we beleue; a visible heauen to the spirituall man, that in festiual ioyes doth, as it were, open the way; and here Isaiah is turned into a vider, whiles in the best exercises of Grace, he tasteth the first fruits of Glory, and with his Te Deum, and Halleluiahs, begins that blessed Song of the Lamb; whiles time it selfe puts on her festiual attire; and acting the passed, admonish the present ages, teacheth, by example, quickeneth our Faith, strengthneth hope, inciteth charitie, and in this glimpse and dawning, is the day-dawne to that Sunne of Eternitie, when time shall be no longer, but the Feast shall last for euerslating. These the true causes of festiual Times.

(Psalm. 118. 24.)

CHAP. V.

Of the Festivall dayes instituted by God in the Law.

As they were enjoined to offer a Lambe in the morning, and another in the Evening every day, with other Prayers, Prayes, and Rites; so had the Sabbath a double honour in that kinde, and was wholly sequestred and sanctified to religious duties. Which howsoever it was ceremoniall, in regard of that seventh day designed, of the Rites therein prescribed, of that rigid and strait obseruation exacted of the particular workes prohibited, and of the deadly penaltie annexed; yet are we to thinke, that the Eternall Lord, who had all times in his hand, had, before this, selected some time proper to his seruice, which in the abrogation of Ceremonies Legall, is in Morall and Christian duty to be obserued to the end of the World; euen as from the beginning of the World he had sanctified the seventh day to himselfe, and in the Morall Law (giuen not by Moses to the Jewes, but by God himselfe, as to all creatures) is the remembrance of that sanctification vrged. Priuileges are their reasons, who would renew the Jewish Sabbath amongst Christians, tying and tying vs in a more then Jewish seruitude, to obserue both the last and first dayes of the weeke; as some haue preached, and of the Ethiopian Churches is practised. Neither can I subscribe to those, who are so farre from paying two, that they acknowledge not the debt of one vpon diuine right, but only in Ecclesiasticall court, and in regard of the Churches mere constitution; and haue thereupon obtruded on many other dayes as Religious respects or more, then on this (which yet the Apostles entituled in name and practice, The Lords day) with the same spirit whereby they haue equalled traditions to the holy Scriptures.

Thus Cardinal b Toler allows on the Lords day iourneying, hunting, working, buying, selling, Fayres, Fencing, and other private and publike workes by him mentioned; and saith, a man is tyed to sanctifie the Sabbath, but not to sanctifie it well; (a new kinde of distinction) the one is in hearing Masse, and ceasing from seruile workes; the well-doing it, in spirituall cōtemplations, &c. Another c Cardinal is as fast as he is loose, affirming, That other holy daies also binde the Conscience, euen in cases void of contempt and scandall, as being so truly more holy then other daies, and a part of diuine worship, and not only in respect of order and politic.

But

But to returne to our Iewish Sabbath. Plutarch thought, that the Sabbath was deriued of Σαββατον, which signifieth to keepe Renell-rout, as was vsed in their Bacchanals of Σαββατον, which is interpreted Bacchus, or the sonne of Bacchus, as Corlus Rhodiginus & sheweth out of Amphibius and Museus; who is therefore of opinion, That Plutarch thought the Iewes on their Sabbaths worshipped Bacchus, because they did vse on that day to drinke somewhat more largely (a Sabbatizing too much, by too many Christians imitated, which celebrate the sameday as a day of Bacchus, then the Lords day. e) Bacchus his Priests were called Sabbi, f of this their reuelling and misse-rule. Such wide coniectures we finde in others, whereas the Hebrewes call it Sabbath, of שבת, which signifieth To rest, because of their vacation to Diuine Offices, and not for idleness or worse imployments. And for this cause all the festiuall solemnities in the Scripture s are filled with this generall title and appellation, as times of rest from their wonted bodily seruices. Likewise their seuenth yeere was Sabbathicall h, because of the rest from the labors of Tyllage. In those seales also, which consisted of many daies solemnitie, the first and last were Sabbaths, i in regard of the strictnesse of those daies rest.

Luke k hath an obscure place, which hath much troubled Interpreters with the difficulty thereof, ἡ δὲ Σαββατὴ ἀντίστροφος, our English reades it; The second Sabbath after the first. Isidore saith, it was so called of the Pasche, and Azyna comming together. Chrysostome thinks (as Sigonus cytes him) it was when the 1 New-Moone fell on the Sabbath, 20 and made a double Festiuall. Sigonus, when they kept their Passeouer in the second Moone. Stella takes it for Manipulus frugum, alledging Iosephus his Author, m Ambrose, for the Sabbath next after the first day of the Easter Solemniue. n Hosianian, for the Octaues or last day of the fame : o Maldonatus, for the Feast day of Pentecost, which was the second of the chiefe Feasts : But Ioseph Scaliger o saith, That the second day of the Feast was called ΔΕΥΤΕΡΑ ΤΟΤ ΠΑΣΧΑ, (being the sixteenth day of the Month, called Manipulus frugum) and the Sabbaths which fell betwixt that and Pentecost, recueied their denomination in order from the fame ; Secundo-primum, Secundo-secundum, &c. And hence doth Luke call that first Sabbath which fell after that seuices, or second day of the Feast seuices. Of this we shall haue occasion to say more when we come to the Samaritans. P The name Sabbath is also taken for the 2 whole weeke. But I list not to stand on the diuers significations of the Word.

Iosephus and Plinie tell of a Riuer in Syria, in the kingdome of Agrippa, called Sabbaticus, which on other daies ran full and swift, on the Sabbath reled from his course. Petrus Galatinus f alledgeth the ceasing of the Sabbathicall streame, for an argument of the abrogation of the Iewish Sabbath.

The Iewes were superstitiously strict in the obseruation of their Sabbath : Protonie without resistance captiuating their Citie, and themselves by this advantage, as did Pompey afterwards. And in the daies of Matthias, father of Iudas Maccabeus; a thousand were murdered without resistance, till that by him they were better aduised : Which appeared by the Pharises, that cauelled at the plucking and rubbing of a few eares of Come, by the hungry Disciples, and at their Master for healing on that day, though by his Word : which their superstition, the Iew that fell into a Priue at Maidenbourg. An. 1270. on his Sabbath, and another at Tewksburie, 1220. (and were the one by the Bishop of the place, the other by the Earle of Gloucester constrained to abide the Christian Sabbath, whence on their owne they would not be freed) testified to the world by a stinking penance, and the later leauing also his stinking superstitious soule behinde to seale his deuotion. They added of their owne, fasting that day till noone, their Sabbath daies iourney, which was (saith Saint Jerome) by the institution of Barachibas, Simon and Hellis, (Rabbines) not about two thousand paces, o or two miles. Thus did this holy ordinance which God had instituted for the refreshing of their bodies, the instruction of their Soules, and as a type of eternall happines, vanish into a smoky superstition amongst them. The Sacrifices and accustomed rites of the Sabbath are mentioned, Num. 28 & Leu. 23 & 24. Where we may read, that the daily burnt-offering, and meate-offering, and drinke-offering, were doubled on the Sabbath, and the Shew-bread renewed, &c.

The sanctification of daies and times being a u token of that thankfulness, and a part of that publike honor which we owe vnto God, he did not onely enioyne, by way of perpetuall homage the sanctification of one day in seuen, which Gods immutable Law doth exact for euer, but did require also some other part of time, with as strict exaction, both for lesse continuance; besides, accepting that which being left arbitrarie to the Church, 60 was by it consecrated voluntarily vnto like religious vses. Of the first of these (the Sabbath) we haue spoken : of the Mosaicall Feasts, the New-Moones are next to be considered. The institution hereof we read, Numb. 28. and the Solemne Sacrifice therein appointed; so

But in the Paschall rite a double washing was requisite, because of their double Supper; which in the flourishing state of the Jewes, was also vsed in other their chiefe solemnities of the Pentecost and Tabernacles. In the former they ate of their Sacrifices, in the later certaine Prayes were sung, and it was called the supper dimissorie. But this second Paschall Supper differed from that in other solemnities, wherein they vsed iunckes, which in this were forbidden; and instead thereof they had Endine and wilde Lettice, mingled with Vinegar, and other things, which now they make as thick as mustard. The Householder first dipt his vnleauened soppe therein and ate it, and then tooke from vnder the carpet or cloth another, which he brake into as many pieces as he had Communicants in his company, eury piece being as big as an Oliue, which was giuen to each of them in order. When he ate that sop, first he said, Blessed be thou, Lord our God, King of the world, which hast sanctified vs with thy Commandements, and hast giuen vs the precept of vnleauened bread.

And when he had eaten, he said (as he distributed to the rest) This is the bread of affliction, which our fore-fathers ate in the land of Egypt. Eury one which is hungry, come and eate: eury one which hath neede, come and obserue the Passecouer. After the destruction of Ierusalem, they added these words; Now we are here seruants, but hereafter we shall be in the land of Israel: now we are here seruants, hereafter in the land of Israel free. After this, he tasted of the Cuppe, and deliuered to the next, and he to the third, and so on through the company. This was called the Cup of thanksgiving, or of singing the Hymne, which he deliuered with these words; Blessed art thou O Lord our God King of the world, Creator of the fruite of the Vine. Then did they sing a Hymne and depart: for the Canon forbod them to eate or drinke any thing after the Hymne. These were the Paschall rites in the time of CHRIST, who also vsed that reiterated both washing (saith Scaliger) and Supper, and also the Hymne. They were in the Euen of the fourteenth day to purge their houses of leauen, and that throughout the Land, where the Lambe might not be eaten. All the Israelites were inioyned this dutie: And they which by occasion of journeying or vnleaneanesse, could not now celebrate the Passecouer, were to obserue it the next month, Numb. 9.

The day after, or second day of this Paschall Feast, they were to bring to the Priest 40 Gomer of the first-fruits of their Corne, and a Lambe, with other duties for a burnt offering to the LORD: before which time they might not eate of the new yeeres fruites, which at that time of those Countries beganne to ripen, and so to acknowledge GOD the giuer thereof. Philos. faith, That each priuate man, which otherwise brought in his Sacrifice to the Priest, sacrificed or slew this Sacrifice with his owne handes: And else where hee affirmeth the same. Eleanarius, 1 or as other say, the Synedrium, ordayned three hundred and fiftie yeeres before the birth of Christ, that the Passecouer should not be solemnized on the second, fourth, or sixth day of the Week: And therefore when it fell on the sixth day, which wee call Fridaie, it was deferred to the seuenth, at the time of Christs Passion, & he with his Disciples ate it the night before, according to the Law of God.

This Eleanarius ordained, that the feast of Lots should not be celebrated on the second, fourth, or seuenth: or Pentecost on the third, fift, or seuenth; Or that of the Tabernacles, on the first, fourth, and sixt: Or the Fast of Expiation, on the first, third, or sixt: Or their New yeeres day, on the first, fourth, and sixt, which decree is extant in the booke of Gamaliel Pauls Master, which they did superstitiously, to auoide two Sabbaths, (in so strict a rest) together, and carrying boughes on the Sabbath, if that Feast fell thereon, and on other such reasonlesse reasons.

After this sixteenth day of the month, or second day of the vnleauened bread, in which first of all, sickle was thrust into the Haruest, to offer the first fruites thereof unto GOD, were numbered seven intire Weekes, and the next day, was the fiftieth (becomming inclusively) was celebrated the feast of PENTECOST, receiving his name of that reckoning of fiftie: And Sebestianus, that is, of Weekes, because of this reckoning of seven weekes, it is called also the Feast of the Haruest of the first fruites: the rites thereof are prescribed, Leuit. 23. The institution was in respect of the Law then giuen on Mount Sinai, and a type of that Euangelicall Law, which Christ, hauing ascended vp on high, did write not in Tables of stone, but in fleshy Tables of the heart, when (at the same time) hee gaue the holy Ghost to his Disciples, as a remembrance also of the Author of their Haruest-fruits, and of their possession of that land where they had seede-time and haruest, which in the wilderness they wanted.

As the seuenth day in the weeke, so the seuenth month in the yeere, was in a great part festiuall: first for that purpose, as the fruits of the Earth being now inured.

The first day of this month was, besides the ordinarie Kalends or Festiuall New-Moones, the Feast of Trumpets, in respect of that rite then obserued of sounding Trumpets, being their

New-yeeres day, after the ciuill account: the institution is read, Leuit. 23. and Num. 29. Whether, as some of the Rabbines will haue it, for Isack's deliuerance, that in remembrance of that Ramme, these Rams-horne Trumpets should be founded, or in regard of the wars, or in respect of that spirituall war-fare which continueth our whole life, or that this was so festiual a moneth, or the beginning of their yeere for ciuill accounts, and for the Sabbaticall and Iubilee yeeres, or for some other cause, let the wiser Reader iudge.

On the tenth day of this moneth was the Feast or Fast of Reconciliation or Expiation, a day of public penance, fasting and afflicting themselves, described in Leuit. 16. throughout the Chapter, and Chap. 23. wherein is lively in that type shewed the Office of Iesus Christ, the eternal high-Priest, who hath alone wrought our atonement, entred into the Holy place of Heauen, and laid our sins on the Scape-Goate, bearing them, and satisfying for them in his owne person on the Crosse, and by the sprinkling of his blood sanctified vs for euer to God his Father, Paul, Heb. 9. doth vnfold the misterie of this dayes rites, wherein onely, the high Priest alone might enter into the holy-place, and himselfe alone performe the other Offices of Expiation. The Iewes thought, that this fasting and afflicting themselves, was in respect of their Idolatrie with the golden Calfe, and therefore it seemed, that in Theodore's time they did not afflict themselves, but sported rather in obscure and prophane manner. The Sacrifices are set downe, Num. 29. 8, 9, 10, 11.

Theodore. qu. 32. in Leuit.

The next Feast was that of Tabernacles; in remembrance tha. howsoeuer they now dwell in strong Cities, goodly houses, &c. yet their fathers liued in Tents in the wilderness, where God by a cloude in the day time, and fire in the night protected that people. It is expressed Leuit. 23. Num. 29. Deut. 16. It was obserued from the fifteenth to the one and twentieth, the first and last of them being (as at the Pasche) more solemnly festiual, with abstinence from labor, and a generall Conuocation. They were the first day to take boughes and branches of Trees, and to make therewith Booths, and to dwell in booths seuen daies. This was neglected from the time of Iosuah, till the dayes of Nehemiab, when he and Ezra solemnized this feast seuen dayes with booths on their house-tops, and in their Courts and streetes, with Lectures euery day out of the Law, and a solempne assembly on the eight day. The Hebrews report that they made them bundles of that matter, which they caried, euery day of the seuen, vp and downe in the morning before they might eat, wherupon it was called the Feast of Palmes or Willowes. The seuenth day, saith Paulus Fagius, they compassed the Altar with these boughes seuen times, in remembrance of the fall of Iericho. Andrew Osiander affirmeth, that they vsed this carrying about boughes euery day, especially the seuenth, in which they obserued a kinde of Procession or Letanie, singing, Ana Lehoua Hosanna ana lekouabatz elicha-na: first reckoning vp a great number of the names of God, then of his attributes: thirdly, of the things which they wish to be saued, then of themselves and other things, interlacing euery particular of these with singing Hosanna, like their Ora pro nobis in the Popish Letanie. Then they altar it in another forme, Pray redeeme the Vine of thy planting, Hosanna, &c. then in another, As thou sauedst the strong in Egypt, when thou wentst out for their deliuerance, so Hosanna, &c. Then in a longer forme of prayers, with this foote of the song Hosanna: and lastly all rings Hosanna, Hosanna: and hereupon the later Iewes called this feast Hosanna, as also those bundles of boughes: and although that the later Iewes haue now added much, the Iewes of Italie differing from them of Germanie, yet in Christ's time the acclamations of Hosanna, when he came riding on an Asse into Ierusalem, testifie some such obseruation then amongst them.

The Sacrifices of euery day are designed Num. 29. The first day, thirteene bullocks, the second, twelue, and euery day one lesse to the seuenth: in all seuentie (as the Rabbines interpret it) according to the number of the seuentie languages of the Nations, which shall be subdued to the Messias; and nineie eight Lambs, in respect of so many curses in the Law, against the transgressing Israclites.

The eight day was the Feast which they called, Haaz. ph and Azareth, that is, Collection; called also the great day of the feast, in the two and twentieth day of this moneth Tisri. In this they were to contribute to the continual Sacrifices, and publike thankgiuing was made for the fruites of the Earth, and the first fruites of the later fruites were offered. Ieroboam in an irreligious policie remoued the feast of Tabernacles from the seuenth moneth to the eight, from Tisri to Marchesuan.

Nehem. 10. 37.

The seuenth yeere, was appointed a Sabbaticall yeere, wherein they were neither to sowe nor to reape, but to leaue that which should voluntarily grow in their fields and yards to the poore; and secondly, should not exact debt of their brethren of the same Nation, but remit it, Deut. 15. Exod. 23. Leuit. 25. and the obseruation hercof is expressed in the time of Nehemiab.

After seuen times seuen yeeres which make fortie nine, they were to reckon Iobel or yeere

yeere of Iubilee, Leu. 25. beginning on the day of Reconciliation : Wherein seruants were freed, debts remitted, possessions, that had beene alienated, returned, the law allowing no further sales, proclaimed with sound of a Trumpet of a Rammes-horne, and therefore called Iabel, which signifieth a Rammie, or Rammes-horne.

Touling this yeere of Iubilee is much controuersie. The ancient Authors account it the fiftieth yeere. Scaliger ¹ refuteth their authoritie herein. Many moderne writers hold the same opinion, as ² Hospinian, ³ Melanchton, Fabritius ⁴ Paduanus, &c. ⁵ Calusius hath at large disputed this question against Crentzhemius and Bucholcerus, by diuers arguments proving that the Iubilee was but fortie nine yeeres complete, and that the fiftieth yeere was the first onwarde of another Iubilee or Sabbath of yeeres : Yet is this space reckoned by fiftie, as Onid calls the Olympiad, quinguenis Olympias : Aristophanes, ⁶ and Ausonius, ⁷ affirming the like : and yet the Olympiad is but foure yeeres complete, and reckoned from the fift to the fift exclusively. Otherwise they should haue had two Sabbaticall yeeres together, namely, the fortie ninth being the seuenth yeere, and the next which was the fiftieth yeere. As for the later Writers, they might be deceived by following the streame, and beguiled by the Papists Iubilee, which Boniface the eight, before called Benedictus (and yet neither was good sayre nor doer) instituted Anno. 1300. to be obserued every hundreth yeere : and Clement the first abridged to the fiftieth ; as Auentinus, Trubemius, Cranzius, and others haue written. Whether they were Heathenish in imitating the Ludi seculares, or Iewish, in following the legall Iubilee : Certaine it is, Rome thereby becomes a rich Mart, where the ⁸ Marchants of the Earth resort from all places of the Earth to buy Heauen ; and Babylon ⁹ the great Citie is clothed in fine linnen and purple and scarlet, and gilded with gold and precious stone and pearles, with the gaires of her Wares, giuing in exchange ¹⁰ the soules of men, washed from their sinnes ; A thing more precious to Christ then his most precious blood. But his pretended Vicars haue learned to effect it (the filling of their purse) with greater ease : deuout Pilgrims from all parts visiting Saint Peters staires, whence they goe truly Saint Peters heires (¹¹ Siluer and gold haue I none) and yet finde their Pardons too cheape to be good. But to returne to our Pilgrimage, and to obserue the obseruation of the Iewish Iubilee ; This feast was partly ciuill in regard of the poore, of the inheritances, of the Israelitish Families, ¹² specially that of the Messias, and of the computation of times, as amongst the Greekes by Olympiads, and amongst the Romanes by Lustra and inditions : partly also it was mysticall in regard of the Gospell of Christ, preaching libertie and peace to the Conscience, the acceptable yeere of the Lord.

And thus much of those Feasts which God himselfe instituted to this Nation ; which how the Iewes of later times haue corrupted, and doe now superstitiously obserue, instituting others also of their owne deuising, shall bee handled in due place. Wee are next to speake of those Feasts, which vpon occasions they imposed vpon themselves before the comming of CHRIST : to which wee will adde a brieffe Kalender of all their Feasts and Feasts.

CHAP. VI.

Of the Feasts and Fasts, which the Iewes instituted to themselves : with a Kalender of their Feasts and Fasts through the yeere, as they are now obserued.

THE Prophet Zacharie, in his seuenth and eighth Chapters mentioneth certaine fasting daies, which the Iewes by Ecclesiasticall Iniunction obserued. One in the tenth day of the tenth moneth, because, on that day Ierusalem began to bee besieged, 2. Reg. 24. A second Fast was obserued on the ninth day of the fourth moneth, in remembrance that then the Chaldeans entred the Citie,

A third Fast they held on the ninth day of the fift moneth, in respect of the Citie and Temple burned on that day. First, by Nabuchodonosor ; Secondly, by Titus on the same day : Which the Iewes doe yet obserue with strict penance, going bare-foote, and sitting on the ground, reading some sad Historie of the Bible, and the Lamentations of Jeremie three times ouer.

Their fourth Fast they celebrated on the third day of the seuenth moneth, in remembrance of Godolab slaine by Ismael, Iere. 41. 42. 2. Reg. vii. To these are reckoned the Fast of Easter, in the thirteenth day of Adar, their twelfth Moneth; and on the seauenteenth day of the fourth moneth, in the remembrance of the Tables of the Law broken by Moses; the institution whereof seemeth to be late, seeing the Scripture doth not mention it. In this moneth the Egyptians kept the Feast or Fast of their Osiris, lamenting for him, which seemeth to be the same that is mentioned, Ezech. 8. Where women are said to mourne for Tammuz, whom Plutarch calleth Amuz, and from thence deriueh Iupiters title of Ammon. Of him was this fourth moneth called Tamuz.

On the * foureteenth and fiftenth daies of Adar, they kept the feast of Phurim, or Lots, instituted in remembrance of that deliuerance from Haman; by the authoritie of Ioachim the high-Priest, as Funlinus relateth out of Philo, An. M. 3467. Antonius Margarita, a christened Iewe, reporteth that on these daies the Iewes reade the Historie of Ester, and so often as Haman is mentioned, they smite on their seates with their fists and hammers, otherwise spending the time of this feast in Bachanall riots and excess.

They also had the feast of Wood-carrying, called Europpia, mentioned by Iosephus, in which the custome was for euery one to carry Wood to the Temple to maintaine the fire of the Altar.

The Feast of Dedication, otherwise called the feast of Lights, and the institution thereof is largely described, 2. Maccab. 4. in remembrance of the institution of Diuine worship and Sacrifice in the Temple, which had bene by Antiochus polluted, and sacred to Iupiter Olympius, all the seruices appointed by the Law being abolished. By Iudas Maccabeus, the Temple and Altar, and other holy instruments, were dedicated the same day three yeeres, after their first pollution, called therefore the feast of Lights, as I thinke, saith Iosephus, because he expected a light shon forth vnto them. But Franciscus Iunius, in his Annotations vpon the Syrian translation of the tenth of Iohn, where this Feast is mentioned, alleaseth out of the Talmud, another cause as followeth. When on the five and twentieth day of Cisleu they entred into the Temple, they found not pure oyle, except in one little vessell, which contained sufficient for the Lamps but one day, of which Oyle they lighted the Lamps in order, which lasted eight daies, till they pressed out of the Oliues cleane Oyle. And therefore the wise-men of that time decreed, that yeetly those eight daies, beginning at the five and twentieth of Cisleu, should be daies of ioy, and that euery one in the doores of their houses euery euening, during those eight daies, should light Lamps, for declaration of that miracle, wherein they must not fast nor lament.

Likewise 1. Mac. 13. is ordained festiual the three and twentieth day of Iar, for the expedition of the Tower of Ierusalem, by Simon Mac.

On the last day of the feast of Tabernacles, they finish the reading of the Law with much ioy and solemnitie, calling it the feast of the ioy of the Law. The next Sabbath begins their Reading of the first Parasch or Section, which was also read that day they made an end of the last, lest they should seeme weary of it, and glad it were ended. These Paraschs or Sections of the Law (as our Lessons in our Seruice) were ancient, as appeareth Ath. 15. 21. in number fifty foure, for twice they put together two short ones. When Antiochus burned and prohibited the Law, they reade in stead of Moses, the Prophets: and after Antiochus his death they continued both, as the first and second Lesson with vs. That of the Prophets they called haptarata, that is, a dismissing, because after it the people were dismissed, euen as the name Missa, for like cause was giuen to the Christian holies. They reade Moses not only on the Sabbaths, but also on Mundaies, and Thursdaies; which by them that would seeme more holy, were fasted also, as Luc. 18. appeares by the bragges of that supercilious Pharise, I fast twice in the weeke.

Sigonius reckoneth also the feast of Leptia, in the end of the yeere, which yet is not like to haue continued in succeeding ages; and of the fire that we find mentioned in 2. Mac. 1. and the feast of Iudith, for killing Holofernes: and on the fourteenth day of Adar, for the victorie against Nicanor, Iof. 1. 12. Their later feasts I shall mention, and declare their seueral ceremonies, when wee come to speake of their later times, and of the present Iewish superstition. In the meane time I thinke it not amisse to set downe here out of Scaliger, a view or Kalender of their moneths, with the Feasts and Fasts, as they are obserued therein at this day.

Of their Oblations, Gifts, and Sacrifices.

50 ALthough Moses doth handle this matter of their Rites and Sacrifices, and is herein seconded and interpreted by the succeeding Prophets, so fully, that it may seme a pouring of water into the Sea, to ipeake needelelly, or by our Discourse, to obscure, rather then illustrate, that which is so largely and plainly there exprested; yet because of that lubicet which we have in hand, I cannot altogether be silent (at least of the Kindes and heads) referring the desirous Reader; for his more perfect satisfaction in particulars, to those clearer propheticall fountaines. Their Rites for time and place we have already described: The next intended part of this Iewish relation shall be of their Oblations, which were either Gifts or Sa- crifices. Their Sacrifices were such oblations, wherein the thing offered was in whole or 60 part consumed in diuine worship, for the most part by fire or shedding of blood. These were of eight sorts. Burnt-offerings, Meate-offerings, Peace-offerings, Sinne-offerings, Trespass- offerings, the offerings of the Consecration, Cleansing, and Expiation. Philo reduceth them to three

three: Burnt, Peace, and Sin-offerings, according to the three causes of sacrificing; The worship of God, the obtaining of good things, and freedom from euill.

The Burnt-offerings, were by fire consumed, the Rites and manners hereof are expressed, Leuiticus 1. the fire was to be perpetual on the Altar, being that which God miraculously sent from heauen to consume Abihu sacrifice; for neglecting which, and vsing other, his two soanes Nadab and Abihu were stricken by a reuenging fire from God. The Meate-offering was made of fine flowre, without hony or leuen, and with oyle and incense on the Altar, or frying pan, or oven, or caldron, according to the rites prescribed, Leuit. 2. partly sacred to the Lord by fire, the rest to be the Priests. The Peace-offerings are with their proper ceremonies enioyned; Leuit. 3. and 7. the fat and kidnies were to be burned on the Altar (the fat and blood being vniuersally forbidden them for food) the brest and right shoullder was the Priests: the rest to the Sacrificer, to be eaten the first, or at furthest on the second day: or else on the third to be burned with fire. The Offering for finnes of ignorance, for the Priest, Prince, People, or priuate man, is set downe, Leuit. 4. and 6. The Sinne-offering, in case of contempt, where the sinne is committed against God and man willingly, with the due manner thereof is expressed, Leuit. 6. To these were adioyned Prayers and Praises, with musicall voyces, and instruments, Cymbals, Viols, Harpes, and Trumpets resounding, For he is good, for his mercy endureth for ever. The first kinde of Sacrifices was proper to the Priests at their consecration, recorded, Leuit. 6. 20. The seuenth mentioned Sacrifice is of Purification or cleansing, as of a woman after childe-birth, Leu. 12. or of a Leper, 13. 14. or for vncleane issues of men and women, chap. 15. The eight is the sacrifice of Expiation or Reconciliation, on that festiuall or fasting-day before spoken of, Leuit. 16. Hereunto may we adde the delights and the daily offerings of incense, morning and euening, Exod. 30. on a golden Altar, whereunto the Priests only had access, with such perfume only as is there prescribed.

The Gifts which we haue reckoned a second sort of Oblations that were not as the former in whole, or in part consumed in their offering, but preferred whole and sound, were given, either according to the Law, or by Vow, or of free will. The Law prescribed, First fruits and Tithes, and the personall halfe shekell. The first fruits of Man, of beasts, and of the fruits of the Earth, the law exacteth, Exod. 22. 23. and are assigned to the Priests, Num. 5. and 18. which, of men and vncleane beasts, were to be redeemed, of others to be sacrificed.

§. II.

Of Tithes and their manner of Tithing.

Tithes, when we consider the assignement of them to the Tribe of Leui, we must so farre acknowledge them Leuiticall and Ceremoniall, But considering the paying of them to a Priest, so soone as we reade of a Priest, in Scripture, and that by the Father of the Faithfull, which the Apostle vrgeth against Leuiticall Ceremonies, in that Leui himselfe in Abraham payed them; and his Nephew Jacob vowed the payment thereof, so soone as God should giue him whereof to pay Tithes: and that God required this dutie of Tithes, Exod. 22. 29. before the Leuites were called to the seruice of the Tabernacle; which are not so much as named, till Exod. 38. 21. the Scripture also speaks of them as anciently due, nor hath it any originall commandement for giuing Tithes to God: yea, the law of Nature taught it the Heathens, which paid them to their Idolls: and the first times of the Christian Church excepted, wherein there was no such settled order forthing of this and like nature, Tithes were constantly paid to the Church, vntill the Arch-enemie of God and his Church, in his Antichristian supremacie robbed the Ministers of that due, which in Gods right they before held, impropriating the liuing of the Altar to them that liued not at the Altar, but yet ordinarily leauing them to the Church, as they then accounted the Church: Some cannot so easily subscribe to that opinion, perhaps more common then true, which disanull diuine right for the paying Tithes, as being then a Iewish and Leuiticall Ceremonie. But I leaue the Reader to discuss this matter further, with a D. Carleton Mr. Roberts and others, in Treatises of that argument, not to speake of the Canonists. And let me here mention also that little book full of great learning, & fauoring of great pietie, of S. Henry Spelman Knight, a true Knight of the Temple, that thus engaged himselfe for the Temples right; that whereas the Temple and Ruines of the Church hath raised so many Knights and cruell Gentles: at haue pill'd and spill'd the men and means of the Church; the Church in that Order hath found a Champion, a Spelman in name and deede, who out of Gods (so was the Gospell and holy writ significantly tiled by our Religious Ancestours) and man's selfe, that is, the learning of men, in the reasons and authorities of Fathers, Councils, Doctors in feuerall seuerall ages, hath shewed himselfe a Spelman, an Oracle or man of hidden knowledge, as Verfagen interprets and spels this word spell. These shew also another argument (besides this of the Nature and practice of Tithes) almost beyond cauillation, namely, that Tithes are due to Christian Ministers by Vow : Christian Common-weales, and Councels hauing consecrated them to God and his Church, wherein our Kings, Parliaments, and Ecclesiasticall Lawes have added their confirmations: neither is it now time after the Vowes to enquire, and without Diuine dispensation to alter it, without satisfaction sufficient. But leauing this fore too tender to be touched, and yet little touching and mouing some Consciences pretended tender; let vs view the Tithes, as they then were, Iewish. In Leuit. 27. 30. is a declaration of the Lords right, All Tythes are the Lords; and an assignation of the same, Numb. 18. 21. Behold, I haue giuen the children of Levi all the tenth, &c. Sainr Hierome reckons foure sorts of Tithes: first, that which the people paid to the Leuites: secondly, that which the Leuites hence paid to the Priests: thirdly, that which they referred for expence in their solemne Feasts when they went to the Tabernacle or Temple. The fourth was a third yeeres Tenth, which was then laide vp for the Leuite, and the poore amongst them. The practice hereof Nehemiab restored in the reformation of Religion, Nehemiab 10. when the First-fruits and Tenths were brought to the treasure or chambers of the house of God.

Joseph Scaliger hath written a Treatise of Tithes, the summe whereof is this. Euery thing which was food for man, and was laide vp for preseruacion, if it receiued increase from the Earth, was subiect to offerings, and consequently to first fruits and Tithes. Garden-herbes were not exempted: they tithed Mints and Annise. (But Drysus saith this was of tradition, and not of the Law: for the Law required onely the tenth proventus sui, of the increase: vnder which name (saith he) those came not.) Our of these they first paid the first fruites: secondly, Theruma: thirdly, a two fold Tithe, and these all in their due order. The Husbandman might not touch any of his increase before these deductions. First fruits of Come, Grapes and Oliues were offered in the basket: but the Theruma and Tithe onely of the kindes already dressed and prepared, as wheate fanned, oyle and wine, come in the eare, and so the rest was called Tabal: after they were made readie, the Theruma was taken 1 from the heape, and giuen to the Priests: this was called the great Theruma, and was not defined by Moses, but the ancient Lawyers determined that it might not be lesse then the fortieth or fiftieth, or at least the sixtieth part: the first they called the Theruma of a good eye, the second indifferent, the last of an euill eye, and niggardly. When this was taken away for the Priests, the rest of the heape was tithed for the Leuite: this was called the first Tithe; and the tenth part thereof the Leuites gaue to the Priests which was called the Tithe of the Tithe, or the Theruma of the Tithe. For the former Theruma they named the great Theruma, because it was more then this. After this deducted, the Leuites might freely vse the other nine parts of the Tythe (which before they might not) whether in, or out of Ierusalem. The Husband-man or Lay-man, was yet to pay another called the second Tithe, namely, the tenth part of that which remained to him after the first Tithe: and this also was boly, nor might be spent, but before God in the Court of the Temple. And therefore it was to be carried to Ierusalem, or if the way were long or tedious, they might be sold, and a fifth part was then to be added: with this money they were to buy Wine, Oyle, Sacrifices, and other necessities at Ierusalem, wherewith the Husband-man and the Leuite were to feast in the Temple. After this second Tithe paid, they might (and nor before) vse the rest as lay chattells (to borrow the word of my learned friend Master Selden) Scaliger giues them a Latine name, Pollicita, that is, exposed, viz. to common or prophane vse. For better view hereof: if the husbandman had six thousand measures of wheate, wine or oyle, he must pay a fortieth or fiftieth or at least a sixtieth part, that is, an hundred in the name of his Theruma. Of the five thousand and nine hundred remaining, the first Tithe will deduct five hundred fourescore and ten, of which the Leuites must pay to the Priests, fiftie nine; as Tithe of the Tithe. Now out of the five thousand three hundred and ten yet remayning, the husband-man is to pay the second Tithe, which come to five hundred thirte and one, and then there remayne to his owne vse, exposed or lay chattells foure thousand seuen hundred seuentie and nine. So that the first and second Tithe were in proportion as nineteene of the hundred, besides the greater Theruma; all these out of the Come readie fanned: before which also they paid the first fruits in the eare. Further, the husband-man was bound to carry them to Ierusalem, and there to deliver them to the Treasurers, which were Leuites deputed in diuers offices, to the custodie of these things, as fully appeareth, 2. Chron. 31. And if he did not carry them himselfe, he must send them by his Delegates: touching whom, the Law exacted that they should not be of the Gentiles. (This opinion is rectified by others, & seemes impossible, that the Tithes of so spacious a Country, should with much labor, cost, & losse, be carried to Ierusalem, which might with more ease, & conueniencie euery way, be receiued at home in the seuerall cities of their tillage, as it is written, Neh. 10. 37.) As for the second Tithe, they might redeeme it, with adding a fift part ouer and aboute the price. Tobit is a perfect patterne of this : The first Tithe of all increase (they are his own words) I gaue to the sons of Aaron, who ministred at Ierusalem, the second Tithe I sold, and went and spent it euery yeere at Ierusalem: And the third I gaue vnto them to whom it was meete. The vulgar Latine reads this last, So that be ministred euery third yeere, all his tithing to the Proselytes and strangers. And it ought, saith Scaliger, rather to be called the Tithe of the third yeere, then the third Tithe: for this was no other but the first Tithe, so that what was paid in the first and second yeere, and in the fourth and fift of that weeke of yeeres, or seuen yeeres space (the seventh whereof was alway Sabbaticall, and freed from tillage, first fruits, Theruma and tithing in the name of the first tithe; the time in the third and sixth yeeres were not carried to Ierusalem, but laid vp in the barnes and store-houses of the husband-man, who to vse the words of Moses, * was to lay them vp within his Gates : And the Leuite, because he had no part nor inheritance with thee, and the Stranger, and the fatherlesse, and the widow, which are within thy gates shall come, and shall eate and be satisfied. Thus Ioseph Scaliger. But others hold it due euery yeere, but onely of such things as were vnto them for mans meate, as being employed in Feasts, and no other then that which Scaliger calls the second Tithe, before mentioned. The remainder of the surplusage (to vse the words of Maister Mountaigne) the three seals ended, serued for those Priests and Leuites, that dwelt at Ierusalem, and had no abiding in the Country, and for those that in their courses came vp, and serued at the Temple, for want of which Malachie complayneth, and in Nehemiah time, the Leuites fled to their Land, viz. where he had maintenance, by payment of the first Tithe, Euery third yeere, they added a third Tithe, to be distributed to the poore and Leuite, besides the former two for the Leuites, and for Feasts, as Iosephus hath obserued. Thus in all there were four payments, or Tithes, as is before obserued out of Saint Hierome. What I haue said of the Tithes of Vegetables, I vnderstand also (though some gaine say) of the Tithes of all they possessed, Luke 18. Mat. 23. euen of Cartell in like payments as the former, as of all other things for mans vse. Scaliger proceedes : The Jewes still in all places of their habitations obserue the seventh yeere Sabbaticall, and therefore pay not then any first fruits or Theruma; as for Tithes they were not to be, as Scaliger holdeth, paid but at the Temple, which is now destroyed : neither haue they any certaine stocke of Priests or Leuites (howsoeuer many are so named) and therefore being asked of vs, saith Scaliger, if they might repaire the Sanctuarie in Mount Moriah, whether they would offer any Sacrifices; they answerd, no, because there is now no Priest-hood in Israel. So desperate is their desolation. Now least any deceite might be vsed in tithing, there were officers appointed, which were called * Faithfull : these searched the houses suspected of non-payment : that increase whereof the tithing was vncertaine, was called Eamai. From the Dedication of Maccabees, to the time of Iohn Hyrcanus, all paid their first fruits and Theruma, but fewe their Tithes, because those Faithfull were vnfaithfull, and corrupted with gifts : But then the greater Councell decreed that none should be chosen to that Office, but such as were, as they were called. From thence to the destruction of the Temple they were truly paid. The First fruits, Therumoth and Tithes were not payed all at one time, but each kinde at their owne time, as Wheate in Siman after Pentecost, Wine in Tisri, Oyle in Tebeth : and so of the rest. Thus saith Scaliger : For my owne part I hold that diuision of Saint Hierome the best : and that of those foure sorts of Tithes, the first is Naturall, Morall, Diuine tribute, equally due, though not alike exacted in all ages, and then Leuiticall onely by speciall designation of God, which appointed Leui for a time, to the worke and wages of his Priest. The second payd to the high-Priest by the Leuite, was (as that high Priest-hood it selfe) merely ceremoniall. The Popes couetousnesse reuerting Christianitie, recalling Iudaisme, made it Canonically due to him, which since with vs is made Iudicall or Statutarie : And whereas Aaron alone, and Leui once receiued, now they must, if not alone, pay perpetual Tenths, besides ten times as much subsiduarie payments, as temporall men (all things considered) of their abilitie, when the publique neede requires, and that notwithstanding our owne inheritance is so many waies diuerted, peruerted, subuerted. This I speake not as grudging Cesar his due (for God and man loue a cheerefull giuer) but to satisfie the euill eye of them that haue euill will at Sion, and grudge the remaines of the ruines of Leui, willing euery way to further the Priests hindrances. Ceremoniall was the third Tithe, as dependant on the Temple and Feasts. The Fourth Iudicall, as reliefe to the poore of that Iewish state, whether Leuites or Lay-man, in their seuerall habitations. But if any lust to fill themselves with matter of this argument, let them reade what hath bene written by Maister Selden, and his Antagonists,

§. III.

Of their Personall Offerings, and of their and our Ecclesiastical Reuenues.

BEldes First-fruits and Tithes, they payed to the Treasure personall offerings, as Exod. 30. 12. Every man payed halfe a shekel, ^a which the Hebrewes interpreted to be perpetual for the maintenance of the Sacrifices; others temporarie, then only put in practice. As for that collection, 2. King. 21. made by Ioa for the repaying of the Temple, and that after by Nebemiah, Chap. 10. the circumstances shew much difference. This Treasure, in regard of this Poll-money, grew very rich, as appeared in Craffus robbing the same of ten thousand talents at one time, besides a great beame of gold, which Eleazarus the Treasurer, vpon Craffus his Oath (afterwards violated neyther ^b left) to redeme the rest, delucred to him, weighing three hundred Mina, every Mina being two pounds two ounces, and a quarter Troy. Tully ^c and other Authors mention these Oblations of the Iewes to their Treasure yecrly. These Gifts and offerings the Law exacted: they performed many other also, either of their free-will, or of Vow, otherwise little differing from the former, Leuitici ultimo. Many other Ceremonies of their meates, garments, fastings Trumpets, and in other cases, I hope I shall haue leaue to omit in this place, and remit him that would further know of them to the Scripture it selfe-hauing pointed out the principall.

But by this is apparant, which Doctor Downam ^d hath obserued, that all these being deliuered in the Lords Treasure; without their labour or cost, together with their eight ^e and fortie Cities assigned them, amounting to a farre greater proportion for the maintenance of that small Tribe: then all the Bishoprick, Benefices, Colledge-lands, or whatsoever other Ecclesiasticall endowments and profits in this Land, although the prophane Ammonites or hypocritical Cloysters had neuer conspired to shauie off our e beards, and our arguments by the Buttocks, not leaving to ^f couer our nakednesse, or their shame. And yet how sicke is Ahab for Naboths Vineyard? And would GOD we had no lezabels to play the (too cunning) Physicians in this disease. Let me haue a little leaue to say no more then others (for the substance) in bookes and Sermons haue said already: although those Bellies to whom we speake, haue no eares. The first stroke that wounded vs, and causeth vs still to halt, was from Rome, The mother of abominations and whoredomes. Here, as in the suburbs of Hell, were founded the Churches Ruines: Our Bulls of Basban (Abbey-lubbers, and Cloysters) with the leaden homes of those Romane Bulles, haue pushed downe our Churches (our Chauncels at least) and made them to fall into those ^g Cages of vncleane Byrds, the Popish Monasteries. Of nine thousand two hundred eightie and foure Parishes in England, after ^h Master Camdens account, three thousand eight hundred fortie fise were (it is properly termed) impropriated. And who knoweth whether those Appropriations did not supplant their Supplanters, and disproprietate them of that which in a iuster proprietie was giuen them in their first foundations, for that three-fold maintainance of themselves, of learning, and of the poore? yea, happily yet (if we obserue the course of Diuine Iustice) we myt see many, whose former inheritances haue by the addition of these, as of a contagious g ment, beene infected, and haue either died, or beene sicke at the least of this plague. The Arke when it was in Dagon's Temple (because imprisoned in an Idoll-Temple) brake Dagon's neck: and when it was thence translated to their Cities, they also were filled with disease. Our Arke hath thus dealt with the Temples, and cannot well brooke the Cities and Lay-lands which imprison, or if they will appropriate it. O that they would once send it home where it should be. How faily and fully doe those words of Habacuk ⁱ agree to the houses founded for Religion, by this and like irreligion peruerred, and at last subuerted? ^k They couered an euill conuetsnesse to their house, they consuled shame to their owne konser, by destroying many people, and sinned against their owne soules. The stone hat cryed out of the wall, and the Beane out of the Tymber hath answered it; Woe unto him that buildeth a Towne with blood, and erecteth a Citie by iniquitie. Thus we see, the stones haue cryed out of their walles indeede, and by their demolished heapes may receiue Labans name, legar schadutha, the heape of winnesse, their ruines remayning testimonies of Gods iudgements. A violent streame (saith Master Camden) breaking through all obstacles, hath rushed out vpon the Ecclesiastick State of this Land, and ouerwhelmed, to the worlds wonder, and Englands griefe, the greatest part of the English Clergie, with their most beautifull buildings: and those riches which the Christian pietie of the English had from the time of their first Christianitie consecrated to God, were (as it were) in a moment disperfed, and (if I may so say) prophaned.

And let not our Temporall men pretend inheritances, and humane Lawes in these things of diuine right. For how can Kyrces (so called as synagogs, that is, the Lords houses, before giuen vp by solemne consecration into diuine possessions with their liuings) become humane, without surrender of the owner, or satisfaction to him? As the word since hath receiued a double aspiration, so the things themselves a doubling and deceiuing alteration, whereby he haue robbed our God as in Malachie * he complains: worse then the heathen, which he there iustifies; and which in that extreme Egyptian * famine, alienated all Lay possessions, but wanted this Aura sacra famae sacri, lett the Priests Lands intiolated, which yet were very large, as in our Egyptian Relations shall appeare. Poore Vezrah offered in a good intent (which I also thinke of many which were forward in suppression of Religious houses in the daies of King Henrie, and of other Church lands in King *Edward*s time) but God accepted not such zeale, and he by his vnclemy fates left the name to the place Perez Vzzah untill this day. Nor did King Henry long enioy that his Ecclesiasticall purchase; or long continue much wealthier by it, but was forced to base monies before his end; that I speake not of the short raigne of King *Edward*s sonne, that vertuous Prince, whose times rather then his holy hands, caused the desolations of the Chauntie lands (and how many other vanished away in that cloude?) after the dissolution of the former. And doe not our eyes see (in other respects to the ioy of our eyes, but to him a iudgement) notwithstanding so many wifes, a Perez Henry, a rupture of the kingdome from his loynes, and that iust to many yeeres (as some * haue obserued) after that his attempt, as the golden bead of the Babylonian Monarchie continued in that familie after the Temple prophaned and the holy vessels transported; when Balthazar escaped not, though he could pleade prescription of possession, succession and inheritance as our proprietaries, with a deerer purchase by costly siege, then these things cost the first purchasers after the suppression. I might here also end with the tragical ends of those that were forward in those enterprises: But I spare their names, and referre the Reader to our Histories, which yeelde to vs examples many of Salomons rule (from Wolsey downwards) that it * is a shame to deuoure that which is sanctified. So suddenly were they caught, so surely were they holden, in this snare; and as their zeale did eate vp Gods house (deuoured that which was sanctified, and got to many houses of God in the Land into Lay possession) so the diuine zeale of Gods House did eate vp them in bloody vntimely moriells. And let the present possiessors heare and feare.

Let none traduce me as a troubler of Israel, and a traducer of our Law and State, which haue thus both changed and settled these things. I enuigh against *Absolome*s conspiracie, and Achitophels deuices, which were the troublers of Israel, and so disturbed the iust heart of righteous Dauid, that on the sudden he a little forgot the exact rule: & commanded, Thou m and Ziba diuide the Lands. So (if losers may haue leaue to speake) our Parliament (perhaps with some extasie of ioy, for removing the sinnes and sinke of superstition) had in those busie times but negligent consideration of Asaphs words right; and our Vicar Meaphobeths, the Clergie then, did not much vrge it; yea, he would still say of these our halting Zibaes, Let them take all *, rather then we should want our Lord and his Gospell, to come home to vs in peace. And in peace let them rest which were Authors of this peace to vs; and let vs pray that a worse generation of Vipers do not arise, and that the Canker-worme eate not what the Grasshopper hath left, and the Caterpillar the residue of the Canker-worme. I meane those Laiton-patrons, and Patron-laitrons, whereof these extend to the vtmost, whatsoever might, and whatsoever colour of right, in exemptions, Customs, Priuiledges and prauileges, whereby every John-a-fille shall intercept the Churches due, or by a weightier fee, force a composition, or wrangle out some broken Title, or break the necke of the Cate with a Prohibition: the other hauing a trust committed, maketh himselfe a Bawde, and selleth his Church (which cost no money price then the blood of Christ) for money. Oh Christ, ouerthrowe the Tables of these money-changers, and with some whip driue them, scourge them out of thy Temple, which supplant thy plantations, and hinder the gayning of Soules for gayne. Withstand these Balaams, which for Balaaks blessing, care not what curse they bring vpon Israel, which present for presents, and scrape to maintaine their carnall liuing, out of our spiritual.

20 Of their First-borne, Priests, Leuites, and other Religious Persons.

After that we haue spoken of the Times, places and Rites sacred to God, order requirith next to speake of those persons, whose Office and Function it was to procure and manage those Diuine and Religious affaires. And first, amongst the first Hebrewes, we finde no Priest named before Abrahams time, in which Melchisedech was interpreted by the most, to be Sbem the sonne of Noah, Father both of this and other Nations : And Master Broughton hath written a whole booke in confirmation hereof. The heads of Families then exercised the Priestly office of teaching, praying, and sacrificing in their owne householdes, as we reade of ^{a Gen. 12. 19.} Abraham, ^{b Gen. 37.} Isaac, ^{c Gen. 49. 8. 6.} and ^{d Exod. 13. 2. 15.} Iacob : After that, the first borne of all the Tribes of Israel were consecrated to this businesse, when as God had destroyed the first-borne of Egypt, ^{e Exod. 13. 2. 15.} and these offered Sacrifices, ^{f Num. 3. 41.} vntill that the Leuites were chosen in their room; ^{g Gen. 49. 7.} God turning the Propheticall curse of Iacob, of scattering them in Israel, into a blessing, for the instructing of the Israelites. The cause of this their consecration was, because they, ^{h Exod. 32. 19.} in a zeale of GODS glorie had sanctified their hands to this ministerie in the blood of the neereist of their Idolatrous kindred, that had sinned in adoring the golden Calfs.

Now in the third of Numbers, where the first-borne of the Israelites, and the Leuites are numbered, appeareth a difficultie, which most of the Interpreters which I haue Read of that place, haue neglected : namely, that of the Israelitish first-borne there were found, from a month-old vpward, two and twenty thousand, two hundred seuentie and three ; and of the Leuites, but two and twenty thousand ; so that therefore there must be fise shekels a piece payed for the redemption of euery of those two hundred seuentie and three in surplage more then the Leuites ; whereas yet in the parcels of the Leuiticall account, are found more of the Leuites then of the Israelites, as appeareth ; the family of the Gerthionite, containing seuen thousand and fise hundred ; the Kohathites, eight thousand six hundred ; and the Family of Merari, six thousand and two hundred, which being added together, amount to two and twentie thousand and three hundred ; and therefore are seuen and twentie more then the Israelites. To this ^{i Lyra in Psalm. Diuiss. Carthusian.} Lyra, Dionysius Carthusianus, and Iunius (for the most are wholly silent) answer, that those three hundred ouer and aboue the two and twentie thousand were first-borne themselves, and therefore in right of the former challenge of the first-borne, were the Lords already. And if it seeme as much wonder (which Authors obserue not) that of two and twentie thousand, were but three hundred first-borne ; ^{k But one of 74.} That their exploit of executing their kindred for Idolatrie (before mentioned) in which sinne, the first borne, as Priests, were likeliest to haue followed Aaron, a chiefe man of their Tribe, might answere for me. And that cruell Edict ^{l Exod. 9.} of Pharaoh, and their miraculous fruitfulnessse, may make it lesse strange, that both in these Leuites there were so few first-borne, and in the other Israelites also, with whom amongst 603550. men from twentie yeeres olde vpwards, there were (though reckoning but from a moneth olde, as is said) but two and twentie thousand two hundred seuentie three, which is little more then one of seuen and twentie, besides that inequality of the persons numbered. Likewise as Phil. Ferdinand hath obserued out of Abraham ben David, if a woman first brought forth a female, neither that nor the sonne, if thce had any after, were of these sanctified first-borne. This excursion vpon this occasion, occasion, wherein I haue found diuers Interpreters mute, will (I hope) find pardon with the Reader, who happily himselfe may finde some better resolution.

Leuit 24.4.

To returne to our Historie; God had before appointed Aaron to be high Priest, and his Sonnes^m to be Priests, to whom the Leuites were assigned after (as we haue said) as assistants in inferiour offices of the Tabernacle. Aaron, from whom is reckoned the Iucession of the high Priests, in the same office, had appointed to him eight holy garments, a Breast-plate, an Ephod, a Robe, a brodered coate, a Miter, a Girdle, a Plate of gold, and linnen breeches. Also his sonnes had appointed to them Coates, and Bonets, and Girdles, and Breeches: Which their attire is described at large, Exodus 28. Iosephus writeth of the stones there mentioned; That that on the Priests right shoulder shined forth very bright, 10 when God was pleased with their Sacrifices, as did also those twelue in the breast-plate, when in the time of Warre God would assist them: Which ceased miraculously to shine two hundred yeeres before his time; or as the Talmudists say, from the building of the second Temple.

The consecration of the Priests, and Rites thereof are mentioned, Exodus 29. The conditions required in the high Priest, as that hee should not haue the bodily defects of blindness, lameness, maymednesse, &c. nor should vncouer his head, and many other such like, are expresse'd, Leuit. 21. His office was daily to light the Lights at the evening, and to burne incense at Morning and Evening, and once euerie Sabbath to set the Shew-bread before the Lord to Sacrifice, and once a yeere to make reconciliation in the holy-place, &c. 20 This office they executed till the captiuitie, after which they ruled also in the Commonwealth, and the familie of the Maccabees obtayned temporall and spirituall iurisdiction, being both Priests and Kings. But the state being vsurped by others, they also appointed high Priests at their pleasures: and thus were Annas and Caiaphas high Priests, although Caiaphas alone administrated the office, which was abrogated to Annas, the name only remaining: and thus Iosephus saith, that Annas was most happie, who had himselfe benee high Priest, and seene all his sonnes in that office, whereas in the institution, and before the Captiuitie, this office continued ordinarily with their liues: which after they enioyed longer or shorter, at pleasure of the Conqueror.

Next vnto the high Priest, were the Priests lineally descended from Eleazar and Ithamar, 30 the sonnes of Aaron, as in number many, so in their Priestly rayments, Consecration, Condition, and Office, much differing from the former, as appeareth, for their Garments, Leuit. 28. their Consecration 29. their Conditions required in them, Leuit. 10. and 21. and their Office in some things, as Preaching, Praying, Sacrificing, not much vnlike to the former, but in degree, sometime assisting him in these things, sometime alone, and in some things, nothing participating, as in Moses plainly may be seene. These Priestly families, being of the house of Eleazar sixtene, and of Ithamar eight, which Dauid by Lot distributed into foure and twentie orders, according to the number of the heads of families, those foure and twentie men, chiefe of those orders, being to the high Priest, as Aaron's sonnes were vnto him in their ministerie, 1. Chron. 24. and tooke turnes by courseⁿ in performing of the same, 40 as Luke sheweth^o in the example of Zacharie. Iosephus r^estelliereth the same, and affirmeth; That in each of these ranks were more then five thousand men in his time: And in the Historie of his life, saith, that himselfe was of the first of these orders, betwixt which was no small difference, and the heads of these were also called Chiefe Priests 9 in the old and new Testament. It was by their Lawe forbidden on paine of death to any Priest or Leuite, to intermeddle in anothers Function. But at the three Ioleme Feasts any of the Priests, which would, were permitted to Minister, and to participate with those whose course it then was: Onely they might not offer the Vowes, or Free-will, or ordinarie Offerings.

The Leuites had the next place in the Legall Ministerie: all that descended of Leui, 50 except the familie of Aaron, being thus called: And Nom. 3. according to the descent of the three sons of Leui had their offices assigned them, which so continued till the daies of Dauid. He distributed them according to their families vnto their severall functions, twentie foure thousand to the seruice of the Temple: six thousand to be Iudges and Rulers, foure thousand Porters, and foure thousand which prayd the Lord vpon Instruments. These were diuided vnder their Heads or Principals according to their families. The Leuiticall Muficians, with their Offices and Orders are reckoned, 1. Chron. 25. and 2. Chron. 7. These in stead of the silken Rote, which they ware, obtained in the daies of Agrippa, to wear a linnen one, like the Priests. The Porters are in the 26. of 1. Chron. described according to their families, orders, and offices. The Gibeonites, called after Netthanims, were at hand vnto the Leuites in the meaneſt Offices about the Tabernacle and Temple, 1ſa. 9. 21. and 1 Chron. 9. assigned hereunto first by Iſaia, after by Dauid and the Princes, for the seruice of the Leuites to cut wood, and draw water, for the house of God, Ezra. 8. Besides these Ecclesiasticall persons in the ordinarie Ministerie of the Temple were other, which may no lesse be counted holy: either in regard of Vow, as the Nazarites for a time: Samſon is an especiall example hereof; and Iames the lust, brother of our Lord: or else they were Prophets by extraordinary calling, as Samuel, Eſay, Ieremie, and others: to whom God manifested his will by dreames, visions, and reuelations: whose ordinarie habite seemes to be a rugged hayrie garment, by the example of Elijah, and the false Prophets, and of Iohn Baptist afterward. And thus much of those persons, which according to the Law were sacred to God: it followeth that wee should obserue their superstitious deuoting of themselves, according to their owne deuices and traditions, vnto a supposed seruice of God, in a more strict manner then ordinarie, or some-what in opinion and practice differing both from the Law, and the rest of the Iewish people. Of this kinde were many Sects; whereof we are next to speake.

CHAP. VIII.

Of their ancient Diuisions and Idolatries.

IN this matter of Alterations, and alterations amongst them, about Questions and practice of Religion, we are in the first place to obserue their often Apostasies ^a from the truth of the Law to the Idolatrous superstitions of the neighbouring Nations: as the Reliques of the Egyptian Idolatrie in the golden Calf, Exod. 32. their often murmurings in the desert, the presumption of Nadab and Abihu, and after of Aaron and Miriam, the conspiracie of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, Baalans stumbling-blocke, to couple them in Idolatrous seruice to Baal. For the Idoll of the Moabites: And after their possession of the Land, when Iosua and the Elders were dead, they serued ^b the gods of the people that were round about them, as Baal and Astartoth: Of the Idolls and their Rites is before spoken. And although Gideon cut downe the groue, and destroyed the Altar of Baal, ^c yet he made an Ephod of the euerings of the prey, and put it in Ophrah his Citie, & all Israel went a whoring there after it ^d; and after his death, made Paal-berith their God. They serued also the Gods of Aram, Zidon, Moab, Ammon, ^e and the Philistims: Michah ^f an Ephraimite made an house of Gods, an Ephod, and Teraphim, and consecrated one of his sonnes to be his Priest; and after set a Leuite, Ionathan, in his roome, the occasion of Apostasie to a great part of the Tribe of Dan, all the while the house of God was in Shiloh: besides, the corruption of state and religion by the Beniamites, and by Hophni and Phinehas the sons of Eli.
^g Elihu Leuna describeth the forme of sacrificing or hallowing their Teraphim in this sort. They killed a man which was a first borne, wreathing his head from his bodie, and embalming the same with salt and spices: and then wrote vpon a plate of gold, the name of an vncleane spirit, and putting the same vnder the head, set it vpon a wall, and burned Candles before it and worshipped the same. R. Abraham ^h saith, they were Images of men made to receiue power from above, as the Idolaters conceiued of them.

But after the reformation of Religion by Samuel, Dauid, and Salomon (who yet became after an Idolater) befell their greatest Apostasie, to wit, of the ten Tribes; from God, their King, and Religion, by the our-wile policie of Ieroboam, which corrupted and subuerted both it and himselfe. He (lest those reuolted Israelites should, by frequenting Gods appointed worship at Ierusalem, re-acknowledge their former and truer Lord) consecrated two Egyptian Calues at Bethel and ¹ Dan, and made an House of High Places, and Priests of the lowest of the people.

1. King. 12.

² Iudah also made them, in the same times, High Places, Images, and Groues, on euery high hill, and vnder euery greene Tree. Yet had the kingdom of Iudah their entercourtes of corruption and reformation, according as they had good or bad Kings; but in Israel the Common-wealth and Church receiued, by that sinne of Ieroboam, an incurable wound and irrecoverable losse, vntill that in Gods iust punishment, they were carried away by the Assyrian Kings into Assyria, and into Hala, Habor, and the Cities of the Medes, as 1. King. 17. appeareth, where is recorded a summarie collection of these and other their Idolatries. Of these exiled Israelites (if wee beleue the reports and coniectures of diuers Authors) are descended those Tartarians, which since ouer-ranne, with their Conquests, a greater part of Asia and Europe, then euer any other Nation, before or since: Of which, their Originall and Exploits, wee shall in fitter place further discourse. But it is farre more probable, that in, and after the Babylonish Captiuitie, the Israelites adioyned themselves in Religion to the other Iewes, at least, the greatest part of them. And though not many returned with Exra, yet those parts remayned full of Iewes, hauing their Vniuersities and some kinde of gouernment, till the Saracenicall deluge, and in some tolerable condition after, as Beniamin relates, which continued till the time of the Tartars, which had they bene of this Nation, they would haue preferred them; whereas euer since their times the estate of the Iewes hath bene more contemptible then before. I denie not, that many of them might mixe themselves with the Nations with whom they liued, and grow into one people with them: and that there might be in diuers places some remnants of this Israelitish dispersion, as Beniamin reckons some, and Trigant in China, coniectures of others. But this Tale of the Tartars, and that of other of the inclosed Iewes, seeme but idle drames, without any good ground of truth or credit.

The other Kingdome of Iudah, although it receiued sometime some breathing and refreshing vnder her more Vertuous and Religious Kings, yet for the most part, growing vnder Tyrannic and Idolatric, was at last a prey to the Babylonians: From which seruitude being freed by the Persian Monarches, vnder varieties of aduerse and prosperous fortunes, it was afterwards rent and torne by the Macedonians, being made a common Stage for the Armes and Armies of the successours of Ptolemy in Egypt, and Seleucus in Asia, remayning meede vnto the Conquerour, and receiuing no small impressions and wounds in Soule as well as Bodie, in Religion as in Politic. But being after deliuered from Macedonian thraldome by the Familie of the Macchabees, the Gouerment, Ecclesiasticall and Temporall, became theirs, but the mindes of this Iewish people was in those times diuided in diuersitie of Sects and Opinions, of which the Euangelicall and other Histories make mention.

One diuision * was of the whole Nation, not so much for opinion as for the differing habitation, which brought also some circumstances of other differences. The Iewes therefore were generally thus distinguished, The Hebrewes which dwelt in Palestina, and the scattered strangers, as Peter calls them: to wit, the Grecians (these two sorts are mentioned by Luke, Act. 6.1.) and the διασπορά Βαβυλῶν, or the remainders of the deportation of Babylon, the Metropolis whereof was Babylon, while it remayned, and after Bagded. The Metropolis or head of the διασπορά Εξιδων or Εξιδισα was Alexandria, where also in Beniamin Iudeensis his time, there was a Synagogue of the Babylonian dispersion, 40 The Asian Iewes were most of this Babylonian sort; to these Saint Peter wrote from Babylon, which therefore he nameth not in the inscription. The Hellenists were so called of hellenizing or vying the Greeke tongue in their Synagogues (in which they had the Scriptures translated) in Egypt, Greece and Italic. By reason of this translation the Hebrews and Hellenists often disagreed (for the Hebrewes called it a backward reading, because it is read from the left hand to the right) which sometime brake forth into open violence. R. Eleazar assaulted the Synagogue of the Alexandrians at Ierusalem, and committed there-in much outrage: And Christian Chariie could scarce combine them, as Luke mentioneth, Act. 6.1. This Greeke translation was vsed by them throughout Europe: they had it in Hebrew Letters, as Tertullian testifieth in the Scrapium at Alexandria. Thus Philo and other of these learned Hellenists, were ignorant of the Hebrew. Likewise of those Hebrewes, there was small reckoning had of the Galilzans by their supercilious and superstitious brethren of Iudaea, as the Gospell hath taught vs.

m The Iewes haue a tale of Alexander, opening certaine mountaines by magicke, and therein including a multitude of Iewes beyond Babylon in the hill Cappion, which haue a King ouer them, and are called red Iewes, &c. *vid. p. II.

Of the Karraim and Babbins, and of the Hafidai.

THE opinions of the Jewes may be reduced into these two generall heads: the one were such as contented themselves with the Law of God, and were called Karraim, or Koraim, of which sort there are diuers at this day in Constantinople, and other where: The other Rabbinitz, Supererogatorie (as Doctor Hall calls them) and Popish Jewes, called Hafidim, professing a more strict holinesse then the Law required. Yet at first these both pleased themselves, and did not by opposition of Science, displease each other, and disagreeing in opinion, they yet in affection agreed. But when these voluntarie seruices beganne to bee drawne in Canons, and of arbitrarie became necessary, they were rent into sundrie Sects. Of these and their originall, let vs heare Scaliger speake.

There were 6 (saith he) before the times of Hasmonei, two kinds of Dogmatists, men holding differing opinions, among the Jewes: the one onely accepting the written Law; the other Tradition, or the addition to the Law. Of the former kinde arose the Karraim, of whom came the Sadduces; of the latter, the Pharises. These Pharises were the issue of the Hafidees.

The Hafidees were a Corporation, Guild, or Fraternitie, which voluntarily adicted themselves to the Offices of the Law, 1. Macchabees, chap. 2. verse 42. Their originall was from the times of Ezra, or Esdra; Hagai and Zacharie, the Prophets, being Authors of this Order. These, in regard of their institution, were called Holy, Hafidim; and in regard of their Combination; Hafidai. And besides that which the Law enioyned (which is iust debt) they supererogated, and of their owne free accord disbursed vpon the Temple and Sacrifices. They professed not onely to liue according to the prescript of the Law, but if any thing could by interpretations and consequences be drawne thence, they held themselves bound to satisfie it, and when they had done all, to seeme to haue done nothing, but accounted themselves unprofitable seruants notwithstanding.

Every one paid a tribute to the reparations of the Temple, from the times of Esdra and Nehemias. The Hafidzans added further (of their owne free-will) to the Sanctuarie, Walles, and Porches, neuer (almost) going from the Temple, which they seemed to hold peculiar to themselves, and by which they vied to sweare, By this Habitable, or, By this house: Which the Pharises, their posteritie, also did e, as likewise they learned of them to build the Sepulchres of the Prophets. They were therefore called Hafidim, either because their Colledge was instituted of the Prophets; or of their holy and religious workes, and the sacred buildings by them euer repaired, or reared from the foundations. And therefore when wicked Alexandus had killed thre score men of this Corporation or Guild, the people thought their death was prophesied in the 5 Psalme, such reputation was there of their holinesse.

These Hafidzi were not in proper sense a Sect, but a Fraternitie, which euery day assembled in the Temple, and offered in daily Sacrifice a Lambe, which was called, the sin offering of the Hafidim. One day was excepted, the eleuenth of Tisri, in which that Sacrifice was omitted.

They offered not themselves (for they were not Priests) but the Priests in their name. Abraham Zacuth saith, That Baba, the son of Bura, daily of his owne accord offered a Ram for a sin-offering, except one day, which was the day after the Expiation. And this was called, the Sacrifice of the Saints for Sin: And he sware, By this Habitable, that is, the Temple. Of this kinde, or much like thereto, Scaliger thinketh the Rechabites were, which Ieremia mentioneth, whose immediate father he accounteth Ionadab (not him which liued in the daies of Iehu, but another of that name) and that their austere order began but a little before it ended (namely, in the same Prophets time) quickly ending, because of the captiuitie. After the Captiuitie these sonnes of Ionadab, renewing their former obseruations, were called Hafidai, which went not from the Temple, and obserued the orders aboue mentioned: so Scaliger interpreteth Ieremies Prophecie, that Ionadab should not want one to stand before the Lord, that is, to minister & attend holy duties in the temple, like to Anna the Prophetesse. This, saith he, is the true beginning of the Hafidai, which abstained from wine, as did also the Priests, as long as they ministered in the temple. Thus much Scaliger. As for that which Serarius hath writt against Scaliger and Drusius in this argument, both in his Tribaculum and his Minerall, or else where, I refer the Reader to himselfe, choosing rather to expresse what I thinke probable then entertainmen with long vnnecessary disputes. Drusius is proueth, that diuers of the Pharises and Esses also were of these Hafidai, whereby it appeareth, that it was rather a Brotherhood, as Scal. calleth it, then a Sect. He sheweth their Rules and Discipline, out of Iuchasin.

They spent 9. houres of the day in prayer. They beleueed that a man might sin in thought, & therefore they had care thereof; their will was not without the will of Heaven, that is, of God. Ten things were peculiar to them: Not to lift vp their eyes aboue ten cubits: 2. Not to goe bare-headed: 3. To establish three refectiōs: 4. To dispose their hearts to Prayer: 5. Not

Not to looke on eyther side : sixthly, To goe about, that they might not bee troublesome to any companie : Seuenthly, Not to eate at the Tables of great men : eighthly, If they had augred any man, quickly to appease him : ninthly, To haue a pleasant voyce, and to descend to the interpretation of the Law : tenthly, to accustome themselves to their Threads and Phylacteries.

Rab (one of his Fraternitie) did not lift vp his eyes aboue foure cubits, Tenne or twentie daies before their death, they were diseased with the Collicke, and so all cleare and cleane they departed into the other life.

To returne vnto Scaliger touching the originall of Sects, and to leaue those Hesidizian obseruants, As long (saith he) as Supererogation onely was vsed, there was no Sect in the people of God : But when the precepts thereof were brought into Canons, and committed to writing, then arose many doubts, disputations, alterations, growing and succeeding daily, from whence sprang two Sects, differing in opinion; the one admitting onely the Law, the other embracing the interpretations and expositions of their Rabbines. The former in proceesse of time, was diuided into two. For at first, the Karaim were only such as obscured the Law and the Prophets, till the times of Sadok and Bosthi, or Basthi, who first doubted of the punishment of sinnes, and rewards of good works, from whom sprang the heresie of the Saducees. The Karaim were not before this diuided in Sect from the Hafidim, but onely in those voluntarie Functions and Supererogations, wherein the Law, by Injunction, ruled the former, and these, as is said, supererogated. But when Canons and Injunctions began to bee written, then of these Hafidim arose Dogmatists, which called themselves Perushim, Hafsi, and Separated both from the other Hafidim, and from the Vulgare; making a necessitie of that obseruation, which before was voluntarie. This sort was againe diuided into those which retained the name Perushim, or Pharises; and the Essens; both receiuing from their Authors the Rules and Precepts of their Sect. After this, the Pharises were diuided into many kinds : The Iewes reckon seuen. The Essens also were diuided first into Cloysters, or Collegians, which liued in a common societie; and Eremites, or solitarie persons; and those former into such as married; and others which remained continent.

Of the Pharises.

3. Sect 12.

OW let vs consider of these more particularly; and first of the Pharises, Drusius deriueth the name from the Syrian, as most of the names of the new Testament are, and not from the Hebrew; for then it should not bee Pharises, but Pharusus: as after the Hebrew, it should rather be Mashim, then Messias. The Etymologie some fetch from Phares, which signifieth Diuision, as Epiphanius, and Origen, with others: against which Drusius excepteth, because in Phares the last Letter is Taddis; here it is Schim. Others deriue it from Parah, signifying to expaine, because they did all things openly, to be seene of men: it is not likely: for Hypocritise loues her workes should be seene, but not her Humor (then should it be hypocritise): she would not be seene in her affection to be seene: And this name, in this sense would haue bene to their infamie, and not to their reputation, which they most ayimed at. A third deriuation of this name, is from another signification of the same Verbe, to expound. But to expound the Law, was more proper to the Scribes; and some of the Pharises were not expofitors. Howbeit, the most probable opinion is, that they were so called of Separation; because they were, or would seeme to be, separated from others: first, in cleannesse of life; secondly, in dignitie thirdly, in regard of the exequitennice of those obseruations, whereto they were separate fourthly, in their habit, wherein they were (as our Monkes) distinguished from the people; yea, they did abhorre the garments of the people.

Their opinions are gathered by Iosephus, and others, out of whom Drusius, Serarius, Scaliger and others. They attributed (saith Iosephus) all things to Fate, Abraham Zacutus interpreteth their opinion thus, They beleue that God knoweth and disposeth all things, and the Stars helpe; yet so, as free-will is left in the hand of man. And if a man by his free-will chuseth the good, God will helpe him in his good way. They say; That there is no Heare in Earth which hath not his proper Planet in Heauen.

The ascribte immortalitie to the Soule, holding, that iudgement passed on it vnder the Earth; and that if it had done cuill, it was adiudged to perpetuall prisons; if well, it had easie returne vnto life by a transmigration, or going into another body. So Zacutus: The good Soules take delight in their good workes; the bad descend, and ascend not. They be-

leued that there were both Devils and good Angels. They conceived, that he which kept the most of the commandments, although he transgresse in some, is iust before God : against which opinion g Burgensis thinketh, that James alledged that saying in his Epistle, Hic ubi fateretur in omni, est gualite of all. He citeth Rab. Moses for his Pharisaicall opinion; That God iudgeth according to the pluralitie or paucitie (to vse his owne words) of merits or demerits. Like stufte haue I read in S. Francis Legend, of the ballance wherein mens deeds are weighed, and the Deuil lost his prey by the weight of a Chalice, which one had giuen to the Saint; which heauie metall caused the Scale wherein his good dees were put (before too light) to weigh heauiest. They (the ancients Pharises) confesse the Resurrection of the flesh. Here of are three opinions h : one; That all, good and bad, shall rise againe; another, That the iust onely shall rise : a third, That the iust, and part of the wicked shall rise.

They call their Traditions the Law giuen by Word, and the vnwritten Law, which they equall to the written, deriuing both from Moses, as more fully else-where shall bee said. These Traditions they called Διδαχαι, as both Epphanius and Hieronymus witnesse : the Teachers thereof Σοφοι or Wise-men, and when they lectured, they were wont to say, of Σοφοι διδάσκοντες i. The wise-men teach Traditions. Of these Traditions were, concerning the Sabbath, That they might iourney from their place two thousand cubites; (Hierome h accounteth sette, Origen h Elnes) That none might carry any burthen that day, but they interpreted, if one carried on one shoulder, it was a burthen; if on both, it was none; if his

30 shoes had nailes, they were a burthen, otherwise not. Concerning fasting, the Pharise boasteth, Luke 18.12. I fast twice in the weeke : which they obserued (sayth Theophilact l) on the second and fifth day, Mundaies and Thursdaies. Happily our Wednesdaies and Fridaies succeeded in this Penance, that we might not seeme to be behind them in dutie, howsoever we disagree with them in their time. And yet Mercerus saith, The Iewes fasted the fourth day, Wednesday, because they held that vnluckie, in which children are taken with the Squinancie. Further, the Pharises ate not vnwashed εσθον ψαλμον ελεος σου, Marke 7.3. Except they wash with the fist, as Beza translaeth. Scaliger m expoundeth it, not by washing one fist in the other, but composing the fingers into such a frame, that all their ends meete on the top of the thumbe, which for want of another name is called ψαλμον, a Fist, although it 30 be not properly so. In this forme they hold vp their hands in washing, that the water may slide downe to the elbow, and thence fall to the ground, as the Iewes vse to this day. They washed when they came from Market, because sinners & vnclane persons were there, whose touch might pollute them. They washed also Cups and Brasen vessels and Beds, not Chamberbeds to lie on (Drysio m expoundeth) but dining-beds, which they vied in stead of Tables.

They would not eate with Publicans or sinners, yea, they accounted themselves polluted with their touch.

Their hypocritie in prayer Christ mentioneth, that it was long, and open in the streets, &c. It was thrice in the day, at the third, sixt, and ninth houre : Their words submisse and softly, as of Hannah, 1. Sam. 1. and toward the Temple.

40 They Tyched all, Luke 18. Math. 23. euen the smallest matters. For Tyches (saith Akiba) are the Hedges of thy Riches. And another Prouerbe (learne it) Tyibe, that thou must be rich, Epphanius q addeth, they paid first fruits, thirtieths, and fiftieths, Sacrifices and Vowes.

Their Phylacteries or Seruatories, Defensiuos (so the word signifieth) in Hebrew Tosaphoth, they vied as Preferatiues, or Remembrancers of the Law, and wore them larger then other men. Hierome calls them Pittaciola, resembling to them herein some simple superstitious women, wearing little Gospels, and the wood of the Crosse, and such like, of zeale, not according to knowledge, straying a Gnar, and swallowing a Cammell. This superstition, then complained of by Hierome, yet remaineth (saith Scaliger) among Christians and Mahumetans, which wear about them the Gospell of S. Iohn. Christ condemneth not the Rite, 50 but their ambition, for dilating, not for wearing them, to which all the Iewes were bound, and all the Iewes and Samaritans obserued. They vied the like ambition in their Fringes or twised Tassels, which the Iewes call Zizis, and vse them still, as after shall appeare. Their Oathes were, By Ierusalem, the Temple, the Heauen, Earth, their Head, by the Law, 1. Fagius obserueth, that the Iewes in swearing, lay their hand on the booke of the Lawe at this day. Other Oathes are little esteemd. Hence it seemeth came our corporall oathes on a booke. The Iewes (saith Capito m) thinke it no Oath, if one forswear by Heauen, or Earth, vnlesse he say by him which dwelleth there, &c. And none is subiect to that Curse, in which the name of God is not added.

That of Corban pertayning to this place, mentioned Math. 15. 5. & Marke 7.11. which 60 some interpret, as if a Iew should say to his Parents, That he had already dedicated all that to God (to whom vowes are to be performed) where with he might haue helped them. Doct^r Rainolds f saith, that the Iewes, as they were prone to vngodly vowes, so this was an vsuall vow amongst them, and they would binde it with an Oath, That such or such a man should haue no profit by them. The Oath which they herein vied as most solemne, was, By the Gift: so fo they were instructed, * That if any sware by the Altar it was nothing, but if by the Gift, he was a debtor. The Pharises therefore taught, if any had said to his father, By the Gift thou shalt haue no profit by me, then he might in no case doe them any good, against the Commandement, Honour thy Father, &c. The Iewes vied to binde their vovves with a curse, as they which vowed * Pauls death, vying yet to suppress the curse it selfe, as, If they shall enter into my rest: So these, By the gift, if they haue any profit by me, meant, they should haue none. Thus the Talmud (saith he) the Booke of their Canon Law, and Schoole-Diuinitie, saith; That a man is bound to honor his Father, vnlesse he vow the contrary. Masius 10 explaineth it thus; That they did consecrate (by saying Corban) all, where-with they should haue benefited their parents: as if they had said; Let it be Anathema, or deuoted, whatsoever it be, with which I may profit thee. And therefore those Rabbines, vnder pretext of Religion, allowed not to spend on his parents, that which he had thus vowed to God. Scaliger 4 thus interpreteth the place, as if a sonne being by his parents admonished of his dutie, should put them off, with this exception, vnlesse that which I haue offered for thee, free me of this burthen. But let the more curious reade it in himselfe, and what Masius, Serarius, and others haue written hereof.

The Phariſees were esteemed pitifull: The Sadducees more * cruell. 2 They were much addicted to Astrologie, and the Mathematickes; whose names of the Planets, Epiphanius 1 re- 20 hearcieth, as also the twelue Signes.

There were 8 seuen sorts of the Pharises, which the Talmud reckoneth: first, Sichemita, which measure pietie by honour and profit, as the Sichemites, which for the marriage of Dina endured circumcision: Secondly, Nasbi, which lifted not his feete from the ground: the third, Kisai, Draw-blood, which smiteth his head to the wall, to cause the blood to come and also shutteth his eyes, that he behold not a woman: The fourth, that standeth on his perfection, called Machobathi: What is my sinne? as if there wanted nothing to his Righteousnesse: The fift, Maduchia, which goe lowly and stooping: The sixth, The Phariſee of Lone, which obeyeth the Law for loue of vertue or reward: The seuenth, the Phariſee of Feare, which is holden in obedience by feare of punishment. This they call, Abi Phariſee, the former Abrahams. 30

Epiphanius 1 describeth their strict obseruations. Some (saith he) prescribed to themselves ten yeeres, or eight or foure yeeres continence. Some lay on planks, which were onely nine inches broad, that when they slept, they might fall to the pavement, so to be awakened againe to prayer, and keepe themselves waking. Others put stones vnder them for the same end, by pricking to awake them: Others lay on Thornes for that purpose. Scaliger 1 repro- ueth Epiphanius for affirming, that the Pharises were womens attire, as not agreeing to their austierie, which despised all beds, beate themselves against walles, and put thornes in the finges of their garments, to prick them: he thinketh him deceiued by some Iewes report; and addeth, that the moderne Iewes haue little or no knowledge of those ancient Pharises, 40 but as they learne it of the Christians, or of Pseudo-Gerionides (so hee calleth the Hebrew booke, attributed to Ioseph Ben Gorion, whom Drossius esteemeth, and Scaliger proueth to be a counterfeite, wherein Serarius and Ribera concurte with them.)

The Pharises in a selfe-conceit and singularitie, called, all but themselves, in a disgracefull forme, * Other men: so said he, Luke 18. I am not as other men: whereas they accounted themselves Masters of others, on whom also they bound beanie burthens, in their Rules and Cases, the breach whereof they iudged Sinne in the people, but yet held not themselves bound thereto. For example, Every Israelite ought euery day, by their Rule, to say ouer the ten Commandements, and that in the first Watch, which might not be deferred for danger of sinne; and yet amongst themselves they esteemed it lawfull at any houre of the night. 50 But vpon the Proselytes they imposed more then on the other Israelites, all which they were bound to (in their censure) vnder paine of Hell fire; and therefore Christ said, They made them two fold more the children of Hell then themselves; for they freed themselves from many of those impositions they laid on the Conſciences of others: And these Proselytes the lesse troubled, and therefore burthened them with more obseruations.

fter we haue spoken of the Pharisees, which loued the first roomes (which they haue heret obtained) it followeth to speake next of the Sadducees, ^a who in the New Testament are often mentioned. ^b Beda giueth an vniust interpretation of their name, saying, the Sadducees are interpreted Iust. Epiphanius ^c also fetcheth their name from Sedes, which signifieth Iustice. Lyra ^d alleageth a reason, because they were seuerie and rigorous in iudgement, they gaue this name of Iust (not iustly) to themselves. Burgensis ^e otherwise; as of Arriu were the Artians, so of one Sadoch (saith hee) are the Sadducees called, who was the first inuenter of their Heresie. Serarius denieth the name from both. The Phatisees were esteemed more iust then they, as appeareth Luke 18.9. They counted themselves iust, and despised others; Sammamius, summa iniuria. Their rigorous Iustice, was vniust rigour. ^f This Sadoc, or rather Saduc, liued vnder Antigonus Socheus, who succeeded to Simen the iust : His fellow Scholler was Baitbos, of whom came the Baitheleus. So saith Abraham ben David in his historicall Cabball : Antigonus said, *Be ye not as seruants, which Minister to their Prince, on condition to receiue reward. Sadoc and Baitbos asked him of this thing : And he answered, that they should not put confidence in the reward of this life, but in the world to come. But they denied his words, and said ; We neuer heard any thing of the world to come ; for they had bene his Disciples : and they dissented from him, and went to the Sanitarie of Mount Garizim, where the Princes were. They vpbraided the Phatisees with their Traditions, saying ; The Tradition is in the hand of the Phatisees, to vex themselves in this World, whereas in the World to come, they haue no reward. Antigonus his words are in the Treatise Pirke Aboth. Be ye not seruants which minister to a Prince, to receiue of him reward : But be ye as seruants which minister to their Prince, with this condition, that they receiue no reward, and let the feare of God be vpon you. ^g Elias Lenia thus reporteth it : Antigonus Socheus had two Disciples, Zadok and Baitbor, which cleauing their Master to follow wicked men, first beganne to deny the Lawe, which was giuen by word of mouth, and beleued nothing but that which was written in the Law : Wherefore they were called, Karraim, that is, Bible-men, or Textuals, and in the Romane Tongue they call them Sadducees. These two are reported also to haue forsaken their Master Antigonus, and as Apostaticall Heretikes, to haue embraced Sanballatts new Samaritan Religion at Carizim.*

Baitbor had a certaine family from Sadoc, otherwise held the same opinions, as Hillel and Sammiai among the Phatisees ; so these were two chiefe Masters of the Sadducean Schooles. The Baitheuzans ministred to Baitbos in vessels of siluer and gold. These Sadduces were called Mimim, or Mines, that is, Heretikes. They are called Karraim, because they would 40 seeme Textuall, and Scripture-men, disallowing Traditions, ^h of Kara, which signifieth the Scripture : which was called Kara, or Cara, of Cara to reade, saith Drusius, ⁱ because of the diligence which ought to be vsed in reading the Scriptures, whereunto men should designe (after the Iewish precepts) the third part of their life. Abraham Zachuth calls them Epicures. The Scriptures they interpreted after their owne sense, nor regarded they the words of the Wise-men ; that is, the Pharisees. They were of the ancient Caraans, or Karraim, but not of those which now are so tearmed ; Which as Zachuth confesseth, confesse the Resurrection, and Reward. Scaliger ^k affirmeth, by the testimonie of Philip Frederike a Christian Jew, who had great familiaritie with these Karraim at Constantinople, and had bene often present at their Synagogue, that they differed nothing from the other Jewes, but in rejecting Traditions, and are farre more honest and faithfull then the Rabbanim, of whose they are no lesse hated for their integritie, then for rejecting Tradition. But in comparison of the ^l Rabbanim, there are but fewe of the Karraim : And these are of the Reliques of the olde Sadducees. These two Sects haue nothing common betweene them, but the Text of the Scripture : They haue a differing account of their New-Moones : the other Jewes reckoning from the Coniunction, these Karraim from the time of apparition, as doe the Atabians.

Concerning the Karraim now remayning, it is reported that the other Jewes, and they will not speake one to another : so inextinguishable hatred doe the other Jewes conceiue against them. And Posellus saith, ^m There are three principall Sects of the Jewes in the Easterne

50 parts ; Talmudists ; Karraim, which reject those Glosses. They are rich, but so hated of the rest, that a great part of their Virgins remaine vnmarried : And if (saith the common Jew) it should so happen, that a Carrain & a Christian should fall together into the water, with like poſſibilitie of ſaving either, he would make a bridge of the Carrain to ſave the Chriſtian. The third ſort is the Samaritan, of which afterward, Buxdorf.^a ſaith, that there are of theſe Carrain alſo in Poland; and Leo^b mentioneth ſome places in Barbarie, where this ſort of Jewes do inhabit; as you may hereafter read in our ſixt booke, and the eleventh Chapter. Some alſo are in Paleſtina.

Fiſt, their difference from the Phariſees was about the future reward, which being denied, they by conſequence of that error fell into the reſt, to denie the Reſurrection; the ſubſiſtence ſpiritually, &c. They cooped up God in Heauen, without all beholding of euill. They denied Fate, which the Phariſees held. They denied Spirit altogether, ſaith Lira,^c for they held God to be corporeall; the ſoule to die with the bodie: Angels and diuels they denied: Good and Euill they aſcribed to a mans free-will.^d They were inhospitable and cruell; and as cruellly hated of the people. They are charged (the Diuell may be ſlandered) to denie all Scripture but Mofes: But fiſt in Scripture, this opinion of theirs is not mentioned; and Joſephus affirmeth, that they received the Scriptures, and reſeſted Tradition. Neither would the zealous people of the Jewes haue endured them in the Temple, if they had denied their Prophets, for feare of whom they durſt not profeſſe otherwiſe of Iohn Baptiſt, although hee had left no monument of miracle, or Scripture. Druſius^e would reconcile this opinion of the Fathers, which, ſay they, denied all but Mofes; and the other, ſaying, that ſome of the Sadducees liued in Iudæa, others in Samaria. Theſe later happily, with the Samaritans, denied all ſaue Mofes. Amongſt theſe were the Apoſtata's, which liued in Sichem, mentioned by Iosephus, Antiq. lib. 1. cap. 8. and Eccleſ. 50. 27. Ianius thinketh that they fell from the Jewiſh Religion with Manaſſer, in the time of Nebuchadnezzar.

The Sect of the Sadducees was diminiſhed, if not worne out, after the deſtruction of the Temple, till in the yeere 4523. or after Scaliger, 4515. and Anno Dom. 755. one Anan and Sand his ſon renewed that Doctrine, becauſe he had not received his expected promotion to the degree of Gaon.^f He wrote bookes againſt the other Jewes. The like did one Carcaſſani. But of theſe Sadducees too much.

Of the Heſſees.

OF the Effees, Effens or Heſſees, followeth in the next place. Their name Scaliger^a deriveth of a word which ſignifieth Reſt, or quietneſſe and ſilence: both which well agreed to their inſtitution. He diſproueth that opinion of Eusebius, and others, that therein ſollowed him, which thought theſe Jewiſh Heretikes were Chriſtian Monkes and Catholikes. Such Catholikes let Baronius,^b and Bellarmine^c boaſt of, as the Authors of their Monkes, for ſo they would haue them; which you may beleuee as well as before the Flood, Enoch, and after, Elias, Iohn Baptiſt, the Nazarites, and Rechabites, were Monkiſh Votaries, as the Cardinal would haue you. As for theſe Effees, hee makes no ſmall adoe againſt the Centuries, & for vnderſtanding Philo of Jewiſh, and not of Chriſtian Monkes. But the loue to Monckery hath dazled the eyes of men too much: and even their Hiſtorie (which followeth) will conuince that opinion of falſehood. Beſides, Chriſtianity ſhould haue ſmall credit of ſuch associates. Indeed the later Monkes are much like them in ſuperſtition and idolatrie, though farre behind in other things. But he that will ſee this Argument diſputed, let him read Scaliger his Confutation of Serarius the Ieſuite. He ſheweth alſo that the Offens, Samſezans, Meſſalians, and diuers heretics amongſt the Chriſtians, ſprung from theſe Effees: That the Egyptian Effees, of which Philo ſpeaketh, out of whom Eusebius fiſt collected that conceit, and that Philo himſelfe, had no ſkill in the Hebrew, but knew onely the Greeke tongue: that Paulus the Eremit in Thebaïs, was the fiſt Author of Monachiſall liuing. But now to come to our Hiſtorie of theſe men.

Theſe Effees, Heſſees, or Effens, are placed by Plinie on the Weſt of dead Sea^a & a people ſolitarie, and in the whole world moſt admirable, without women, without money; a Nation eternal, in which none is borne, the wearineſſe of others fortunes being the cauſe of their fruitfull multiplyings, Philo in that booke he intitled, that all good men are free, ſaith, that there were of them about foure thouſand, called Effei, quæſi ſeui, that is, Holy, not facrificing other creatures, but their mindes vnto God. Some of them were Husband-men, ſome Artificers, for neceſſitie, not for abundance: they make no weapons of war, nor meddle with Merchandize. They haue no ſervants, but are all both free and mutually ſervants to each other. They liue perpetually chaſte, ſwear not at all, nor lye: eſteeming God the giuer of all good, and Author of no euill: Their ſocietie is ſuch; that one garment, one houſe, one foode, one treasure, one getting, one spending, one life, is in common to them all; carefully providing for their sick, and holding the elder men in place of parents.

Iosephus, who himselfe liued among them, doth more largely describe them. ^b He reporteth that they were by Nation Iewes, auoiding pleasures and riches as finnes; accounting continence and contentednesse great vertues. They marrie not, but instruct the children of others, respecting them as their kindred, in their manners: not denying the lawfulnessse of marriage, but the honestie of women. He which becommeth one of their fraternitie, must make his goods common. Oyle and neatnesse they shunne, yet weare alwaies a white garment. They haue officers for their common prouision. They haue no one certaine Citie, but in each, many of them haue their houses: to strangers of their owne Sect, they communicate their goods and acquaintance; and therefore carry nothing with them in their iourneys, but weapons for feare of the eues; and in euery Citie haue of the same Colledge an especiall Officer which prouideth for strangers. The children vnder tuition of Masters are alike prouided for; nor doe they change their rayment till the old be worne; They neither buy nor sell, but mutually communicate. Deuout they are in the seruice of God. For, before the Sunne riseth, they speake of no prophane or worldly matter, but celebrate certaine Prayers, as ⁱ praying him to rise. Then by their Officers are each appointed to their workes, till the fifth houre, at which time they assemble together, and, being girded with linnen garments, wash themselues with cold water. Then doe they goe into their dining-rooms, as into a Temple, where no man of another Sect may be admitted; and there staying with silence, the Pantler sets them bread in order, and the Cooke one vessell of broth. The Priest giueth thanks, as after dinner also. Then laying aside those their holy garments, they plie their worke till the Evening; and then suppe in like manner. There is neuer crying or tumult, they speake in order, and obserue euen without the house a venerable silence. In other things they are subiect to their ouerseer, but at their owne choice may helpe and shew mercy to others. To their kindred they cannot giue without licence. What they say, is certaine: but an Oath they hate no lesse then periurie. They studie the writings of the Ancient, thence collecting such things as may benefite the manners of the minde, or health of the bodie. They which are studious of their Sect, must a yeres space endure tryall, and then after that

probation of their continencie, must bee probationers yet two yeres longer, and then vpon allowance of their manners, are assumed into their fellowship; making first deepe protestation of Religion towards God, and iustice towards men, to keepe faith to all, but especially to Princes, and if they shall come to rule ouer others, not to abuse their power, not to exceede others in habit, not to steale, not to keepe any thing secret from them of their owne Sect, or communicate it to another, although vpon perill of life: not to deulse new doctrines: to keepe the bookes of their owne opinions, and the names of the Angels. Offenders they put from their fellowship; and hee which is thus excommunicate, may not receiue foode offered of any other, but, eating grasse and hearbs, is consumed with famine, except they in compassion receiue him againe, in extremitie. They giue no sentence of iudgement, being fewer then an hundred. If ten sit together, one speakes not without consent of the rest. They may not spit in the midd or on the right hand. They will not so much as purge Nature on the Sabbath ^k, and on other daies do it very closely, for offending the Diuine light, and couer it with an instrument in the Earth, and that in the most secret places; and are washed after.

^k They goe not to stooke on the Sabbath, because of that instrument which they could not vse to dig and couer their excrement, without Sibbith breaking.

They are of foure ranks, according to the time of their profession, and the yonger sort of these are so farre inferior to the rest, that if one of these do rouch them, hee washeth himselfe, as if he had touched a stranger. They liue long: feare not death: nor by any tortures of the Romans, could be compelled to transgresse their lawes; but derided their tormentors rather: belequing to receiue their soules againe presently, holding the bodies to be corruptible, and the prisons of the immortall soules: which if they haue beene good, haue a pleasant place assigned them beyond the Ocean, but the euill to be in tempestuous stormie places of punishments. Some of these Effess also foretell things to come. And another sort is of them which allow of marriage, but make a three yeres tryall first of the woman; and if by a constant purgation they appeare fit for child-bearing, they wed them, not for pleasure but procreation: and therefore after conception, do not accompany with them. These women when they wash, haue their sacred linnen garments also, as the men. Thus far Iosephus: who in his ^l Antiq. addeth to these, their opinions of Gods prouidence ruling all things; and that they thinke their Ceremonies more holy then those of the Temple, and therefore send thither their gifts, but do not there sacrifice, but by themselves, following the same course of life, which the Phisii ^m do amongst the Dacians.

Some of these Effess liued solitarie, like to Hermites, as is said before. Happily that Bannus was of this sort, to whom Iosephus ⁿ resorted for imitation. He liued in the wildernesse, cloathing

thing and feeding himselfe with such things, as the trees and plants of their owne accord yielded him, and with often cold waings in the night and day, cooling the heate of lust; with him Iosephus abode three yeeres.

HE Gaulonites or Galilaans, ^a had their ^b beginning of Iudas (elsewhere hee calleth him Simon) a Galilzan, whose doctrine was, That, Only God was to be accounted their Lord and Prince : In other things they agreed with the Pharises : but for their libertie they would rather endure any the most exquisite tortures, together with their kindred and friends, then call any mortall man their Lord. Thendas happily mentioned, Act. 5. and that Egyptian, Act. 21. were of this rebellious and trayetous Sect, and those Sicarij which wore short weapons vnder their garments, therewith murdering men in assemblies. That Egyptian, ^c Iosephus calls a false Prophet, who vnderpretence of Religion, and name of a Prophet, assembled almost thirtie thousand men to Mount Oliuet, hee was defeated by Felix the Gouernour. Such were their Zelota in the siege of Ierusalem, vnder the mantle of Religion, all of them harbouring and cloaking Treason and villanie.

The Scribes ^d are not a Sect, but a function: of which were two sorts, γραμματῖς τῷ νόμῳ, and γραμματῖς τῷ λαῷ, the one expounders of the Law, the other publike Notaries, or Actuaries, Records, Secretarie. Epiphanius maketh difference betwixt the Scribes that were νομολογισταί, Teachers of the Law, and the νομικοί, or Lawyers, which prescribed formes of Law, Law-cases, and taught Ciuill actions. But these are often taken one for the other. Eerai is called a Scribe, whose Pulpit is mentioned, Nehem. 8. and ^e Moses Chaite was the Seate of the Scribes, that is, they taught the Law of Moses, which they vfed to doe fitting : as Christ also did, Math. 5. 2. Their expositions, Epiphanius ^f saith, were of four sorts, one in the name of Moses; the second in the name of their Rabbine Akiba (he is said to haue liued a hundred and twentie yeeres, and to be standard-bearer to Barabozaba) the third in Andan or Annan; the fourth after the Assamoni. But little is to bee said of these Scribes, more then what is before said of the Pharises, this being not a differing Sect, but an Office or Ministerie, wherof the Pharises also were capable, and are for false teaching blamed by our Saviour, together with the Scribes.

The Scribes are said in their expositions ^g to haue benee more textuall, the Pharises more in their Glosses and Traditions : The Scribes had chiefe reputation for learning, the Pharises for holinesse, taking more paines (saith our English Iosephus) to goe to hell. The Scribes professed both disputation and obseruation of many things, saith Arias Montanus, ^h but not so exact as the Pharises. Forthe Pharises, though not so learned as the other, thought themselves more holy then them, because they obserued not onely those things, which in the common opinion were thought meete, but those things which were least, which the people obserued not, which others had added. This they were ambitious of, as of some great perfection, for there was a threefold state of men. The Doctors, Pharises, and people of the Land. The Prouerbe was, The people of the Land, are the soote-stoole of the Pharises. And this, ⁱ The people of the Land is not holy: and they discern not the Law nor wisdom: yea, saith the booke Musar, hee shall not take the daughter of the people of the Land, because they are abomination, and their wives are abomination; and of their daughters it is said, Cursed be hee that lieth with a beast. Thus did these proud Doctors and Pharises treade the way to the Popish Clergie, in contemning the Laytie, as vnworthie of the Law and ⁵⁰ Scripture, which in an vknowne tongue was sealed from them, and sealed them at high Feasts with an halfe Sacrament, and in their ordinarie priuate Masse, with none at all. Were not these faire reasons? ^k The Laytie might (if they had a whole Communion) touch the Cup, and some of them haue beards, and some haue the palfie, and their dignitie is inferior to the Priestly, &c. The Booke Abath sheweth how the people of the Lord required this supercilious generation, talking of them, and scoffing at them for their obseruations. When I was of the people of the Land, R. Aguba there saith, I said, Who will giue me a Disciple of the wife? I would bite him as an Asse; for that insolence, and because they would not suffer themselves to be touched of them. The people were tyed to obserue the precepts mentioned, or by necessity of consequence drawne out of the Bible. The Pharises (as is said) added their Traditions. The Scribes manner ^l of teaching was colde and weak, consisting in certaine arguments, which rather afflicted then affected the mindes of the hearers; in certaine niceties ties, and scrupulous questions, and sometimes inextricable. And therefore the people heard Christ, as speaking with authority, and not as the Scribes. But to let passe these Schoole-men, and those Canonists, let vs come to their other Sects and sorts of professions.

Of many other Iewish Sects and Heresies.

He Hemerobaptists * are numbered by Epiphanius ^b among the Iewish heresies, which, saith hee, in other things differ not from the Scribes and Pharisees; but in their doctrine of the resurrection, and in infidelitie, are like to the Sadduces: And euerie day in all times of the yeere, they are baptized or washed, whence they haue their name. But this custome of daily washing, saith Scaliger * was common to all the ancient Iewes, which would seeme better then their fellowes, and not only obserued of the Pharisees Effees, and Hemerobaptists (if such a Sect may be added.) At this time in Palestina, many doo it, not once, but often in the day. The Mahumetans obserue it. The Iewes (as a 4 Iew hath written) were so zealous herein, that they would not eate with him that did eate with vn washed hands: and one of their holy men being inuited by such an host, rose vp and went his way, alleging to him, when he would haue recalled him, that he must not eate the bread of him which had an euill eye: and besides his meate was vncleane. The Priests, when they kept their courses in the Temple, abstained from Wine, and ate not of the Tithes before they had washed their whole body. The Pharisees and Effees composed themselves to this sanctitie: the greater part of the Pharisees, and all the Effees abstained from Wine, and both vsed daily washings, especially before they ate, And as many Heretikes professing themselves Christians, retained many things of Iudaisme; so these Hemerobaptists learned this daily washing. It seemeth by him, that these were Christian rather then Iewish Heretikes.

And so were the Nazareans * also, which some reckon among the Iewish Sects, who embraced the Gospell of Christ, but would not relinquish their Iudaisme: vntill we say with Hierome, that whiles they would be both Iewes and Christians, they were neither Iewes nor Christians. These Nazareans, or Nazoræans, Scaliger affirmeth, were meere Karam Scripture Iewes, but because of their obstinacie in the Law, the first Councell of the Apostles determined against them. As for the Nazarites of the old Testament, Moses describeth them and their obseruations, not to cut their haire, not to drinke wine, strong drinke, &c. Such was Samson: But these could be no Sect, holding in euery thing the same doctrine with the Iewes, and onely, for a time, were bound by vow to these Rites. But for those Nazareans, Epiphanius ^c maketh them a Iewish Sect, not without cause, if such were their opinions, as he describeth them. Their dwelling was beyond Iordan, in Gilead and Bashan, as the same goeth (saith he) by Nation Iewes: and by obseruing many things like to the Iewes. Herein they differed: They did not eate any thing which had life, they offered no sacrifice: for they counted it vnlawful to Sacrifice, or to eate flesh. They disallowed the fise books of Moses: they indeed confessed Moses, and the Fathers by him mentioned, and that he had receiued the Law, not this yet, which is written, but another. ^d Philastrius saith, they accepted the Law and Prophets, but placed all righteousness in carnall obseruation: and nourishing the haire of their heads, placed therein all their vertue, professing to imitate Samson, who was called a Nazarite: from whom the Pagans afterwards named their valiant men Hercules.

Next to these doth ^e Epiphanius place the Essens ⁱ, dwelling in Ituræa, Moab, and beyond the Salt or Dead Sea: to these one Elxai in the time of Traian ioyned himselfe: hee had a brother named Iexai. Scaliger (here and euery where acute) saith, ^k that the Essens and Essens are the same name, as being written with the selfe same Hebrew Letters, differing onely in pronunciation, as the Abyssynes pronounce Osrasl, Chrostos, for Israel, Christus. And the Arabian Elxai, and his brother Iexai, were not proper names, but the appellation of the Sect it selfe, as hee proueth. But they agreed not so well in profession, as in name, with the Essens, for they were but an issue of those ancient Essens, holding some things of theirs, others of their owne: as concerning the Worship of Angels, reproued by the Apostles, Coloss. 2. 18. In which the Essens and Essens agreed, and other things there mentioned, Touch not, taste not, handle not: and in worshipping of the Sunne, whereof they were called Sampeians, or Summers, Sun-men, as Epiphanius interpreteth that name. Those things wherein they differed, were brought in by that Innovator, who (of this his Sect) was called Elxai.

He was, saith Epiphanius, a Jew, he ordained Salt, and Water, and Earth, and Bread, and Heaven, and the Sky, and the Winds, to be sworne by in Diuine worship. And sometimes he prescribed other leuen witnesses; Heaven, and Water, and Spirits, and the holy Angels of Prayer and Oyle, and Salt, and Earth. He hated continencie, and enioyned marriage of necessity. Many imaginations he hath, as received by reuelation. He teacheth Hypocrisis, as in time of perfection to worship Idols; so as they keepe their Conscience free: And if they confesse any thing with their mouth, but not in their heart. Thus ancient is that Changeling Agumacation. He bringeth his Author, one Phineas of the stock of the ancienter Phineas, the sonne of Eleazar, who had worshipped Diana in Babylon, to saue his life. His followers esteeme him a secret vertue or power. Vntill the time of Constantine, Martha and Marthana (two women of his stocke) remained in succession of his honour, and were worshipped in that Countrey for gods, because they were of his feede. Martha died a while since, but Marthana still liueth: Their spittle, and other excrements of their body, those Heretikes esteemed, and reserved for Reliques, to the cure of diseases, which yet prayeul nothing. He mentioneth Christ, but it is vt certaine whether he meaneth the Lord Iesus. He forbids praying to the East-ward, and bids turne towards Ierusalem from all parts. He detesteth Sacrifices, as neuer offered by the Fathers: He denieth the eating of flesh among the Lewes, and the Altar, and Fire, as contrarie to God, but water is fitting. He describeth Christ after his measure, foure and twentie Schen in length, that is, foure-score and sixteene miles; and the fourth part thereof in breadth, to wit, lix Schen, or foure and twentie miles; besides the thicknesse, and other fables. He acknowledgeth a holy Ghost, but of the female sexe, like to Christ, standing like a statue about the Clouds, and in the midst of two mountains. He bids none should seeke the interpretation, but only say these things in prayer: (words which he had taken out of the Hebrew tongue, as in part we have found.) His prayer is this, Abar anid moib uochil daafim ani daafim uochile moib anid abar salam. Thus Epiphanius relates it, and thus construes, I cannot say expoundeth (although they like our deuout Catholiques, needed no exposition.) Let the humilitie passe from my Fathers, of their condemnation, and conculcation, and labour; the conculcation in condemnation by my Fathers, from the humilitie passed in the Apostleship of perfection. Thus was Elxai with his followers opinionate: otherwise Iewish. Epiphanius speaks of his Sect else where often, as when he mentioneth the Ebonites, and the Samplings: This booke both the Offices and Nazoræans, and Ebonites vied. The Samplings had another booke (they said) of his brothers. They acknowledge one God, and worship him, vsing certaine washings. Some of them abstaine from liuing creatures, and they will die for Elxai his posteritie; which they had in such honour, that if they went abroad, the people would gather vp the dust of their feete for cures, and their spittle, and vied them for amulets and preseruatiues. They admit neither the Apostles nor Prophets: they worship water, esteeming it as a god, beleeuing that life is from thence.

Scaliger also affirmeth, that the Massilians (which word Epiphanius interpreteth Massilians, such as pray, according to the opinion and practice of those Heretiks) were first a Iewish Sect, and a slip of the Essees, and after by marriage with some false Christians, made such a gally-mauzy, as after when we come to speake of the Pseudochristian sects shall (God willing) be related: for of Iewish they became Christian Heretiks.

The Herodians otherwise agreeing with the rest, thought Herod to be the Messias, moued by Iacobus Prophecy falsely interpreted, that the Scepter should not depart from Inda till Shilo came. When as therefore they saw Herod a stranger to possesse the Kingdom, they interpreted as a foretold. Some make question whether this was the name of a sect, or of Herods bouldiers. Drus. obserueth out of a Cōmentar vpon Perfius, Sat. 5. Herodis uenero, &c. These words; Herod raigned among the Jews in the parts of Syria, in the daies of Augustus. The Herodians therefore observe the birth-day of Herod, as also the Sabbaths: in the which day they set Lamps burning, and crowned with Violets in the windows. Elsewhere he citeth out of a Lexicon of the Hebrew Law, that they were called Herodians of Herods name, and Dorians of the place whence they were brought; for by Nation they were Greekes: so saith the Author of Baal, Archib. Herod the King brought Greekes out of the desert, and brought them vp in the habitable land. Scaliger saith that they were a corporation or guild, instar eorum societatis, que vulgo confratres vocantur, and besides their Heretical opinion that he was the Messias, entered into societie for coits and charges in common, to be bestowed on sacrifices and other solemnities, where-with they honoured Herod aliu and dead. Arius Montanus thinketh that the Herodians were politicians, that little respected Religion. They thought the Common-wealth should be established, and that could not stand without Princes, nor could Princes nourish themselves or theirs without money, and therefore propounded that question to our Sauior touching Cæsars tribute. Others thinke they made hotchpotch of Iudaisme and Gentilisme, as Herod had done; in which it is like his successors succeeded him. This coniecture is mentioried by ^a Beza, who yet is her thinketh that the Herodians were Herods courtiers, moved thereto by the Syrian translation, which hath debeth Hiraudis, Herods domesticals. Thus thinketh ^a Ianins of them also, who saith that when the Pharisees could not introp him in the Law, they sent their disciples to question him of Tribute, hauing before agreed (which vially they did not) with the Herodians to stand by (voknowne) as witnesses, if he had answered any thing whereat Cesar might haue bene offended. And this seemeth most likely: for after Herods death, how could they hold him for Messias?

Another Sect among these of the Circumcision, ^a Eusebius out of Hegeppus nameth the ^a Masbothei or Masbotheans; for Thebuis (saith Hegeppus) was of their number, which arose out of seuen sects in the Iewish people; which Sects had their beginning Symon, of whom the Symonians; and Cleobius, of whom the Cleobians, Dositheus, of whom the Dositheans; and Gorthius, of whom the Gorthians and Masbotheus, of whom the Masbotheans. And from the same fountaines issued the Menandrians, Marcionists, Carpocratians, Valentinians, Basilidians, and Saturnilians. And a little after, There were diuers Sects amongst the Israelites, Effes, Galilaens, Hemerobaptists, Masbotheans, Samaritans, Sadducees, Pharisees.

The word Masbothei, ^a Scaliger sai h, signifieth Sabbatists or Sabbatarians, because they professed to haue learned the obseruation of the Sabbath from Christ, and therein differed from the other Iewes.

He there nameth (and little else haue we but their names, euem the names also of the wicked Shadrach) diuers other Sects, if they may beare that name: as the Genites ^a or Genitils, which stood vpon their Stock and kindred: the reason Breidenbachius allegeth, because in the Babylonish captiuitie or after, they married not strange wites, and therefore boast themselves of the puritie of ^a Abrahams seede. The ^b Merissians or Merists, which were (as the name importeth) sprinklers of their holy-water, Breidenbach saith, they made a diuision of the Scriptures, and receiued only some part of them: The Morbonei, he addeth, Sabbatise in euery thing. The ^c Hellenians, of Hellenius, ^d The Cleobians and ^e Theobulians we can but mention. Of the ^f Tubiens as little, true that they are said to be a Colledge or fellowship: and lesse of ^g Gjanai, and such like, if there be any other names that remayne as the rotten bones of the consumed carcasses of heresies and Heretikes; and either are vnkowne, or degenerated into some or other sect of Pseudo-christians, which require another taske.

The ^h Calicola were Iewes, but corruptly embracing Christianity, for they were Massilians, which had their houses or places of Prayer abroad in the open ayre, of whom Innenai is vnderstood, Nisprater nubes & exeli lumen adorant. So Scaliger Readeth, not nunen: and Petronius, Iudeus licet & porcinum nomen adoret, Et cali summas aduocet auriculas. These also were an off-spring of the Effes: and from these proceeded the Massilians: they being baptized, reuolted to their former Iudaisme, and bearing the name of Christians, retayned the rites of thole Calicola or Hauen-worshippers.

The ^k Kannai were a deuout society and order, giuen to holinesse of life, and obseruation of the Law; of whom was Simon Kannans, Mat. 10. called Zelotes, the interpretation of the former, as ^l Beza and ^m Scaliger shew. Snidas calleth them obseruants of the Law, whom Ananus shut in the Temple. Their Splundori, or ⁿ Mourners were such as lamented with continuall fasting, praying, and weeping, the destruction of their Citie, ^o Temple and Nation; as else-where is said, I might adde out of that ancient father Philastrius (whom S. Augustine saith he had seene at Millan with S. Ambrose) diuers other heresies amongst the people of the Iewes before the incarnation of Christ, no fewer then eight and twentie; of which we haue already mentioned the most and principall. Hee addeth the Ophites or Serpentines, which worship a Serpent, saying, that he first procured vs the knowledge of good and euill; for which God enuied him, and cast him from the first heauen into the second, whence they expect his coming, esteeming him some vertue of God, and to be worshipped. Another sort are the Caians, which commend Cain for fraticide, laying, that Cain was made of the power of the Deuill, Abel of another power, but the greatest power preuailed in Caine to slay Abel. A third sort reckoned by Philastrius are the Sethiani, worshippers of Seth the soune of Adam, who affirme, that two men being created in the beginning, and the Angels dissenting, the feminine power preuailed in ^o heauen (for with them are males and females gods and goddeses) Eue perceiving that, brought forth Seth, and placed in him a Spirit of great power, that the aduersaries powers might be destroyed. Of Seth they say, that Christ should come of his stock, yea some of them conceiue him to be the very Christ. The Heliognosti, called also Deuictai, worshipped the Sunne, which (said they) knew all the things of God, and yielded all necessities to men. Others there were which worshipped Frogges, thereby thinking to appease Diuine Wrath, which in Pharaohs time brought Frogges vpon the Land of Egypt. He reckoneth the Accaronites which worshipped a Flie; of which else where is spoken: as also the Thamuzites, of Thamuz, which hee saith was the sonne of a Heathen King, whose Image the Jewish woman worshipped with teares and continuall sacrifices; and that Pbarao which ruled Egypt in Moser time was of that name. After also and Altarot, he saith, were Kings of Syria and Egypt, worshipped after their deaths, But (perhaps more truly) we have exprest these things in our former booke. Beniamin Tendelenis speaketh of a sect in his time, which he calleth Cyprians and Epicures, who prophaned the evening before the Sabbath, and obserued the evening of the first day. I might adde to their sects the diuers Christs or Messiahs, which in diuers ages they had but that I have referred to the tenth Chapter.

CHAP. IX.

Of the Samaritans.

T remaineth to speake of the Samaritan Sects. Samaria was the Citie royall of the ten Tribes, after that Omri (who, as other his predecessors, had reigned before at Ticzah) had bought the Mountaine Shomron ^a of one Shemer, for two talents of siluer, and built thereon this Citie, which he called after the name Skemer, Lord of the Mountaine. In vaine therefore is it to seeke ²⁰ the name of the Samaritans from the signification of the ^b word (which is keeping) seeing they are so called of the place, and the place of this their ancient Lord. It remained the chiefe seate of the kingdome, as long as the same endured, and namely, till the dayes of Hoshea their last King, in whose time ^c Salmandasar the Assyrian carried the Israelites thence Esarhaddon, the son of Senacherib, otherwise called Osnappas (thus saith ^d Herara : and therefore Epiphanius was deceived in ascribing this act to Nabuchodonosor in the time of the captiuitie, fortie yeeres before the returne) sent to inhabit that Region, Colonies from Babel, and from Cuthan, and from Aua, and from Hannah, and from Sepharuaim. Babel is knowne: Cutha and Aua ^e are esteemed parts of the desert of Arabia, the other of Syria and Mesopotamia. It seemeth that most of them were of Cutha, because all of them ³⁰ after passed into that name, and were of the Iewes called Cuthæi, as witnesseth ^f Iosephus. ^g Elias Lemita giueth the same reason; and addeeth, that a few might not say Amen to a Samaritan or Cuthans blessing. The Cuthi, saith he, were the subtlest beggers of all men in the world, and from them, as he thinketh, came those coling Roging Gypsies or Egyptians, which in many ages have troubled so many countries of Europe.

These Heathens serued not the Lord, and therefore the Lord sent Lyons among them, which slew them; wherefore they sent to the King of Assyria, who sent thither one of the captiued Priests of Israel, to teach them how to worship God (Epiphanius calleth his name ^h Estrat). He dwelt at Bethel; and as some conceiue, taught rather that Idolatrous worship, whereof Bethel had bene before the Beth-suen, where Ierobam had placed his ⁴⁰ golden Calfs, then the true worship of the True Iehouah. Howsoever, every Nation (saith the Text) made them gods, and put them in the houses of the high places, which the Samaritans bad made. The men of Babel made Succoth Benoth; and the men of Cutha made Nergal; and the men of Hamath, Asima; and the Auiens, Nibbaz and Tariat; and the Sepharuaim burnt their children in the fire to Adramelech, and Anammelech their gods. Thus they feared the Lord, and serued their gods after the manner of the Nations, and so continued: A mungrell Religion, begotten of a bastard or heretical Iudaisme, and wilde Paganisme. What those gods were it is vncertaine, and interpreters agree not. Of Succoth Benoth is ⁱ already spoken. Walphius interpreteth ⁵⁰ Nergal a wilde Hen, Asima a Goate, Nibbaz a Dogge, Tariat an Asse, Adramelech a Mule, Anammelech a Horse: Thus (saith he) the Hebrews expound them; and hee supposeth these creatures were among them canonized and sacred: as the Persians are said to worship a Cock, the Proembari of Africa a Dog: other people other creatures. Some are of opinion that Nergal was that continuall fire which these Cuthæans after the Persian manner kept in their Pyræths (places inclosed for that purpose) as in our Persian relations shal follow; and Kimchi saith that Adramelech had the forme of a Peacock. Anamelech of a Pheasant. But neither are the trifling RR. too far to be trusted, nor haue we any other good testimony. Thus their Religion continued till after the returne of the Iewes from captiuitie, to whom they would haue bene officious helpers in building of the Temple: which being refused they became their enemies, and hindred a building the long time. But the Temple being built, and Religion established among the Iewes, and their state flourishing, ⁶⁰ Samballath the high Priest, in the time of Darius the last Persian Monarch. This Nebemiah mentioneth, but deigneth not to name him, hint, affirming that he chased him from him, of which some ¹ descant whether it were by exile, or excommunication, or some other punishment. R. Salomo interpreteth it of exile, P. 2. Heu of excommunication.

Drusus hath a discourse out of a Jewish Author, which relateth the forme of that first Anathema and iudicial curse (not ymetee here to be mentioned) denounced against the Samaritans for hindring the worke of the Temple. Zorobabel and Ioshua (saith hee) gathered all the Congregation into the Temple of the Lord, and brought three hundred Priests, and three hundred Trumpets, and three hundred Bookes of the Law, and as many children, and founded: And the Leuites singing and playing on instruments, cursed with all kindes of Anathema's the Chutheans, in the secret of the name Tetragrammaton, and in writing written vpon Tables; and with the Anathema of the house of the higher judgement, and the Anathema of the house of the lower judgement, that none of Israel should eate the bread of the Cuthean (whereupon it is said, He which eateth a Samaritans bread, be as he that eateth Swines flesh) and that a Cuthean should not bee a Profelyte in Israel, nor should haue part in the Resurrection of the dead. Thus they writ, and sealed, and sent vnto all Israel which were in Babylonia, which heaped vpon them Anathema vpon Anathema. That, concerning their becoming Profelytes, Drusus doubteth whether it may not be translated, that a stranger Cuthean should not abide in Israel: which is more likely. The other had bene more impious: their zeale to make Profelytes of all Nations is knowne.

To returne to Manasses, Iosephus saith, that the high Priests and the Elders put him from the Altar, who therefore went to Sanballat his Father in law, and told him that he loued his daughter well, but would not for her lose his Priest-hood. Sanballat replied, that if he would retain his daughter, he would not onely maintayne him in his Priest-hood, but procure him a high-Priests place, and make him Prince of all his Province; and would build a Temple like to that of Ierusalem in mount Garizim, which looketh ouer Samaria, higher then the other Hills, and that with the consent of K. Darius. Hereupon Manasses abode with him, and many Priests and Israelites being intangled with like marriages, resorted to him, and were maintayned by Sanballat. But now Alexander preuailling against Darius, Sanballat (whose Religion was Polythe) rebelled, and tooke part with Alexander, and in reward thereof obtayned leave to build his Temple, whereof Manasses enioyed to him and his successors the Pontifical dignitie. Then was the Circumcision diuided, some (as said the Samaritan woman) ^a worshipping in this Mountaine, others at Ierusalem. The zeale which the Samaritans had to their Temple, appeared in the time of Ptolomeus Philometor, when at Alexandria, Sabbaeus and Theodosius, with their Samaritans, contended with Andronius and the Iewes, these challenging to Ierusalem, those to Garizim, the lawful honor of a Temple, both parties swearing by God and the King, to bring proofe of their assertion out of the law; and beseeching the King to do him to death that should not make his part good; and thereupon the Samaritans failing in proofe, were adiudged to punishment.

The Samaritans in the prosperitie of the Iewes professed themselves their kinsmen and allies: in aduersitie disclaymed them, and their God also, as appeareth in their Epistle to Antiochus, that figure of Antichrist, and persecuter of the Iewish Religion, in which they call themselves Sidonians dwelling in Sichem, and say, that moued by ancient superstition, they had embraced the Feast of the Sabbath, and building a Temple of a namelesse Deity, had offered therein solemne Sacrifices: whereas therefore their originall was Sidonian, and not Iewish; pleased him to enact that their Temple might beare name of Iupiter Gracianicus, and they might liue after the Greekish Rites. These things Antiochus easily granted. This Sichem is called Sichar, Jo. 4. 5. It was after that called Neapolis, and lastly (of the Colonie which Vespasian or Domitian placed there) Flauia Caesarea. Of that Colonie was (it is Scaligers testimony, Animal. Enstet. pag. 201.) Iustin Martyr, omnium Scripturarum Ecclesiasticorum qui hodie extant, vetustissimus; which occasioned Epiphanius his error, that of a Samaritan he became a Christian; whereas he was neuer a Samaritan in Religion, but only of this Samaritan Colonie. In this were in the age of Beniamin ^a one hundred Samaritans: the words of Beniamin are worthy the inserting. I came, saith he, to Samaria, in which the Palace of Abah is yet to be knowne: a place very delectable, with Springs, Rivers, Gardens, &c. and hath not one Iew inhabiting. Two legues from hence is Nables, sometime called Sichem, in mount Ephraim, where are no Iewes. The Citie is situate betwene the hills of Garizim and Heball; there are about a hundred Cutheans, which obserue only the law of Moses. They are called Samaritans: they haue Priests of the posterity of Aaron which resteth in peace, who marry not with any other but the men or women of their owne stock, and are there commonly called Aaronites: they sacrifice and burne their offerings in a Synagogue which they haue on Mount Garizim, citing out of the law, Thou shalt give a blessing vpon the Mount Garizim; this, say they, is the house of the Sanctuary, and on the Palestine and other solemnities, they sacrifice on an Altar in Mount Garizim made of stones, taken by the Israelites out of Iordan. They boast themselves to be of the Tribe of Ephraim. With them is the Sepulchre of Ioseph. He addeth (which Scaliger saith, is a slender) that they want three Letters, He, Cheth, Ain : whereas they readeth the Pentateuch in so many and the same Letters, in which Moses wrote them; as Pessel and Scaliger affirme, and those which the Iewes use, are later counterfeit: the example whereof Scaliger hath given vs in their Computation, in the last Edition of his Emenadation: yea, they are now also further from Idolatry then the Iewes themselves, howsoever in their Talmud and else where, they brand them with false and odious imputations. Beniamin also testifieth, that they abstaine from pollution by the dead, or bones, the flaine and the Sepulchtes. And every day when they goe into the Synagogue, they put off their vsuall clothes, and hauing washed their bodies with water, put on other clothes, sacred only to this purpose. Beniamin found of these Cuthæans two hundred in Casarea : at Benibera or new Alcalan three hundred, and at Damascus foure hundred.

Hircanus by force tooke both Sichem and Garizim. Two hundred yeeres after the foundation of this Temple, as testifieth Iosephus, ^a happened this desolation thereof. The zeale yet continued as appeareth by many testimonies of Scripture. The Iewes meddled not with the Samaritanes, which made ^r the woman wonder that Christ asked drinke of a Samaritan. Another time the Samaritans would not receiue him, because his ^s behaviour was as though he would goe to Ierusalem, for which fact of theirs the sonnes of thunder would haue brought lightning from heauen vpon them. And the Iewish despite could not obiect worle in their most venomous slander, then, ^t Thou art a Samaritan. This Ierusalem-journey through the Samaritanes country caused bloudie warres and slaughter betwixt the Galilæans ^u and them, in the time of Cumanus, to the destruction of many. And before that in the daies of Pilate, ^x a conuincing Prophet abused their zeale, bidding them to assemble in mount Garizim, ^y with promise there to shew them the sacred vessels, which, said he, Moses had there hidden. Whereupon they seditiously assembling, and besieging Tirabatha, Pilate came vpon them with his forces, and cut them in peeces.

Their opinions (besides those aforesaid) were, ^r that onely the five bookes of Moses were Canonically Scripture, the rest they receiued not. They acknowledge not the Resurrection, nor the Trinitie : and in zeale of one God, abandon all Idolatries, which it seemeth was receiued of them after the building of the Temple, and mixture with the Apostate Iewes : the Scripture testifying otherwife of their former deuotions. They wash themselves with Urine, when they come from any stranger, being (forsooth) polluted. And if they haue touched one of another Nation, they diue themselves garments and all, in water. Such a prophanation is the touch of one of another faith. They haue a dead corps in abomination presently.

The Samaritan, ^a if he meeteth a Iew, Christian, or Mahometan, he saith vnto them, Touch me not. Scaliger out of the Arabian Geographer, ^a telleth of an Island still inhabited with these Samaritans, in the red Sea, which appeareth by their custome, when any comes on shore, forbidding to touch them. This arrogant superstition remaineth with them.

The Samaritan Chronicle is cited by Eusebius, Chron. grec. l. 1. ^b Scaliger saith, hee had a copie of their great Chronicle, translated out of Hebrew into Arabian, but in Samaritan Letters : It differeth some what from the Hebrew account. The Iewes confound the Samaritans and Sadducees, as if they were but one Sect. The difference hath appeared, for the Sadducees accept all the Bible; the Samaritans, Moses only. The Sadducees denyed the soules immortalitye and reward. The Samaritans in their Chronicle acknowledge both a place of reward and punishment after this life. But whether they beleue the Resurrection or no, he doubteth. The Sadducees denie Spirits, Angels, Diuels; the Samaritans confesse them. The Samaritans also use still those ancient Letters called Phœnician, which the Hebrewes vsed before the captiuitie, which whoso listeth to view, let him see their 50 Characters, and Scaliger's large notes thereon in his Annotations vpon Eusebius Chronicle, and a briefe of their Chronicle and Kalender therein written in his Emenadation, as before is said; Which they beginne very Religiously after their manner. In the name of Iah the God of Israel. There is none like to Iah our God. One Iehoua, God of Gods, LORD of LORDS, a great God, strong and terrible. There is none like to the God Ieschurum, the God of ABRAHAM, ISAAC, JACOB, JOSEPH, and our Lord MOSES, ELEAZAR, and PHINEAS. He confirme vnto you the blessing of our Lord MOSES, Iehoua, God of our Fathers, aide vnto you, as many as ye are, a thousand times and blesse you. This inscription the great Synagogue of Garizim alwaies use, when they write to other Samaritan Synagogues, the Kalender of the yeere following. They are very ignorant of Antiquities, and know none other but that they came thither with Moses out of Egypt: neither can they tell any thing of the old Kings, or defection of the ten Tribes vnder Ieroboam. They lightly lightly touch the names of Samsou, Samuel, Dauid, and others, in their Chronicle, which they call the booke of Iofue. Ptolemaus Lagi conueyed Colonies of them into the Cities of Egypt, the Reliques whereof are those Samaritans which haue a Synagogue in the great Citie Cairo : And those also in the Iland before mentioned. In respect of the Mount Garizim, the seate and Sanctuarie of their holies, the Samaritans call themselves men which belong to the blessed Hill : and still, every yeere they in Egypt receiue from the great Synode of Garizim, the type of the yeere following, two of which Sealiger had seen, and hath expressed one of them.

The Samaritans were diuided also into diuers sects, as Epiphanius * rehearseth : One 10 whereof were called Dositheans ; if it be lawfull to reckon them Samaritans, which acknowledged (as Epiphanius acknowledgeth of them) the Resurrection of the dead. They abstaine from such things as haue life : some of them from marriage, after they haue bene before married, and some continue in Virginitie. They obserue circumcision and the Sabbath : and they touch no man, but hold every man in abomination. Report goeth also of their fasting and exercises.

They had name of Dositheus : who being a Jew, and hauing well profited in their Law, but not receiuing promotion futable to his ambition, revolted to the Samaritans, and hated this sect amongst them. And when afterwards in a singularitie he had gone aside into a Cave, and there mewed vp himselfe, and persisted in hypocritie and fasting, he there died 20 (as the fame goeth) through his wilfull want of bread and water. After a few daies, some resorting to him, found his dead body cawling with wormes, and compassed with flies. Of this name Dositheus there were diuers, * Two of them liued after the coming of Christ. One a Jew, sonne of R. Iannai, the other a Samaritan, which endeouored to perswade his Countreymen, that he was the Christ which Moses had prophesied of, as Origen reporteth, and saith : of him are the Dositheans named. Another is mentioned in Iohasin, who liued in the time of Christ, the Disciple of Sammai. And before these was another Dositheus, the sonne also of Iannai, of whom it is said in h. Immednu, that Senacherib sent R. Dositheus to Samaria, to teach the Samaritans the Law. This seemeth to be he, whom before our Epiphanius wee haue called Ephraim, the first founder of the Samaritan heresie. And so Tertul- 30 lian ¹ saith of him ; Dositheus the Samaritan, was the first that reiecteth the Prophets, as not hauing spoken by the holy Ghost. The like testimonie Hierome giueth of him. His colleague and companion is said to be one Sebua, the supposed author of the Sebuans. In Immednu ² he is called Sebaia, or Sebua. ¹ Dositheus also taught, that how and in what position of body he was in the Sabbath morning, in the same he ought to continue all that day, without change of gesture or place : that if he did sit, he should sit in the same place all day long ; and so of lying or other habit of body. The Author of this Dosithean Sect (properly so called) liued as Sealiger ^m thinketh, about or at the destruction of the Temple, and could not be that first Dustai or Dositheus.

The Sebuans, ⁿ you haue heard, in Drusus opinion, haue their name of Sebua, the companion of Dositheus, sent by Senacherib, or rather by Ezrabaddon ; which if it be so, it seemeth this Sect is ancient, haply nothing differing from the other Samaritans. Epiphanius maketh a difference, * but the cause he alledgeth, was the Iewes refusal of their helpe at Ierusalem, which was common to all the Samaritans. The difference he alledgeth, is the transposing of their solemnities (for that quarrell betwixt them and the Iewes) from the Iewish times, so that they kept their Pass-euer in August (which they made the beginning of their yeere) Pentecost in Autumne, and that of Tabernacles, when the Iewes kept their Pass-euer : neither might they sacrifice in Garizim, obseruing such differing solemnities. ¹ Sealiger (whom I shame not thus often to name, in relation of these things too intricate for mine owne, or for common wits to finde) both in his Treatise against Serapion cap. 1. and 2. 1. and 30 in his Canons Isagog. lib. 3. dissenteth from Epiphanius saying, that they dissented not from the Samaritans, but that the name was a common name, which the Iewes ascribed to the Samaritans : It signifieth seculasiditas, Weekes ; Which name they gaue them, because that euerie weeke betweene the Pass-euer and Pentecost, they obserued that day of the weeke, in which the computation of the fiftie daies beganne, with as great solemnitie as the feast of Pentecost it selfe. This day, from which the reckoning beganne, was called Avripa the second, because it was the next day after the Azyma or Feast day. But the Samaritans reckoned the second after the Sabbath, and so in all that space of fiftie daies, kept the first day of the weeke, that is, Sunday, holy. Thus they kept seven Pentecosts in a yeere. And perhaps (he but coniectureth) as they had these imaginarie Pentecosts, so they might at o- 60 ther times of the yeere haue such imaginarie solemnities of other Feasts. From that word Avripa, the second day, and next to the Feast of vneleavened bread, the Sabbath, saith Sealiger in the same place, were called in order, the first Avripomayon and Avripa, the second Sab-

Sabbath after that day, Septuagesima, and so the rest : and thus hee expoundeth those words of Luke cap. 6. v. 1. Secundo primum Sabbatum, that is, the first Sabbath after that Purificatio, or first day of the Passio, which beganne to be reckoned the next day after Easter till Pentecost. A place hitherto very obscure. Epiphanius doth number for Samaritan Sects; The Essenes, of which is before shewed that they were Jewes, and otherwise hereticall and Idolatrous in respect of their morning deuotions to the Sun, for which it seemeth they might not (certaine they did not) communicate with other Jewes in the Temple and Sacrifices. These pertaine not to this place; as not Samaritans. A fourth Samaritan Sect he accounteth the Goribeni, which differed from the rest, at least from the Sebanani, in keeping their solemnities, Paschal, Pentecost, and of Tabernacles at the Jewish times, and obserued but one day holy: as likewise the fasting day. The Jewes still obserue the Sabbaticall yeere, and so doe the Samaritans also, but not at the same time; for that which is the fourth of the seven with the Jewes, is the Sabbaticall of the Samaritans.

Besides many thousands by Vespasian and the Romans slaine in other places of Iudaea, Ierusalem the holy Citie was made a prison, slaughter-houfe, and graue of her owne people: First had diuine mercie by Oracle remoued the Christians to Pella out of the danger, that without any impediment the flood-gates of vengeance might be fet wide open for Desolations black-guard to enter. Here might you see the strong walls shaking and falling, with the pulues of the yron Ramme; there the Romans bathing their swords in Jewish cantales; here the seditious Captaines disagreeing in mutuall quarrels, written in blood; there agreeing in robbing and burning the Citie, and in slaughter of the Citizens: here hun-

Every where the Eye is entertained with differing spectacles of diuersified Deaths, the Eare with cries of the insulting Souldier, of the famished children, of men and women, euen now feeling the tormenting or murdering hand of the seditious: the Sense receiueeth infectious plague and contagion from those humane bodies, with inhumane butchery, whom no humane buried: the Taste is left a meeke and idle facultie, saue that it alway tasteth the more distastfull payson of not-tasting and emptinesse: what then did they

Where all outward, inward, publike, priuate, bodily, ghostly, plagues were so ready executioners of the Diuine sentence. The continuall sacrifice first ceased for want of Priests of the last course, to whom in order it had descended; after, for want of a Temple, before polluted with Ethnick sacrifices, and murders of the Priests and Souldiers, and lastly ruined the sacred vessels thereof being carried to Rome for ornaments of the Temple of Peace, which Vespasian had there ^b erected.

Eleuen hundred thousands are numbred of them which perished in this destruction: The remnant that escaped the Roman Sword, for the most part, perished after in Warres, or killed themselves, or were referued cyther for solemnitie of triumph, or (if they were vnder seuentene yeeres of age) sold vnto perpetuall slaerie, ⁱ ninetie seuen thousand of these Iewish slaues were numbred: Galatinus ^k accounteth two hundred thousand. And that the hand of God might be the more manifest, they which at their Passe-ouer feast had crucified the Sonne of God, are at the same time gathered together in Ierusalem, as to a common prison-house of that whole Nation: and they, which had bought Christ of the Traytor Judas for thirtie peces of siluer, were sold thirtie of them for one peece. Thus were these men forsaken of God, that had forsaken God made man, who for man had vouchsafed to crye to God, Why hast thou forsaken me? Their owne Talmud relates how God had before forsaken their holies, in these words. Fortie yeeres before the desolation of the Temple, the lot no more ascended on the right hand, nor did the peece of scarlet grow white, nor the euening Lampe burne, and the doores of the Temple opened of themselves. The time is the passion of Christ, when the vail of the Temple was rent; which is here called a selfe-opening of the doores. The Lot is that Leuit. 16. 8. which was cast for the two Goates, that on the right hand was sacrificed, the other was sent into the Wildernesse, and a peece of scarlet put betwene his Hornes at the doore of the Temple, which if it looked white, they reioycied, as hauing their sinnes pardoned, according to that Ex. 1. 18. their scarlet sins should be as white as snow. These signes ceasing, argued a ceasing of that Ceremoniall Religion, which then died when Christ died: although for the more honorable funerall they were not quite buried so soone, till the Apostles had preached, and by miracles confirmed the Gospell, and Gods Iustice had made the Temple it selfe (sometimes the throne, now) the kindle straw in his mouth, & breath it forth as if he had spit fire. Of him did R. Akiba (which had bene Armour-bearer to the former) interpret * that Prophecie of Balaam, Num. 23. There shall arise a starre of Iacob. Adrian then Emperor besieged them in Bitter (where if you beleue the Iewish fables) were 80000. which founded Trumpets, every one of them captaines of many Bands, which helped Barchesba (so they called him after) that is, the sonne of Ilying, who had two hundred thousand Souldiers, which to testifie their loue and valour, had cut off every man a finger from his hand. After three yeeres and six moneths, the Citie was taken, and * this their Messias slaine, together with such multitudes, that the blood reached to the horses mowthes, and carried downe great streames with the streame thereof, running to the Sea foure miles from Bitter. And Adrian had a Vine-yard eightene miles square, which he hedged with thole slaine carcases, as high as a man can reach (a reacher I thinke.) There were two Riueres f in the Region of Ierico, and the third part of them by estimation of the Wife-men was the blood of the slaine : and seven yeeres together did the people of the Gentiles fatten and hearten their Vines, only with the blood of the Iewes, Adrian slue also at Alexandria in Egypt, seven hundred thousand Iewes.

Dion Nicæus s (a more credible Author) affirmeth, that Adrian sent Senerus against the Iewes, who in regard of their multitudes would not trie it with their ioynt forces in set battell, but taking his occasions and best oportunitie, proceeded more slowly and more surely : tooke first of their fortified Castles, raised nine hundred and fourescore of their best Townes, slue at sundry times, five hundred and eightie thousand of their men, besides 20 innumerable multitudes, which perished of famine, sickness, and fire, these gleanings being greater then the other Harvest. Salomons Sepulchre, by falling downe had fore-sigified this their downe-fall : And Hyzra's and Wolues prodigiously entering their Cities, seemed to howle their Funerall obsequies. All Iudæa was left almost desolate. h Eusebius out of Ariston Pellæus addeth, that Adrian prohibited the Iewes by an Edict to come neere to Ierusalem, or once from any high place to looke towards the same, or the Region adioyning. Neuer did Nabuchodonosor i or Titus so afflict the Iewes as Adrian did. Salmanicensis saith, there was a Decree made at Rome, that no Iewe should euer enter Cyprus, where the Rebellion beganne, and that Adrian destroyed twice as many Iewes, as had come out of Egypt with Moses. Wee haue already shewed how hee destroyed this Citie, and 30 built a new (the present Ierusalem) called of his owne name Ælia. Hee made Swine ouer the Gates of this new Citie, which Images were most faithfull Porters to prohibit the Iewes (faithfully superstitious in their faithlesse superstitions) to enter. And as hee had erected a Temple to Iupiter, in, or neere the place where the Temple had stood, so to afflict the Christians also) hee built another Temple of Iupiter in Golgatha, and of Venus at Bethleem, which continued till the time of Constantine. The Christian Iewes gayed by this losse : For when as they might not come to Ierusalem, they afterwards relinquished their wanted Iewish Ceremonies. This was the end of Barchesba. And such is the end of all which fight against God and their Soueraigne : their Arrowes which they shoote against the Cloudes, fall downe vpon themselves : Hee proues a falling Star, which being 40 but a grosser elementarie exhalation, is eleuated by his owne aspiring course (not to the firmament) but to some higher Region of the ayre, where it shineth with the fire which burnes it, and moueth with some short glance, till with selfe-ruine it returneth (whence it had beginning) to the Earth.

Thus haue we seene the Iewes banished their countrie (about the yeere 135.) agreeing to which their miserable estate was that order of Men, mentioned by k Sealger, called Quandai Mourners, Heracitus his Heires, which spent their time in weeping, and intended nothing but Lamentation for the Desolation of their Sanctuaries. These haue bene among the Iewes (saith he) euer since this destruction, and were once a yeere, on the ninth day of the Month Ab, allowed entrance into Ierusalem by Adrians Edict. But then also, saith 50 Saint Hierome, they are forced to pay for it, that they which sometime bought the blood of Christ, now must buy their owne teares. There may you see, saith he, on that day whereon Ierusalem was taken by the Romans, decrepit women, and old ragged men (annis pannisq; distos) and many wretched people (but pittied of none) with blubbered cheekes, blacke arnes, disheueled hayre, howling and lamenting for the ruines of their Sanctuaries, in their bodies and habite bearing and wearing the markes of Diuine vengeance : Of whom the Souldier exacterh his fee also, for libertie of further weeping. It is written in an ancient Iournall of Burdeaux, * that not farre from the Images there is a stone boord thorow, to which the Iewes come yearly, and ainoit it, lamenting grieuouly, and rehering their garments, and then depart. Benjamin i (an Hebrew Author) relateth, that one and twentie 60 dayes journey from Kupha, through the Wildernesse, he travelled to the Region of Seba, where dwelled Iewes, called the children of Rechab, or men of Theima, which gaue Tithes to to the Disciples of the wife, who continually applied themselves to learning, and to Sermons, alway sitting in the Schoole, and to the humbled Israelites, and devout persons, which lament Sion, and bewaile Ierusalem. These dwell in Caves, or in ruined houles, fasting all the daies of their life, except on the Sabbaths and Festiuals, beseeching mercy continually at the hands of God, touching the banishment and deporation of Israel: they neuer eate flesh nor drinke wine. The same also do all the Iewes of the Countrey Theima and of Talmaas pray: All which go with rent clothes, and fast fortie dayes for the Iewish captiuitie. And so let them mourne which refuse ^m the glad tidings of great ioy to all people, that vnto vs is borne I E S V S a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord.

m Luc. 2. 11.

10 But yet what rockie heart can but mourne with them, and for them, thus made spectacles to the World of bodily and spirituall misery, which both in these times mentioned, and (before) in the time of Traian, and in all ages since, hath pursued them in all places of their habitation, if that name may be giuen to this World-wandering and Vagabond-people? In the time of Traian, ⁿ Adrian predecessor, the Iewes had rebelled in Egypt, and Cyrene, where they committed much outrage and mischief, vnder one Luke their Captaine, against whom the Emperour sent Martinus Turbo, who destroyed many thousands of them; and fearing that the Iewes in Mesopotamia would do the like, commanded Lucius Quietus to destroy them utterly; in recompence of which seruice, executed to his minde, he made him president of Iudza. Dion saith, That the Captaine of the Iewes was named Andrew, and that

20 they slue many Greekes and Romans, did eate their flesh, gyrt themselves with their gurs, were imbrued with their blood, and clothed with their skimmes; many they sawed afunder, fram the crowne downwards, many they cast to the Beasts; and many were found to kill one another with mutuall combats, so that two hundred and twentie thousand persons perished by this vnspokeable crueltie. In Egypt and Cyprus, vnder their Captaine Artemion, they destroyed two hundred and fortie thousand. They were subdued by Traians captaynes, specially by Lucius: And it was made a capitall crime for a Iewe (although forced by tempest) to set foote in Cyprus, Africa was re-peopled (where they had destroyed) with new Colonies. No maruell if the Romans, thus prouoked, both in the time of Traian & Hadrian, destroyed so many thousands of them. Julian afterward gaue them leaue to returne

30 into their Countrey, & re-build their Temple, more for hatred of the Christians, then for loue to their Nation: Whose wickednesse and answerable successe herein, is plainly detected and detested by Gregorie Nazianzene, & other Fathers, as ^q we haue before related.

Of other their False Christs and Seducing Prophets.

40 ADde further of their bodily confusions, and the illusions of their bewitched minds: Nicephorus mentioneth a Pseudo-Moses of the Iewes in the parts of Arabia destroyed by the forces of the Empire, together with his Complices in a like Rebellion. Socrates describeth a further madnesse of theirs (for true is that saying of Saint Paul, That they which will not beleeme the Truth, are giuen over to strong delusions to beleeme lies.) In the Ile of Creete was ^a a false Prophet, that affirmed himselfe to be Moses, which led the Israelites thorow the Red-Sea, and to be sent from Heauen to those Iewes to conduct them thorow the Red-Sea, into the continent of the holy Land. This he perswaded them for the space of a whole yeere, going from Citie to Citie: And at last induced them to leaue their riches to them that would take them, and to follow him; at a day appointed he went afore them vnto a Promontorie of the Sea, and there bid them leape in; 50 which many obaying, perished in the waues, and many more had perished, had not some Christian Merchants and Fishers beene at Land, which saued some, and forbad the rest to follow. The Iewes seeking to be reuenged of this counterfeit Moses, could no where finde him: and therefore thought him to be some Deuill in humane shape, which sought their destruction, and thereupon many of them became Christians. Beniamin Tundelensis reporteth of one in Persia called David Elroi, sometime the Disciple of Hafsai, which was ^b Head of the captiuitie, one learned in the Law and Talmud, in forraine learning, in the Ismaelites tongue and in Magike, who gathered together the Iewes in Haphison, and would needes warre on all Nations, and winne Ierusalem, affirming that God had sent him therefore, and to free them from the Gentiles. Many beleued him to bee the Messias. The King of Persia sent for him, imprisoned him in the citie Dabasthan, whence they are not free during life. But he three dayes after, when the King and his Councel fate to examine and take order for this businesse, came amongst them: And when the King asked who brought him thither, thirther, he said, his owne wisdome and industrie. The King bid lay hold on him, but his seruants answered, they could heare him, but not see him: and away he went, the King following him to a Riuer, ouer which Dauid stretching his hand-kerchiefe, passed ouer, and was then seene of them all, who in vaine pursued him with their boates. This Dauid the same day went ten dayes iourney from thence to Elghamaria, and declared to the Iewes there all which had passed. The Persian sent to the Calipha of Bagdet, that he should cause the head of the Captiuitie, to periwade him to other courtes, otherwise threatening destruction to all the Iewes in Persia; which Iewes likewise for feare thereof writ to the head of the Captiuitie. He therefore writ to Dauid. We would haue thee to knowe that the time of our deliuerance is not yet come, nor haue we yet seene our signes, and therefore enioyne thee to desist from these attempts: otherwise, be thou cast out from all Israel. But he proceeded neuertheless, till Zimaldin, a Turkish King, subiect to the Persian, corrupted his Father in Law with ten thousand peeces of Gold, who accordingly with a Sword slew him in his bed. And thus ended Dauid, but not his designs: for the Iewes in Persia were forced by many talents at gold to buy their peace with the King. About the same time Rambam tells of another, which tooke him to bee the Messenger of the Messias, which should direct his way before him, preaching, that the Messias would appeare in the South. To him resorted many Iewes and Arabians, whom he led alongh the Mountaines, promising to go nicete the Messias, who had sent him. Our Brethren in the South countrey, wrote to me a long Letter hereof, declaring the innouations he made in their Prayers, and his preachings amongst them, asking my aduice. And I writ a booke, saith Rambam, for their sakes, touching the signes of the coming of the Messias. This Seducer was taken after a yeeres space, and brought before one of the Kings of the Arabians, which examined him of his courtes, who answered that he had so done at the commandement of God, in witness whereof he bad him cut off his head, and he would rise againe and reuiue: which the King caused to be done, without any such miraculous effect ensuing. The like telleth Isaac Lewisa, of one Lemlen, a Jew, in the yeere 1500. as also of R. Dauid, which about the same time was burned for like cause. The Iewes haue Legends (as that of Eldad, translated by Genebrard) of multitudes of Iewes in Ethiopia: whom when wee come thither, we will visit. But alas, it is small comfort, being burned in the fire, to make themselves merry with smoke.

Of their miseries sustained in all places of their abode, all histories make mention. And yet their superstition is more lamentable then their dispersion, as also their pernicacie and fly-bornenesse in their superstition. And certainly me thinks, that euen to him that will walke by sight, and not by faith, not obliging his credit to meete authoritie, as the case standeth betwixt vs and the Scriptures, but will be drawne by the cords of Reason onely and Sense, euen so such a one, me thinks, this Historie of the Iewes may be a visible demonstration of the Truth of Christian Religion: Not onely because the truth of the Prophecies of Isaac, of Moses, of Esaie, and other the Prophets is fulfilled in them, and because Gods iustice still exacteth the punishment of the betraying and murdering that iust one; but especially in this, that the bitterest enemies, cruellest persecutors, and wilfullest Haters that euer were of the Christian truth, are dispersed into so many parts of the World, as witnesses of the same Truth; holding and maintayning to death the Scriptures of Moses, and the Prophets; then which, euen Reason being Iudge (as is said before) we will not desire founder and fuller proofes of our profession. Neither is our Gospell wherein we differ from them, any other then the fulfilling of their Law: and Christ came not to destroy the Law, but to fulfill the same, the same truth being deliuered in both, veyled in the one, and reueled in the other. In him the Promises, in him the figures, in him the righteousness of the Law, righteousness in Doctrine, righteousness in practice, righteousness of Doing, righteousness of Suffering, to satisfie the debt, to merit the inheritance, are the witnesses, that in him they are all, yea, and Amen, haue receiued their perfect being and accomplishment. But as the sayle is ouer their hearts, eyes they haue and see not, eares and beare not: They hold out to vs the light of Scripture, themselves walking in darkenes; and referred to darkenesse; like to a Lampe, Lanterne, or Candlestick, communicating light to others, whereof themselves are not capable, nor can make any vse.

§. IIIL.

Of the Miserable Dispersions of the Iewes.

WE haue shewed how they were vterly cast out of their countrey: And Italie, and the Empire was filled with Iewish slaues. Nor was this their first dispersion; but as the Assyrians had carried away the other ten Tribes: So the Babylonians carried away the two Tribes remayning, which might haue returned vnder the the Persian Monarchie; but many remained in those Countries till the dissolution of that Jewish state and after. They had there diuers famous Vniuersities, and that at Bagdet endured till the yeere of Christ, one thousand three hundred (so writeth * Boterus.) At which time they fleeing the persecutions of the Arabians, dispersed themselves into India, where many are found at this day. These, through continuall conuersing with the Gentiles and Christians, haue small knowledge of the Law, and lesse would haue, but for other Jewes that resort thither out of Egypt. Before that time also, if we beleue the Ethiopian History, twelue thousand Jewes (of each Tribe a thousand) went with the Queene of Sabaes Some, which they say, she had by Salomon, into that Country, and there remaine their posteritie to this day.

Thus is ASIA and AFRIKE fraught with them, but EUROPE much more. ADRIAN banished five hundred thousand into Spayne, where they multiplied infinitely, and founded an Vniuersitie at Corduba, about the yeere of our Lord, one thousand: And at Toledo was a Schoole of twelue thousand Jewes, about the yeere of our Lord, one thousand two hundred thirty and sixe, as writeth * Rabbi Mosche Mikkatz: from hence it seemeth they swarmed into England and France.

ANNO * 1096. innumerable numbers of men and women of diuers Nations, according to the zeale of those times, travelling to Ierusalem, compelled the Jewes in places whereby they passed to be baptized, euery where making terrible massacre and slaughter of such as refused; may of the Jewes also killing themselves in zeale of their Law. At Mentz they slew of them 1014. of both sexes, and fired the greatest part of the Citie. The rest fled not long in their imposed Christianitie, but * willingly renounced that which against their wils they had accepted. Auentium numbred 12000. Jewes slaine in Germanie in this irreligious quarrell. Otto Frisingensis attributes these Jewish slaughters to the zealous preaching of Rodolph a Monke, which surie was appeased by the preaching, and authoritie of Saint Bernard. These Pilgrims (saith Albertus Aquensis which then liued) being a gallimaufry of all Nations, in pretence of this holy quarrell against the Turkes, gaue themselves to all vnholy and fishy courses amongst themselves, and against the Christians, where they passed, may whoores attending and following the Campe, to which they added excessiue in dyet, 30 robberies, especially all cruelties against the Jewes, chiefly in the kingdom of Lorraine, thus beginning the rudiments of that war against the enemies of the Faith. First, they destroyed them and their Synagogues in Collen, and taking two hundred of them, flying by night to Nuis, they slew and robbed them all. At Mentz the Jewes committed themselves and theirs to the Bishop Rothard, who bestowed them with their infinite masse of treasure in his owne house, which yet could not protect them from the murdering and spoyleing Souldier, who entering by force, slew seven hundred of them; adding also the like butcherie on their wiues and children. The Jewes hereat Jewishly moued (pardon the want of a fitter word) layd violent hands on each other, and slew their owne children, wiues and brethren, the tender mother eschewing the souldiers cruelty by a greater, in cutting the throat of her owne child, and with obdurate concision, preuenting the sword of the vncircumcised. 40 Laden with these spoyle, they passed by the way of Hungary, where for some outrages, God punished both those and these with the Hungarian forces. Their miseries here in our Land endured, are by our Authors mentioned, and you shall anon heare a particular discourse thereof by it selfe. Out of France they were thrice banished by three Philips, although in Auinion there still remayne some of them. Being expelled France, they sought habitation in Germany, where Conradus the Emperor admitted them into the country of Sueuia: and thence they flowed into other parts, into Bohemia (in the City of Prage, are about fifteene thousand of them) and into Austria, into Hungary, whence, for the crucifying of a child, they were banished by king Mathias: as at Trenr, for the like fact, and poysoning of Welles, they sustained much trouble in Germany; and many passed to Venice; many also went from thence 50 into Russia (where the people cannot abide to heere them named) and Poland, where Cassimere the Great, for loue of an Hebrew Lasse, gaue them many priuiledges. They liue dispersed in the townes and Villages, occupied in handi-crafts and husbandry. They haue great Synagogues in Craconia, Leopold, and at Trochi, a towne of Lithuania: and Master Barkley, a Marchant of London, who hath spent many yeeres in Liuania, Polonia, and other of those cold countries, told me, That the Jewes farme the Custome of the Kings, and at Samaiden in Courland, one of these Jewish Customers beat out the braines of a Polonish Marchant, for deferring to open his packe: but in regard of the peoples hatred, prouision is made, vnder great penalties, for their securitie, and yet many Jewes were there executed by occasion of a murmur, procured (as was suspected) by Jewish exorcismes, intending a plague to the men, and not a murther to the beasts, if their working had sorted: but the Jewes said, it was but a pretence to deprive them of their riches.

They were cast out of Spaine by Ferdinand and Isabella, in the yeere 1492. It is thought that there went out of Spaine a hundred and twentie thousand families of them (besides Moores) and out of their kingdomes of Naples and Sicill. Hence they passed, Anno Domin 1539. into Tuscane, and the Popes Dominions, whence they were banished by Paul the fourth, and Pius the fifth: and receiued againe by Pius the fourth, and Sixtus the fifth; Rome and Venice hauing great store of them. This is the Popes holinesse; he that would not willingly endure a Protestant in the World; besides, the Stewes vnder his Holinesse Nose, can endure the Gracians, yea, and these Jewes, Rome it selfe hauing ten thousand, or ¹ a lter others reckoning, twentie thousand of them priuiledged with heir siue Synagogues, Liturgies, and publike Sermons; and to straine vp their vlturie to eightene in the hundred; ¹⁰ hauing also in some places (it may be in all) a peculiar Magistrate to decide controuersies, betwene Christians and them, with particular direction to fauour them in their trade. Dulcis odor lucri ex re qualibet. The beastly trade of Curtizans, and cruell trade of Iewes is suffered for goine, these paying a yeerely rent for the heads they weare, besides, other meanes to racke and wracke them in their purses at pleasure, they being vsed as the sponge-like Friars, to suck from the meaneit, to be squeezed of the greatit; insomuch that the Pope, besides their certaine tribute, doth sometimes (as is said) impose on them a Subsidie for ten thousand crownes extraordinary for some seruice of State. So well is the rule of Paul obserued by this Bishop, not to be a loser of filthy lucre, from filthy Stewes, from filthy Iewes.

Out of Spaine they went into Barbarie, and diuers other countries, and some into Portu- ²⁰ gall: where Iohn the second made them pay eight ctownes for a poll, and yet limited them short time of departure. Emanuel his successor did the like 1497. except they would become Christians, for which he assayed diuers meanes. But not preuayling, he caused their children, vnder the age of foure and twentie yeers to be baptized; some rather hurling their children into pits, some killing themselves: many for feare were baptized, some went into Italic, and abode in Ferrara, Mantua, Venetia, in the name of Maranes, and haue a Synagogue at Pisa. But the greatest part of them went into the East to Constantinople and Salo- ³⁰ mitchi, in which two Cities there are about an hundred and sixtie thousand of them. There are of them in all the chief Cities of traffike in the Turkish Empire. ^k Tyberias is wholly inhabited with Iewes, ¹ which Citie Zelm gaue to Gratiola a Iewish Matron. In Ierusalem there are about an hundred houses of them. There abide not many, because of a superstitious opinion, That before the Messias shall come, a great fire from heauen will consume that Citie and Countrie, to purge it of the abomination committed there, by prophane Nations. At Zante they are lo hated, that from Maundie Thursday, vntill Saturday noone, they dare not come abroad: for the people, in a foolish zeale, would stone them: and some refuse to eat of their meate or bread. The Turkes in their reproach vse such a kinde of imprecation; If I shu be not true, would God I might die a Iew. The old Testament is read of them in these parts in the Hebrew ^{*}, but their Kakamin and Cohens, that is, their wife-men and Priests preach in Spanish. Onely at Salomitchi (anciently Theffalonica) in Macedonia, and at Safetta in the Holy Land (two Vniuersities) they speake Hebrew. They will rather in blasphemie testifie ⁴⁰ their hatred of Christ, then any abilitie to dispute.

§. V.

Of the Estate of the Iewes, and their dispersed Habitations in the time of Benjamin Tudelensis.

BENIAMIN TYDELENSIS, a Iew of Nauarre, who hauing travelled Spaine, France, Italy, Greece, Natolia, Syria, and many other Countries of Asia, Affricke, and Europe (worthily reckoned one of the greatest Trauellers that euer liued:) at ⁵⁰ his returne into Spaine about foure hundred and fortie yeetes since, related what Iewish Synagogues he had seene in the worl d (one chiefe end as it seemeth, of his trauels) And because it appertayneth to this matter we haue in hand, and the booke (translated out of Hebrew by Arias Montanus) is very rare, I thought meete to adde here a brieue of those things which concerne the Iewes out of the same. At Barchinon they found a p-pulous Synagogue, another, but smaller, at Gerunda: Narbone was, as it were, Ensigne-bearer of the Law to all the Countries about, where was chiefe, Kalonymus of the seede of Dauid, there were three hundred Iewes. Foure leagues thence was the Citie Bidrach, where was an Vni- ⁶⁰ uersitie flored with Disciples of the wise: whereof also there were at Mompelier: Lunel was a famous Vniuersitie, where liued Asher the Pharisee, which studied night and day, fasting and perpetually abstaining from flesh, with Messulam, Ioseph, Iacob, Aaron, which by the bounty of the Vniuersitie gaue food, rayment, and teaching to such as came from far to studie there, as long as they rayed. Theremas a Synagogue of three hundred Jewes. At Bouthiaquiers fortie, at Noghères about an hundred, at Atles two hundred, at Mafilia two Colledges, and three hundred Jewes. At Rome two hundred free from tribute, at Salern six hundred, at Beneuent an Vniuersitie of two hundred. At Taraam two hundred. At Tarentum three hundred, at Omedo five hundred. At Thebes two thousand. At Corinth three hundred. There were people living in the Mountaines, which robbed and spoyled all, but dealt more fauorably with the Jewes (whose liues they spared) then with Christians, whom they not onely robbed, but slew also. These said they were descended of the Jewes: they were called Balachis. At Arimbon were four hundred, at Seleuca five hundred, Constantinople would not suffer a Jew to dwell in the Citie, nor to ride on horse-back, except one Solemon the Kings Physitian, yea, the people would beate them in the streets. At Pera liued two thousand Jewes. Two daies sayling from thence. At Dorostum was an Vniuersity of four hundred, at Rhodes were four hundred, at Dophros were Jewes, and Cyprian Epiontes before mentioned. At Behalgad, were a Sect of Ismaelites with a peculiar Prophet of their owne. At Tripoli many Jewes and Gentiles had a little before perished with an Earth-quake, whereof dyed in all Israel twentie thousand. At Gebal was a place, where the Ammonites had sometimes a Temple, and it was an Idoll of stone couered with gold, sitting with two Images of women sitting by, and an Altar before. There were an hundred and twentie Jewes; At Beeroth fiftie, at Sidon twentie. Here aways liued a people called Dogajm, of whom we shall speake more fully in another place. At Czfarea were few Jewes, but two hundred Samaritans, at Sebaste an hundred. This is betwene Garizim, an hill fertile & well watered, and Gebal, an hill stony and drie. In the place of the sometime Sanctuarie at Ierusalem, was a faire and large Temple, called the Temple of the Lord, built of Ghemar ben Acherab: there the Christians had no image but resorted thither only for prayer. Over-against it is a wall, made of the wals of the Sanctuarie, this they call the Gate of mercy: to this place the Jewes come to pray. The Pillar of Lots wife was then continuing, which was said to grow to the former bignes, if at any time the flocks had diminished it with licking. At Hebron was a great temple: and in a vault six Sepulchres, of Abraham and Sara, Isaac and Rebecca, Jacob and Leah: a Lampe perpetually burning: and in the Cauer it selfe were tubs full of bones of the ancient Israelites. At Benibera or new Afcalon in the border of Egypt were two hundred Jewes, forty Carraim, and three hundred Samantans. At Tiberias were fifty Jewes, and the Synagogue of Caleb, son of Iephu-neb: at Damascus were three thousand. There dwelt the Head of the land of Israel, called Esdra, and his brother Sarsalem, which was ouer the Iudgement, and Ioseph the fitt of the Synedrian, and Matthiab head of the order of Readers: there were two hundred Carraim, and four hundred Samaritans, amongst all which was peace, but no intercoure of marriages, in differing Sects. In Thadmar were four thousand Jewes: here and at Baghala were buildings of stone, so great that it was said to be the worke of Asmodem (with as good reason as Dinels dike with vs.) At Hamath was an Earth quake in those times, which destroyed fiftene thousand people in one day, and only an hundred and seuentie remayned. Haleb in old times called Aram Texoba, had fiftene hundred Israelites. At Petra in the Desart were two thousand. At Dakia (sometime Chalne) seuen hundred. Here was a Synagogue built by Esdra in the returne from Babylon; and another also of his building at Charan, two dayes iourney thence, the place where Abraham had dwelt, had no building on it, but was frequented by the Israelites, to pray there. At Alchabor were two thousand Jewes, at Nisibis one thousand, at Gezir ben Ghamar, a Citie on the banks of Tigris were four thousand. It is foure miles from the place where Noahs Arke rested, which Arke Ghamar son of Alchitab brought from the top of the hill, to the vse of a Moschee: neere to which was the Synagogue of Esdra, whither the Jewes on festiual dayes resorted to Prayer. Two daies iourney thence was Al-Musfal, sometime called Assur, the beginning of the kingdome of Persia, recaying her ancient greatnes, situate on Tigris, a bridge onely being betwene that and Ninieue (now wholly destroyed, only Castles and frectes remayned in the circuit thereof) at Al-Musfal were seuen thousand Jewes: and three Synagogues of the three Prophets, Abdias, Ionas, and Nabum. In Rahaban, anciently Rehoboth, were two thousand. At Karkefia (on the same banke of Euphrates with the former) five hundred; at Aliobar, two thousand; at Hhardan, fiftene thousand; at Ghukbera, built by Ieltronia, tenne thousand. Two dayes iourney thence is Bagdad of the kingdome of the Calipha, named Amir Alnummanim Alghabassi Hbaptfi, the chiefe of the Ismaelie Sect. Here was a thousand Jewes, and ten Synedria or Courts, the heads or chiefe whereof (he nameth them) are called Vacantes, because they attended no other function, but the administering of the Societie. They giue iudgement to all Jewes, which resort vnto them on any day of the weeke but the second, in which they all meet together before Samuel, the head of the Synedrium. But ouer all theie was Daniel, son of Hbafai, entituled the Head of the Captiuitie, descended from Danid, whom the Jewes called Our Lord; the Ismaelites, Sydna ben David, Our L. son of David. Hee had great Authority ouer all congregations of Israelites, warranted to him with the Amitis seale, who caused that all Israelites and Ismaelites should rise to him, vnder paine of an hundred stripes. When he goeth to see the King, it is with very great pompe. This dignitie is bought with a great summe of money giuen to the King and Princes at his confirmation; and then is the second Chariot of the King provided for him. He exerciseth imposition of hands on the men of the Synedrion. There were eight and twentie Synagogues in Bagdad, and the Suburbe on the other side Tigris. But the Synagogue which pertayned to the head of the Captivity, was of Marble of diuers colors, adorned with gold & siluer, spacious; and on the pillars were verses of the Psalmes, written in gold. Before the Arke were ten rowes of seates, with marble steps, 10 in the highest whereof sate the Head of the Captivity, with the Jewes of the family of David.

In Gehigan (sometime Rezen) two dayes iourney from thence, were fise thousand Israelites. One dayes iourney from hence was ε Babel, now wholly ruined, in which are yet seene the ruines of Nabuchodonosors Palace, but inaccessible, by reason of diuers kindes of Serpents. Twentie miles from these ruines dwell twentie thousand Israelites, which there pray in the Synagogues, the chiefe whereof is that of Daniel, of squared stones. There were at Hililah (fise miles thence) ten thousand Jewes in foure Synagogues. Foure miles thence it is to the Tower which the Sonnes of Diuisions built with Bricks, which the Arabians call Lagzar: the length of the foundation is about two miles, the breadth of the wals, two hundred and forty cubits: where it is broadest, it is an hundred reedes; and betweene euery ten reedes space, are waies in manner of spires continued thorow the whole building, on the top of which one may see twentie miles about. Halfe a dayes iourney from hence is Naphahh, where were two hundred Jewes. And three leagues thence, the Synagogue of ε Exechiel neere Euphrates, and in the same place sixtie Towers one against another, and a Synagogue betweene euery one. The monument of Exechiel was built by Iechonias with fise and thirte thousand Jewes. And this is a holy place, whither they resort from the beginning of the yeere, to the day of Expiation, to pray and keepe festiuall, Thither cometh the Head of the Cap iuitie, and other chiefe men from Bagdad, and two and twentie miles about they pitch their Tents here and there; and the Arabians keepe then and there a great Faire. At this time they reade on the Expiation day out of a booke 30 which Exechiel writ: and there is a holy house full of bookes since the time of the first and second Temple, the custome being, that they which die without children, should bequeath their bookes hither. The Jewes in Persia and Media make voves to bee performed in this place, to which also the Ismaelites resort to pray. The Sepulchre of the three Saints, companions of ε Daniel, is halfe a dayes iourney from hence, with fayre and great Arches. Three miles thence is Alkotsonath, and in it three hundred Jewes. At Kupha the Sepulchre of Ieconia, and feuen thousand Jewes. One and twentie daies iourney thorow the wildernes is the Region of Seba, now called the Land of Aliman, where dwell Jewes, the children of ε Rechab. This Region extended sixteene daies along the mountaines, subiect to no forren Nation, hauing therein foure hundred strong Cities, two hundred Townes, an hundred 40 Castles. The Metropolis is Themai. In all those Cities are about three hundred thousand Jewes. In the Region of Tilmaas an hundred thousand. Three dayes iourney hence is Chibar, in it fiftie thousand. These (they say) are of the deportation of Ruben, Gad and Manassers. From hence twentie fise dayes iourney is Vira, which is a Riuer running into Eliman, where were three thousand. And feuen iourneys from thence Neasar, & in it feuen thousand. Fise daies iourneys from thence Bosra vpon Tygris, and in it one thousand. Two dayes iourneys from thence the Riuer Samura, the beginning of Persia, with a Towne of the same name, wherein, were fiftene hundred. The place is famous by the Sepulchre of Esdra, who in his returne to Babylon in Embassage, here died. There was a Synagogue honoured also by the Ismaelites. In Susan were feuen thousand Jewes in foureteene Synagogues, before one of which was the Sepulchre of Daniel: about which rose a controuersie betweene the inhabitants of the one and other side of the Riuer: They which dwelt on that side where the Sepulchre was, seeming to the other the more fortunate; this caused blowes, was after agreed, that euery yeere it should be remoued by course, which was done with solemne procession, till ε Semiar the Persian King, thinking it a prophation to the holy Coffin, caused it to be hangd in a chest of glasse for all men to see, and forbad to take fish within two miles of that place in the Riuer.

ε Semiar, of Persia,

From hence was three dayes iourney to Robad-Bar, where were twentie thousand Jewes. Two iourneys from hence was the Riuer Vaanath, where were foure thousand Jewes. Foure iourneys further, Malhaath: here they were not Ismaelites, nor vnder the Persian; they had two Colledges of Israelites, which acknowledged, neuertheless, the Head of the Captivity in Bagdad. At Ghaatian, fise iourneys beyond, were fise and twentie thousand.

Here

Here began the mountaines of Haphthon, wherein were an hundred Synagogues. This is the beginning of Media : they speake Chaldee ; and there were amongst them the Disciples of the wife. Ghamaria is vnder the Persian, where David Elroi was. It was ten dayes journey thence to Hhmandan, chiefe Citie of Media, there were fiftie thousand Iewes in that Region, and the Sepulchre of Mordecai and Esther. Foure journeyes further was Debarze-
 10 thaan, neere this Riuer Gozen, in it foure thousand Iewes. Beyond that, seuen journeyes, Asbahen the chiefe Citie, twelue miles in compass, and therein fiftene thousand Israelites, ouer whom, and all the Persian Iewes, was Salom by authoritie from the Head of the Capti-
 20 mity. Foure journeyes hence was Siaphaz, called of old Perlis, whence the whole Region was named Persia, therein ten thousand. Seuen dayes journeyes thence, Ginh, vpon Gozen, a famous Mart ; in which were eight thousand. Samarcaneth was the fittest Citie of that Kingdome, five journeyes from Ginh, where were fiftie thousand. Foure journeyes thence 30 Tubot : and twentie eight further I passed to the mountaines Nisben, which ouer looke the Riuer Gozen, where were many Israelites ; and they say, there dwell the foure Tribes of Dan, Zabulon, Isser, Naphthali. Their Countrey extendeth twentie dayes journey, and hath many Cities, free from subiection to any Heathen : They are gouerned of Ioseph Armacida Leuita ; they till the ground, and hold warres with the children of Chus, traouelling through the desert thither. They are in league with the Copher Althorech a people that worship the Windes, and liuing in the Wildernesse ; they haue neither bread nor wine, but eate raw flesh, 40 eyther new or dried : they haue no nose but onely two holes. Fiftene yeeres since, they tooke and sacked Ral, a chiefe Citie in Persia ; whereupon the King warred against them, and passing through the wildernesse to them, was deceiued by his guide, and his people almost starued, and after forced to slie ; with whom passed into Persia Moses one of the Iewes in those parts, which told me (Beniamin our Author) all this. Hence I went to Chesuszthan vpon the Riuer Tigris ; which runneth thence into Hoduor the Indian Sea, hauing in the mouth the Iland Nekrokia a famous Mart, where were five hundred Iewes. I sayled ten dayes thence to Kathiphan, where were five thousand Israelites. Thence to the Kingdome
 50 of Haaulem, a people of Chus which worship the Sunne : Thence after twentie two dayes sayling, I came to the Ile Chenerag, where they worship the fire, where were twentie three thousand Iewes. Fortie dayes sayling from thence was the Kingdome of Sinne, from which to Gingalan was fiftene dayes ; there were ten thousand Israelites. Thence I went to Ethiopian Iudia, which they call Baghdan, in which were high mountaynes, and in them many Israelites, subiect to none, which warred on the Hamaghtani, that is, the Libyans. From 60 thence to Azzan was twentie daies journey through the wildernesse Sebor, the King whereof was Sultan Alhaban an Israelite. Twelue dayes thence is Hhaluan, where were three hundred Iewes ; from which they passe in troups through the desert Tahaca, into Zeula in the tract of Geena or Ginza, where they encounter shoures of sands. This Region is in the land of Chus, and is called Alhabas, towards the West. Thirteene dayes journey from Hhaluan is Kits the beginning of Egypt. And five from thence Pium, once Pithon, where were 70 twentie Iewes, and many monuments of our fathers to be seene. Thence to Mistram is foure journeyes, where were two thousand Iewes in two Synagogues, which differed in their distribution of the Lectures of their Law : the Babylonians finishing it in a yeere, as in Spain, the Israelites in three. But twice a yeere they assembled together in Prayers, on the feast Leuitie Legis and on the feast Late Legis. Nathaneel was chiefe ouer all the Vniuersities (or Synagogues) of Egypt, and appointed Malters, and Aduni. He was familiar with the King Amir Almuhammad Elsonne of Abualib. At Alexandria were three thousand Israelites. But for his trauels in Egypt, and the Synagogues which there he found, as also backe againe into Sicilia, Germany, Boheme, Prussia, &c. because there are yet knowne Synagogues of them, I surreace relation. And much may I feare I haue too much wearied the Reader in so long a 80 Iewish Pilgrimage ; but seeing Authors of best note, Scaliger, Dressius, Lipsius, &c. cite him, and Arius Montanus hath taken the paines to translate him, and his trauels are such ample testimonies of this our present subiect of Iewish dispersions, I haue bene bold to annex these things. If any list not to beleuee such multitudes of Iewes, I will not vrge him ; howsoeuer that deluge of Tartars in all those Asian Regions soone after Beniamin dayes, brought a new face of all things in these Easterly parts : as a Iew, and relating these things to Iewes, and by Iewes passing to vs, it is like he reported, and we haue receiued, with the most. For his Geographicall, some of his names are easily reconciled to the present, some hardly, which I leaue to the Readers indultie.

Nic. Trigaut, exep. Sinol. lib. 1.

After these relations of Beniamin, I thought it not vnfit to insert out of Ricci & Trigautius, Iesuites, lately residing in China, some what appertaining to these Jewish affaires. It is but few yeeres since the Iesuites could settle themselves at Paquin, the Royall Citie of China. Thither did a certaine Jew (moued with report of these strangers, hauing an imagination that they were Jewes) resort vnto them. This Jew was borne at Chaifansu, the mother-Citie of the Prouince Honan, his name was Ngai, his countenance not resembling the Chinois: he neglecting Iudaisme, had addicted himselfe to the China studies, and now came to Paquin to the Examination, in hope of proceeding Doctoer. There did he enter the Iesuites house, professing that he was of their Law and Religion. Ricci leads him into the Chappell, where on the Altar stood the Image of the Virgin, Iesus, and Iohn Baptist kneeling; which hee taking to be the Image of Rebecca and her twiues, did worship vnto them, contrarie (he said) vnto their custome. The Images of the Euangelists he supposed to be so many of Iacobi sonnes. But vpon further questioning, the Iesuite perceiued that he was a professor of the Law of Moses: he confessed himselfe an Israélite, and knew not the name of Jew; so that it seemed, the dispersion of the ten Tribes had pierced thus farre. Seeing the Hebrew Bible, hee knew the Letters, but could not reade them. He told them, that in Caifansu were ten or twelue Familles of Israelites, and a faire Synagogue, which had lately cost them ten thousand Crownes; therein the Pentateuch in rolles which had bene with great veneration preserved siue or six hundred yeeres. In Han-cheu, the chiefe Citie of Chequian, he affirmed, were many more Familles with their Synagogue: many also in other places, but without Synagogues, and by degrees wearing out.
His pronounciation of Hebrew names differed from ours, as Herusololim, Mofica for Messia, Ierusalem. His brother (he said) was skillfull in the Hebrew, which hee in affection to the China preferment had neglected; and therefore was hardly censured by the Ruler of the Synagogue.

* So the Ahyf sines call OIrael, Chirofio.

To this Citie did Ricci send one of his to enquire, who found these reports true, which also copied the beginnings and endings of their bookes, which they compared and found to agree with their owne Pentateuch, sauing that they wanted prickes or points. He writ also in China Characters to the Ruler of their Synagogue, that he had the rest of the bookes of the old Testament, and other bookes of the New, which contained the acts of the Messias being already come. The Ruler doubted, saying, that he would not come till ten thousand yeeres were expired. He also promised, that because he had heard much good of him, if he would come thither, and abstaine from Swines-flesh, they would make him Ruler of their Synagogue. After this, three Jewes came from thence to Paquin, and were almost perswa-ded to become Christians. These complained, that through ignorance of the Hebrew, their Religion decayed, and that they were likely all of them in a short time to become Saracens or Ehnikes. The old Archisynagogue was now dead, his sonne a young man succeeded in place, but ignorant of their Law. And that their Jewish Religion was indeed languishing, appeared by this, that they both worshipped the Popish Images, and complained, that in their Synagogue and priuate houses they had none. They were offended that they were for-bidden the eating of any creature, which themselves had not killed, which had they observed in this journey, had cost them their liues. Their wiues and neighbours esteemed Circumcision of their infants on the eighth day a cruell thing, which they could be willing to altar, with acceptation of the Christian Law, nor would much stand about Swines-flesh. They told them of certaine Christians also, or worshippers of the Crosse in China, which with the Jewes and Saracens were all called by the Chinois, Hoci, adding some distinction from their differing Rites, calling the Saracens, Hoci which refused Swines flesh: The Jewes, Hoci which abstaine from the sinew; the Crosse-worshippers, Hoci which abstaine from round-footed beasts, whereas the Jewes, Saracens and Chinois eat the flesh of horses, asses, and the like. This Historie I haue added, to shew how the Jewes haue bin dispersed into the furthest parts, and how time, the deuourer of all things, hath almost eaten them out, or their Religion at least. Somewhat also may be hence coniectured touching the deportation of the ten Tribes, the Hebrew prickes, and moderne Characters, which I leaue to others discussing.
Once, it is by all Historie manifest, that by the inundations of Saracens, Tartars, Turkes, &c.
both the Jewish and Christian Religions (sometimes frequent) haue bene by degrees consumed and almost worne out of many parts of Asia.

In

In Aug. 1614. at the same time * which they solemnize with fasting for the destruction of Ierusalem, their little Ierusalem (so they call the Iewes streete in Frankfort) was spoiled by the vnruly Citizens, and gaue them a new cause of mourning. The Iewes at first defended themselves, and the Magistrates fought to allay the furie of the people: but at last consented to depart the Citie, one thousand and foure hundred, presently passing downe the Mzne in boates, and the rest following them the next day. It seemed a prodigious and dismall signe vnto them, that the Ox, which they vse to keepe all the yeere in their Church-yard or buriall place, now being shut vp for the slaughter, brake away from them.

- The Mother gaue fatal example to the Daughter: for Frankfort they account the Mother 10 of Israel, which led the way to Wormes in expulsion of the Iewes. This should haue hapned the seuenth of April. 1615. being good Friday, but was deferred till Munday following, when early in the morning they sent word to the Iewes into their streete, that trussing vp their choicest goods, they should within one houre depart, which with much lamentation they did. Neither could the Magistrates preuaile in their defence, so odious had their vniuersal exactions of long time bene to the Citizens. Thus the Iewes take their way to the Rhene: And the same day was the rooofe of their Synagoge pulled downe, and a Decree made, not to leaue one stone thereof vpon another, six hundred of them presently putting the same in execution. These spared not the monuments and graue-stones, but brake them in peeces, notwithstanding some of them seemed scarce possible to be raised from the Earth.
20 The Iewes hearing this ruine of their Synagoge, which they say (if you beleue it) had continued one thousand and eight hundred yeeres, rent their garments, and mourned in sack-cloth and ashes.

Þ. VII.

Of the Iewes sometimes living in England, collected out of ancient Records, by Master Iohn Selden of the inner Temple.

- 30  lthough I haue had already a long tedious journey, wearisome to my Reader and my selfe, whilst I haue accompanied these miserable Iewes in their dispersions: yet did I conceiue, this following relation would rather seeme as a welcome recreation, then irksome progresse; because wee shall containe our selues in our owne Countreie: Wherein I must acknowledge the laborious industrie of our learned Countinarian and Antiquarie, Master Selden, who out of ancient Records hath thus traced the foot-prints of this antiquated and out-worne people: mine is but the transcribing and abbreviating. Of the Iewes first comming to this Land is vncertaine: It seemes that some little notice was taken of them before the Conquest; after which we haue diuers testimonies, and besides others, the Statute de Iudaismo, both before and after, their state and condition was very scruple, as appeareth in legib. Confess. cap. 29. Iudei & omnia sua Regis sunt, &c.
40 The Iewes and all they had was the Kings. What they suffered in succeeding ages, our common Stories discouer. There was one amongst them which had the office of Presbyteratus omnium Iudeorum totius Anglia (which I take to be their chiefe Priest-hood in their Synagogues: For if it had signified a meere Lay Eldership, I ghesse I should haue met with it in the pleas of their Exchequer) and this lay in the Kings grant, as by King Iohns Charter of it may be seene. In Roi. Chart. 1. Iohan. Reg. ch. 171. memb. 28. Omnibus fidelibus suis, & omnibus Iudeis & Anglia salutem. Sciatis nos concessisse, & presenti charta nostra confirmasse Jacobo Iudeo de Londonijs Presbytero Iudeorum Presbyteratum omnium Iudeorum totius Anglie rusiodiam habend. & tenend, quamdiu vixerit, libere & honorifice, & quiete & integre, ita quod nemo ei super hoc molestiam aliquam aut grauamen inferre presumat. Quare, &c. apud Rothomagum 3. 1. die Iulij Anno Regni nostri primo. Therein is also mention of a former Charter granted by Rich. 1.
50 Others Iustices were appointed ad custodiam Iudeorum, before whom pleas twixt them, and others and them, were held, and matters adiudged secundum legem & consuetudinem Iudaismi, as the entry often is. In most Townes of note were two Christians and two Iewes, or one of both sides, appointed as publique Notaries for all their Deeds of contract, and those Notaries had one chest and severall keyes for the safe-keeping of such Deeds, and they were called Cyrogographij Christiani & Iudei are a Cyrographice Oxonie or other such Towne. And hence must you interpret les houches Cyrogaphes in statuto de Iudaismo. And by these Notaries or Cyrographers the Deeds of the Iewes were tried. These Deeds and such like they called 60 visually Barra, of their Hebrew word betar, that is, a Deede or contract: as Salomon de Stamford agnouit per statum suum, and the like. And howeuer land was not subiect to execution for debt, till 13. Ed. 1. yet it seeme by 52. Hen. 3. That for debts of the Iewes, land was

was seized by writ for the debtor. Constat iustitiarij & per inquestorem rotularum de Scaccario noster Indorum, quod Aaron, &c. When any man had dealt much with them, and after all discharges doubted further ill measure by any such Statutes or Deeds lying bid, the course was to send out a process to the Sheriffe of the County, or Constables of the Castles of great Townes, to make proclamation on their Sabbaths, Summoning all Iewes of this or that Synagogue to be at their Exchequer to account with such as doubted in that kinde. Thus 52. Hen. 3. preceptum est vice-comiti Essex quod clamari faceret per scholas Indorum Colestria per duo vel tria Sabbata, si aliquis Indeus vel Iudaea aliquid debitum exigere poterit de Rogero filio Petri, &c. that then he or the should come adcomputandum. Ei Vice-comes mandauit tam littera Latina quam Ebraica, quod nullus Indeus nec Iudaea aliquid debitum exigi de predicto Rogero. 10 So do all other Sherifes and Constables returne in Hebrew and Latine. For in those times both Languages were used not only in Deeds of the Iewes, which I haue often seene with the Hebrew on the one side, and the same in Latine on the other, but also in Records of Law, as in 43. Hen. 3. in regit. Monasterij de Boxgrau in Suffex, &c. And as both tongues were used, so in trialls twixt Christians and them, the venire facias was sex probos & legales homines, & sex legales Iudeos, as often appears. What Oath was given them I finde not, but R. Moses Mikkoixi that liued in the time of Hen. 3. writes in prec. affirmat. 123. that holding the booke of the Pentateuch betweene their Armes, they called to witnesse the God of Israel which is mercifull, &c.

Vpon their conuersion their goods were confiscate : which was (it seemes) after such 20 time as the Domus Conuersorum (that which is now the Rolles) was in 17. Hen. 3. built for them, where they might liue sub quadam honesta viuendi Regula, & certum haberent in tota vita sua domicilium, tutum refugium, & sufficientem viue sustentamentum, sine seruilis labore & feneratorum oneramento, as the words of Mat. Paris are. In 52. Hen. 3. Iosim ben Salomon a Iew of Marleborough shewes to the Court of the Iustices of the Iewes, that one Isaet his sister was married to one Salon, the sonne of Lombard of Kirlade, & quod ipsa habuit in arca Cyrograph. Merlebrigie vnum Cyrograph. xxxij. marcarum, which vpon her conuersion became the Kings, as the Roll saith, and quod hoc totum sit verum, obligat omnia bona sua, &c. Which all were confiscate for not prosecuting the sute. But in the time of E. 1. it was granted, that the house should haue one halfe of the goods of the Conuert, and that he himselfe should haue the o- 30 ther halfe. So placit. 9. Ed. 1. In de Sanctis Dionys, cyflos domus conuersorum hath a writ for the moiety of the goods of Beleager & Huccorb Iewesses of Oxford, late Conuerts, &c. the other halfe allowed to them.

One cruell (to speake the properest phrase) Iewish crime was vsuall amongst them, euery yeere towards Easter, though it were not alwayes knowne (see Mat. Paris in 39. H. 3.) to steale a young boy, circumsise him, and after a solemne iudgement, making one of their owne Nation a Pilate, to crucifie him out of their diuellish malice to Christ and Christians. For their circumsising alone, take this record inter Placita 18. H. 3. Rot. 21. Norff. Benedictus in physico appellat Iacobum de Normico Iudeum, quod cum Odoardus filius suus puer etatis 5. annorum iuxta Iudendo, &c. that foure yeeres before that, Iames the Iew, had taken his sonne 40 Ed. as he was playing in the streete, and carrying him to his house, circumsised him, and there detayned him one day and night, till by force of Christians hee recovered him, hauing his circumsised member then swollen, &c. The childe being examined, confessed that they rooke and carried him to the house of Iames aforesaid, where, while one held him and couered his eyes, another circumsised him with a knife; the peece cut off they put in a bason of sand (in quodam vacuo cum sabellone, & quaserunt peciam illam cum paruis suffleris) and there they with small puffes of wind out of their mouthes sought it, and the Iew which first found it, was called Iurnepin, and therefore they gaue the same name to the childe, calling him Iurnepin. The Archdeacons Officiall came to testifie this with a great companie of Priests, all in the word of God, saying as aforesaid, that they saw his members swolne : and the 50 Coroners of Norwich with thirtie six of the Citizens testified as much. Hereupon the Iewes were all put in prison, and found accessories except Mossey the sonne of Salomon. Order was taken, that because the case was strange, and they had no precedent of the like, it should first be enquired of by the Ecclesiasticall Ordinary, and that he should certifie to the King. The Iewes after procured the boy to be seene, and his member was found couered. But this is not repugnant to the former testimonie : seeing by Chyrgery, * the skinn may be drawne forth to an vncircumcision. In the yeere following of Hen. 3. Mat. Paris reports such a deede of the Iewes of Norwich, and in 24. H. 3. that they circumsided a Christian childe, and called him Iurnin, and meant to haue crucified him. All the Iewes of the Citie were questioned about it : and when they would haue referred themselves to Lay authoritie, William de Ralegh the Bishop sayes, Hec ad Ecclesiam spectant, non ad regalem curiam, cum de circuncisione & de fidei latione questio ventiletur. Foure Iewes conuicted hereof were drawne drawne at Horses tayles, and hanged on a gibbet. In 39. H. 3. the case of Hugh Lincoln crucified is in the same Author, and for it eigheteen Jewes were at once drawne and hanged. This Hugh is reckoned as a Saint in Chaucers Prioresse tale. By reason of their exactions and vilties they were all banished, (their moveables allowed them; but Walsingham sayes, onely their expences for passage) in 18. Ed. 1. Math. Westm. numbers them one hundred and sixty thousand, five hundred and eleven: The house of Conuerts in Par. 5 1. Ed. 3. memb. 20. is giuen to the Master of the Rolles.

- By the Statute Iudaisme they were to weare (euery one being past seuen yeeres olde) a cognifiance of yellow vpon their vpper garment, thereby to be knowne (some such distinction had bene generally enioyned in the Councell of Lateran) see the Statute, & capde l. ud. 6. R. 1. Rog. de Hoveden, fol. 424. They were forbidden to build new Synagogues, made subiect to the payment of Tithes, and were to weare on their vpper garment, on the brest two peeces of wollen cloth of another colour plainly to be discerned; each of them two fingers broad, and foure in length, by the Prouinciall Councell of Oxford vnder Stephan Archbishop of Canterbury in 8. - 20 A Chronologie of the Iewish Historie from the beginning of the World, briefly collected.

- The Flood happened (as Moses reckoneth the Parcels in the Ages of the Patriarchs) in the yeere of the World 1656. which are thus accounted: Adam at the hundred and thirtieth yeere begat Seth: Seth at a hundred and five begat Enos: Enos at ninetie Kainan: he at seuentie Mahalaalel, who at sixty: five begat Iared: Iared being one hundred fixie two yeeres olde, begat Henoch, who at fixtie five begat Methuselah: and hee at a hundred 30 eighty seuen begat Lamech, who in his hundred eightie two yeere begat Noah; in the fixie hundredth yeere of whose life the Flood came: Whereof euery Nation almost in the World hath some tradition; howsoever as Censorinus citeth out of Varro, from the beginning of the world to that first deluge, is called Edon, or vnknowne; as from thence to the first Olympiade was μυθικός or fabulous; onely that deserueth the title of ιστορικόν from the Olympiads forward, if we regard humane Historie. But the Diuine hath made the former more cleere then the later. Some difference is in what part of the yeere the World was created, which is supposed to be Autumne, because the trees were then in those parts of Eden laden with fruits: and the Jewes will obserue that time, Scaliger also sometime of a contrary opinion, hath now yeelded to this. And the Egyptians in the time of Fermicus held that the 40 world was created in the thirtieth part of Libra. The Flood after Scaliger began in the yeere 1657. on Saturday the seuenth of Nouember.

- The second age of the World is reckoned from the Flood to Abraham: Whose birth was after the Flood 292. yeeres: Sem two yeeres after the Flood begat Arpachsad: hee at thirtieth five yeeres Selah, who in the thirtieth yeere begat Heber: Heber at thirtie foure Peleg, who being thirtie yeeres old begat Regu, and hee at thirty two Serug, in whose thirtie yeere Nabor was borne, who at nine and twenty begat Terah, who at seuentie yeeres begat Abram. Thus Scaliger, Calusius, Buntingus, Arius Montanus, Genebrard, Peregrinus, Adrichomius, Opmeerus, &c. But Iunius, Broughton, Lydyot, Codomanus, &c. adde fixtie yeeres more. For Moses saith, Gen. 11. 32. That Terah died in Charan, aged two hundred and five yeeres, and then 50 Abram (as it is in the next Chapter) was seuentie five yeeres old; so that Terah when Abram was borne, was a hundred thirty yeeres old. Whereas therefore he is said at seuentie yeeres to beget Abram, Nabor, and Haran, it is to be vnderstood, that he then began to beget: Abram being named first for diuine priuiledge, not because hee was eldest. The like phrase is vsed, Gen. 5. 32. Noah being five hundred yeeres old begat Shem, Ham and Laphet, and yet neither were they all borne at once, nor was Shem the eldest: let the Reader chooſe whether of these opinions he best liketh.

- In the seuentie five yeere Abram went out of Charan, hauing receiued the promise; from whence to the departure of the Israclites out of Egypt, are numbered 430. yeeres. Rather herein we are to follow Pauls interpretation of Moses then Genebrards, who Gal. 3. 17. accounts those foure hundred and thirtie yeeres mentioned by Moses, Exod. 12. 40. from the promise made to Abraham, and not from the time that Jacob went downe with his familie into Egypt. So that the departure out of Egypt, after Scaligers computation, and some o thers, Perkins, Adrichomius, &c. happened in the yeere of the World 2453. whereto if we adde those sixtie yeeres of Terebi life before mentioned, it amounteth to two thousand five hundred and thirteene. And so Broughton reckoneth. Iunius and Lydus account two thousand five hundred and nine. The difference seemes to arise from hence, that one accounteth from Abrams departing out of Vr of the Chaldees; the other from his departure from Haran, after his fathers death about five yeeres after. But it were an endlesse worke to reconcile Chronologers in their different computations. Some reckon the five and twentieth, Scaliger the fiftenth of Aprill, the day of their departure. And then the Hebrewes began their yeere at the Spring-Equinoxiall, which before they began in Autumne.

From this departure, to the building of Solomons Temple, * Scaliger reckoneth four 10 hundred and eightie yeeres, whose first foundations (he saith) were laid the nine and twentieth of May being Wednesday, Anno Mundi 2933. and of the great Julian Period (which differeth seven hundred sixtie four yeeres from the yeere of the World) 3697. In this computation of four hundred and eightie yeeres, betwixt the departure and foundation of the Temple, many Chronologers agree, * Arias Montanus, Adrichomius, Broughton, Perkins, Lydus, &c. although some dissent much. The somme arith of these parcels. Moses died fortie yeeres after their deliverance. Ioshua ruled seuentee; Othniel fortie; Ehud foure score; Gideon fortie; Abimelech three; Thola twentie three; Iaer twentie two; Lephie sixe; Ihsan seuen; Elamten; Aldon eight; Sampson twentie; Heli fortie; Sammuel and Saul fortie; David fortie; Solomon in the fourth yeere and second month beganne to build his Temple, 20 after which hee reigned thirtie seuen yeeres.

* From thence to the destruction of the Temple vnder Zedekias, are a counted four hundred twentie and seuen. This agrees with * Ezekiels account, reckoning a day for a yeere, three hundred and ninety daies or yeeres after the Apostasie of Israel from God, the rebellion against the house of Dauid in the beginning of Rehoboams raigne, by the means of Ieroboams; to which if we adde seuen and thirtie yeeres which Salomon reigned after the foundation of the Temple, the summe is four hundred twentie seuen. The same appeareth thus; Roboam reigned seuentee yeeres; Ahiam three; Asa fortie one; Iehoshaphat twentie five; Iehoram eight; Ahaziah one; Athaliah sixe; Ioaish fortie; Amaziah twentie nine; Azariah or Uzziah sixtie two. Betwixt Amaziah and Azariah the kingdome was ruled eleuen yeeres 30 by the States, as some gather out of 2. Reg. 15. 1. (Others reckon it not.) Iotham sixteene; Ahaz sixteene; Ezechias twentie nine; Manasses fiftie five; Amon two; Iosias thirtie one; Iehoaahaz three moneths; Eliakim or Iehoiakim eleuen yeeres; Iehoiachin three moneths; Zedekias or Mattaniah eleuen yeeres. The little difference from the former number may be ascribed to the current, and vnfinished yeeres of some of their raignes.

lib. 7.

From this time of Sedekias ruine, some begin the reckoning of the seuentie yeeres captiuitie; in which time others comprehend all Sedekias raigne, and account the returne vnder Cyrus to bee fiftie nine yeeres after this desolation; and from thence a hundred and eight to the Edict of Darius Nottus; from which time are numbred two hundred fiftie nine to the Dedication of Iudas Maccabeus; and from thence a hundred sixtie two yeeres to the birth 40 of Christ. So * Scaliger.

Scal. B. T. 1. 5.

To recite here their high Priests and later Kings, with the time of their pontificallie and raigne, out of Arias Montanus, I hold not vnfit. First, Iesus returned with Zorobabel, and built the Temple, whose time of Priest-hood, after Scaliger, Iunius, and those that reckon vnder the Edict of Darius Nottus, must needs be very long. To leaue that therefore his sonne Iocacim * succeeded in the Priest-hood twentie eight yeeres, besides twentie yeeres with his father. Eliash held the Priest-hood one and fortie yeeres; Ioiada twentie five; Ionathas twentie four; Ieddon twentie seuen, till the time of Alexander; Onias twentie seuen, after 50
Philo: but Eusebius saith twentie three; Simon Iustus thirtie; Eleazar twentie, Manasses twentie seuen, Onias thirtie nine.

Afterwards the Syrian Kings appointed high-Priests, of whom Iason was Priest three yeeres; Menelaus twelue yeeres, in whose twelue yeere Iudas Maccabeus began to administrate the Common-wealth. Ionathas brother of Iudas ruled eighteene yeeres, Simon his brother was both Priest and Captaine eight yeeres; Ioannes Hircanus his sonne, thirtie one. Whereas they had vsed to date their contracts according to the yeeres from Alexander, as wereade in the bookes of Maccabees: when Simon Hircanus was high Priest, that order was abolished, and another taken, that euery date should be expresse in such or such a yeere of N. high Priest of the great God. But lest the writing being cancelled, should bee neglected, 60 and perhaps the Name of God cast with in the dung-hill, the wise-men abolished that order on the third of Tisri, which they instituted a holy-day. As for the name of Maccabees, Iunius mins faith, it came from the inscription of those foure letters M. C. B. I. in the banners of those Princes which deliuered the Iewes from the Macedonian thraldome. Scaliger saith, that Iudas onely and properly was so called, but by abuse of speech was not onely giuen to all of that kindred, but to all which suffered in those times persecution for Religion; as the seuen brethren and others. The name Hasmonei began with that Hircanus, Scaliger thinketh, because in the sixty eight Psalme it is by the Iewes interpreted Prince.

Arifobulus sonne of Hircanus, first after the captiuitie called himselfe king, and reigned one yeere: Ioannes Alexander his brother, twentie seuen; after him his wife Alexandra, nine; Hircanus her sonne three moneths: Arifobulus his brother three yeeres: Ierusalem was taken 10 of Pompey, and Hircanus recouered the Priesthood, which he held two and twentie yeeres: Antigonius by aide of the Parthians possessed Iudæa fūe yeeres, and in his second yeere Herod was proclaimed King by the Romans, who tooke the Citie the fift yeere of Antigonius, and reigned foure and thirtie.

Scaliger ascribeth to Herod's kingdom the number after Eusebius account, reckoning 1. Can. 1. Antig. 1. 2. from the birth of Abraham 1977. he died 2016. Archelaus his son was made by Augustus Tetrarch of Ierusalem 2016. & was banished 2025. Agricola was made king by Caligula 2033. Agrippa his son by Claudius 2060. and died 2116. thirtie yeeres after the destruction of the Temple. The Dynastie of the Herodians lasted 139. yeeres. Thus Scaliger. He attributeth the Natiuitie of Christ to the 3948. yeere of the world.

20 Here we must leaue the Chronologers contending of the yeere of the world, in which this blessed Natiuitie happened; some adding many more yeeres, some not allowing so many. It is certaine by the Scripture, that he was borne in the one and fortieth, or twofold fortieth of Augustus, baptized in the fifteenth of Tiberius, then beginning to be about thirtie yeeres of age: in the thirtie three yeere he was crucified. In the seuentie two, as Baronius, and seuentie one yeere of Christ, as Buntingus and Limely account, Ierusalem was destroyed by Titus, in the second of Vespasian. Arias Montanus reckoneth this yeere of the World 3989. and saith, that the Hebrewes reckon it the 3841. which must needs be false. The fault ariseth from the false computation of the Persian and Græcan Monarchies. * Iosephus counteth from the time of Herod to the destruction of the Temple, twentie eight high Priests, 20.

30 and a hundred and seuen yeeres. After Scaliger in his Can. Isag. l. 3. this yeere 1612. is the 1614. of Christ, of the World 5461. after the Iewish account of Hillel 5372. of the Armenians 1061. of the Julian Period 6325. of the Hegira 1021. Anno 4. Olymp. 597. The Dionysian account, which we usually follow, was not generally receiued till after the time of Charles the Great. Scal. & T. 3. lib.

Of the Talmud.

Abbi Moshe Mikkotzi, * in a worke of his, set forth Anno 1236. as Buxdorsius citeth him, ^b saith, that the Written Law which God gaue to Moses, and Moser to the Israelites, is obscure and hard, because it speaketh some things contradictorie (which hee seeketh to proue by some places * mis-interpreted) and because it is imperfect, and containeth not all things meete to be knowne. For who shall teach vs (saith he) the notes of Birds and Beasts? (a Franciscan might answer him ^d out of the Legend of Saint Francis, the Patron of his Order) who shall teach them the proprietie and nature of points & accents of Letters?

60 Also, what fūre might be eaten, what not? &c. Many such things are defectiue in the Law, and therefore there is neede of some other Exposition of the written Law, whence these 20. 12. &c. ^d Legend of Saint Francis, where hee is said to preach to the beasts, and speake to the swallows.

things might be learned. This Exposition (for-sooth) must be their Talmud, the generation of which Viper, touched before, we will here more fully declare.

They say, that Moses on Mount Sinai was not with G o d fortie daies and fortie nights to keepe Geese. And G o d could haue written those Tables of the Law in an houre, and sent him a way with them so to haue presented that Idolatrie with the Golden Calfe. But G o d brought Moses into a Schoole, & there gaue him the Law in writing first, and then in all that long time expounded ^{the} the same, shewing the cause, manner, measure, foundation, and intention thereof in the true sense. This vnwritten and Verball Law did Moses teach Isaiah, he the Elders; from thence it was deniued to the Prophets. After Zacharias and Malachie, the last of these, it came to the grea: Saubedrin, and after them, by Tradition from father to sonne.

And * Rabbi Behai faith, That Moses learned the Law written, in the day time; and this Traditionall Law by night: for then he could not see to write. Rabbi Moshe Mikkezi sheweth the cause why God would delivher the same by mouthonly, and not in writing, left (I wille) the Gentiles should pervert this, as they did the other which was written. And in the day of Judgement, when God shall demand who are the Israe'lites, the Gentiles shall make challenge, because of the Law written, but the Jewes only shall be accepted, as having this Sinawi, this verball exposition. God also (say they) gave them Chachamin, Wife-men, authors of diuers ordinances amongst them, as to blisse God at the Sunne-rising, and Sunne-setting : And of Schooles where children should be taught the Law of Moses in every Citie, and where the Law of Moses should be read weekly; and that the Israe'lites should not eate or drinke with the Gentiles, nor what they had dressed; after the example of * Daniel, &c.

But when the Temple was defroyed, and the Jewes carried away captiues, then arose vp Rabbi Iuda Hannasi, who is called (for his humilitie and godlinesse) our Great Master; to whom God procured fawour in the eyes of Antoninus the Emperour, that hee had authoritie to assemble out of all places of the Empire, the most learned Jewes, to consult in this their almost desperate Estate, what course to take for the preservation of the Law amongst the people. And although this Kabala or Law, given by word of mouth, might not bee committed to writing; yet in confideration and commiseration of their miserie, whatsoeuer thereof was remayning in memorie; hee writ in a booke which hee called Mishlova, that is, a ^b Denoumentie, or Law reitared, containing five fummes, diuided into three leffe parts or tractates, and these into five hundred thirte two Chapters. Thus forse R. Mikkozi: The contents of the five fummes and their severall Tractates, you may see in Buxtorfius.

In this booke were contained the Traditions and ordinances of the Elders, according to the precept whereof, the Iewish Synagogue was to bee ordered; and it was received and approved of the Iewish Synagogue, ¹ in the yeere of Christ 219. ² Some yeeres after, Rabbi Iechanan, Rector of the Vniuersitie of Ierusalem for the space of eightie yeeres, enlarged that booke, and called it the Talmud of Ierusalem (being fitted for their vyle which dwell in the land of Iffrael, as the other for Portenres) which for the difficultie and obfcuritie thereof was not had in such estimation as the former, nor is it at this day. After him, Rabbi Affe read in the Schooles the Tractates, handling euery yeere two of them; so in the fixtie yeeres of his Rector-ship, he went twice through it all, but finished in writing onely five and thirte Tractates. After him in the yeere 1427. Maremar was made Rector, to whom Nar the sonne of Rabbi Affe adioyned himselfe. These perfected that which Rabbi Affe had left vnfinisht, And that which they thus added, was called Gemara, or the complement.

Thus the Mishna, and Gemara made vp the whole Talmud m. These two spent in their labours thirtythree and thirteene yeeres. And so in the yeere of our Lord 500. the Talmud was perfected, receiued for authentical, and called the Babylonian Talmud, according to which the Iewes to this day beaue themselves in cafes spirituall and temporall, accounting it as their ciuill and canon Law. The Iewes ascribe the Ierusalem Talmud to the yeere of the World 4259. the other 4265. This is called the Talmud of Ierusalem (saith Serapion) not because it was written there: But was compiled not in the Babylonian Vniuersitie, but in one of Israell, and in the Ierusalem language, which at that time was very corrupt and confused with Greekeish, Persian and Roman mixtures. This was both begun and ended by R. Iacobanan aforesaid, betweene the times of the Milina and Gemara. About the yeere 4860. and 1100. yeeres after Christ. R. Isaac ben Isaac in Spaine wrote (so it is called) The Little Talmud. And in the great and true Talmud are the additions of R. Barkaphra. Eldad Denist falsely, that it is in Hebrew among his enfolded Iewes. Note also, that the name Talmud or Talmud, is giuen sometimes to the whole worke, sometimes and often to the Gemara only, calling it the booke of the Misna and Talmud. And

And this is that Law verball, or deliuered by word of mouth, which is equalled to the other, without which the written law cannot be conceiued or vnderstood: The Ioy of the hart (saith Aben Ezra) and refreshing of the bones; betwixt which and the written Law wee can finde no difference, but being deliuered to them from their Elders. In one of their bookes, printed at Cremona 1556. is this sentence. Thinke not that the Law written is the foundation, but rather the Law Traditionall is the right foundation: and according to this Law did God make couenant with the Israelites; for God foresaw their captiuitie in time to come: and therefore left the people, among whom they should dwell, should write out and interpret this Law, as they did the other, God would not haue it written. And although in proceesse of time this Law be now written, yet it is not explained by the Christians, because it is hard, and requireth a sharpe wit. That which is spoken of the Law, is applied to commend their Talmud: If you can frustrate (saith the Lord) my Couenant with the day and the night, that is, according to their booke Tanchuma, when you will no longer learne and obserue the Talmud. And in the Talmud is thus recorded; To studie and reade in the Bible is a vertue, and not a vertue, that is, a small vertue: but to learne their Mischna or Talmud text, is a vertue worthy reward; and to learne by heart Gemara (the complement of the Talmud) is a vertue so great, that none can be greater. The Wise men (say they) are more excellent then the Prophets; and the wordes of the Scribes more loudly then those of the Prophets; and therefore the one forced to confirme them with miracles, the other simply to bee beleueed, as is said, Deut. 17. 10. When some of his Schollers visited R. Elazar in his sicknesse, and said, Rabbi, teach vs the wayes of life, that we may finde euertlasting life: his answer was, Giue honour to your fellow Students, and turne away your Children from the studie of the Bible, and place them betwixt the knees of the wife. Neither can hee (saith the Talmud in other places) haue a quiet conscience, which resumes from the studie of the Talmud to the studie of the Bible. And, Nothing is more excellent then the most holy Talmud. And it is impossible to stand on the foundation of the written Law, but by the traditionall. And to dissent from his Doctour, is as to dissent from God; to beleue the wordes of the wife, is as to beleue God himselfe. They say, The Law is like to water, the Misna to wine, the Gemara or Talmud to Preferes; the Law like to Salt, the Misna to Pepper, the Talmud to Spices. They blasphemé, that God studies the Bible in the day time, and the six orders of the Talmud by night. Hence it is, that the Rabbins are more exercised in their Talmud, then in the Bible; as on which their Faith is founded more then on the other: and according to this doe they expound the Scripture. And as their Talmud is most certaine, so also is that (whatsoeuer) exposition of their Rabbins, according to the same. Thus saith Rabbi Isaac Abenhabb, whatsoever our Rabbins in their Sermons and mysticall explanations haue spoken, wee are no lesse firmly to beleue then the Law of Moses. And if any thing therein seeme repugnant to our sense, we must impute it to the weaknesse of our conceit, and not to their wordes, as for example: it is written in the Talmud, * that a Rabbin once preached, that the time would come, when a woman should euery day bee deliuered of her burthen: according to the saying, Iere. 31. 7. Conceptus sum et peperit. One not beleueing this, the Rabbin answered, that hee spake not of a common woman, but of a Henne, which should euery day lay an egge.

Such are their expositions, I know not, whether fitter to be heard of Heraclitus, or Democritus, more lamentable or ridiculous; and yet is it there said, that their wordes are the wordes of the living God, whereof not one shall fall to the ground; and must not bee derided either in word or thought, whether yee respect the perions, or workes of their Rabbins. Therefore in a Dutch booke, printed in Hebrew characters at Cracouia 1597. it is written, that the Lewes are bound to say Amen, not onely to their Prayers, but to all their Sermons and Expositions, according to the Prophet Esay, Open the gates, the people commeth (sebo- mer amruim) which keepeth righteousnesse, that is (say they) which saying Amen, beleueeth all things which the wise Rabbins haue written. And if any bee so simple, that he cannot vnderstand, yet must hee beleuee. When two Rabbins (saith their Talmud) maintaine contrary opinions, yet must not men contradict them, because both of them hath his Kabala or Tradition for the same: and this is a rule in their Rabbins. Remember rather the word of the Scribes, than of the Law of Moses. R. Salomon Iarchi vpon Deuteronomie, chap. 17. verse 12. Thou shalt not decline from the word that they shall show thee, to the right hand, or to the left, hath these wordes; And when he saith vnto thee, Of the right hand, that it is the left; and Of the left hand, that it is the right, thou must beleuee it; how much more if hee saith, The right hand is the right, &c. They haue a storie in their Legend for the same, That there came a Goi (a Gentile) to Sam-mai, and asked how many Lawes they had? who answered two, a Written and a Verball.

Hee replied, the written Law I acknowledge no lesse then thou; make mee therefore a Iew, and teach me the other. Sammai refused; and hee went to Hillel (these both liued a little before the time of Christ) who admitted and instructed him; after hee had him pronounce the letters in order, Aleph, Beth, Gimel, &c. which he did. The next day he bade him say the same letters backward, Gimel, Beth, Aleph. The Gentle said, Rabbi ye sterday you taught me otherwise; and yet, said Hillel you beleue me, and solemne of me; which you must no lesse doe in the Traditionall Law, beleueing all that is therein.

I had almost thought in reading of this Hillel, I had heard the Catechizing of some Romish Conuert, that with an implicite faith (beleueing and worshippingg hee knowes not what) repente prodit Catholicum, is foole Catholike in an hower, resigning himselfe to what soeuer that Church teacheth vpon an Ipse dixit; or else that I had bene reading the life and precepts of Ignatius Loiola the Iesuite-founder (so he is the story, though the names differ) who practised himselfe, and rayned vp others, Ad sapientiam banc sanctamque stultitiam ceca, ut ipse appellabat, obedientiam, scilicet Massam in a large Discourse heretofore: Paulus Omnia probate was in those dayes; but prudentiam non obedientis, sed imperantis esse respondit Ignatius: negabat obedientiam nomine dignum haberi oportere, qui legitimo superiori non omni voluntate iudicium quoque submitteret: in superiorum iussu examinando esse arrogantiam. And thus writeth Ignatius himselfe: Perit celebris illa Obedientia ceca simpliciter, cum apud nos ipsos in questionem vocamus recte precipiatur an secus: perit humilitas, perit in rebus arduis fortitudo, &c. To obey in outward execution, and effecting the command of a Superiour, may procure no vertue of patience, but a cloake of malice, a very imperfect perfection, not worthy the name of vertue, vntill the inward affect be ioyned to the outward effect: neither is this a whole sacrifice, except hee not onely will the same, but iudge, and bee of the same sentence with his superiour: hee must in the person of his superiour behold Christ, who can neither deceiue nor be deceiued; ready alway to defend, neuer to mislike his command; yea, whatsoever his superiour enioyneth, hee must accept as the precept and will of God; and as hee is ready to beleue the Catholique faith, so e to be carryed without further search, with a blind force of the will, desirous to obey. Thus did Abraham when hee was commanded to offer Isaac; and therefore thus must the Iesuite doe when an Ignatius Superiour commands, or else hee is no Holocaust for the Loiolan Altar. Euen as a Cur-keffe, saith the Iesuiticall Constitution, 4 which will be drawne any way, or a Staffe in an old mans hand pliant as he pleaseh: so, and so must e our waxen Iesuites bee; Affes without vnderstanding; nay, carcases without life, staves and staves and blockes, guided by their guides, though it bee to cracke the Crownes of Kings. And as his legacie hee bequeathed this a little before his Death to the societie, that they should bee as pliant waxe, as an Image, flexible at pleasure: yea, though it seeme against Conscience, yet must a man beleue his Superiour rather then himselfe. And if the Pope should bid him crosse the Sea in the next Boat hee met with, though destitute of sayles, oares, mast and helme, and without all kind of prouision, he would doe it willingly. This hee called Mortification. Others which are not thus blind, haue their finnes still remaining, and haue but one foot in Religion. This obedience (saith another f of them) is the character imprinted by Diuine, and not humane hand in this societie.

What Diuell of Hell could euer haue taught Murthers and Treasons to be tollerable, nay commendable, nay meritorious, if his Scholler should not first passe this Iesuiticall Retrograde, from a Christian and a Man, with the losse of Religion and Reason, to become (as these Rome-Rabbins terme it) a Carkasse indeed, an Image, or a Staffe in the hand of Thot old one, which (like the Egyptian Inchanters) hee might make a Serpent at his pleasure? But let the truth preuaile, and Moses Rod eate vp these Serpent-rod of the Egyptians. And what more could old Hillel say to his Disciples? Or doth God himselfe exact? Bernard throughout his seauenth Epistle, teacheth more soundly of the Pope and those religi-ous Superiours; Nec dico propositorum mandata esse a subditi indicenda, ubi nihil inhere debendum divinis contrarium militantis. Sed necessarium esse dico & prudentiam qua aduertatur, si quid aduersus, & libertatem qua ingenie contemnatur. Hanc ego nunquam simul obedientiam: talem mihi nunquam libet a modestiam, vel potius molestiam imitari. Talis siquidem obedientia omni est contemptu deterior: talis quoque modestia ultra omnem modum extenditur. --- Opacientia, omni digna impatientia. But to leaue this question and our Iesuites till fit time; Iewish Rabbis aucter, that whosoever mocketh or contemneeth their sayings, shall be punished in hot and boyling Zoah, or excrement in hell. And thus much of their Talmud, the originall and authoritie thereof. More modest yet were those Fathers b of Trent, that would scribe but qualitie of reuerence, and respect to their Traditions with the Scripture. (With equall affection and esteeme, say they, wee receive and reuerence Traditions, and the bookes of the old and new Testament;) which must needs acknowledge themselves ben The Talmud blameth Hillel for too much leuerie to Gerim, and R. Iosabab, for the like toward Iesus of Nazareth, who had followed this his Master to Alexandria, being perfected by King Iannai, who returning to Ierusalem, and commending his loney, that his Scholler thinking hee had spoken of his Hostesse, said, Shee had round eyes. What, Varlet (said the R.) hast thou such a thought? and proudly commanded him to be proclaimed an Anathema, with the sound of foure hundred Trumpets, nor would alter vpon his repentance admitted him, wher-vpon hee became an Idolater, a Magician, &c. This Iannai was Hircanus, sonne of Simon, 110. yett before our Saviour, and therefore it was another Iesus: or else this is a malicious deuice of the Talmudist, which couleth it selfe with the foolish computation of time.

* Luk. 2. 28.
* Did. Sixt. Sen.
lib. 1. 2. ubi irac.

o Cap. 20. p. Lyr. in Gen. 8. mentioneth this, and Yid. Car. lib. 1. 4. 10. hath a long Jewish tale of the Raven, when still iaculous, &c. perque 10. 200.

blest Saviour was, which liued an hundred and ten yeeres after. Those two deliuered the same to Iuda the son of Tibeni, and Simon the sonne of Sata. These to Semai and Ababab: and they to Hillel and Samau. Hillel flourished an hundred yeeres before the destruction of the second Temple, and had eightie Schollers or Disciples, all of excellent wit and learning: and other thirtie obtained that the Sunne should stand still for them, as Iosaba; the rest were accounted meane. Of these, the greatest was Iosabab sonne of Uziel, the least Iohn the sonne of Zachem, which yet knew the Scripture and Talmud, and all things else to the examples of Foxes, and Narrations of Diuels.

Hillel and Samau deliuered this explanation to this Iohn, and to * Simoon the Iust, sonne of the said Hillel, who after received Christ in his armes, and prophesied of him in the Temple. Rabbi Moses proceedeth, and saith, that Simoon taught Gamaliel, Pauls Master; and Gamaliel instructed his sonne Rabban Simoon, who was slaine of Hadrian the Emperour, after he had taught his sonne Iudas, whom the Jewes for his Learning and Holinesse call Rabbenus Haccados, (that is, our holy Master) of which honourable name there had bene another in the time of the Roman Consuls. These for the most part, besides almost infinite others of their heartes, haue left many things written of the explanation of the Law; of which the Talmud was compacted.

Of the vtreasonable absurdities and impious blasphemies of the Talmud, howsoeuer abominable in themselves, yet let it not be irksome to the Reader to see some mentioned, therein to obserue the depth of diuine vengeance, which in this blinded Nation wee may beare and feare. For who would thinke it possible that any could entertaine in his heart, that which they haue written of G O D? as, that * before the creation of this world to keepe himselfe from idleness, hee made and marred many other worlds: that he spends three houres every day in reading the Jewish law? that Moses one day ascending to Heauen, found him writing accents therein: that G O D every day maketh deuout prayers: that G O D hath a place a-part, wherein hee afflicteth himselfe with weeping, for bringing so much euill on the Jewes: that euery day hee putteth on their Tephilin and Zizis, and so falleth downe and prayeth: that as oft as hee remembreth their miseries, hee lets fall two teares into the Ocean, and knocks his breast with both his hands: that the last three houres of the day, hee recreateth himselfe in playing with the Fish Leuiathan; which once in his anger he slew, and powdered for the feast, wherof you shall after * heare: that hee created the Element of fire on the Sabbath day: that the RR. one day reasoning against R. Eliezer, because G O D with a voyce from a heauen interposed his sentence for Eliezer, the other RR. anathematized G O D, who thereat smiling, said, My children haue ouercome me. But I am weary to adde the rest of their restless impieties against the Almighty. Neither haue the Creatures escaped them: Thus the Talmud telleth, That G O D once whipped Gabriel for a great fault with a whip of fire: that as Adam, before Eue was made, had carnally vsed both Males and Females of other Creatures; So the Raven? which Noe sent out of the Arke, was iaculous of Noah, lest hee should lye with his Mate; that Iabs storie was fayned: that Dauid sinned not in his murder and adulterie, and they which thinke hee did sinne, are Heretikes: that vnaturall copulation with a mans wife is lawfull; that he is vnworthy the name of a Rabbine, which hateth not his enemy to death; that G O D commanded them by any manner of means to spoyle the Christians of their goods, and to vse them as beasts: yea, they may kill them, and burne their Gospels, which they entide, Iniquitate reuealed. Iniquitie reuealed indeed, is the declaration of these things: as of their opinion of the * soule; if it sinne in one body, it passeth into a second: if there allo, into third: if it continue sinning, it is cast into Hell: the soule of Abel passed into Seib, and the same after into Moses: the soules of the vile named shall neuer recover their bodies. Two RR. euery weeke on Friday created two Calues, and then did eate them. Nothing ought to be eaten by euen numbers, but by vncuen, wherewith G O D is pleased. Perhaps they had read in Virgil, Numero Deus impare gaudet; but this is common to all Magicians. And what doe I weary you and my selfe, anticipating the following discourse, wherein wee shall haue further occasion to relate the like absurdities? which yet if any deny, they say hee denyeth G O D.

§. II.

Of the ancient Jewish Authors, and their Kabalists.

After the Times of Christ, Philo and Iosephus are famous : and after the Resurrection of Christ, the Jewes were of three sorts, some true beleaguers, others absolute deniers, the third would haue the Christian Religion, and the Jewish Ceremonies to bee conioyned in equall obseruation ; against which third sort the first 10 Councell, Act. 15. was summomed.

The moderne Jewes insitt principally on the litterall sense of Scripture ; the Elder sought out a spirituall and mysticall sense, accounting this a great matter : the litterall but small, like to a candle of small value 9, with the light whercof, the other (as a pearle hidden in a darke roome) is found. The Talmudists followed the allegoricall sense ; the Cabalists, the Anagogicall.

As concerning this Cabala, in olde times * they communicated not that skill to any, but to such as were aged and learned ; and therefore nothing thereof, or very little is found written of the Ancient, except of Rabbi Simeon Ben Iohai. But the Doctors of the later

20 Jewes, lest that learning should perish, haue left some hat theron in writing, but so obscurely, that few know it, and they which doe, account it a great secret, and hold it in great regard. So Sith Eliu † : in the bookes of the Cabala are contained the secrettes of the Law and the Prophets, which man receiued from the mouth of man, vnto our * Master Moses (on him bee peace) and therefore it is so called, and is diuided into two parts, Speculative and Practike. But I am not worthy to expaine this businesse, and by reason of my finnes haue not learned this wisdom, nor knowne this knowledge of those Saints. The word Cabala signifieth a receiving, and in that respect may bee supplied to all their Traditionall receipts ; but in vlc (which is the Law of speech) it is appropriated to that facultie, which (as * Ricinu describeth it) by the type of the Mosiacall law insinuateth the

30 secrettes of diuine and humane things : and because it is not grounded on reason, nor deliuered by writing, but by the faith of the hearer receiued, it is called Cabala. Or (if you had rather haue it in * Reuchlines words) it is a Symbolicall receiuing of diuine Reuelation deliuered, to the whole some contemplation of Go d, and of the separated formes ; and they which receiue it, are called Cabalici, their Disciples Cabalzei, and they which any way imitate them, Cabalistiz. The Talmudists therefore and the Cabalists are of two faculties, both agreeing in this, that they grow from Tradition, whereunto they giue credite without rendering any reason : herein differing, that the Cabalists, as a super-subtil transcendent, mouneth with all his industrie and intention from this sensible World vnto that other intellectuall : but the 7 grosser Talmudist abideth in this, and if at any time hee considereth

40 of Go d, or the blessed Spirits, yet it is with relation to his workes, and their functions, not in any abstract contemplation, bending his whole study to the explanation of the Law, according to the intent of the Law-giuer, considering what is to bee done, what eschewed ; whereas the Cabalists most indevour themselves to contemplation, leauing the care of publique and priuate affaires to the Talmudists, and referring onely to themselves those things which pertaine to the tranquillitie of the minde. As therefore the minde is more excellent then the body, so you must thinke the Cabalist superiour to the Talmudist. For example, In the beginning God created Heauen and Earth, saith Moses : Heauen * here, after the Talmudist, is all that part of the World which is about the Moone, and all beneath it, Earth also by Heauen hee vnderstandeth forme, and by Earth, matter ; the composition whereof hee effected not by labour of the hand, but by that nine-fold Oracle of his word : for so often

50 is it mentioned, * and God said ; likewise hee findeth the foure Elements in those words, Darknesse, Spirit, Waters, drie Land. But the Cabalist frameth to himselfe two Worlds, the Visible and Inuisible ; Sensible and Mentall ; Materiell and Ideall ; Superiour and Inferiour : and accordingly gathereth out of the former words, God created Heauen and Earth, That hee made the highest and lowest things, meaning by the highest the immateriall, by the lowest this materiall ; and this is gathered out of the first letter Beh, which in numbering signifieth two, and insinuateth thereth two Worlds. Yea, they also finde two Paradises, and two Hells, one in this World, and the other in the other and furthest, for the body here, and the soule hereafter. Euen as, saith R. Saadia, the write of the 60 Egge comprehendeth the yolke, so that first intelligible World infoldeth the second : in this are nine Spheres, moued of the immouable Empyreon, in thir nine orders of Angels, (* Ricinu reckoneth ten, Hayet, Hakadesch, Offinnim, Erelim, Hasmalim, Seraphim, Malachim,

Elobim,

Let Saint Iohns, Let England and the whole Church still sing the ten thousands, that thou dost thus flay thy own weapons; and let the Apostolicall Truth escape, whiles her Apostolicall Enemies, the Pharisees and Sadducees, are set together by the eares. A happie and diuine stratageme, which (not to detract from others iust prayles, in this or other parts of the battell) hath bene singled, and singularly managed by thy prowess, which speakest (more iustly then he which vied those words) to these Babylonians, * in their owne Language, that they may eat their owne dung, and drinke their owne pisse together.

Doctor White also, in (that Lallea via, his Milke-white) 1 Way to the true Church, chal-length in all points of Poperie both authoritie of Scriptures, Fathers, and later Romanists, to and to produce the same against the Trent-Councell, and the Iesuites.

But how hath that fatall name of Babel confounded mee? Truly, the likeness of these Traditionaries, Cabalists, muddie Talmudists, and Legendaries (as will appeare to an easie Obseruer and Comparer of this ensuing Historie to their practice) which haue bene mustered from the Easterne and Westerne ^m Babel, and the like manner of their confusion, hath almost made mee forget the Historie and my selfe, but neuer a whit the Truth. And this will be further manifested in the rest of this Booke, where their Superstitious Deuotion is related.

As for those Testimonies of the Iewes against themselves, besides the Scriptures (which, in regard of the true sense, the veile ouer their heart: will not suffer them to reade, but it is a 20 sealed Booke vnto them and they left the riches thereof vnto vnto vs, as the ^m Aramites left their Tents, with their Horses and Treasure, to the pined Israhelites.) Their other Authours are so plaine and plentifull in the Mysteries of our Religion, as I know not whether it cause greater pleasure to reade their Writings, or astonishment and wonder at the Nation; so stricken with madnesse, and with blindness, and with astonishment of heart, since they haue shut their eyes against the Suame of Righteousnesse: on whom that threatned plague is come, ^o Thou shalt groape at Noone-dayes, as the Blind doth groape in darknesse. For out of their Talmud-Authors is plainly deliuered the mystery of the Trinitie, the Incarnation of the Sonne of God, his two Natures, his Birth of a Virgin, his spirituall Kingdome, the time of his Comming, the truth of his Prophecies, and power of his Miracles; the Redemption of 30 Mankind by his Death, his Crucifying, Descent, Resurrection, and Ascension: and that their Nation was to be reiected, the old Law to cease, New to succeed, &c. All which as they agree vnto that sweet and blessed Name and Person of Iesus (which name, and that of Emanuel, is also found in their Writings) so doe they argue the securitie of Gods Iudgements, when men will not beleue the Truth, that by the efficacie of error, they shall haue eyes, and see not, eares, and heare not (neither ours nor their owne) as Paul, and CHRIST himselfe oftentold them. But those particulars, as rather appertaining to Disputation, then Historie, (and therefore too much impertinent to our purpose) the desirous Readers may at large find in Morney and Galatinus, not to mention ^p others.

40 ly challenge me, if I should omit him, especially seeing hee liued in the very dayes of the Apostles, who, as he witnesseth of Iohn Baptist, and of many other things mentioned in the Gospell, fully agreeing therewith: so concerning our Lord and Saviour, hath this Testimonie. In the time of Tiberius, there was one Iesus a wise Man (if at least-wise he was to be called a man) who was a worker of great Miracles, and a Teacher of such as loue the Truth and had many followers, as well of Iewes as of Gentiles. This was CHRIST. Neuertheless; being accused vnto Pilate, by the chiefe of the Iewes, hee was crucified. But yet for all that, those which had loued Him from the beginning, ceased not to continue still. For hee shewed himselfe aliuie vnto them three dayes after his Death, as the Prophets had foretold of him, both this and diuers other things: And euen vnto this day doe those continue still,
50 who after his name are called Christians. Thus much Iosephus. Thus did the Truth force him to confesse, whose Historie of the destruction of his Nation, what is but as a Commentary on Iesus Prophecies thereof, and their fearefull Imprecation, His blood be vpon vs and our children, shewing that the wrath of God was come vpon them to the vtmost? From Mount Oliuet, where Iesus was first apprehended, and where last those blessed feet touched the Earth, (as if there Mercie had left a print of Iustice) was Ierusalem besieged, and at their Feast of Pasche (when they had crucified CHRIST) they were cooped vp, as it were, assembled by Diuine Iustice from all quarters to destruction, together with that their Citie, where they had slaine the Lord. But of this before.

It will not be vsauourie to the Reader, obseruing herein Diuine vengeance, to relate as 60 vsauourie a Tale as euer was deuised, which their Talmud telleth in derogation of *CHRIST*s Miracles, in which I know not whether to call them beasts, or Devils; so wilde, and with a

i Viñ. de Carben, lib. 1. c. 13. The Iewes haue a horrible and blasphemous curse directed against our blessed Saviour: whom they will not call by his name fully pronounced, but abbreviated with Relation to the Curse: Of which (for I loath to mention it) let him which will, (see Bux. de abbreviatiua Heb. a Druf. vet. sap. 1. entomie.

withall so wicked is their blasphemie. Forsooth, in Salomons Temple there was ^f (say they) a certayne stone of very rare vertue, wherein Salomon by his singular Wisedome had engraven the very true Name of God, which it was lawfull for every man to reade, but not to come by heart; nor to write our. And at the Temple door were two Lyons tyed at two Chaynes, which roared terribly, that the feare thereof made him to forget the name that had committed the same to memorie, and him to burst asunder in the middeft, that had put it in writing. But I say s the Sonne of Mary; say they, regarding neither the Curse annexed to the Prohibition, nor the roaring of the Lyons, writ it out in a Bill, and went his way with it joyfully. And lett he might be taken with the thing about him, hee had a little opened the skinn of his legges, and put it in there, and afterwards wrought his miracles by the vertue of that name. I should be almost as absurd as they, if I should dispute against it, seeing in this, and most of their brain-sicke Dreames, the very recitation is sufficient refutation.

It cannot be denyed, that there haue bene many Rabbines very Learned, as R. Moses Aegyrius, Abben Tibben, which translated Euclide and other Authours out of Arabike into Hebrew, and some parts alio of Aristotle translated into Hebrew, are accounted his doing, many others of them writ in Philosophie likewise: and for Physicke, who haue bene more famous? But he which will haue notice of the RR. and their workes, let him reade Buxdorffs his Bibliotheca Rabbinica, printed 1613. yet euen the belt of them haue much Chaffe, which needs much fanning from the Corne. Many wise Sentences and Proverbs haue bene by * Drusius and others gathered out of some of their workes which would haue beautified this Discourse as theye for a taste. Vowes are the hedge or wall of defence to holinesse, Titiles are the lance to Riches: he which increaseth his flesh, increaseth Wormes, Who is wisest? he which learneth of euerie one: Who is valiant? he which bridleth his affections: Who is rich? he which is content with his portion: If I care not for my selfe, who shall care for me? And if I, what am I? and if not now, when? The day is short, and the worke much, and the Labours flow, and the wages great; and the Householder calleth vpon vs. But me thinks you call vpon me to proceed. But of these and such like Sayings, there is a whole Treatise calld Pirke Asoth, which as it wereth Medulla Patrum, or Flores Doctorum, gathered by R. Nathan Babylonius, set forth by Fagius, and since by Drusius: yet hauing spoken thus much of their Learned men, I thinke it would to some louers of Learning not be vnfauourie, to adde somewhat of their Vniuersities, degrees of Schooles and the like, in the next Section.

Amongst the Iews all theſe Titles were of one Root, Rab, Rabbar, Rabba, Rabbi, Rabbin, Rabhana, Rabbanan, Ribbi, Ribbun, Ribbon, Ribbana, Ribbuni, Rabhin, Rabboni, ſome of which are more vſual then others, but all of them in generall ſignification broken either a Prince or Lord, or a Maſter, and Doctōr. Of the former ſignification are few Examples in Scripture, in their Targumim, many; and thoſe commonly with ſome word annexed, ſignifying the thing or mayne ſubiect: of the later the New Teſtament is full. The Root, from whence theſe Titles ſpring, is Rabab, or Rab, which ſignifieth to multiply: for a Prince multiplyeth his power, a Doctōr his Learning, and one ſuch is as many: according to the moderne viſe which ſpeaketh to great men, and they of themſelves in plural I. Pronouns. Of Rab is Rabbin and Rabboth in the plural number; that vſed for any multitude in other things, this appropriated to ſignific Rabbins. Some alſo of thoſe Titles are Hebrew, ſome Chaldee or Syriack: ſome indifferently ſignifie a Lord or Maſter, ſome more eſpecially the one or the other alſo in regard of place, one of Babylon was called Rabbi, of Iſrael Ribbi, of thoſe two famous Vniuerſities in Babylon and Iudæa. In regard of excellence, one of the loweſt eſtreme was ſtilled Rab; of higher Ribbi or Ribbis; of higher ſtill, Rabbeni, Rabban and Rabbanan. Yet not theſe rules alway hold: for they haue much alteration amongſt themſelves, why ſome are named with any Title, as Hillel, Shami, and diuers others; and why ſome more eminent are called Rab or Rabbi, as Rabbi Eliezer, Rabbi Iſaak Hadkadoſh, R. Hakeba, Rab Aſe, Authour of the Gemara, Rab Haai, Rab Baruch; and why the Title of Rabban is appropriated to ſome few, Rabban Gamaliel, R. Symeon, &c. This is affirmed for current, that he which hath Diſciples, may be called Rab or Rabbi; that the younger are not so called by the elders; that they which want Impofition of hands, may not be fo called; that the Rulers amongst the people called Neijm, were in manner only called Rabbany; and for Rabbenu, that is our Mafter, it was afcribed to very few, as to Adoffe firft; and after to Hakkadoth, Hillel, Gamatel, &c. Thofe Rabbans were only feven, all of the potterty of Hillel, as Buxtorfius witneffeth: and thefe were fo called, rather becaufe they were Princes or Lords, than Doctors.

Other Titles besides these were also given them, as Chacham, that is, wife, ho Hierom. The Doctors of the Jewes are called ῥαββί from which Greeke word perhaps came that other Title given them, Sopher: so that which ἔσφω hath Sopher, the Apostle interpreteth σοῖς ὁ σοφός; They were also called by other Doctōrly Titles, as Macilim, Malphan and Malphanah, Moreh (whence cometh the Moderne Title Morenu, that is, our Masters, attributed to their Arch-rabbines) Mar, Abba and Abbothenu, Zekkenim; that is, our Fathers old men, and the like.

The RR. were of two sorts : one numbered by a succession of time, another, named of their studies and employments. Of the first kind were the Thauzi, Amorzi, Seborzi, Geozim, Mribthe Thoroz, Chechame Thalmudim. Of the other, the Malorites, Cabballists, Thalmudists, Medakdekim, Methargemim, and others. For the former ranke, thana signifies to learn, whence those Masters, which followed the times of the last Prophets till the Reigne of Commodus, were called Thanaim. Of these are numbered twelve Generations. R. Abraham Davidicus reckoneth from Zorobabel to the destruction of the Temple ten and five after. These Thauzi are sometimes reckoned by couples, of which before the destruction of the Temple, one was called Nafi * or Prince, the other Ab beth Din, the Father of the Councell : of these Colleagues or paires they reckon five, the last of which was Hillel Nafi, and Sebamai Ab beth Din. Hillel had thousands of Disciples, but eightie principally, the chief of which was Ionabai, Author of the Chaldee Paraphrase. He and his House or Set held many peculiar Opinions, to which Shamai and his House or Schoole opposed themselves, and maintayned the contrarie. To these succeeded the Amoraim, which were so named, because haiu omerim memoroth, They uttered wise Sentences. Of these they account seven Generations. These continued till about five hundred yeeres after Christ. The Seborai succeeded : so called of Sabar, that is, to be of opinion : for they made not Canons and Constitutions as the former, but only shewed their Opinions. Of them were five Generations, which ended about A. D. 680. and then followed the Geozim. The word geoz significth both proud and magnificent. Of these they number eight Generations, continuing till Anno Dom. 1038. Some of them being of Europe, in France, Germanie, and especially in Spaine, their Easterne Academies then decaying. Of their Chachime Thalmudim afterwards.

The other ranke of claffes of RR. hath firft the Maforites, of Mafor to deliver, tradere, fo called, in refpect of their Traditionall Law in a general fenfe, and more epecially, of their Tradition of reading the Bible, as the Diffinctions, Accents and Pricks obferued, prefcribe, and that other tradition of Marginal Notes concerning the diuers Readings of the Text. They which committed this Maforeth 7 to writing, being before deliuered by word of mouth only, were called Maforites. Thefe Maforites, by Casimius, Genebrard, Galatinus, Bellarmino, and (whom in this part of our Difcourfe we principally follow) Serarius, that I fpeake not of Scaliger, Martinius and others, are acknowledged Authors of the Pricks and Accents as they are now in vfe (howeouer there were fome other vfed before) which fome come afcribe to Ezra, and fome to Mofes: So doth Sobor Chadafb printed at Cracouia, 1603, which fayth, the Points were deliuered by the fecretor of the Law in Sinai: And without them, words are as women without clothes, may not come abroad, there is no light in them, &c. Thefe Maforites are holden to haue liued after the Talmud was finifhed (and therefore to be of the Saborai Rabbines) and that at Tiberias, where they had many Synagogues and Libraries, fomerimes alfo if Zacutus testimony be true) the Sanhedrin it felfe. Of the Kabbala, and the Kabbalit called Kabbelan and Mekubbal you haue heard a little before: and likewise of the Talmud and Talmudift.

The Medakdekian are the Grammarians, as Dikduk signifies Grammar. R. Inda is reported to be the first Hammedekdek or Grammarian, before whom was no Dikduk of the holy Tongue: after him R. Ionah, and after him R. Saadiah Haggani; after whom innumerable others, Ioseph, Moser, and David, all Kinuchi's, Elias, &c. That which is said of R. Inda, is to be conceived of the moderne Pricks and Accents: for before his time R. Ioseph Cacus, the Amoræ, the Scribes, and Moser himselfe were therein expert.

60 Th rgum signifies an Interpretation, and thence Thurgemana and Mechurgeman an Interpreter, as Dargoman with the Arabs and Turkes at this day. And as the bodie of Scripture was diuided into three parts, the Pentateuch, Hagiographa and Prophets, so haue they they three Thargums, of Onkelos, Jonathan and R. Joseph the blind, which lived about Anno Dom. 400. And as the Thalmud, so the Thargum is of two Dialects, the Babylonian and of Jerusalem: of this the Authour is unknowne: the Babylonian was written, the Pentateuch by Onkelos, the Prophets by Jonathan, the Hagiographa by R. Joseph Casmu. As for the Jewish Fables of a Voice to Jonathan, and of the consuming with fire from Heaven, any flye that should disturbe him in his writing, his super-excellence among the most excellently leamed Schollers of Hillel, &c. and of their many other supposed Thargums, with other Rabbinicall workes, testifying truly of Christ, collected and related by Galatinus, and others, I forbore further recitall. I might heere amongst their Doctorall Titles reckon the Archepiscopate mentioned by Iulianus: a stile giuen to such as were skilfull, either in times, or rather in the Thalmud, as chiefe Masters and Archrabbines. Of their Sanhedrin is already spoken. The name is (if wee receiue Seranus) borrowed of the Greekes, with whom senatus signifies Senators. These may well be reckoned amongst their learmed men. Babal Midrasch is the Author of a Commentary, or a Preacher, as Darjan also. But I haue too long examined Titles.

If in the next place we obserue the power of the Rabbines, they were had in great reverence and respect: they sat in lofty and stately seates, had power to create others Masters and Doctors, to wear Rings and Hoods, and enioyed other Priuiledges, differing according to the times, places, and differing Estates of the Iewes vnder diuers Lords. For as we haue obserued in this Countrey of England, so in other Countreys their power was lesse or more after the will of their Lord: in Babylonia, Egypt, and Spain somewhat, in some places nothing. In Iulianus time they challenged power of Excommunication, which the Emperour forbade vnder paine of bodily punishments, and losse of all their goods. The like Ecclesiasticall censure was lately sought by the Iewes of Frankford, examined by the Emperours Commissioners at Menz.

Now for the Rites of creating the R. in this Doctorall or Rabbinicall Degree. First, there was some tryall of his worth. So Lampridius testifieth of the Emperour Alexander, that hee nominated those which were to be sent to gouerne the Prouinces, and to will such as could say ought against them, to make good prooffe thereof, or else as Slanderers to lose their heads, allying that if the Iewes and Christians made such tryals of the Priests, it was necessary in these to whom the liues and goods of men were to bee committed. By the Jewish Priests wee vnderstand the RR. as the chiefe of them at Wormes is by the vulgar called Turban Wilschoff, receiuing some Iurisdiction vnder the Bishop. Next after this tryall followed Imposition of hands, called by them Semicah, which was done by some Rabbine whom they stiled Somech: neither before this Imposition might any rightly be termed Rab, Rabbi, Rabban or Gaon. This Rite is ancient, Moses hauing vsed it to Isbna, and the Apostles and Christian Bishops still obseruing. He was also placed in a Chaire which the Hebrewes call Cisse, whence come those Phrases, he sat in the seat of such or such a Rabbine: as of R. Iose, the hand being imposed, he was there (in Babylon) made Gaon, and placed in the Throne Rab Haai. To this seemes to allude the sitting in Moses Chaire. A fourth Rite was, a set forme of words, amongst these, Emi somech otheca: Thibieh Samuch: that is, I lay hand on thee, be thou bee on whom hand is laid: or, I make thee Master, bee thou a Master. R. Iuda (whom Adrian the Emperour slue) added a fuller forme of words. This Imposition was publicly done in their Schooles where their Chaire was. This Imposition of hands (some conceiue) might not be done extra terram, but only in the Land of Israel: which howsoeuer it bee true or false, this is certayne that now in their Rabbinicall Creations it is omitted, as the chiefe RR. of Frankford, in their Epistle to other Iewes complaine: and therefore they ordayne, that none in Germany bee esteemed a Morenu (our Master) without the Approbation of their Archrabbines, which keepe an Academic in Germany. None shall bee Chaber, which hath receiued Imposition of Hands out of Germany. None Bachur till the second Yeere after his Marriage, especially if hee dwell in a place where is not an Academic, that tryall may bee had of his Life and Learning. These are three Degrees, Morenu, as a Doctor, Chaber, as a Licentiate, Bachur as a Bachelor: in the Christian Vniuersities, Of the Morenu there is difference, one being chiefe, the rest vnder him; and these are made of the RR. and if a Rabbine will bee a Morenu, he must be examined usually of three Morenu: But to become a Rabbine, needs no Examination, their Masters testimonie being sufficient, who is a Morenu, or else one chosen by the Congregation to this purpose: for one simple R. cannot make another. The place is in the Synagogue, the day commonly the Sabbath: at which time and place the Morenu standing before the Arke, or place where the Law is kept, speaking to the Assembly, saith, that such and such haue now spent many yeeres profitably in studie of the Law, and is thought worthy of the honour of a Rabbine or a Morenu: And then calls the partie forth by by name, and appoints him to reade presently to the people, and then is he accounted a R. or Moreu. And if he be to trauell into any place farre distant, he carryeth the testimoniall of this Doctor of the Chaire, or Father of the Act, which conferred his degree vpon him. A Chaber is the Colleague or Companion of a Rabbine, but inferior to him. For as (in Vniuersities there are Regents and Non-Regents, so a Rabbenu or Morenu, as one which actually teacheth, and as it were a Regent) is more then a Rab or Rabbi. Scaliger saith that he was not presently after this his Commencement or Proceeding intituled Master, but Chaber, which had also his Relatiue annexed, as R. Ismael Chaber of R. Eleazar: which was the same with παῖς amongst the Greekes, as Spensippus, παῖς Platonis; and whilst hee was so called, he neuer fate whilst his Master fate, but was prostrate on the pavement. And when they were both Masters, the younger stood whilst the elder fate and taught, as in the Primitiue Church, the younger Bishop called the Elder Papa. Secarius and he cannot agree about these points. Elias sayth, that the Doctorall Title of Gaon was giuen them for their perfection in the Talmud, for Gaon signifieth fixtie. And so many parts are there of the Mishna. These Wisemen in Spaine added Aben to their Titles, as R. Abraham Aben Ezra; his Fathers name was Meir, but Aben the name of the Family. As Paul and Aquila sometimes, so many of those Jewish Masters exercised some Handicraft to sustayne themselves without trouble of others. So was R. Iose a Dresser of Leather, Nabum and Meir Seriueners, Iohanan a Shoemaker, and R. Iuda a Baker.

Scal. Eleazar, cap. 10.

20 Next vnto the Masters, it is meet to say somewhat of the Schollers, Thalmidim. If hee were a Boy, he was called Ianik, and Katon (rather for his little Learning then age or stature) a forward Scholler was named Bechir and Beshur, in which time Scaliger affirms (Secarius denies) that he was called by his Fathers name, his owne not added, as Ben Bethura before, after Imposition R. Iosua ben Bethura. Thalmid chabar is spoken of: Benjamin often mentions in his Iournall, the Disciples of the wise Thalmidim chabar: which some thinke to be a name attributed to themselves in modellie, as the name αἰδης in Greeke turned to Philosophi: but generally all Students are called the Sonnes of the Wise, as sometimes the Sonnes of the Prophets. In Pirke Auoth is this speech of Bagdag: a Boy of five yeeres to Mikra, or the Text of Scripture; at ten yeeres to Mishna; at thirteene yeeres to the Precepts; at fiftieue to the Talmud or Gemara: As Paul sayth, He was brought up at the feet of Gamaliel: so it was a Rule in their Pirke Auoth, Teipsum puluerisa in pedum illorum puluere, that the Student should all to bedust himselfe in the dust of his Masters feete, and with assiduous diligence attend his sayings, drinking his words with thirst: That person of whom hee hath learned but one Chapter, or Lesson, or Verse, or word is to be had in honour. The Student is to be obsequious and seruicable to his Master. They heard with great silence, sitting or else prostrate on the floore or pavement at the feete of the Doctor: and if at any time they stood, it was a good distance from him, for reuerence sake: yea, the Chaber durst scarce (if scarce) sit while the Rabbine fate. The Disciple (say they) must arise to his Master as farre as hee can see him; and if hee doe not stand vp to him, hee is wicked, shortens his life, and forgetteth the Talmud. They might not reprehend their Masters, nor depart from their Assertions: and when they recited any thing which they had learned of them, they did it in their Masters name, euerie way seeking to winne them credit: yea, they called him an Epicure which did sit before his Master, or citing him, did it by his bare name without some honourable Title annexed, as my Lord, or Masters, &c. excluding such out of the World to come. To conclude, this sentence of R. Eleazar ben Shamua, in their Pirke Auoth briefly expresseth these mutuall duties: Let the credit of thy Disciple bee as deare vnto thee as thine owne; and let the honour of thy companion (Chaber) bee as the feare of thy Master, and the feare of thy Master or Rabbini, as the feare of God.

Alit 22.3.

As for the Jewish Academies, they call them Mekom thorah, the place of the Law, and the holy Congregation of them which are occupied in the Law, and vually Ieshibab and Metibab of sitting, for there was the Rabbinicall Chaire. It seemes, all the forie eight Cities of the Lewites were such: and all the Schooles of the Prophets, where the Sonnes, or Schollers of the Prophets abode, as in the dayes of Samuel, Elias, &c. is mentioned. Ierusalem could not but be most eminent. And after the Babylonian Captiuitie, they had two Vniuersities famous, one Nehardea in Babylonia vpon Euphrates, by Iosephus called Nearda, the other Ierusalem, which being destroyed with the Citie, it was called the Vniuersitie of Irael, of which the first Rector was R. Iohanan, the second Rabbani Gamaliel, the third R. Akiba: and when Adrian had forbidden all Iewes to enter the Land, it is like it was subuerted yet after renewed, and the Rector thereof R. Iohanan the Author of the Ierolymitan Talmud, who dyed, Anno Dom. 279. In meane while two other Vniuersities were famous in Babylonia, one at Sura, and the other at Pombaditha: Betwixt which in procees of time grew great contentions, factions and removing to Kamisin five dayes Iourney Eastward, and to Neres. That of Sura somewhat eclipsed that of Nehardcha, because there for the most part resided the Chiefe of the Jewish Captiues. These decayed, and almost vanished about Anno Dom. 668. which it seemes happened by the fatal alteration of the World in that new Sarsenical Deluge, although many Ages after, the Jewes held vp their head high: in these parts, as appears by Beniamin Head of the Captiuitie, resident in Bagdad before mentioned. But the Jewes now dispersed, haue through the World erected in places of their abode, such Academies as they could, ⁴ as ye haue seene in Beniamin Relations already; and Rabad mentions some in Spaine and Africke, and some yet remayne at Constantinople, Cairo, Cracovia in Poland, Prague in Bohemia: and lately the Synagogue ¹⁰ of Frankfort, which calls it selfe the Mother of Israel in Germany, constituted five, viz. Frankfort, Wormes, Fridberg, Fulda, Kinsburg. Yet ² these three are accounted the ancientest Synagogues in Germany, Spire, Wormes, Mentz; and therefore their Matrimoniall Contracts are signed with these three Letters S. W. M. if they write short, to shew that it is according to the ancient custome and constitution of Spire, Wotmes and Mentz. The Jewes had Schools wherefoever were any store of them, but ten (saith Rambam) was a number fit to haue a Synagogue. They call their Schoole beth Midrasch, the house of exercise, Gymnasium; the Synagogue Beth ceneseth, the Congregation house. Sometimes these are distinguished (for in the Synagogue they must pray for him that needeth, in the Schoole they might not) sometimes the same; and their Synagogues in Germany are now called ²⁰ Schooles. Of these are reported foure hundred eightie one in Ierusalem before the destruction. The Ruler thereof was called Archisynagogus.

As they vie to giue glorious Titles one to another, according to their supercilious Conceits of themselves, as the glorie of thy Excellence, for the second person, Thou, or the glorie of thir Excellence, for they, so especially their R. R. Names are not mentioned without smoke fumes of arrogance, as the glorie of our Master Doctor, &c. For an instance take these Titles giuen to the Author of the Talmudicall Lexicon Aruch in the Title thereof, Illustris Dominus R. Nathan Iustus benedicta memoria, filius honorificentissimi & sanctissimi Doctoris & Rabbinis nostri Iechielis fausta memoria, filij honorificentissimi magnificientissimi & sanctissimi Doctoris & Rabbinis nostri Abrahams fausta memoria. So vastly ambitious are their hearts, so wide gaping mouths ³⁰ in their superdalia & decempedia verba haue these Thirafonical Pygopolynecticall Bragadocio's after so long captiuitie, and so extreme seruitude and basenesse: that it may appeare how farre God hath forsaken them, so farre from humilitie in this humiliation, that they swell euery day into greater vanitie, as the Sunne then greatest when lowest, and bladders then biggest, when they haue nothing but wind to fill them. Euen their glorious Titles so much insisted on in this Discourse, then seeme to haue had beginning, or at least to be in greatest vie, when they were neere the end and Sun-set of their glorie, and since haue encreased to this rubble of Rabbinicall stiles here deliuered; and that which in these dayes is of greatest reckoning, the Title Morenu, our Doctor, hath benee hatched (saith Buxtorfius) in Germany within these two hundred yeeres, and thence passed into Italy, in imitation ⁴⁰ of our Academicall degree of Doctors (say some) or else (as others) it was ordained to be a speciall Title of honour, with a kind of Iurisdiction ouer other R. R. to preuent their lawlesse in granting Bills of Diuorce, that this power should bee appropriated to the Morenu. The first which enioyed this Title in this proper sense (for in a common it was common before, as in Rambams Moreh Nebuchim appeares) were Mabarash, and his Scholer Mabaril who dyed Anno Dom. 1427.

Esote we shake hands with the Learned Writers of the Jewes, it is not vnmeet in my opinion, heere to meete with some question which some haue moued concerning them, and their dealing in and with the Scriptures. For since that the Councell of Trent hath decreed, in the yeere 1546. both the diuine authoritie of Scriptures Canonically, to the Apocrypha-books, which the Jewes receiue not, nor curd; diu; and hath made the vulgar Translation ⁵ Authentically in publicke Lectures, Disputations, Preachings and Expositions, that none, vnder any preence whatsoeuer, shall presume to reiect it: it is wonder to see how eagerly (that I say not impudently) diuers of them haue ⁶⁰ sought to slander the originall Text: and haue blamed, as Authors thereof, in the New Testament, Heretikes; and in the Old, Jewes; couering their malice to vs with pretence of the malice of Heretikes and Iewes; and forgetting the true Rule, That it is a shame to belie the Di-neth. Thus haue ^a Camus and Pintus, and Gregorius de Valentia, Sargobesius, and others, tra-duced the Iewes in this behalfe: themselves refuted by their owne (which yet by consequent overthrow that former Decree) Sixtus Senensis, Ribera, Cardiuall Bellarmine himselfe, Andradus, Andreani, Masius, Arias Montanus, Isaac Leuia, &c. Besides, of ours many, and especially our owne learned Countymen, Whitaker, Reynolds, Morton, &c.

made. Thirdly, from their more then reuerent estima- tion of their Scriptures, for which they would die, if it were possible, an hundred deaths, and euen still (as Isaac = answereth B.
Linday his Scholler) they proclaime a Fast to expiate, if by some accident that Booke but falls to the ground. Fourthly, some places in the Hebrew are more strong against the Iewes then our Translations are, and the Prophecies, which make most against them, remaine there uncorrupted. And lastly, the prouidence of God would neuer herein faile his Church, but
that Truth which they hate and persecute.

These are Bellarmine's Arguments; which, because they are the Truth, are also ours: and therefore we haue bene bold with the Reader to insert them. Leuia = addes, that the Hebrew Texts concerning Christ, are more cleere and perspicuous then in any translation whatsoever: who affirms also of himselfe, that reading the fiftie third Chapter of Esaieus 1000. times (by which he was conuerted to the Christian Faith) and comparing it diligently with many translations, he found a hundred times more, touching the mystrie of Christ, in that, then in these. Many Prophecies are in the Hebrew, which make for the Christians, and yet in the 70. are omitted. The Iewes hold it a crime inexpressible to alter any thing therein, which if any (say they) should doe but in one word of ignorance, or malice, it would bring the whole world in danger of perishing. They will not lay their Bible but in a pure place, nor touch it but with pure hands, and are not religious alone, but superstitious also in respect thereto. As for that Emendation or Correction of the Scribes, which Ca-latus mentioneth, wherein they haue corrupted the Text, hee proueth it to bee a late dreaume of the Talmud, and answereth the Arguments of his fellowes, herein not so Catholike as himselfe.

Now although this may seeme more then enough to conuince that folly, yet it shall not bee impertinent to adde out of Arius Montanus somewhat touching the same, because it openeth another mysterie touching the Hebrew Learning, and the Masoreths. * When the Iewes (saith he) returned into their Country after the Captiuitie threescore and ten yeeres in Babylon, it befell them partly by occasion of their long troubles, which did distract their minde, partly by corruption of their Native Tongue, which was growne out of kinde, first into the Chaldee, and after ward into the Syriacke, that they neither knew nor pronounced so well the words of the Scripture, written (as the manner was) without vowels. Whereby it came to passe, that in the writing of them there crept in some fault, either through iniurie of the Times, or by reason of troubles which fell vpon the People, or by negligence of some Scriueners. But this inconuenience was met withall after ward by most learned men, such as Esdraus was, and after ward Gamaliel, Iosue, Elezar, and other of great name, who provided by common trauell, with great care and industrie, that the Text of Scripture, and the true reading thereof, should bee preserved most sound and vncorrupt. And from these men, or from their instruction, being receiued and polished by their Schol-lers in the Ages following, there came, as wee iudge, that most profitable Treasure, which is called Masoreth, that is to say, a Deliuery, or Traditionall, because it doth deliuer abundantly and faithfully all the diuers Readings that euer were of the Hebrew Bibles. Wherein there appeareth an euident token of the prouidence of God, for the preservation of the sacred Bookes of Scripture whole and sound, that the

Maforeth hath bene kept till our times these many hundred yeeres, with such care and diligence, that in sundry Copies of it, which have bene written: no difference was euer found. And it hath bene added in all the written Bibles that are in Europe, Africke, or Asia, each of them agreeing thoroughly therein with other, euen as it is printed in the Venice Bibles, to the great wonder of them, who read it. Thus farre Montanus; and by this Maforeth, their Objection of Caari, and Caaru, in the two and twentieth Psalme, is answered, in that certain Readings haue the later and truer, as the Maforeth testifieth. Wee haue alreadie shewed, That these Maforites inuented the prickes where with the Hebrew is now read, to supply the lacke of vowels; herein vsing religious care, left by inuening new Letters to that purpose, they should haue changed that ancient forme of writing, and somewhat im-payred the Maicesty thereof. They tell that when a certayne Rabbine had read Zacar for Zeter, he was slaine of his Scholler Isaah, for violating Scripture.

Genebrard denying their opinion, that make Ezra or Esdra Authour of these Hebrew prickes and Accents, saith, That they were inuented after the times of Huorinus the Emperour, in the yeare, after the Temple was destroyed, 436, which is (sayth hee) from Christ, 476, in Tyberias a Citie of Galilee; the chiefe Authours were Aaron, Aferius, and James, Sonne of Nephibali, whose dissenting one from another caused a diuision among the Iewes, the Westerne Iewes following the former, the Easterne, which dwell in Babylonia, the later.

The Syriack Tongue some hold to haue sprung from the corruption of the Chaldee and Hebrew mixt. The Editions and Translations of the Scriptures, out of the Hebrew into the Greeke, are reckoned nine, besides that which Clement Alexandrinus (sayth, was before the time of Alexander, whereof Plato and the Philosophers borrowed not a little. The first (already mentioned) of the Seuentic. The second, of Aquila, first a Gentile, after a Christian, and now last a Iew, in the time of Adrian, whom Serarius thinketh to bee Onkelos, or Ankelas, Author of the Targum. The third, of Theodotian, a Marcionist, vnder Commodus. The fourth of Symmachus; first a Samaritan, and after that a Iew. Of the fifth and sixt are not knowne the Authours. Of all these Origen compounded his Hexapla. The seventh, was the correction rather then a translation. The eight was of Lucian, Priest and Martyr. The ninth of Hesychius. But the most famous and ancient, which the Spirit of God hath by often allegations, in some measure, confirmed, is that of the Seuentic.

As for that conceit of the Celles, which Iustine sayth, were threescore and ten, in which they were diuided, and which Epiphanius placeth by couples, and numbred fixe and thirte Celles, in which, by Miracle, these thus diuided did all agree, in words and sense. Hierome denieth the same as a Fable, because neither Aristaun, which then liued, nor Iosephus, doe euer mention it. Now whereas Iosephus mentioneth onely the Law translated by them; Iustinus, Irenaeus, Clemens, Eusebius, write, That they translated all. And although Aristaun name but the Law, yet who knoweth not, that by this generall name they sometime comprehended all the Scripture, as in the New Testament is seene; as 1. Cor. 14. 21. and Iohn 10. 34. Some accuse this Aristaun for a Counterfeite.

SAY your selues: and wonder (sayth the Lord of this people:) they are blind, and make blind: they are drunken, but not with Wine: they stagger, but not by strong drinke, &c. And after, because of their Hypocrisies, And their feare toward me is taught by the Precept of Men. Therefore behold, I will againe doe a marvellous worke in this People; euen a marvellous worke and a wonder: for the wisdom of their Wise-men shall perish, and the vnderstanding of their prudent men shall bee hid. This day is this Scripture (as it hath bene many Ages heretofore) fulfilled in our eyes: as it hath appeared by our former declaration of the Talmud, and further followeth, in rehearsing the thirteene Articles of their Creed, thus briefly exprest in their daily Prayer-books.

1. I beleene with a true and perfect Faith, that GOD is the Creator, Gouvernour, and Preserver of all Creatures, and that he hath wrought all things, workeib hitherto, and shall worke for ever.

2. I beleene with a perfect Faith, that GOD the Creator is one, and that such an Unitie, as is in him, can be found in no other, who alone haib bene OVR GOD, is yet, and for ever shall continue OVR GOD.

3. I beleene with a perfect Faith, that GOD the Creator is not bodily, nor indued with bodily properties, and that no bodily Essence can be compared to him.

4. I beleene that GOD the Creator is the first and last, and that nothing was before him, that he shall abide the last for ever.

5. I beleene that he alone is to be adored, and that none else may be worshipped.

6. I beleene that all whatsoeuer the Prophets haue taught and spoken, is sincere Truth.

7. I beleene that the Doctrine and Prophecie of MOSES was true; that hee was the Father and Chief of Wise men, that lived then, or before his time, or should be in times to come after.

8. I beleene that all the Law, as it is this day in our hands, was so deliuered by GOD himselfe to MOSES.

9. I beleene that the same Law is neuer to be changed, nor any other to be giuen vs of GOD.

10. I beleene that he knoweth and understandeth all the works and thoughts of men, as it is written in the Prophet, He hath fashioned their hearts together considering all their works, Psal. 33. 15.

11. I beleene that GOD will recompence to all men their works: to all, I say, which keepe his Commandements, and will punish all Transgressors whomsoever.

12. I beleene that the MESSIAS is yet to come, and although he doe long deferre his coming, yet will I hope, that he will come, wayting for him every day, till he doe come.

13. I beleene with a perfect Faith, that there shall be an awaking of the dead, at that time which shall seme fit to GOD the Creator: the name of which GOD the Creator be much blessed and celebrated for evermore. AMEN.

Genebrard out of the Spanish Breniarie hath annexed this their Creed-prayer. O GOD and King, which sitteth on the Throne of Mercies, forgiveest Iniquities, &c. O GOD which hath taught the thirteene Articles of Faith, remember this day the Covenant of thy thirteene Properties, as thou reuelest them to Moses in thy Law. 1. Lord, Lord. 2. Strong. 3. Mercifull. 4. Gracious. 5. Long-suffering. 6. And of great goodnesse. 7. And Truth. 8. Which keepeth Mercy for thousands. 9. Which taketh away the Iniquitie. 10. Transgressions. 11. And sinnes. 12. Which absoluest not. 13. But rendrest the Iniquitie of the Fathers vpon the Children to the third and fourth Generation: then follow those thirteene Articles in forme of an Hymne, with the Exposition of R. Moses: which also you may read in the Treatise of Philip Ferdinand a Polonian Christend lew. And hee which thus beleueth, sayth Ferdinand, is a lew, and as a Brother to be loued; and though hee commit all the finnes of the World, howsoeuer hee shall be punished for his sinne, yet shall hee haue part in the Kingdome of Heauen, though hee be reckoned among the Sinners of Israel. But he which shall ouerturne one of these Precepts, shall be blotted out of the number of the Saints, and be reckoned an Hereticke, Apostata, Epicure, worthy to be hated of all.

This is the Iewish Faith, in which with much vexation, doubting, and lamentation, they liue and dye: vpon which, their Religion hath bene alway founded: but it was first put in writing, and brought into this Order by R. Mosche bar Maimon, who dyed in the yeere after their reckoning 4964. Anno Dom. 1104. and braite charge was giuen, That the

Jewes thenceforth for ever confessing it in this Order, should according to the same, live and dye. This their Creed, howsoever Charity may contrive much of it to a better sense, yet according to their understanding doth it principally ayme at the subversion of Christian Religion as appeareth in a more strait Examination, after their sense of the 2, 3, 4, and 5, the 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12. Articles: All which make against the person or the Office of the Sonne of God, as they understand them; denying his God-head, and disannulling his Office, affirming, as a Jew shamed not to professe and utter vnto M. Buxdorfius, That it needed not that any should satisfie for them; for every Fox must yeeld his owne skinne and haire to the flayer. And the Jewish Faith, saith R. Ioseph Albu, is founded vpon three foundations: vpon the vni'tie of the Diuine Essence; vpon the Law of Moses, and vpon the eternall reward of good workes, and punishment of euill, condemning the Passion of Christ, & by whose stripes we are healed, and on whom God hath laid the iniquities of vs all. It is written also in their 6 Talmud, that all the Israelites haue their portion in the World to come, not all alike, but he shall haue a greater part that hath done more good workes, and the wicked and Impenitent shall be punished twelue moneths in Hell or Purgatorie, after which time they also (and some sooner, if they haue bene lesse sinners) shall haue their part; but a lesse then the former: but to them which deny God (which become Christians) their fore-skinne groweth againe, and as vncircumcised, eternally are punished in Hell, And the Sonne of a deceased Iew is bound to say, for the space of one yeere, a Prayer called Kiddush, thereby to redeme him from Purgatorie, in which respect the Father dyeth with Icy. A good woman may doe the like for her Husband. But R. Bechai (who excludeth all other Nations from their part in the Resurrection, preferring the Jewes in a foure-fold Prauledge, viz. the Land of Canaan, the Law, the Prophets, and the Resurrection) reciteth out of the great Talmud, That three sorts of men shall rise againe at the Day of Iudgement: one of the best Israelites; a second sort, of the wicked and worst; the third of a meane, who haue done as much good as euill. The good shall presently goe into life eternall; the wicked shall be cast into Hell, as in the twelfth of Daniel, and shall be for ever in torment of bodie and soule. The third and meane sort of sinners shall bee tormented for twelue moneths space for their sinnes in Hell; at the end of which timetheir bodies shall be consumed, and the wind shall scatter their ashes vnder the soles of the feet of the Iust, &c. and as worthily doe they proue it out of the k Prophet: And in that day two parts shall be cut off, and dye, and the third shall be left therein: and I will bring that third part thorow the fire, and will fine them as silver is fined and will try them as Gold is tried. And in another place, The Lord killeth, and maketh aliue, bringeth downe to Hell and raiseth vp; Iust as fitly applied, as 1. Cor. 3. and such like places by our Purgatory Spirits. R. David Kimchi vpon the first Psalm, and Esay 26. commenteth, That the wicked shall not rise, but in the day of death their soule shall dye together with ther bodie. And Aben Ezra in his Exposition of Dan. 12. writeth out of R. Higgaon, That many shall rise, and many not rise, but suffer euellasting reproch; and expoundeth it thus, That the good Jewes which dye in Exile, shall rise againe when the Messias shall come, and shall lue as long as the Patriarkes before the Flood: and then they shall make merite with the great Fish Leuiathan, and the great Bird Ziz, and the great Oxe Behemoth, of which we shall speake after. When this is done, they shall dye, and at the last Day shall be rayed vp againe, and shall possesse eternall Life, where shall bee no eating nor drinking, but glory, &c. Jacob desired to be buried in Canaan, not in Egypt; for three causes (saith R. Salomon Iarchi) because he foresaw, That of the Dust of Egypt shall bee made Lice: Secondly, because the Israelites which dye out of Canaan, shall not rise againe without much paine of their rolling thorow the deepe and hidden Vaults of the Earth: Thirdly, lest the Egyptians should make an Idoll of him. For the better understanding hereof, let vs heare what is said out of the Booke Tanchum (an Exposition of the Pentateuch) concerning this subiect. The Patriarkes (sayth he) desired to be buried in Canaan, because they which are there buried, shall first rise in the time of the Messias, And R. Hananiah sayth, That they which dye out of Canaan, must endure two deaths: and the same appeareth, 1er. 20. where it is said, Passour should go into Babel, and should there dye, and there be buried. What (quoth R. Simoe) shall then all the Iust perish, which dye out of Canaan? No, but God will make them P Machilos, that is, deepe Cliffs and Caues vnder the Earth, by which they may passe into the Land of Promise; whither when they are come, God shall inspire into them the breath of life, that they may rise againe, as it is written, I will open your Graues, and cause you to come out of your Sepulchres, &c. The like is written in their Targum or Chaldean Interpretation of the Canticles: When the dead shall rise, Mount Oliuet shall cleaue asunder, and the Israelites which haue bene dead shall come out of the same, and they which haue dyed in strange Lands, comming thither by holes vnder the Earth, shall come forth. And for this cause I my selfe (saith our Author) haue heard the Jewes say, That sometime som: of the the wealthiest and deuourest amongst them goe into the Land of Canaan, that their bodies may there sleepe, and so be freed from this miserable passage vnder to many deepe Seas and rough Mountaynes. There be three sorts of men, sayth Salmanassius in the Booke Iuchasin, which see not the face of Hell; those which are extremely poore, those which are in debt, those which are troubled with the Collicke (the Hæmorrhoids chastised themselves tenne or twentie dayes before their death with this paine of the bowels, that so they might cleanse all, and goe pure to the other World) some adde in this exemption from Hell, or coming to Iudgement, him which had an euill Wife, and some also Magistres. But in Pauls time, they themselves did allow (saith he) a Resurrection of the dead, both of the Iust and Vniust. They did then hold also a resurrection, in which sense it is likely, the Iewes thought Christ to be Elias, or Ieremie, or one of the Prophets: and the Disciples somewhat so- uered with this Leauen, asked of the blind man, whether he had sinned, vnderstanding, as it seemeth, according to the Iewish Errour, when his soule had bene in some former bodie. And the Cabalistical Authors, sayth Elas Lenita, are of opinion that euery soule is three times created, they meane, it rolleth or passeth thorow three mens bodies, according to that of Job, God worketh all these things with a man thrice. So the soule of the first man (saith hee) rolled it selfe into the bodie of Dauid, and shall thence returne into the bodie of the Messias. So they say that the soules of Sinners passe into the bodies of beasts, as if a man committeth Sodomitie, his soule passeth into a Hare, because that creature is sometimes Male, sometimes Female: the soule of the Adulterer passeth into a Camell.

Now to come from their Faith to their Workes: The wise Rabbines perswade the filly people, That they are the only Elect people of God, who easily can keepe not the Decalogue, or ten Commandements alone, but the whole Law of Moses. They diuide the whole Law into fixe hundred and thirteene Commandements, and them againe into Precepts and Prohibitions: Of the commanding Precepts, they number two hundred fortie and eight; iust so many as (according to the Rabbines Anatomie) a man hath members in his bodie. Of the prohibiting Commandements, they reckon three hundred threescore and fye, as many as are dayes in the yeere, or (as in the Booke Brandspiegel) veines in a mans bodie. Therefore if euery member of a man doe euery day performe one of the Precepts, and omit one of the things prohibited, the whole Law of Moses shall be euery yeere, and so for euer, fulfilled. Their wise Rabbines say further, That the men only are to obserue those fixe hundred and thirteene Commandements, the women are onely subiect to the Prohibitions; yea, of those prohibitorie Mandates, onely to threescore and foure are they obliged, by some, and to fixe and thirtie of the former; and this because of their other household-businesse, and subiection to their Imperious Husbands. Some of their deeply-wise Rabbines adde to those fixe hundred and thirteene, seuen other Commandements, making vp the number of fixe hundred and twentie; iust so many as are Letters in the Decalogue, and as arise of the word Keter, signifying a Crowne: for were it not for the Law, God would not haue created the World; and for the obseruation thereof it yet subsisteth. And they which keepe all the Commandements, doe set a Crowne on the head of God, and hee vpon the head of those which crowne him, shall set seuen Crownes, and make them to inherit seuen Chambers in Paradise, and will keepe them from the seuen Infernall Dungeons, because they haue obtained the seuen Heauens, and the seuen Earths.

Their Wife-men affirme, that euery veine of the bodie of a man doth prouoke him to omit that which is forbidden, and he which doth omit such their vaine veine-warning, hath no good vaine in him: euery of his members also doe prouoke him to performe those inuoluntary Inuentions. But as veine should be as they, if I should not make some end, where they can find none. We would now from these generalities proceed to the particulars of their Superstitions, tracing them herein from their birth to their graues, Religion being in the preence of their Law, the square of all their (otherwise ciuill) actions; a. Icast to speake of their Superstitions in the same. But first, seeing Sebastian Munster hath writen a whole Booke, both in Hebrew and Latine, of those fixe hundred and thirteene Precepts, taken out of Moses, with the Exposition of their Rabbines, as also P. Ricius hath done, and Philip Ferdinand likewise out of Ben Katrain, I thought good to cull out some which seeme most remarkable and strange to entertaime our Reader.

1. Thou shalt have no strange Gods in my sight. Exod. 20. The Name of God is forbidden to be communicated to any creature.

2. Thou shalt not violate mine holy Name. Thou shalt not destroy a Synagogue or Temple bee it neuer so old, nor shalt blot out one of the holy names, where-soever thou findest it written. The Rabbinnes say, If any doe against any Affirmative Precept, and repeat, is sinne is forgiven him: but hee which transgresseth a Negative Precept, is not censured by repentance, but it remaineth to the day of Expiation (which is the day of their solemne Fast and Reconciliation.) But hee which committeth a sinne, whereby he deserueth Death, or Excommunication, is not then purged, but must abide thereunto the diuine chastisements: and hee which violateth the Name of God, cannot bee absolved from that sinne but by death.

3. Thou shalt not hate thy brother in thy heart. He which is wronged by another, should not hate him, and hold his peace, but reprove him openly; and if hee repent, he ought not to be cruell to him: But if any be often reprov'd, and will not amend, it is lawfull to hate him, This Christ c. confuteth.

4. No Idol as to bee adored. If a man haue a thorne in his foot, hee may not bow before an Image to pull it out: and if money fall out of his hand, hee may not there, before an Image, stoop to take it vp, lest he might seeme to adore it, but hee must sit downe on the ground to doe it. And if the water of a Fontaine be caused to passe thorow the mouth of an Image, he may not drinke thereat, lest he should seeme to kisse the Image.

5. An Image may not bee made. viz. The Image of a man in siluer or gold, if it be embossed or set out, but if it bee stamped in metall (in manner of a seale) it is lawfull. But of Beasts, Birds, Trees, and Flowers, those prominent Images (which are made standing out) are lawfull. Otherwise of the Sunne, Moone and Starres.

6. No tree commoditie is to bee raised from Idols. If a tree be planted neere an Image, one may not sit vnder the shadow thereof, nor passe vnder it, if there bee any other way: and if hee must passe, it must be running. Things employed to Idolatry, may be vied vs, if the Gentiles haue first prophaned them. It is not lawfull to sell them Waxe or Frankincense, especially at their Candlemasse Feast; nor bookes to vse in their seruice. Our women may not performe a Mid-wives office to them, nor nurse their children.

7. Thou shalt doe no worke on the Seuenth day. Nothing that belongeth to the getting of Food or Rayment. It is vnlawfull to walke on the grasse, lest thou pull it vp with thy feet; or to hang any thing on the bough of a tree, lest it breake; or to cate an Apple, plucked on the Sabbath, especially if the tayle or wooden substance, whereby it groweth, be on it; or to mount on a horse, lest hee be galled; or to goe into water, lest thou wipe thy clothes: which holdeth also, if they be moistened with Wine or Oyle (but not in a woman that giue suck, who may wipe her clothes, for the more puritie of her prayers). The stopping of a Vessell if it be of Hempe or Flax, may not be thrust in, though it runne, especially if any other Vessell be vnder. To mixe Mullard-seed with wine or water; to lay an Apple to the fire to roast; to wash the bodie, chiefly with hot water; to sweate; to wash the hands; to doe any thing in priuate, which may not bee publicly done: (but some say, it is lawfull privately to rubbe off the dust with his nayles from his cloathes, which publicly hee may not:) To read by a Light, except two read together: To set lay: (but if thou enter three dayes before, it is not necessarie to goe forth on the Sabbath) to be carryed in a Waggon, though a Gentile drue it: If fire happen on the Sabbath, to carrie any thing out, but thy food, rayment, and necessities for that day, and that wherein the holy Booke lyeth: to put to pasture Horses or Asse, coupled together: to receive any good by the Light, or Fire, which a Gentile hath made for the Jew; (otherwise, if hee did it for himselfe:) To play on any Instrumēt; to make a bed; to Number, Measure, Iudge, or Marry, lest they should write any thing: To cate at home, when others are at the Synagogue: To speake of buying and selling (which it seemeth they obserue not): To visite Field or Garden: To Runne, Leape, or tell T-les, &c. All these on the Sabbath day are vnlawfull. For dangerous diseases it is lawfull to violate the Sabbath: Such are the three first dayes after a womans travell, &c. But of this see also the obseruation of their Sabbath. It is not lawfull to walke out of the Citie, but their limited spce: but within the Citie, as farre as they will, though it bee as big as Ninuie.

8. It is forbidden to hurt the Seed-members of Man or Beasts. Neither Males nor Females may be gelded or spayed: and yet wee may vse such Beasts.

Likewise they haue forbidden men to know their Wiues in the day-time, vnlesse it bee in the darke, or vnder some Couering. The same is forbidden to a drunken man, and to him which hateth his wife, lest they get wicked Children betwene them. Also to follow a woman in the streets, but either to goe before or besides her. And hee which is not married, may not puch his hand beneath his Nauell, nor touch his flesh, when he maketh water. And because a man may not weare Womans attire, neither may hee looke in a glasse, because that is womanish.

NOW for the first man, his body (saith R. Osia in the Talmud) was made of the earth of Babylon, his head of the land of Israel, his other members of other parts of the world. So R. Meir thought hee was compact of the earth, gathered out of the whole earth, as it is written, Thine eyes did see my substance : now it is else-where written, Thy eyes of the Lord are ouer all the earth. There are twelve houres of the day, saith R. Aba, in the first whereof the earth of Adam, or earthly matter was gathered : in the second, the trunk of his body fashioned : in the third, his members stretched forth : in the fourth, his soule infused : in the fifth, hee stood vpon his feet : in the sixth, hee gaue names to the Creatures : in the seventh, Eue was giuen him in marriage : in the eighth, they ascended the bed two, and descended foure : in the ninth, hee received the Precept, which in the tenth he brake, and therefore was iudged in the eleventh ; and in the twelfth was cast out of Paradise : as it is written, Man continued not one night in honour. The statute of Adam was from one end of the world to the other, and for his transgression, the Creator by laying on his hand lessened him : for before, saith R. Eleazar, with his head he reached (a reacher indeed) the vrie firmament. His language was Sytiacke or Aramitish, saith R. Iuda, and as Reschlaie addeth, the Creator shewed him all generations, and the wise-men in them. His sinne, after R. Iehuda, was heresie ; R. Isaac thinketh the nourishing his fore-skin.

He knew or vied ⁸ carnall filchinesse with all the beasts which God brought vnto him before Eue was made, as some interpret R. Eleazar, and R. Salomon : but Renshin laboureth to purge them of that sense : who affirmeth, that hee had an Angell for his Master or Instructor : and when he was exceedingly dejected with remorse of his sinne, God sent the Angell Raziel to tell him that there should be one of his progenie which should haue the foure letters of Iehovah in his name, and should expiate originall sinne. And heere was the beginning of their Cabala : and also presently hereupon did hee and Eue build an Altar, and offer sacrifice. The like offices of other Angels they mention ¹ to other Patriarchs, and tell that euery three moneths are set new watchmen of these watchmen, yea euery three houres, yea and euery hour is some change of them. And therefore wee may haue more fauour of them in one houre then another : for they follow the disposition of the staires ; so said the Angell Samael (which wrestled with him) vnto Jacob, ² Let mee goe, for the day breaketh : for his power was in the night. But let me returne to Adam : of whom they further tell ³ that he was an Hermaphrodite, a man-woman, hauing both Sexes and a double bodie, the Female part ioyned at the shoulders, and backe parts to the Male, their countenances turned from each other. This is proued by Moses his words. So God created man in his Image, Male and Female created hee them ; And he called their name ADAM : yet after this is mention of Adams solitarinesse, and forming of Eue out of his side, that is, cutting the female part from the Male, and so fitting them to generation. Thus doth Leo Hebraeus reconcile the Fable of Platoes Androgynus with Moses narration, out of which he thinketh it borrowed. For as hee telleth that Iupiter in the first forming of mankind, made them such Androgyni, with two bodies of two sexes ioyned in the brest, diuided for their pride, the naull still remaining as a skarre of the wound then made : so with little difference is this their interpretation of Moses.

§. III.

Iud. c. 2. E. Ben
Tib. Tract. Lilitish.

WHEN a Jewish woman ¹ is great with Childe, and neare her time, her chamber is furnished with necessaries ; and then some holy and deuout man (if any such may bee had) with Chalke maketh a circular line round in the chamber vpon all the walls, and writeth on the doore, and within and without on euery wall, and about the bed in Hebrew Letters, Adam, Chana, Chana, Lilit or (after the Jewish pronunti-ation) Lilis, that is, Adam, Eue, away hence Lilit. Hereby they signifie their desire, that if a woman woman shall bee deliuered of a sonne, G O D may one day giue him a wife like to Eue, and not a shrew like Lilith. This word Lilith is read in the ^m Prophet, interpreted a Skitch-Owle : but the Iewes seeme to meane by it a diuellish Spectrum in womans shape, that vseth to slay or carry away Children, which are on the eight day to be Circumcised. Elias Leuita writeth, that hee hath read, that a hundred and twentie yeeres Adam contained himselfe from his wife Eue, and in that space there came to him Diuels which conceived of him, whence were ingendred Diuels and Spirtes, Fairies and Goblins : and there were foure mothers or dammes of Diuels, Lilith, Naemah, Ogereth, and Machalat-hi. Thus is it read in Ben Sira, when G O D had made Adam, and saw it was not good for him to bee alone, hee made him a woman of the cathe, like vnto him, and called her Lilith. These disagreed for superiortie, not suffering ^a Cesarne priorem, Pompeiusue parem : Lilith (made of the same mould) would not be vnderling, and Adam would not endure her his equall. Lilith seeing no hope of agreement, vntured that sacred word IN O V A, with the Cabalisticall interpretation thereof, and presently did flie into the Ayre. Adam playning his case, G O D sent three Angels after her, viz. Senoi, Senseno, Saumangelaph, either to bring her backe, or to denounce vnto her, That a hundred of her Children should dye in a day. These ouertooke her ouer the troublesome Sea (where one day the Egyptians should bee drowned) and did thei message to her : shee refusing to obey, they threatned her drowning : but she besought them to let her alone, because shee was created to vex and kill children on the eight day, if they were men ; if women children, on the twentieth day. They neuerthelesse forcing her to goe, Lilith swore to them, That whensoever she should finde the name or figure of those Angels, written or painted on Schedule, Parchment, or any thing, shee would doe Infants no harme, and that she would not refuse that punishment, to lose a hundred children in a day. And accordingly a hundred of her children or young Diuels, dyed in a day. And for this cause doe they write these names on a Scroll of Parchment, and hang them on their Infants neckes. Thus farre Ben Sira.

In their Chambers alwayes is found such a scrol or painting ; and the names of the Angels of Health (his office they ascribe to them) are written ouer the chamber doore. In their Booke ^o Brandpiegel, Printed at Cracouia 1597. is shewed the authentic of this Historie, collected by their Wise-men out of those words ; ^p Male and Female created hee ibem, compared with the forming of Eue of a Rib in the next Chapter, saying, That Lilith the former was diuorced from Adam for her pride, which shee conceived, because she was made of earth, as well as hee ; and G O D gaue him another, Flesh of his flesh. And concerning her, R. Moser ^q tells that Samael the Diuell came riding vpon a Serpent, which was as bigge as a Camell, and cast water vpon her, and deceived her.

When this Iewesse is in trauell, shee must not send for a Christian Mid-wife, except no Iewish can bee gotten : and then the Iewish women must be very thick about her, for feare of negligence or iniurie. And if she be happily deliuered of a sonne, there is exceeding ioy through all the house, and the father presently makes festiuall prouision against the Circumcision on the eight day. In the meane time ten persons are invited, neither more nor fewer, which are all past thirtene yeeres of age. The night after her deliuerie, seuen of the invited parties, and some others sometimes, meet at the Child-house, and make there great cheere and sport all night, Dicing, Drinking, Fabling, so to solace the Mother, that shee should not grieve too much for the childs Circumcision.

Of the Iewish manner of Circumcision.

THe Circumciser is called Mobel, who must bee a Iew, and a Man, and well exercised in that facultie : and hee that will performe this office, at the beginning giueth money to some poore Iew, to be admitted herunto in his children, that after his better experience hee may be vsed of the richer. And this Mobel may thence-forwards bee knowne by his thumbes, on which he weareth the nayles long * and sharpe, and narrow-pointed. The circumcising Instruments is of stone, glasse, yron, or any matter that will cut : commonly sharpe knives like Rasors, amongst the rich Iewes closted in silver, and set with stones. Before the Infant be Circumcised, he must be washed and wrapped in cloths, that in the time of the Circumcision hee may lie cleane : for otherwise they might vye no prayers ouer him. And if in the time of Circumcision (for paine) he desileth himselfe, the Mobel must suspend his praying, till he be washed & laid cleane again. This is performed commonly in the morning, while the child is fasting, to prevent much fluxe of blood.

In the morning therefore of the eight day all things are made ready. First, are two seats placed, or one so framed, that two may sit in the same apart, adorned cosily with Carpets, and that either in the Synagogue, or some private Parlour; If it be in the Synagogue, then the seat is placed neere the holy Arke, or Chest, where the Booke of the Law is kept. Then comes the father or God-father for the child, and placeth himselfe at the said seat, and neere him the Mobel or Circumciser. Other Jewes follow them, one of which cryeth with a loud voyce, That they should bring presently whatsoeuer is needfull for this businesse. Then come other Children, wherof one bringeth a great Torch, in which are lighted twelue waxe Candles, to represent the twelue Tribes of Israel: after him two other Boyes, carrying cups full of red Wine. After them another carrieth the circumcising knife: another brings a dish with fennel; another brings another dish with Oyle; in which are cleane and fine clouts, which after the Mobel applyeth to the wounds of the child. These stand in a ring about the Mobel, the better to marke and learne: and these their Offices are bought with money by those children. Some come thither also with Spices, Cloues, Cinnamon, strong Wine to refresh, if any happen to swoone. These being thus assembled, the God-father sitteth downe vpon one of those two seats: right against him the Mobel placeth himselfe, and sings the song of the Israelites, and others. Then the women bring the child to the doore, all the congregation presently rising vp. The God-father goeth to the doore, taketh the child, sitteth downe on his seat, and cryeth out, Baruch habba, that is, Blessed be hee that cometh; in their Cabalistical sense, habba, being applyed either to the eight day, which is the day of Circumcision, or the coming of Eliuz, whom they call the Angel of the Covenant, (so they interpret the Prophet) and say, that Eliuz cometh with the Infant, and sits downe on that other empty seat. For when the Israelites were prohibited Circumcision, and Eliuz complained thus, * The children of Israel haue forsaken the Covenant, that is, Circumcision, God promised him, That from thence-forwards hee should be present at Circumcision, to see it rightly performed. And when they make ready that seat for Eliuz, then they are bound in set words to say, This seat is for the Prophet ELIAZ, otherwise (as a vnbeliued ghost) he cometh not. This seat remaineth for him three whole dayes together.

Then when the God-father holdeth the child in his lap, the Mobel takes him out of his clouts, and layeth hold on his member, and holding the fore-skinne, putteth backe the top thereof, and rubbeth the fore-skinne, so to make it haue the lesse sense of paine. Then he taketh from the Boy the circumcising-knife, and saith with a loud voyce; Blessed bee thou, O God our Lord, King of the World, which hast sanctified vs with thy Commandments, and given vs the Covenant of Circumcision: and whiles he thus speaketh, cuts off the fore-part of the skin, that the head of the yard may bee seene, and presently hurleth it into the 7 Sand-dish, and restoreth his knife to the Boy againe: taketh from another a cup of Red Wine, and drinketh his mouthfull, which hee presently spitteth out on the Infant, and therewith washeth away the blood; and if he see the child begin to faint, he spitteth out some thereof on his face. Presently he taketh the member of the child in his mouth, and sucketh * out the blood, to make it stay from bleeding the sooner, and spitteth out that blood so sucked into the other cup full of Wine, or into the dish of Sand. This hee doth at least thrice. After the blood is stayed, the Mobel with his sharpe-pointed thin nayles rendeth the skinne of the yard, and putteth it backe so farre, that the head thereof is bare. Hee is more painefull to the Infant, with this rending of the remaining skinne, which action is called Priah, then with the former. This being done, hee layeth the clouts (dipped in oyle aforesaid) to the wound, and bindeth them three or four times about; and then wrappeth vp the Infant againe in his clouts. Then saith the Father of the child; Blessed bee thou, O God our Lord, King of the World, which hast sanctified vs in thy Commandments, and hast commanded vs to succeed into the Covenant of our Father ABRAHAM. To which all the Congregation answereth, As this Infant hath happily succeeded into the Covenant of our Father ABRAHAM, so happily shall hee succeed into the possession of the Law of Moses, into Marriage also, and other good works. Then doth the Mobel wash his bloudie mouth and his hands. The God-father riseth with him, and standeth ouer-against him; who raking the other cup of Wine, saith a certaine prayer, and prayeth also ouer the Infant, saying; *O our God, God of our Fathers, strengthen and keepe this Infant in thy Father and Mother, and make that his name, in the people of Israel, may be named (heree hee first nameth the Child, calling him Isaac) ISAAC, which was the Sonne of ABRAHAM. Let his Father reioyce in him that hath come out of his loynes; Let his Mother reioyce in the fruit of her wombe, as it is written, * Make glad thy Father and Mother, and her that bare thee to reioyce. And God saith by the Prophet, * I passed by thee, and saw thee troden in thy blood, and I said vnto thee, In thy blood thou shalt liue; yea, I said vnto thee, In thy blood thou shalt liue. Heere the Mobel puts his finger into the other cup of Wine, wherein hee had spit the blood, and moysteneth the Childs hipps three times with that wine, hoping, that* according to the former sentence of the Prophet, he shall live longer in the blood of his Circumcision, then otherwise he should. David also saith, He is mindfull of his marvellous acts which bee hath done, and of his wonders, and the iudgements of his mouth, &c. Then hee continueth his prayer for the present assembly, and that God would giue long life to the Father and Mother of the Boy, and blesse the child. This done, he offers the blessed Cup to all the young men, and bids them drinke. Then with the Child (who is thus made a Jew) they returne to the Fathers house, and restore him to his Mothers armes. This last prayer he makes neere the Arke, and some of the deuouter Iewes, before and after Circumcision, take the Child, and lay him vpon Elias pillow, that Elias may touch him. ^d The skinne cast into the sand, is in memorie of that promise, I will make thy seed as the sand of the Sea; and of Balaams saying, Who can number the dust of I A C O N, that is, his posteritie; whose fore-skin is cast in the Sand or Dust, and because the Curse on the Serpent is thus fulfilled, Dust thou shalt eat, that is, this skin in the dust: thus to their enemy the Serpent fulfilling also that precept, If thou enemy hunger, feed him. And by this meanes the Serpent can no more seduce this man.

If a Child bee sicke on the eight day, they deferre Circumcision till his recovery: they hold also the blowing of the North winde necessarie to this action, and therefore thinke that their Fathers forbate circumcision those fortie yeeres in the Wildernesse, because the North winde blew not all that time, lest it should haue blowne away the pillar of smoake and fire: and besides, this winde is wholesome for wounds, which else are dangerous. But lest they should stay beyond the eighth day expecting this Northerne breath, their Talmud tels that every day there blow foure winde, and that the North is mixed with them all, and therefore they may Circumcise euery day. If the Child dye before the eighth day, he is circumcised at the grave without any prayers: but a signe is erected in memorie of him, that God may haue mercie vpon him, and raise him at the day of the Resurrection. In some places all the people stand, except the God-father, because it is written, All the people stood in the Covenant. But to pursue the rest of their niceties, grounded vpon such interpretations, would bee endlesse. We will follow the child home, if you be not already weatie, and see what rout is there kept.

Ten must bee the number (you haue heard) of the invited ghests, and one or two of these learned Rabbins, who must make along prayer and Sermon at the table, although others meane while are more busied in tosseing the cups of Wine. I was once present (saith Bux-dorsius) at one of their Circumcision feasts, and one of their Rabbins preached on Pro. 3. 18. Wisdom is a tree of life; but more wooden or ridiculous stufte, I neuer heard in all my life. This feast they obserue by example of Abraham, who made a great feast when the child was weaned: their Kabal peruerbs it, when bee was circumcised. ¹ The Circumciser abideth sometime with the Mother, lest the blood should againe issue from the Child. The mother keepeth within, sixe weekes, whether it bee a male or female: all which time her husband must not so much as touch her, or eate meate in the same dish with her.

If a female child ² bee borne, there is small solemnitie; onely at sixe weekes age, some young wenches stand about the Cradle, and lift it vp with the child in it, and name it; three which stands at the head, being God-mother: and after this they iunket together.

§. V.

Of the Iewish Purification, Redemption, and Education.

When the fortie dayes are accomplished, before the wife may accompanie or haue any fellowship with her husband, shee must bee purified in cold water, and put on white and cleane garments. Their washing is with great scrupulositie, in a common watering, or in priuate Cisternes, or Fountaines; which must bee so deepe, that they must stand vp to the necke in water: and if it bee muddie in the bottome, they must haue a square stone to stand on, that their whole feete may stand in cleere water, and that the water may passe betwixt their toes: for the least part not couered with water, would frustrate the whole action: and for this cause they lay aside all their haire-laces, neck-laces, rings: they dye vnder the water, so that no part may bee free from the same. Some Iewesse must stand by for witness hereof, which is twelue yeeres old and a day at least.

bids me giue him to thee. Doeſt thou then giue me him, ſaith the Priſt? He anſwereth, Yea. The Priſt asketh the Mother, if ſhe euer before had a childe, or abortion? If ſhee anſwere, No: then the Priſt asketh the Father, Whether the childe or the money be dearer to him? he anſwereth, The childe: then doth the Priſt take the money, and lay it on the head of the Infant, ſaying: This is a fiſt begotten chld, which God commanded ſhould be redeemed, and now, ſaith hee to the childe, thou art in my power, but thy parents deſire to redeeme thee: now this money ſhall be giuen to the Priſt for thy redemption: And if I haue redeemed thee, as it is right, thou ſhalt be redeemed: If not, yet thou being redeemed according to the Law and cuſtome of the Iewes, ſhalt grow vp to the feare of God, to marriage and good workes, Amen. If the father dye before the childe be one and thirtie dayes old, the mother hangeth a ſcroll about his necke, wherein is written: This is the fiſt-borne, and not redeemed: and this child when he cometh of age muſt redeeme himſelfe.

The Iewiſh Chachamim, or Wiſe-men, haue left no part of life vnprouided of their ſuperſtitious care: as we haue ſeene concerning the birth and circumciſion of their children, with the Purification of the mother, and Redemption of the fiſt-borne. To proceed with them: they enioyne the mother, while ſhe giueth ſucke, to eate wholeſome food of eaſie digeſtion, that the Infant may ſucke good milke; ſo that the heart and ſtomacke be not ſtopped, but may come ſo much more eaſily to obtaine wiſedome and vertue. For God hath great care of children, and hath therefore giuen a woman two breſts, and placed them next her heart; yea, in the dangerous perſecution vnder Pharaoh, Exod. 1. hee cauſed the earth to open it ſelfe, and receiue their Male children, and created therein two ſtones, from one of which the Infant ſucked milke, and from the other honie, till they were growne, and might goe to their Parents: yea, and if you belecue their Gemara (can you chooſe?) a poore Iew hauing buried his wife, and not able to hire a nurſe for his childe, had his owne breſts miraculoſly filled with milke, and became nurſe himſelfe. Yea, Mardocheus (ſaith their Medraſch) ſucked the breſts of Heſter, and for this cauſe did ſhe, after her exaltation, ſo preferre him. The conſuſion, if ſhe giue groſſe food to her Infants, ſhe ſhall be caſt into hell, ſhe muſt not goe naked breſted, nor too long faſting in a morning, nor carrie her Infants, or ſuffer them to goe or be naked, leit q the Sonne hurt them, if it bee in the day, or the Moone in the night: and that they may ſoone learne that the earth is filled with the Maleſtie of diuine glory: and for this cauſe muſt they beware, that they neuer goe bare-headed: for this were a ſigne of impudencie, and ill diſpoſition. And as religiouſly they muſt promide, that they be alway girded with a girdle: for the girdle diſtinguiſheth betwixt the heart and the priuities; and in his morning prayer, he ſaith, Bleſſed be thou, O God, which girdſt Iſrael with the girdle of ſtrength: which, if he ſhould not haue a girdle on, would be in vaine. Their Mothers therefore ſo w their girdles to their coats: with great care they auoid going bare-foot, eſpecially in Ianuary and February.

When they can ſpeake, they are taught ſentences out of Scripture, and to ſalute their Parents with good-morrow, good-Sabbath, &c. and after ſeven yeeres they add the name of God, God giue you good-morrow, &c. but they muſt not name the name of God but in a pure place. Theſe teach them the names of things in the vulgar, and ſome Hebrew names among, that ſo they may not commonly be vnderſtood: for pure Hebrew they cannot ſpeake, except their moſt learned Rabbines onely. Their Children muſt not conuerſe with children of Chriſtians, and their Parents make all things in Chriſtians odious to them, that they may ſeaſon them from their child-hood with hatred of them. When they are ſeven yeeres old, they learne to write and reade: and when they can reade, they learne to conſtrue the Text of Moses in their vulgar tongue. When the Mother carrieth him fiſt to the ſchoole to the Rabbi, ſhe maketh him cakes ſeaſoned with honie and ſugar, and as this cake, ſo (ſaith ſhe) let the Law be ſweet to thy heart. Speake not vaine trifling words in the ſchoole, but onely the words of God. For if they ſo do, then the glorious Maieſtie of God dwelleth in them, and delighteth it ſelfe with the ayre of their breath. For their breathing is yet holy, not yet ſo polluted with ſinne: neither is hee r Bar-mitz-nah, bound to obey the Commandments, till he be thirteene yeeres old.

When he is ten yeeres old, and hath now ſome ſmattering in Moses, he proceedeth to learne the Talmud: at thirteene yeeres, his Father calleth ten Iewes, and teſtifieth in their preſence that this his ſonne is now of iuſt age, and hath bene brought vp in their manners and cuſtomes, their daily manner of praying and bleſſing, and hee will not further ſtand charged with the ſinnes of his Sonne, who is now Bar-mitz-nah, and muſt himſelfe beare this burthen.

Then in their preſence hee thanketh God, that he hath diſcharged him from the puniſhment of his ſonne, deſiring, that his ſonne by diuine grace may be long laſe, and endeavour to good workes. At the fifteenth yeere of their life, they are compelled to learne their Gemara, or the complement of their Talmud, Diſputations, and ſubtill Decisions about the Text of their

for with the right he writeth the name of God, and the Angels. And in this place and businesse hee must take heed, he thinke not of God or his Word; much lesse name him, for God will shorten the dayes of such a one. R. Sira told his Schollers, that the cause of his long life was, that in an impure place hee neuer thought of the Word, nor named the name of God. Besides, hee must turne his face, and not his hinder-parts toward the Temple of Ierusalem. Hee ought not to touch his body with vnwasht hands, in regard of the euill spirits which rest thereon till they be washed; and if hee should touch his eyes, hee would be blinde; his eares deafe; his nose dropping, his mouth stinking, his hand scabbed with these vnwashted, and therefore venomous hands: and when hee washeth, he must powre water three times on his right hand, and as oft on the left, before one hand may touch the other: hee must not bee sparing in his water, for store of water, store of health: after the hands, the mouth and face must bee washed, because they were created after the Image of God: and how should the name of God be vttered out of a foule mouth? hee must wash ouer a bason, not ouer the ground: he must drie his face very well, for feare of wheales and wrinkles; and that with a cleane Towel, not with his shirt, for this would make them blackish and forgetfull. After all this followeth his Brachab, or blessing, Blessed bee thou, O God, our God, King of the whole world, who hast commanded vs to wash our hands. Their hands they must alwayes wash on these occasions: in the morning; at their returne from the stooles; from bathing; when they haue cut their nayles; haue scratched their naked bodie; haue pulled off their shooes with their hands; haue touched a dead bodie; haue gone amongst the dead; haue companied with their wiues; or haue killed a louse; If hee respect not washing after these, if hee bee learned, he shall forget his learning; if vnlearned he shall lose his sense.

They haue a foure-cornered garment, which some put on with the rest, when they rise, others then, when they will pray. The foure cornered parts thereof are made of linen silke, tyed together with two winding bands, of such length, that they may draw through their head betwixt them, so that those two quadrangular pieces may hang downe, one on his brest, the other on his backe. In euery of those foure corners hangeth a labell, made of white woollen threads, by a little knot, downward to the ground, and the same is foure, or eight, or twelue fingers broad. These labells they call Zizis. Those which are deuout, weare this garment euery day, vnder a long outward coat, in such sort, that those labells may appeare out a little, so that they may alwayes see them, as monitories of the Commandements of God. When they put them on, they praise God that hath commanded them to weare these Zizis. Hee (say they) that keepeth duly this Precept * of Zizis, doth as much as if hee kept the whole Law: for there are in all five knots, compared to the five bookes of Moses: eight threads added to them, make thirteene. And the word Zizis, maketh fixe hundred, altogether amounting to fixe hundred and thirteene, the number (as you haue heard) of Gods Commandements. They ascribe the continencie of Ioseph in Potiphar's house; and of Boaz, when Ruth slept by him, to the Zizis. May it please your patience, a storie out of the Talmud. One Rab, Iochanan saw a boxe full of Jewels, which one of his Schollers, Bar-Emorai purposed to steale, but was forbidden by a voyce sounding out of the ayre, Let it alone, Bar-Emorai, for it belongeth to R. Chanina wife, which in the other world shall put into the same violet wooll, to make thred for Zizis, that of them, the iust men there may haue their fringed garments sewed. Once, hee which weareth this garment without intermission, is fortified against the Deuill, and alleuill Spirits.

* Besides this memorabile Vestment, they weare a certaine knot neare their nose, out of Deut. 6. 8. They shall bee frontlets betwene thine eyes. They make it thus: They take a little blacke foure-square calic-skin, which they fold eight times, that it may haue foure double folds and distinct breadths. They put into these, distinct Scriptures, the same being foure-fold of parchment. These Scriptures are taken * out of Exod. 13. and Deut. 6. Then take they haire out of a Cow or Calues tayle, and wash them cleane, and binde them about those writings of Scripture, so that any one may see, that they are good, by the ends of them appearing out of the skin. This skinne they sew with cleane and fine strings, taken out of Calues or Kines bodies, or made of Bulls sinewes, or if such strings cannot bee had, with strings of Calue-skin-parchment. Then doe they sew a long and blacke thong to that thick hide or skin, and knit a knot about it. This piece of worke they call Tephillim, to put them in minde of often prayer: and tye it so about their heads, that the thicke knot, wherein the Scriptures are, may hang betwixt the eyes. After this, they take another foure-cornered skin, which which they fold as the former, and write certaine verses out of Exodus in parchment, and put it into a little hollowed skinned, and sew it vpon the thicke-folded skin; to which they adde a long thong, and call it the Tephillum of the hand. This they tye to the bare skin, aboue the elbow of the left arme, that so that which is written may bee ouer-against the heart, which may hereby be the more enflamed to prayer. That long string is so fastned, that it cometh to the fore-part of the hand, thus fulfilling that Commandement, ^f The words which I command thee this day shall bee on thine heart, and thou shalt tye them for a signe in thy hands. They tye on first this Tephillum of the hand, and then that of the head, and make their brachab or prayer, saying; Blessed bee thou, O God, our Lord, who hast sanctified vs in thy Commandements, and hast commanded vs to put on Tephillum; looking, while hee speaketh, diligently on the knot on his fore-head. In folding, sewing, knitting, and tying them, they verie subtilly frame the name of God Schaddai: Other their manifold ceremonies about these Tephillim, I willingly omit. Their sanctitie is such, that he which weareth them must be pure within and without: and if hee lets them fall on the ground, all that shall see them so lying, must fast with him one whole day: they must not bee hang'd vp bare, but in a bagge: nor may they be left in a chamber, where a man and his wife lye together, except in a triple chest or bagge. A man must not sleepe while he hath them on, nor may hee breake winde; and if he haue list to the stoole, he must lay them foure ells from the place of his easement, or lay them against his heart in a double bagge. Their women seruants, and sicke folkes, are free from wearing them. It is sufficient for women to say Amen to their prayers. And all this Moses learned in Mount Sinai.

Of their Schoole or Synagogue, Rites, and their Mattins.

WEE haue bene tedious in furnishing our Iew to his Mattins; at Sun-rising is their hour, as you haue heard; but their Rabbins haue enlarged and lengthened that time to about nine of the clocke. Where many of the Iewes liue together, they resort at a set houre to their Synagogue. Thither they must go cheerfully: before their Synagogue they haue an Yron fastned, to make cleane their shooes, according to Salomons counsell, ^g Keep thy foote when thou goest into the house of God. He that hath Pantofles, must put them off, as it is written, ^h For the place where thou standest is holie ground. At the entrance in at the doore, he pronounceth some things out of Danids Psalms: they must enter with feare and trembling, considering whose presence it is; and for a while suspend their praying for the better attention. And euery Iew must cast in a halfe-penie at least into the Treasure, as it is written; I will see thy face in righteousness, that is, in almes, as they interpret it. In this attention they bow themselves towards the Arke, in which is the booke of the Law, and say, ⁱ How faire are thy Tentis, O IACOB? and thy dwellings, O Israel? And ^k I will enter into thy house in the multitude of thy mercie, I will bow downe in thy holy Temple in thy feare. And, ^l O Lord, I haue loued the habitation of thy house, and the place of the Tabernacle of thy glorie: and diuers other verses out of the Psalme. After these things they begin to pray, as is contained in their common Prayer-booke; and because these prayers are verie many, therefore they ruine them ouer; hee that cannot read, must attend and say Amen, to all their prayers. These prayers are in Hebrew rimes. Their first prayer is, The Lord of the World, which raigned befoe any thing was created, at that time, when according to his will they were created, was called King, to whom shall bee giuen feare and honour. He alway hath bene, is, and shall remaine in his beautie for euer. Hee is One, and besides him there is none other, which may bee compared or associated to him, without beginning and end, with him is rule and strength. He is my God, and my deliuerer which liueth. He is my Rocke in my need, and time of my trouble, my Banner, my Refuge; my Here ditarie portion, in that day, when I implore his helpe. Into his hands I commend my Spirit. Whether I wake or sleepe, hee is with me, therefore I will not be afraid.

This done, they say then their hundredth ^m benedictions one after another, which are short, and twice a day repeated. First, for the washing of their hands, that if hee then forgot it, he might now in the Congregation recite it. Then for the creation of man, and for that hee was made full of holes, whercof, if one should bee stopped, he should dye: then a confession of the Resurrection: then for vnderstanding giuen to the Cocke (as you haue

f They may not ſay it within foure cubits of a graue, nor in flight of an vnclean place, where dung or vrine is, except they be hardened and dried vp, or elſe covered. They muſt not ſtretch their eyes, or fingers. It is a preſeruation againſt diuels. Manſt. n. 1. Exod. i. 7.

Then follow two ſhort prayers for the Law giuen them. And then they goe on to the Sacrifices, which, becauſe they cannot execute in action our of the Temple, they redeeme with words, reading the precepts concerning ſacrifices, according to their times, comforting themſelues with the ſaying of Hoſ. i. We will ſacrifice the calves of our lippes. Then repeat they an Hiſtorie of Sacrifice, and a Prayer of the vie of the Law, and how many wayes it may be expounded. This done, they (with a ſtill voyce that none can heare) pray for the re-edifying of the Temple, in theſe words : Let thy will bee before thy face, O God our Lord, Lord of our Fathers, that the holy houſe of thy Temple may bee reſtored in our dayes, and grant vs thy will in thy Law. After, riſing with great ioy and clamour, they ſing a prayer of prayſe in voyce hereof ; and ſitting downe againe, they reade a long prayer, gathered heere and there our of the Pſalmes ; and ſome whole Pſalmes, and part of 1. Chron. 20. And laſtly, the laſt words of Obadias, The Seniors ſhall aſcend into Mount Zion, to iudge the Mount of Eſau, and the Kingdome ſhall bee the Lords. Which they ſpeake in hope of the deſtruction of the Chriſtians, whom they call Edomites, and of their owne reſtitution. (In ſome of their cloſe writings, which they will not ſuffer to come into the hands of Chriſtians, they ſay that the ſonke of Edom entered into the bodie of Chriſt, and that both hee and wee are no better then Eſau.) They proceed q ſinging, And God ſhall bee King ouer all the earth : In that day God ſhall bee one, and his name one, as it is written in thy Law, O God, Heare, Iſrael, God our God is one God : And theſe words in their next Prayer they repeat, reſounding ſhar laſt word = One, by the halfe or whole houre together, looking vp to Heauen ; and when they come to the laſt letter thereof, Daleth, d, they all turne their heads to the foure corners and windes of the World, ſignifying that God is King of the whole world : haying in the word, Echad, many ſuperſtitious ſubtilties ; that the letter Daleth in regard of his place in the Alphabet, ſignifieth foure ; and the word Echad containeth in numerall letters two hundred fortie and ſixe, wherunto adding three bael eloechem emes, God our Lord is true, they make vp the number of two hundred fortie and eight, and ſo many members there are in mans bodie : for euerie member, a prayer ſecures them all. And this verſe thrice recited, ſecured againſt the ill ſpirit. They r eſteeme it a holy prayer, by which miracles may be wrought, and therefore vſe it morning and eueniug. They haue another prayer called Sabone eſſe, that is, eightene, becauſe it containeth ſo many thankſgiuings, which they ſay twice a day, and the chiefe chanter of the Synagogue ſingeth it twice by himſelfe. They thinke by this prayer to obtaine remiſſion of their finnes. They muſt pray it ſtanding lo, that one foot muſt not ſtand more on the ground then the other, like the Angels : And their ſoetwas a right foot. When they come to thoſe words in it, Holy, holy, holy, Lord God of hoſts : they leape vp three times aloft. And hee (ſay their Chachanim) which ſpeaketh a word during this prayer, ſhall haue burning coales giuen him to eate after his death. Theſe eightene thankſgiuings, are for the eightene bones in the chine or back-bone, which muſt in ſaying hereof be bended.

After

After this, followeth a prayer against the Iewes reuolted to Christianitie, and against all Christians, saying; These which are blotted out (that is, reuolters) shall haue no more hope, and all vnbeleuers shall perishe in the twinkling of an eye, and all thine enemies which hate thee, O God, shall be destroyed, and the proud and presumptuous Kingdome shall quickly be rooted out, broken, layd euen with the ground, and at last shall utterly perishe, and thou shalt make them presently in our dayes obedient to vs. Blessed art thou God, which breakest and subduest them which are rebellious. They call the Turkish Empire the Kingdome of Ismael, the Roman, Edonitically, proud, &c. They are * themselves indeed exceeding proud, impatient, and desirous of reuenge. The Talmud sayth, That the lying spirit in the mouth of 10 Acchab, Prophets, which perswaded him to goe and fall at Ramoth Gilead, was none other but the spirit of * Naboth, whom hee had before slaine. And y Vltor Carbenst, a Christian Iew, testifieth, That there are not vnder heauen a more quarrelsome people, themselves acknowledging the Christians farre meeker then themselves; when they haue this Proverb, that the modestie of the Christians, the wisdom and industrie of the Heathens, and faith of the Iewes, are the three pillars which sustaine the world.

But to returne to their deuotions: After those other before mentioned, followeth a prayer for the good sort, for Proselytes, reedifying of the Temple, for sending the Messias, and restauration of their Kingdome. In the end they pray God to keepe them in peace, and when they come to these words, Hee that makes peace aboue, shall make peace ouer all Israel, 20 men: they goe backe three paces, bow themselves downewards, bend their head on the right hand, then on the left. (if some Christian bee there with an Image, they must not bow, but li't vp their heart.) This they doe for honours sake, not to turne their hinder parts on the Arke: and thus they goe (like Crabbes) out of the Synagogue, vsing certaine prayers; not running, but with a slow pace, lest they should seeme glad, that their Martins were done.

Other their niceties in praying, as laying the right hand on the left ouer the heart; not speting nor breaking winde vp or downe; nor (interrupted by a King) to cease prayer; to shake his bodie this way and that way; not to touch his naked bodie; and to say Amen, with all his heart: for they that say Amen, are worthe to say it in the world to come. And therefore * Dauid endeth a Psalmine with Amen, Amen: signifying that one is to bee said here, and the other in the other world: also in a plaine eminent place, purged from all filth, freed from the sight of women, his face to the East, standing, his feet close together, fixing his eyes on the ground, eleuating the heart to heauen, &c. I hold it enough thus to mention.

Their praying to the East must be vnderstood from our Westerne parts, because Ierusalem standeth that way: for otherwise Ramban * sheweth that Abraham prayed in Mount Moriah toward the West; and the Sanctum Sanctorum was in the West, which place also Abraham set forth and determined. And because the Gentiles worshipped the Sunne toward the rising, therefore Abraham worshipped Westward, and appointed the Sanctuarie so to stand. The Talmud saith, Praying to the South bringeth wisdom; toward the North, riches.

I might here also adde their Letanie and Commemoration of their Saints almost after 40 the Popish fashion. As thus for a taste. Wee haue sinned before thee, haue mercie on vs. O Lord, doe it for thy names sake, and spare Israel thy people. Lord, doe it for (Abraham) thy perfect one, and spare Israel thy people. Lord, doe it for him which was bound in thy porches, (to wit, in Mount Moriah, where the Temple was afterward builded) and spare Israel thy people. Lord, doe it for him which was heard in the ladder (Iacob) from thy high place, and spare Israel thy people. Lord, doe it for the merit of Ioseph thy holy one, &c. Lord doe it for him which was drawne out of the waters (Moses) and spare, &c. Lord, doe it for (Aaron) the Prielt, with Vrim and Thummim. Lord, grant it for him that was zealous for thy name (Phineas.) Lord, doe it for the sweet Singer (Dauid.) Lord, doe it for him which builde thine house. They name not any, but expresse him after this sort. And then proceed in like manner, with the titles, attributes, and workes of God. Doe it for thy Name, Doe it for thy Goodnesse, for thy Covenant, thy Law, thy Glorie, &c. in severall verses.

And then to their Saints in a new passage. Doe it for Abraham, Isaac and Iacob. Doe it for Moses and Aaron, for Dauid and Salomon (as if their combined forces should effect more then single.) Doe it for Ierusalem the holy Citie, for Sion, for the destruction of thy house, for the poore Israelites, for the bare Israelites, for the miserable Israelites, for the Widdowes and Orphans, for the sucking and waived; and if not for our sake, yet for thine owne sake. Then in another forme, Thou which hearest the poore, heare vs; thou which hearest the oppressed, heare vs: Thou which hearest Abraham, &c. With renewing a commemoration of their Saints larger then before: and (after some repeating the diuine titles) in another 60 tune they oppose their Saint and wicked ones together: as Remember not the lye of Acchab, but remember Iesua, forgiuing him, and remember Helei and Samuel, and so on in a tedious length, Hus haue wee seene the Jewish Mattens, which they chant, (sayth * another) in a strange wilde hallowing tunc, imitating sometimes Trumpets, and one echoing to the other, and winding vp by degrees from a soft and silent whispering, to the highest and loudest notes that their voyces will beare, with much varietie of gesture: kneeling they vse none, no more then doe the Grecians: they burne Lampes: but for shew of Duction or Eleuation of Spirit, that yet in Iewes could I neuer discern: for they are reuerend in their Synagogues, as Grammar boyes are at Schoole, when their Master is absent. In summe, their holinesse is the verie outward worke it selfe, being a brainlesse head, and a soulelesse bodie. Meane-while, the good-wife at home, against her husbands returne, sweepeth the house, that nothing may disturbe his holy cogitations; and layeth him a booke on the Table, either the Pentateuch of Moses, or a booke of Manners, to reade therein the space of an houre, before he goeth out of the house about his businesse. This studie is required of euerie devout Iew, eyther in his owne house, or else in their Schoole or Synagogue. And being thus come home, they lay vp their Tephillum in a Chest, first that of the head, then that of the hand.

f They may not drinke any wine with the Gentiles, because it is doubtful whether it hath bene offered to Idols or no: and though it be alleged, that the Gentiles now doe not stru Idolles, yet because it was determined by a certaine number of Rabbines, till by a Counsel of so many, this decree be discontinued, it must stand, Eliab Thy Gad, Neth.

g Robin good-fellow, or the spirit of the battery among the Iewes. Concerning Angels, it is thus written in the booke Aboth, fol. 83. from the earth to the firmament all is full of trouper and rulers, and below are many hurtfull and accusing creatures, which all haue their abode in the ayre, no place being free, of which some are for peace, some for warre, some prouoke to good, some to euill, to life and death, &c. Druslib. 7. 60. They say the Angell Raziel is Gods Secretarie, of which name are two Cabalistical bookes. Eliab Thy Samuel is the Diuell, Eueric one hath two Angels, one at his right hand, the other at his left. Rambam. M. N. lib. 3. 33.

They account it healthfull also to eate somewhat in the morning, before they goe to worke: for whereas there are thre score and three diseases of the gall, a bit of Bread, or a draught of Wine can cure them all. About eleuen of clocke his wife hath prepared his dinner pure meates, purely dressed; but if she haue Pullen or Cattell, shee must first feed them. For it is said, * I will giue graffe in thy field for thy Cattell, and thou shalt eate and bee satisfied; yee see, the Cattell are first mentioned. And to keepe such Domestical cattell, is good in respect of the disastrous motions of the Planets, which must some way fort to effect. But if they bee studious of almes, and good works, then Saphyra Rabbat the great Chancellor (some Angell) according to his office, registreth the same, and commendeth them vnto God, saying: Turne away that planetarie misfortune from such a one, for hee hath done these, and these good works. And then doth it befall some wicked man, or else some of the Cattell. Before they come to the Table, they must make tryall againe in the priuie what they can doe: for it is written, * Thou shalt carry out the old, because of the new. Especially let there bee cleane water, wherein the household must first wash, then the wife, and lastly the good-man, who presently without touching or speaking ought else, might more purely giue thanks. Hee (sayth R. Iose in the 4 Talmud) that eateth with vnwashed hands, is as hee that lyeth with an Harlot, for it is written: * For the strange woman a man commeth to a morsell of bread. They must wash before meat and after, so strictly, that they may not keepe on a Ring on their finger, for feare of some vncleannesse remaining vnder it. I had rather (sayth R. Akiba) dye for thirst, then neglect this washing tradition of the Elders; when hee had onely so much water brought him into prison, as might serue him but to one vse of washing or drinking, at his owne choyse.

On the Table cleanly spred, must bee set a whole loafe well baked, and the salt, and then the housholder, or the chiefe Rabbi at Table, taketh the loafe into his hands, and in the cleaneft and best baked part thereof, maketh a cut into it, and then setting it downe, and spreading his hands on it, saith, Blessed art thou Lord God, King of the world, who bringest Bread out of the earth: and then breaketh off that piece of bread which hee had cut before, and dipping it into the salt or broth, eateth it, without speaking a word; for if hee speake, he must pay ouer his Grace againe: After this, hee taketh the loafe, and cutteth for the rest. Then hee taketh a cup of Wine (if they haue any) with both hands, and with the right hand holdeth it vp a handfull higher then the Table, and looking stedfastly on the cup, saith, Blessed, &c. who hast made the fruit of the Vine. Ouer water they pronounce no blessing: and if there bee not three at least at the Table, each man must blesse for himselfe: If three or more, the rest say, Amen. Salt is religiously set on in remembrance of the Sacrifices, If when they cut, they should cut off the piece of bread, it would offend God. Both hands they spread ouer the loafe, in memorie of the ten Commandements, which God hath published concerning Wheat, of which bread is made. The bread must bee had in speciall honour, no vessell supported with it, or set vpon it: and a spirit is called Nahal giueth attendance, as deputed to obserue such as (through negligence) tread it vnder foote, and to bring them into pueritie; and another man (dogged by this spirit, which sought to bring him to pueritie) eating victuals one day on the grasse in the field, the spirit hoped to effect his purpose: but this deuout Iew, after he had eaten, pared away the grasse, and threw it with the crummes scattered into it, into the Sea for the fishes, and presently heard a voyce, saying; Woe is me foole, who haue attended to punish this man, and cannot haue occasion. They dreame that Elias and euerie mans proper Angell attendeth at Table, to heare what is said, if they talke of the Law; otherwise an ill Angell commeth, and causeth brawles and diseases; and in respect of these spirituall attendants, they cast not their bones beside or behind them. They are curious not to eate flesh and fish together: but first flesh, and then scoure their teeth from the flesh, and eate a bit of bread, and drinke a draught of drinke before they eate the fish. They must not vse the same knife to meats made of milke, which they vse in eating flesh. Milke must not stand on the table with flesh, nor touch it.

Besides the 23. Psalm set before them in the meale time, they testifie their deuotion by multitudes of new graces or thanksgivings, if any better wine or dainties bee set before them, yea, besides the particulars of their eates, euen for euerie good sent, as of Oyle, Roses, Spices, &c. and are of opinion, that to vse anything without thanksgiving, is to vspurie and steale it. Let this bee spoken to the shame of many prophane Esaus with vs, that will rather sell Gods blessings for their meat, then seeke them to their meat; although in them the payment of their by tale, and not by weight, is no better then a head-superstition. They make a religion of leauing some leauings of their bread on the table; but to leaue a knife there were dangerous, euer since that a Iew once in the reheating that part of their grace after meat, which concerneth the re-edifying of Ierusalem, in a deepe agonie tooke his knife so left, and thrust into his heart. This their grace is long, containing a commemoration of the benefits vouchsafed their fore-fathers, and a prayer for regaining the same to send Elias and the Messias; and that they may not be brought to begge or borrow of the Christians; and for his blessing vpon all that house, &c. whereunto is answered with a loud voyce, Amen: and they say to themselves: 1 Feare the Lord, yee his Saints, for they that feare him, haue no want: the Lions lacke and suffer hunger, but they which seeke the Lord, shall want nothing: that is good: and while this is said, there must not a crumme bee left in their mouthes. The prayers must bee in that place where they haue eaten: or else they shall lose the benefit of buriall: and a certaine deuout Iew in the field, remembering that he had forgotten his grace, returned backe to the house, and there performing his dutie, had miraculously sent vnto him a doue of gold.

In Cities where are Synagogues, about siue in the afternoone, their Kleike (or some such officer) goeth about, and with knocking at their doores, giues them notice of Evening prayer: thither being come, they sit downe, and say this prayer (of the first word, called Aschre.) 1 Blessed are they which dwell in thy house, praising thee continually, Selah. Blessed are the people that are thine, blessed are the people whose God is the Lord. I will magnifie thee, O God my King, &c. all that 145. Psalm throughout: hee which saith this Psalm thrice a day, shall haue his portion in eternall life. Then the chiefe Chorister or Chanter singeth halfe their prayer, called Kaddesch: and then all say those eightene prayes mentioned in Morning Prayer. Then goeth their Chorister out of his Pulpit, and kneeleth downe vpon the steps before the Arke, and falleth downe with his face on his left hand (all the people doing likewise) saying *O mercifull and gracious God, I haue sinned in thy sight, but thou art full of mercy: be mercifull vnto me, and receiue my prayer proceeding from an humble heart. Reproue mee not, O Lord, in thy wrath, nor correct mee in thine anger, and so proceedeth through that whole sixt Psalm, his countenance couered and inclined to the ground. This is done in imitation of Iosapha. Then the Precentor or chiefe Chorister againe rising vp, saith: This is Aue we know not what to doe, but that we direct our eyes vnto thee. And then they say vp the other halfe of their Kaddesch, and so endeth their Euen-song.*

Now should they goe home, and after supper returne to performe their Night-deuotions: but because a full belly would rather be at rest, and might easily forget his dutie, after some pawse and stay, they proceed before they goe to their other taske: and in that time of pawse betweene their vepers and nocturnes, if there bee any strife betwene any, and reconciliation cannot be made, then hee which cannot reconcile his neighbour, goeth to the common prayer-booke, and shutting it, knocketh thereon with his hand, saying, anikelao, I conclude the businesse; as if he should say, I conclude praying, till mine aduersarie be reconciled to me: untill which thing be effected, they may not pray further: and so sometimes their prayers are intermitted then and diuers dayes together, if one partie will be stubborn. These prayers are for substance much like the former: as against the Christians, and for their owne restitution by their Messias. They depart out of the Synagogue with repetition of those sentences mentioned in the former Chapter.

k Scholae pulsat, among the Iewes, is as our Sexten. They will not admitt of bells, because it is an inuention of the Christians, & because (sayd Cathartes) they are baptised: they vie this practice three times a bell, let him fall in the duoghill, and hee which hangs on the Bel cope, may he hang in hell. *Vit. n Deut. 6. 4.

At Supper they behave themselves as at Dinner. Going to bed, they put off the left shoe before the right; their shirt they put off, when they are covered in their beds, for feare of the walls beholding their nakednesse. Hec that maketh water naked in his chamber, shall be a poore man; and the prayer, a Heare Israel, must be his last words on his bed, and sleeping on the same, as in Psal. 4. 5. Speake in your heart on your bed, and bee silent. Selah. If hee cannot by and by sleepe, he must repeat it till hee can; and so his sleepe shall prouee good to him. The bed must be pure; for how else should they thinke on the name of God? And it must be so placed, that they must lye with their heads to the South, their feet toward the North; for by this meanes they shall bee fruitfull in Male children. They haue also their Chamber Morals, instructing of duties betwixt the Man and Wife, vnto for sober and chaste eares. This time for our Pen to sleepe with them, and end this Chapter.

Inetto haue we heard of their prayers every day obserued. They haue also their times designed to the reading of the Law. In the a Talmud is reported, that Esra in the Babylonian Captiuitie was Author vnto the Iewes of ten Commandements. First, that on the Sabbath: secondly, on Munday and Thursday, with singular solemnities, some part of the Law should be read: thirdly, that Thursday should be Court or Law-day for deciding controuersies: fourthly, that it should be a day of washing, sweeping, and cleansing in honour of the Sabbath: fifthly, that men should then cate Leekes: the sixth, that women should arise and bake their Bread so early, that at Sunne rising they might giue a poore man a piece of bread: the seventh, that they should for modesties sake gird their Linnen to them; the eighth, that in the Bathes they should combe and part their haire verie carefully: the ninth, about selling their commodities to Marchants, and buying womanly ornaments for the honour of their feasts, and pleasing their husbands: the last is, of cleansing after vncleane issues. Their learned men confirme this Institution of Esra, by authoritie of Scripture, b They went three dayes in the desert, and found no waters. By waters, they vnderstand the Law: For so it is said, Esey 55. 1. Come see to the waters: that is, to the Law: and therefore they ought not to let three dayes passe without some solemne reading of the Law. Munday, and Thursday, are chosen to be the dayes, because on c Thursday Moses went the second time into the Mount, and returned with the two Tables on the Munday; on which day d also the Temple was destroyed, and the Law burnt.

This their deuotion is as ancient, as that Pharisee, Luke 18. I fast twice in the weeke; that which e the most deuout amongst them doe to this day obserue. Yet, it seemeth the deuoutest fast foure dayes, saith f another, on Munday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday; the first for Mariners and traucellers by Sea, the next for such as passe thorow desert places, the third for Children which are troubled with the Squinancie: (of this e Elias Lenita testifieth, that after the beginning of the World it first assailed children, and after that, men; so that sometimes when they neezed, their spirit fled away and they dyed, whence came that custome of saluting and praying well to men h in neezing. The strangling of Achiosophel, they also interpret of this neezing farewell.) The fourth dayes fast is for Women which are with child or giue sucke: but the Tuesday and Wednesday in likelihood were not ordinarie, as the other. Sunday might not be thus honoured being the Christian Sabbath; and Friday was the preparatiue to their owne. Those two dayes are generally halfe holy-dayes. Assembling early in their Synagogues, besides their ordinarie prayers they annex many other. Among others they vie one Prayer called Teburachum, of miraculous effect, as appeared in Vespations time, who committing three Ships full of Iewes, without Oare or Mariner to the wide Seas, which arrived in three seuerall regions, Louanda, Arlado, Burdeli (worke for Geographers:) Those which arrived in this last port, by tyrannicall Edict of the King, were to be tryed whether they were true Iewes, as Hanania, Misael, and Azarias made proofe of their Religion. Whereupon three dayes being required (as they they said Nebuchadnezzar had granted them) wherein to betake themselves to fasting and prayer: in this time of respite three devout Jewes, Ioseph, Benjamin and Samuel, invencd each of their prayer, which they ioyned into one, and continued in praying, the same three dayes, at the end whereof they cast themselves into the fire, and there continued till it was consumed. Hence arose this ordinance every Munday and Thursday to vse the same prayer, which is this; And bee mercifull, and pardoning sinne doe not destroy the sinner. Hee often turneth his anger from vs, and doe not kindle all his wrath. Thou, O my God, suffer me not to want thy mercy, let thy gentleness and truth keepe mee alwayes. Helpe vs, O God, our God, and gather vs from the Gentiles, &c. for their restitution, as in other their prayers and destruction of their enemies, the Christians. After this they prostrate themselves on their faces (as before) with many other orisons to the like effect.

§. II.

Of their Law-Lectures.

THeir solemne ceremonie of the Law-lecture followeth; In all their Synagogues they haue the five bookes of Moses, written in great letters on Parchments of Calues-skins, sowed together in length, which at both ends are fastened to pieces of wood, by which the booke may be lifted and carried. This booke is kept in an Arke or Chest set in some wall of the Synagogue. Before the doores of the Arke is a hanging of Tapestry, more or lesse precious, according to the qualitie of their Feasts, and for the most part wrought with Bird-worke. The booke is wrapped in a linnen-cloth, wrought with Hebrew words: without that, is hanged about some other cloth of Linnen, Silke, Veluet, or Gold, to which is fastened a plate of Siluer by a chayne of Gold, vpon the which is written, The crowne of the Law, or holiness of the Lord. Then goeth one about, crying, Who will buy k Gethlab etz.chajm. This is an office whereby they are authorized to handle those pieces of wood, and to open the booke of the Law. Hee which giueth most for it, hath it; the money is referred for the poore. The pieces of wood are called etz.chajm, tree of life, according to 1 Salomon: Wisdome is a tree of life to them that lay holde thereon. When the m chiefe Chanter hath taken out the booke, and goeth with it into the Pulpit, they all sing out of Num. 10. 35. Arise, O Lord, and let thine enemies bee scattered, and let them that hate thee, flye before thee: And out of *Esay 2. 3. Many people shall goe and say, Come let vs asceend to the mount of the Lord, to the house of the God of YACON, and bee shall teach vs his wayes, and wee will walke in his pathes; for the Law shall goe out of Sion, and the Word of the Lord from Ierusalem. When this Precator layeth the booke on his arme, hee saith, o Magnifie the Lord with mee, and let vs exalt his name together: to which all the people answer, *o Exalts yee the Lord our God, and bow to the mountaine of his holiness, for Lebonah our God is holy.* There, vpon a Table couered with silke, hee layeth downe the booke; and he which hath bought the Office, taketh from it the clothes wherein it is wrapped. Then these two call some out of the Congregation by his owne and his Fathers name, who commeth forth and kisseth the booke, not on the bare Parchment (for that were a sinne) but on the clothes which couer it; and taking it by those pieces of wood, saith aloud, Praise the Lord, &c. Blessed bee thou, O Lord, who haist c bosen vs before any other people, and giuen vs thy Law. Blessed bee thou, O God, the Law-giuer. Then the Precator readeth a Chapter out of the booke; and then hee which was called forth, with like kissing and blessing returneth. Then another is called forth, and doth likewise. After him another, who had need bee of strong armes: for hee listeth vp and carrieth this booke that all may see it, all crying, *This is the Law which Moses gaue to the Israelites.* This Office is called Haghabah, and is sold as the former. The women meane-while contend amongst themselves in this Synagogue by some Lattice, to haue a sight of the Law: for the women haue a Synagogue apart leucred with Lattices, so (besides their pretence of modestie) to fulfill the saying of *Zacharie, 1 The family of Dauid shall moune apart, and their wives apart, &c.* If he which carrieth the booke, should stumble or fall, it were ominous, and should portend much euill. These two Officers fold vp the booke as before; and then come all and kisse the same, and then it is carried to his place with singing. After this they end their Prayers as at other times, saying, Lord, leade mee in thy righteousness, because of mine enemies, direct thy way before me: And, The Lord keepe my going out and coming in from henceforth so for euer. Which they also say when they goe forth on a journey or to worke.*

Of the Iewish Sabbath.

They prepare themselves to the obseruation of their Sabbath, by diligent provision on the Friday before night of the best meates well dressed; especially the women prouide them good Cakes. They honour the Sabbath with three banquets: first, on the Friday night when their Sabbath beginneth, another on the Sabbath day at noone: the third before sunne-set. * Eate ye it to day, so day is the Sabbath of the Lord, so day ye shall not find it (Manna) in the field: do you not see To day thrice mentioned, and therefore by Moses owne ordaining, that Manna must so often bee eaten on the Sabbath? The richest Iewes and most learned Rabbins disdaine not some or other office, as chopping of hearbs, kindling the fire, or somewhat toward this preparation. The Table remaineth covered all that night and day. They wash, and if need bee, shaueth their heads on the Friday, and very religiously cut their nayles, beginning with the fourth finger of the left hand, and next with the second, then with the fifth, thence to the third, and last to the thumbe, still leaping over one: in the right hand they begin with the second finger, and after proceed to the fourth, and so forth. These parings if they tread vnderfoot, it is a great sinne; but hee which burieth them, is a lust man, or which burneth them. Now must they also whet their knives, and put on their Sabbath-holy-day-royment, to salute Malchub the Queene, so they terme the Sabbath. The Clarke goeth about and giueth warning of the Sabbath; and when the Sunne is now ready to set, the women light their Sabbath-Lampes in their dining rooms, and stretching out their hands toward it, say ouer a blessing. If they cannot see the Sunne, they take warning by the Hennes flying to roost. The cause why the women now and at other feasts light the Lampes, is Magistrally determined by the Rabbins, because Eue caused her husband to sinne, yea, with a cudgell laboured him, and compelled him to eate, which they gather out of his words, * The Woman gaue mee of the tree (to wit, a sound rib-rotting) and I did eate. Now after they had eaten, the sunne which before shined, as it sh. ll doe in the other life, diminished his light, and for dimming that light, shee lightens this. And for three causes (you shall beleue their * Talmud) women dye in trauell; for forgetting their dough where with to make Cakes with Oyle, Exod. 25. for neglecting their times; and not lighting the Sabbath-Lampes which their Cabalists gather out of three letters of the name of Eue or Chaub. These lights are two or more, according to condition of the roome.

u De Sab. c. 21.

They begin their Sabbath thus soone, and end it also later then the lust time, in commiseration of the Purgatory-soules, which begin and end with them this Sabbaths-rest, being the whole weeke besides tormented in that fire. Iudas himselfe, in honour of the Christian Sabbath, from Saturday Eueng-song obtained like priuiledge: witnesse Saint Brandon in the Legend (can you refuse him?) who found him cooling himselfe in the Sea, sitting vpon a stone which hee had sometime remoued out of a place, where it was needlesse, into the high-way. (So meritorious euen in Iudas is any the least good worke.) * There did Iudas acquaint Brandon with this Sunday-refreching of the hellish prisoners, and desired his holy company to scarse away the diuels, when they should after Sunday Eueng-song come to fetch him againe, which for that time Brandon granted and performed.

* Like to this is the storie of Tarnas and R. Akiba in the Talmud. Tract. Sabbath. cap. 7.

The Iewes will not quite empte any place of water, that on the Sabbath these fierie soules may finde where to coole them. Two Angels attend them home from the Synagogue, one good, and the other euill, which if they finde all things well, that is, Iewishly prepared for the Sabbaths honor, the good Angell saith, It shall be so the next Sabbath, and the euill Angell (will he, still he) answereth, Amen. If otherwise, the good Angell is forced to say Amen to the euill Angels denunciation of the contrary. They feast it with much ceremonie, pronouncing their blessing on the wine: with looking on the Lampe, to repaire that fifteenth part of their eye-sight, which they say in the weeke time ordinarily is waisted: they couer the bread meene-while, that it should not see the shame thereof, in that the Wine is blessed, for the Sabbaths vse before it. This good cheare on the Sabbath is of such consequence, that for this cause in their * Talmud is reported, that a Burcher in Cyprus, which still reserved his best meates for the Sabbath, grew by Diuine reward so rich, that his Table and all his Table-furniture were of gold. You may receiue with like credite the Legend of Ioseph following, who buying continually the best Fish, to honour the Sabbath with it, found in the belly of one of these Sabbath-fishes, a Hat-band of Pearles, worth no lesse then a Kingdome. The Table remaineth spread till the next night. The Lampes must not be put out, nor the light thereof applyed to the killing of fies, to reading or writing, &c. The good man must honour that night with more kindnesse to his wife, then on other nights : therefore eate they Leekes before : Therefore also they marry on the Sabbath; and the children, then conceiued, must needs be a wife and fortunate. If a Jew irauell, and on Friday Euening be further from his home, then a Sabbaths-dayes-iourney, he must there abide, be it in the midst of a Wood or Wildernes till the Sabbath be past. They sleepe longer on the Sabbath morning; so with their greater pleasure to honour it. They then vse more prayers in their Synagogues; and reade seuen Lectures of the Law. They now also reade the Prophets. They stay here till noone, and no longer, lest by longer fasting and praying they should breake the Prophetickall commandement, Thou shalt call my Sabbath a delight. After dinner also they reade in their Law : for ^b on a time, the Sabbath and the Law put vp their complaints to God for want of a companion and learner, and the Israelites were giuen as a companion to the Sabbath, and on the Sabbath a learner of the Law. But for all this they talke not more busily all the weeke through of Vsurie, buying and selling, then on the Sabbath, and haue their trickes to decieue God Almighty. Their Euen-long they haue soone done, that they might returne, and while the day yet lasteth, make an end of their third banquet, by which they are secured against Hell, and against Gog and Magog: They conclude it with blessings and singings, till it be late, to prolong the returne of the soules into Hell : for presently after they haue ended, there is proclamation through hell, to recall them to their dungeons. In these Songs they call vpon Elias to come; so iustly are they deluded, who scoffingly impured vnto Christ the calling of Elias. But their Elias being busie (as he sometime said of Abshai Baul) and not comming, then they request him to come the next Sabbath. But he (it seemeth) is loth to leaue his place vnder the Tree of life in Paradise: where he standeth (say they) enrolling their good workes in the keeping of the Sabbath. When this their deuotion is done, the women in haste run to draw water, because the Fountaine in the end of the Sabbath into all Fountaines, and is very medicinable. After this doe the Iewes make a diuision betweene the Sabbath and the new weeke. The Householder lighteth a great Candle, called, The Candle of Distinction : at whose light he vieweth his walls, ^b lighteth a cup of Wine, and a little silver boxe full of sweet spices, powreth a little of the Wine on the ground, and applieth the boxe to euery ones nose to smell to, thus to remedie the stinke, which is caused at the new opening of hell for the returne of the soules : or else to keepe them from swooning at the departure of one of their soules. For they are of opinion, that themselves haue a superfluous Sabbatharie soule, which on that day is plentifully sent into them, to inlarge their heart, and to expell care and sorrow. Antonius Margarita affirmeth, that they dreame of three soules in each man, besides the Sabbatharie soule, two of which leaue him in his sleepe, one mounting to Heauen, where it learneth things to come; the other called brutish, contemplating sinne and vanitie. The viewing of their nailes at the candle, is in remembrance of Adams nakednesse, all sauing where the nailes covered his fingers and toes ends. The wine they powre on the ground, to refresh Corah and his complices vnder the ground.

For their Sabbath-workes they are determined Rabbinically : a horse may haue a halter, or a bridle to leade, but not a saddle to lade him : and he that leadeth him, must not let it hang so loose, that it may seeme he rather carrieth it, then leadeth him, must not let it wear her hofe sewed about her legge, but this marke must on Friday be taken off. And if any cattell fall into a pit, yet may they not helpe it out on the Sabbath : so spitefully haue their Talmudicall Rabbins endeouored to make (where they could not finde) a fallshood in the c wordes of Christ, testifying the contrary : But from the beginning it was not thus. The Iew may not milke his cattell, nor eate of the milke when he hath procured a Christian to milke them, except he first buy it but at his owne price. A Taylor may not weare a needle sticking on his garment. The lame may vse a staffe: the blind may not, Clogges or Pattens to keepe them out of the dirt they may not burthen themselves with. It is lawfull to carrie a plaister on their sores, but if it fall off, they may not lay it on againe; nor may they binde vp a wound a new; nor carry money in their purses or garments; nor rubbe their durrie shoes against the ground, though they may wipe it off against a wall, nor wipe their hands, fouled with dirt on a Towell, but with a Cowes or Horfes-taile they may doe it. If a Flea bite, hee may remoue it, but not kill it; a Lowfe hee may. But their Doctors disagree in this lowfe question: for R. Eliezer saith, One may as well kill a Camell. If a Flie is light on meate, or a Spider runne thereon, it may not bee remoued : they will let men take their money vpon pawnes, but not deliuer it themselves; as the Franciscan hath his boy to take your almes, which his vow will not suffer his holy fingers to touch. there grow, and hee be said to sowe corne on the Sabbath. To whistle a tune with his mouth, or play it on a instrument, is volawfull; as also to knocke with the ring or hammer of a doore, and therefore the Clarke knocks with his hand when he calleth them to the Synagogue. Tem. l. 7. p. 532.

F the Jewish Feasts, as they were celebrated before the coming of Christ, wee haue already spoken. In these dayes they blindly and stubbornly persist in like Observation of times, though with some variation of ceremonie. Their Talmud reckoneth foure New-yeeres dayes; one ^a in March, and another in September, whereof wee haue spoken. The first of August beginneth their yeere of breeding Cattell, accounting from thence their time of Tything. In Ianuarie the first, or as R. Hillel would haue it, the fifteenth began their new yeere for Trees, in reckoning the time of lawfulnessse to eate or tythe their fruit. Their moneths and moueable feasts are guided by the Moone: of which they tell ^b this storie; The Moone, say they, expostulated with God, because the Sunne shined with her, whereas no Kingdome could endure a partner: wherat God being angry, darkened her light, that from the fourth day whetein shee was created, till man was made on the sixth, shee shined not. Hence it comes to passe, that at the change in two dayes space shee is neuer seene. This is the Rabbinicall custome, if they cannot vntie the knot, they haue (not a cutting-sword, as Alexander for that Gordian) but some leaden Legend or fable Rabbinicall-ly to determine it. Hieronimus a f. Fide (who about two hundred yeeres since was the Popes Physician, and turned from Iudaisme to Christianitie) thus relateth it: The Moone, before equall with the Sunne, expostulated with God for the reason aboue recited, and therefore was commanded to goe lessen her selfe. Shee (like some shrewish Jewesse) replied, shee had wrong, and had spoken but reason: hee to satisfie her, said, the Sunne should not shine by night, and yet should shee appeare in the day. What, saith she, is a candle before the Sunne? He then promised, that his people Israel should obserue their solemne festiualls, according to her desigment. But when all this would not content her, as yelding herselfe guiltie, hee enioyned a peculiar meate-offering euery New-Moone, for indulgence of that sinne. Thus doe they both dreame ridiculously, and blaspheme also beyond all names of impietie, in their Talmudicall Tract Holyn. And this they proue out of Nam. 18. as truly, as in another place out of Esa. 40. that God hauing polluted himselfe with burying of Moses, purged himselfe with fire; the water not being sufficient thereto.

The richer Iewes prepare thirrie dayes before for their Passe-over (dentem non mentem) good Wheate for their vnleauened Cakes. The Sabbath before the Passe-over is solemne ^e and sacred, wherein they haue a Sermon concerning the Paschall Lamb. Two or three dayes before the Passe-over, they scowre their household implements of Wood and Mettall, with much curiositie and varietie of Rites. For hee that in this Feast vseth an impure vessell, is as he that hath layne by an vnleauened woman. The night before the Feast, the good-man of the house with a Waxe Candle, a Dish, and Wing, beginneth his search for vnleauened bread; and with other men or boyes to helpe him, after their Amen to his blessing, with Waxe Candles in their hands, they leaue not a ^d Moule-hole vnsearched, and hide that bread which they meane to eate that night, lest they should finde that, and be forced to burne it. That which they finde, they curiously couer, lest some Moule by carrying it, should make them haue new worke: and for this cause ended also in a corner, with great care that nothing fall to the ground. When hee hath cupped his search, Whatsoever Leauen (saith hee) is vnder mine hands, which I haue not seene, let it bee tossed roo

and fro, like the dust of the earth. In the morning they make their unleavened Cakes of meale, grownd three dayes at least. The kneading-trough must bee lined with Linnen, lest some of the leavened Meale should cleave thereto, the Goodman himselfe must draw the liquor that it is kneaded with, and that at Sunne-setting. The Cakes are made with as much scruple, round, and pricked full of holes in a cold place, &c. to keepe them from leavening. They eatte little, and the first-borne nothing, till night, that then they may haue the better Paschall-supper. At the Euen-song they obserue much what the same ceremonies, as at the Sabbath. They sit at home the fairest shew of their plate, and riches, and seate themselves on Chaires (as it were) of State, and account now of themselves as great Lords, triumphing ouer their late Egyptian seruitude; at their returne from the Synagogue, they haue a Dish with three Cakes set before them, representing the high Priest, the Tribe of Leui, and the people of Israel; another Dish hath in it a loine of Lambe or Kidde, with a hard Egge: another containeth a Gallinawfre of Apples, Nuts, Figges, Almonds, &c. dressed with Wine in Bricke-fashion (with Cinamon strewed on it, in remembrance of the Egyptian Fornace.) They haue also a Sallet of beebars, and a Sawcer of Vineger set on the Table. Then sit they downe, and euery one (to the child in the Cradle) hath his cup filled with wine. And here with a carowles after a blessing begins the feast, with a scrupulous vse of these things mentioned: then followeth the supper it selfe, with much riot till midnight, with such cheere as they haue, with diuers ceremonies, curing their enemies, calling for Elias, praying for the reedifying of the Temple; vsing many Diuine Attributes, as, Mercifull God, Great God, Bountifull God, High God, Faire God, Sweet God, Mightie God, and God of the Lewes, now build thy Temple shortly, very soone, very soone, in our dayes, very soone, very soone. Now build, now build, now build, now build thy Temple quickly: Strong God, living God, &c. ouer and ouer with such butologies. This night they thinke themselves secure against men and Diuels; they leaue their doores open all night to entertaine Elias; and one to their solace playeth Elias in a white linnen garment. Each man drinketh foure cups full of the blessed wine, in regard of foure deliuerances, which the Rabbins finde in Exod. 6. ver. 6, 7. The ceremonies of Moses they are not yet tyed to (forsooth) because they are not in Canaan.

In the morning they visit the Synagogue with their Sabbath-rites. They bring two Bookes out of the Arke, and call forth five men (and if this feast be on the Sabbath, seuen) to reade out of the same. Nice are their determinations what workes they may doe on this day, and what not: they may dresse no more meat then is this day eaten. If they beate spice, the mortar must lie side-wise, for distinctions sake of the day, &c. fasting and weeping must be auoided; if any farsee a Hicken, the needle must be threaded the day before, and the threed must be burned, not bitten or broken asunder. In such trifles the Schoole of Schammai licenseth to eate the same day an Egge laide on a festiuall day. Hillel denies it, and betwixt them they haue set the Rabbins by the eares, in this & such profane questions. Their Euen-song hath a short dispatch: and then the next day they reiterate the same ceremonies, and that for certaintie, because they doubt of the first day of the moneth, and therefore obserue two. The foure daies following are halfe-holy daies. Some workes may be done in them, & not some, & what they do (to make a difference) must be done otherwise, as writing crooked, &c. & that which cannot without losse be deferred, may now be done. The seueneth day they obserue in more complete holinesse, and the eight too, for the reason before alledged, to be more secure of the true day. After the feast ended, they satisfie with fasting their feasting-riots, and that on two Mundaies and one Thursday: vnto the three and thirtieth day after, they are sad & heauy in remembrance of R. Akiba, of whose Disciples foure & twenty thousand died in that space, and were buried by women in the night, and therefore after Sunne-set, all this while the women lay aside their worke; on the three and thirtieth day the men bath them and shauie their beards, and are merrie, because then his Disciples ceased dying.

which should haue slaine all the Israelites, if they had refused next day to accept of the Law. They keepe it two dayes, for the former doubt. They take the Booke twice out of the Atke, and reade there-out the precepts concerning this Feasts sacrifices, now that they cannot performe the things. In remembrance of receiuing the Law, they fire w the pauement of their houses, streets and Synagogues with grasse. They cate meates made of milke and cakes. One Cake they make seuen times folded in thickeesse, in remembrance of the seuen Heaueus, by which God descended to Mount Sinai. He 1 Feast of Tabernacles is obserued eight dayes: the two first, and two k last more solemnely: the middle foure are halfe holy. They mutter ouer their prayers with such haste, that hee is the perfectest who speaks most with a breath. They make them Tabernacles with boughes of foure kinds l of Trees (more scrupulous then the Law) in which they sup, but doe not lodge. The Praecentor in the Synagogue taketh a bundle of boughes, and blesteth and shaketh them: for it is written, m The trees shall clap their hands, and moue them three times to the East, and as often to the West, 20 and to the North and South, and then vp and downe like a Fencer, and then shaketh them againe, as hauing now put the Diuell to flight. Then one taketh out the booke, and layeth it on the Pulpit, which they all with their boughes compasse seuen times a day during the Feast; in hope of like destruction to the Christians, as befell Jericho, and then renew the shaking of their boughes. The seuenth day is most solemne, called by them Hoschana rabba, the great Hosanna; as if one should say, n the great feast of saluation or helpe, because then they pray for the saluation of all the people, and for a prosperous new-yeere; and all the prayers of this Feast haue in them the words of saung, as, O God, saue vs, and O God of our saluation, and as thou hast saued the Israelites, and such like; the prayers are therefore called Hosannas. Then they produce seuen bookes, and in euery of their seuen compassing lay 30 vp one againe. This night they know their fortunes by the Moone: for stretching out their armes, if they see not the shadow of their head by Moone-light, they must dye that yeere; if a finger wanteth, hee loseth a friend; if the shadow yceld him not a hand, hee loseth a sonne; the waite of the left hand portendeth losse of a daughter; if no shadow, no life shall abide with him, for it is written, o Their shadow is departed from them. Some Iewes goe yeerely into Spaine to prouide Pome-citrons, and other necessities, for the furnishing this feast; which they sell in Germany, & other places to the Iewes at exscessive prices. They keepe their Tabernacles in all weathers, except a very vehement storme driue them with a heauie countenance into their houses. Their wiues and seruants are not so strictly tyed hereto, 40

The deuouter Iewes fast the day before. Their part of the day after, they sit at Cardes, or telling of Tales. That day when the Moone is eclipsed, they fast. When they may first see the New-Moone, they assemble, and the chiefe Rabbi pronounceth a long Prayer, the rest saying after him.

The Iewes beleeuing that God created the world in September or Tisri, conceit also, that at the reuolution of the same time yeerely, hee sitteth in iudgement, and out of the bookes taketh reckoning of euery mans life, and pronounceth sentence accordingly. That day q which their great Sanhedrin ordained the New-yeeres festiuall, God receiuing there- of intelligence by his Angels, sent thither to know the same, causeth the same day a Se- 60 lemneft manner, the three bookes are opened, one of the most Wicked, who are presently reigured registred into the Booke of Death: the second, of the lust, who are inrolled into the Booke of Life: and the third, of the meane sort, whose Iudgement is demurred vntill the day of Reconciliation (the tenth of Tisri) that if in the meane time they seriously repent them so, that their good may exceed their euill, then are they entred into the Booke of Life; if otherwile, they are recorded into the Blacke Bill of Death. Their Scripture is produced by R. Ahen: Let them bee blotted out of the Booke of the lining, and not bee written with the lust. Blotting points you to the Booke of Death: Lining, that of Life; and not writing with the lust, is the third Booke of Indifferents. All the workes which a man hath done through the yeere, are this day examined: The good workes are put in one ballance, the bad in the other (what helpe a filuer Chalice or such heauie metall could afford in this case, you may finde by experience in Saint Francis Legead, who, when the bad deeds of a great man lately dead, out-weighed the good, at a dead list cast in a filuer Chalice, which the dead partie had sometime bestowed on Franciscan deuotion, and weighed vp the other side, and so the Diuels lost their prey.) God (say they) pronounceth sentence of punishment or reward, sometime in this life to bee executed, sometime in the other. In respect herof, their Rabbines ordaine the mouth before to be spent in penance, and morning and Eueing to sound a Trumpet of a Rams-horne, as Aue Marie Bell, to warne them of this Iudgement, that they may thinke of their finnes; and besides, to foole the Diuell; that with this often sounding being perplexed, hee may not know when this New-yeeres day shall bee, to come into the Court to giue euidence against them. The day before they rise sooner in the morning, to mutter ouer their prayers for remission: and when they haue done in the Synagogue, they goe to the gaues in the Church-yard, testifying, that if God doe not pardon them, they are like to the dead, and praying, that for the good workes of the Saints (the iust Iewes there buried) hee will pittie them, and there they giue large almes. After noone, they shau, adome, and bathe themselves; that they may be pure the next day; (for some Angels, soyled with impuritie heere below, are fine to purge themselves in the fierie brooke Dunor, before they can prayse God; how much more they?) and in the water they make confession of their sins; the confession containeth two and twentie words, the number of their Alphabet; and at the pronouncing of euery word, giue a knocke on their brest; and then diue wholly vnder water. The Feast it selfe they begin with a cup of Wine, and New-yeere Salutations: and on their Table haue a Rammes head, in remembrance of That Ramme which was offered in Isaacks stead: and for this cause are their Trumpets of Rams-horne: First they eate, to signifye the multiplication of their good workes: they eate sweet fruits of all sorts, and make themselves merry, as assured of forgiveness of their finnes: and after meat, all of all sorts, resort to some bridge to hurle their finnes into the water: as it is written, Hee shall cast all our finnes into the bottom of the Sea. And if they there espie any fish, they leape for ioy, these seruing to them as the scape-goate, to carrie away their finnes. At night they renew their cheere, and end this Feast.

§. V.

Of their Lent, Penance, and Reconciliation Fast.

From this day to the tenth day, is a time of Penance or Lent, wherein they fast and pray for the cause aforesaid; and that if they haue bene written in the Booke of Death, yet God seeing their good workes, may repent, and write them in the Life Booke. * Thrice a day very carefully they confesse three houres before day, and surcease suits at Law, &c. And on the ninth day very carefully they resort to the Synagogue; and at their returne, euery male taketh a Cocke, and euery female a Henne; if she be with childe, both: and the householder, saying out of the hundred and fift Psalmes, verses 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22. and out of Iob, chapter 23. verse 23, 24, 25, swiudgeth the Cocke three times about his head, euery time saying, This Cocke shall make an exchange for me: he shall dye for me: and I shall goe into life with all the people of Israel, Amen. He doth it three times for himselfe, for his children, for the strangers that are with him. Then hee killeth him, and cutteth his throat, and hurleth him with all his force to the ground, and roasteth him: signifying, that he himselfe deserueth death, the sword, stoning, and fire: the inwards they hurle on the top of the house, that the Crowes may, with it, carrie away their finnes. A white Cocke for this purpose is principall: a red Cocke they vse not, for they are full of sinne themselves by Esaias authoritie, * If your finnes were red as scarlet, &c. * Antonius Margarita saith, shall grudge, to bestow their curse vpon him in these words, God make that my Cocke this yeere. * Esai. 1. 18. That

u Roshinian. ex Lombado. y Euxodo. f. 10. Vill. Carben. l. 1. c. 17. addeth, that the men and women that morning cause the first Christian they meete: and therefore will wait two or three houres for some to whom they owe some penance.

That this propitiatory creature should bee an Ape, as most like to man; but they vie a Cocke for the names sake: a man in Hebrew is Gebber, which is the Talmudicall or Babylonish name of a Cocke. Thus hofe that with a Rams horne beguile the Deuill, and with a Cocke beguile G O D, iustly beguile themselves, who refuse that sacrifice of Christ, in whose stripes they might be healed. They haue another fable of a Cocke mentioned by Victor Carbenfis, thinking that as often as a Cocke stands on one leg, and his combe lookes pale, that G O D is angry: which hapneth, they say, euery day, and onely in the day time, and that but the twinkling of an eye. And therefore they praise G O D which hath giuen such vnderstanding to a Cocke.

After the performance of this Cocke-sacrifice, they goe to the buriall place, vsing like Ceremonies there, as on New-years euen: and after noone, bathe them like wise. After Euen-song, he which hath offended others, askes them forgiuence, which if he obtaine not at first, then the offender taketh with him three other, and asketh the second and third time: if all this bee in vaine, he raketh ten others and reneweth his suite; if he obtaine, it is well; if not, G O D will hold him excused, and the other partie shall be guiltie. If the partie offended be dead, the offender with ten other, goeth to the graue, & there confesseth his faults. They confesse one to another also, and that in a secret place of their Synagogue, where each receiue mutually at his fellows hand with a leather belt nine and thirty blowes: at each blow the partie beaten beateh himselfe on the brest, and saith one word of his Confession, taken out of the seuentie and eight Psalme, and eight and thirtieth Verse, being in the Hebrew thirteene words, which he thrice repeate: then the striker lyeth downe, and receiueh like penance at the hands of the former, you may iudge with what rigour. This done, they runne home, and make merry with the Cokes and Hens before mentioned, supping largely, because of the next dayes fast, Their Supper must be ended before Sunne-set: for then begineth their fast. They put on their cleaneft rayment, and ouer the same, a great and large shirt downe to the shooes, to testifie their puritie. They resort to their Synagogues with waxe candles (in Germanie they haue for euery man one) and then light them. The women also light Candles at home, as on the Sabbath. It is ominous if the Candles burne not cleerely. They spread the floore with Carpets, for soying their purpled clothes.

e Shall bee called a farer, h Mafar Jol, 18, d Saying, I haue sinned against God, & this my brother, and done thus and thus: if hee oweth him money, he payeth to his brother: he knoweth none, hee confesseth it, and leaues it in the Court, ibid, e Yet he being mercifully, &c.

Their humiliations at the feast of Reconciliation.

Their humiliations at this feast are five: first, foure and twentie, or seuen and twentie houres fast, whereunto children are subiect: the Males after twelue yeeres, the Females after eleuen. Secondly, they weare no shooes. Thirdly, they must not anoint them. Fourthly, nor bathe them, no, nor put a finger into the water. Fifthly, nor companie with, no not touch their wiues. Before they begin prayers, thirteene of the principall Rabbies, walking in the Temple, gae licence to all, both good and bad, to pray. And the Pracantor or Reader fetcheth the booke out of the Arke, and openeth it, singing a long Prayer, beginning all compacts, voves, and oathes, &c. insinuating, that all the voves, promises, oathes, and covenants, which euerie Iew had that yeere broken, bee disannulled and pardoned: and that, because now all haue power to pray and praye G O D. They continue singing till late in the night. Some remaine all night f in the Synagogue: yea, the deuouter some stand vp right singing and praying without intermission all that feast, the space of seuen and twentie houres in the same place. Those that departed the Synagogue, returne in the morning before day, and there stay all that day. Often they prostitute themselves with their face covered, at euery word of their Confessions knocking their brest. When it beginneth to be night, the Priest draweth his Tallies (a large cloth made of haire) before his eyes, and pronounceth the blessing, Numb. 6. holding his hand towards the people, who meane-while couer their faces with their hands; for they may not looke on the Priests hand, because the spirit of G O D resteth thereon. Then hee singeth a Prayer seuen times together, sometimes higher, sometimes lower with his voyce: because that G O D now ascendeth from them into the seuenth Heauen: and they with their sweet melodie bring him on the way. Then they make a long and shrill sound with their Rams-horne-trumpet: and there followeth presently a voyce from Heauen, Goe eate thy bread with ioy and gladness, &c. After this they returne home, some carrying home their lights, to distinguish the holy Times (as you haue heard) from the prophane: some leaue them in the Synagogue all the yeere, at certaine times lighting them. Some Saints-Iewes prouide to haue a waxe-light continually burning all the yeere long in the Synagogue. In their returne they wish to each other a good yeere. For the booke before mentioned, are now closed; nor may they expect any alteration. They sup largely, and betimes the next morning returne to the Synagogue, lest Satan should complaine also soome a cooling of their zeale. But the Deuill may bee quiet; for when the Law was giuen, s Samael the euill spirit complained, that hee had power ouer all people, but the Israelites: G O D answered; That he should haue power ouer them, if on the Recon-

§. VI.

Of their other Feasts.

 He Iewes diuide the Law into two and fiftie parts, and reading euery Sabbath one, the last falleth on the next day after the Feast of Tabernacles, about the three and twentieth day of September. In this ¹ day they leape, dance, and make much ioy. They assemble in their Synagogue, and take all the bookes of the Law out of the Arke (leaving in it meane-while, that it bee not left empty, a burning light) they read the first Lecture and the last thereof, and leape about the Arke with the Bookes ; and they hurle Peasies, Nuts, and such fruits among the youth, which in their scrambling sometimes fall together by the eares, and marre the sport. On this day they sell their Synagogue-offices, the Clarke making proclamation : who will giue most at the third time, obtayneth first the office of lighting the Lights all the yeere, then that of providing the Wine, which they vse to begin the Feasts with, in respect of the poore, which haue no wine to hallow at home. Thirdly, is set to sale the office Gelilah, of folding vp, and vnfolding the Law. Fourthly, Hagbobah, of lifting vp the Law, and carrying it in Procession. Fifthly, the office Etschajm, of touching those turned pieces of wood, whereto the Law is fastened ; which the young-men are forward to buy, in hope of holinesse and longer life. Sixtly, Acheron, to bee called fourth last on the festiual dayes, to reade somewhat of the Law. Seuenthly, Schetrin, to be deputed or substituted in place of the negligent officer, &c. The money hence arising, is for the vse of the poore, and reparations of their Synagogue ; but in these sale-offices, wealth hath more honour then worthinesse.

ⁱ The feast of the Law finished.

^o Their feast of Dedication, wee cannot say much more of, then that which already hath bene said : much nicenesse herein is obserued, about the Lights wherewith they solemnize this darkenesse, which I willingly omit : these lights thy vie in their houses all the space of these eight dayes burning.

Their ² feast of Lots they keepe with all riot two dayes, as with some at Shroue-tide : the men disguising themselves in womens habite ; the women in mens : they holde, that hee shall be fortunate which then laboureth : women especially then make merry in remembrance of Queene Esther, and they with their infants are present in the night, at the reading of the booke of Esther, which is all written in a large sheet of Parchment, and reade from the beginning to the end. In times past they had two stones, in one of which was written

¹⁰ Hamans name, which they beat together, till the name was blotted out, to fulfill that Scripture, The name of the wicked shall rot. Cursed bee HAMAN, blessed bee MORDECAI, cursed bee ZERES (Hamans wife) blessed bee ESTHER, cursed bee all Idolaters, blessed bee ISRAEL. When they come to the place where Hamans ten sonnes are named, they reade it all in one breath, for in a twinkling of an eye they were all slaine. They make great cheere, for so did Esther in feasting Assuerus. In these two dayes they doe nothing, but eat, drinke, dance, pipe, sing, play, &c. The rich are bound to lend to the poore Iewes double presents, which must not be spent but on this solemnitie : they quaffe, (it is, saith Rabbi Isaac, Tirna, a good worke) till they finde no difference betweene Arur Haman, and Baruch Mordecai ; Cursed bee HAMAN, blessed bee MORDECAI ; vociferations that day obserued, and hold it lawfull to drinke till they cannot tell their five fingers on the hand.

¹⁰ They ¹ obserue festiual the Equinoctials and Solstices ; and a certaine Rogation day : they vse the Fasts before mentioned out of Zach. 7. with other superstitions. Some of ^m them fast also, as is said, on Mondays and Thursdayes ; and some on the tenth of March for the death of Miriam : at whose departure a certaine Fountaine dried vp, and the people were left without water : but in this moneth the Rabbins will not allow fasting, because of their deliuerance therein out of Egypt. Some fast for the death of Samuel, April 28. and for the taking of the Arke, April 10. and at other times for other Prophets. Some fast for the New-Moones Euen : some, when they haue had an infortunate dream ; and all that day in which their Father dyed, through their whole life. Their fasting is an abstinence from all eating and drinking till night. But of these fasts and other their solemnities, is said before in the abstract of their Kalender, taken out of Ioseph Scaliger. Their fast on the 17. of the fourth Moneth for the destruction of their Citie, is rigorously kept, and from thence to the ninth day day of the moneth following, ate holden vnluckie dayes, in which Schoolmasters may not beate their Schollers, nor any man will sew at the Law. And for the burning of the Temple in the ninth day of the fifth moneth, they goe bare-foot, reade heauie stories, and Jeremiabi Lamentations, and moune among the graues of the dead, and are sad all that moneth; from the first to the tenth day they eate no flesh, nor drinke wine, nor bathe, nor marrie, nor cut their hayre; they sew not at the Law; for Hosea saith, The moneth shall denoure their portion; and they shall bee taken, saith Jeremie, in their moneth. On the eighth day they eate onely Lentils; for they may not eate Pease or Beanes, because they haue blacke spots like mouches, which Lentils want, and therefore more fitly represent a heauie man, which winteth his mouth for iotrow; egges they may eate in the night for their roundnesse; for forrow, as if it were round, rolleth from one to another. They haue their fasts also on speciall occasions, as they tell of one Chone Hammagal, which in a great drought, put himselfe into a pye made fit for his body, and prayed, sayng, Lord of the World, the eyes of thy children are upon mee, as one whom they thinke familiar with thee: I sweare by thy holy name, that I will not come hence till thou shew mercy. And then it rayned presently: for how could it choose? They tell the same pye-tale of Moses likewise, and of Habbacuc, expounding that Hab. 2. 1. I will stand on my watch, I will stand in my Pye. Their manner is, saith Vilfor Carbenist, to curse Titus, and say, he was of the generation of Agag the Amalechite, and such a blasphemer as neuer was any, and that for his blasphemies he was stricken with madnesse.

Ind. 6. 16. & d.

But why doe wee entertaine you so long in Feasts and Fasts? both almost violent to humane nature, howsoever the Glutton is neuer glutted with the one, and the superstitious rather kill the flesh, then the vices of the flesh with the other? Medio tutissimus ibis. We will soberly recreate your spirits with a walke into the Cooke-roome, and thence to the Butcherie, and then to the Bride-chamber, to take view of their Espousals, Marriages, Diuorces, and thence diuorce your eyes from these spectacles, and thence diuert them to their Beggars, Penances, and to that fatall diuorce, ending your walke where the walke of all flesh end, at Death, and the Graue.

§. I.

Of their Cookerie.

* They ground these absurdities on Moses his words. Exo. 23. 19.
a The knife may not after be used except beared red hot in the fire three houres, and three dayes hidden in the earth, & three times put into water. Dill. Carb. L. 1. c. 13.

Hey haue * Kitchen vessels of two sorts, one for flesh, another for white-meates. Their milke vessels of wood are marked with three cuts, because that sentence, Thou shalt not seethe a Kid in his mothers milke, is three times in the Law repeated. Every Jew carrieth two knives with him, one for Flesh; the other for Cheefe and Fish, and these also are marked with three cuts. And if these vessels should bee intermingled, our Jew might not eate that which is dressed therein: yea, the innocent vessels are broken, if of earth, most accurately washed, if of wood, and purged in the fire, if they bee of yron. They seethe not milke and flesh at one time, and ouer one fire, ouer against each other: nor set them together on the Table, but sepearate them with somewhat set betweene. One cloath is layde for flesh, and another for white-meate. Hee which eateth flesh, or broth thereof, may not eate white-meates an houre after, yea the most religious will abstaine fixe houres after. Yet may they eate a Henne together with Almond-milke. If any haue not the gift of such abstinence, very carefully must hee cleanse his teeth, and wash his mouth, and with a peece of drie bread take away the taste of the flesh. If any suet fall into their white-meates, they may not be eaten, except there bee fixe times as much of the meat, as of the suet. An Egge may not be poched in a flesh vessel: they breake it also, and diligently obserue, that none of that bloudie resemblance in the top of the egge remaine. If in cutting vp of a Henne they finde egges, they may not eate them till they bee washed, and softened in water and salt. Flesh and fish may not be dressed, or set on the Table, or eaten together: for this (they write) would bring the leprosie. In their dyet-difficulties they consult with their their Rabbines. Glasses, Knives, and all their Kitchen vessels new bought, must bee curiously washed, and if they will beate it, purged with the fire.

§. II.

Of their Butcherie.

- Butcherie is with the Jew exalted above the liberall Sciences, and must bee learned by much bookishnesse and long experience. They have a booke of shamble-constitutions, and in harder cases they advise with some learned Rabbi. Neither may any practise this Art without licence from the Rabbi, whereby he signifieth, that hee had taken examination and proove of the partie, and found him expert therein both in word and deed, and therefore hath permitted him to kill, and others to eate the meate by him killed: provided that he diligently reade every weeke for one yeere, and every month the next yeere, and once a quarter during his life, the Constitutions abovesaid. They have their especial knives for this businesse, great ones for greater Cattell, and small for the smaller: the greater haue blunter and broader points: if they haue any rifts in them, they may not vse them. The greater beasts feete must be bound, in remembrance of Abrahams binding Isaac, and then with one cut or thrust hee cutteth the Wefand a funder; which done, hee looks on his knife if there bee any rift in it, for that would terrifie the beast, and cause the blood to recoile backe to the heart, whereby the beast would not be fit for vse as retaining some of the blood. After this, he hangs vp the beast, takes out the inwards, and cutting a hole on both sides of the heart, thrusteth his hand through the same into the body of the beast, to search if there be any blood: and if there be any fault in the beast, it is not for their dyet, applying that which the Law saith of a Carcase found torne in the fields. They cut the throat of a bird in like manner, if it bee a Fowle which hath quills in the wings, in remembrance of an office performed by the fowles sometimes, as ^a they say, to Rebecca, when she descended from her Camell at the sight of Isaac: and therefore they let the fowle bleed into a heape of ashes, and therein couer the blood. They couer the blood also of other creatures in the ground, because the Earth opened her mouth to drinke in the blood of Abel: and because Sathan should not accuse men of iniustice for slaying the innocent beasts, seeing so much blood shed by them. When they haue killed a great beast, they cut out all the veynes and sinewes (of which subiect they haue written speciall Treatises) and likewise all the Suet: which done, they diue them in water to mollifie them, and wash them thoroughly, to rinse away all the blood; and then lay them on a board, that all the water may passe from them: after which they salt them in a vessell full of holes, that the salt may draine out all whatsoever bloudinesse yet remaining. They eate not the hinder parts in remembrance of Jacobs ^a thigh.
- But in Italy they haue inuented a new anatomizing tricke, by taking away the veynes and sinewes to make them lawfull. Pittie they cannot doe the like for Swine and other forbidden meates: but you see they haue some trickes to coozen God, as before to coozen the Diuell: but the most coozenage (saue that in the former they coozen themselves) is to Christians which buy those hinder parts of them, in polluting those meates, before they sell them, with filth, and with vrine of their Children, adding curles and imprecations to the eaters. Thus you see the Jew-butcher had need be no botcher, but halfe a Physitian in anatomizing, and halfe a Rabbine in cases of conscience. And who knoweth whether so many Jewish Physicians come not from (and perhaps also carrie to) the Shambles?

§. III.

Of their Espousals and Marriages.

- But wearie of this bloudie spectacle, let vs take a more pleasant view, of their Virgins and Espousals. These were made, saith ^a Moses de Kôsh, either with money, or with an instrument, or with copulation. It seemeth this last is vnderstood of such as had lye with a mayde, and therefore must by the ^f Law marrie her (if the father denied him not his daughter) whereas otherwise they might not haue carnall company before the marriage were solemnized, this being forbidden no lesse then to lye with a woman in her discase. Their Prayer-booke ^b saith thus, He which shall espouse a woman, bringeth witnesses, and before them doth betroth her with money, or somwhat money-worth, which one they call the Mitznab or commandment-dance, as if God had enioyned it. The chiefe ghest takes the Bridegroom by the hand, another him, and so on through the companie: likewise the chiefe woman takes the Bride, another her, and so one another: then doe they dance in a long row with a tumultuous noyse, and so end the nuptiall sports. Among all their other blessings, the Bridegroom is to say one, Vbi perfraxerit sanguinem virginum, to vse the words of Genebrard, who expresseth it, being borrowed from some words of the Canticles, fleshly abused by such application.

The Marriage commonly lasteth eight dayes; and on the Sabbath they dance the lustiest of all, doing the Sabbath herein a singular honour, because that also is called a Bride. It is prohibited to bid any vacircumcised ghest to this banquet: for * Salomon saith, The stranger doth not intermeddle with his joy. Yea, the good Angels seeing such there, will depart; and the euill will come and raise striles and contentions. For they thinke no place empty from the earth to the skie, but all full of good or bad Angels flying or standing in the same. The marriage * is in publike, lest whoredome should be couered vnder that pretext, pretending themselves married when they were not.

Of Coniugal Duties.

HEr it not grieue you to heare somewhat of the Duties betwixt man and wife. The Husband oweth ten things to the Wife: * three according to the Law; her nourishment, her cloathing, and her time; namely, of due beneuolence to bee performed: and seuen things according to the words of the Seribes: The first whereof is the foundation of do wrie, viz. two hundred denary, if she bee a virgin, other wise an hundred. The other concerne the condition of the dowrie. The woman which rendereth not her husband his due, is rebellious and refractarie; and hee is bidden to expell her without a dowrie. The conditions of the dowrie were: first, to cure her in sicknesse: secondly, to redeeme her being captiue: thirdly, to burie her being dead: fourthly, to nourish her out of his owne goods, and that she dwell in his house in her widow-hood: fifthly, to keepe her daughters till marriage: sixthly, that her sonnes inherit. They appoint not only loue, but honour to the wife (as Peter also enioyneth to this weaker vessell) which honour, they say, is in meate and drinke, and goodly garments, for which hee shall (this was a womans friend) haue fauour with God. The Author of Arbaa Turim, addeth, That a man should loue his wife as his owne bodie, and honour her aboue his bodie, and keepe her as one of his members. For the wife is the other halfe of man, and a man without a wife, is but halfe a man. And let him take heed of striking his wife, said b another, or to bee virulent in termes against her. For, for her teares (how pitifully easie are they to some?) his punishment is neere. And howsoeuer since the destruction of the Temple, the doore of Prayers hath bene shut, yet the doore of teares hath not bene shut, as saith Dauid, Bee not thou silent at my teares. And should not a man honour his wife? Yes, saith e R. Hanina, for a man hath no blessing but for his wife, as it is written, Hee blessed Abraham for her. Let a man cloath himselfe (I would not haue women heare it) beneath his abilitie, his children according to his abilitie, and his wife aboue his abilitie. Let the wife honour her husband as her father, and feare to displease him, and let him spare her in his anger, remembering that shee was taken out of his ribbes. But for the wiues choyse, A man ought, saith d one, to sell all that hee hath and buy a wife, the daughter of a wife Disciple: if he finde not such an one, let him take a daughter of the Great men of his time: if not such, the daughter of a Synagogue-Ruler; in that defect, let him take the daughter of one which gathereth Almes: if not, then of a Schoole-master, and not the daughter of the people of the Land, of whom the Scripture saith, e Cursed be he that lyeth with a Beast.

THe bill of divorce is still practised among the Jewes: it must bee written in twelue lines (it is therefore called ḥa Get) neither more nor lesse, and deliuered to the woman before three credible witnesses, vnder their hands and seales. Then doth the husband deliuer it to her, saying, Loe, woman, the bill of thy Divorce, take it of mee, by it being divorced from mee, bee thou free to another husband. The tenor of this bill is this: The second day of the weeke, the eight and twentieth of the moneth, NV in the yeere of the world, 5363. as we heere at Mentz vpon Rhene vse to reckon, I Isaac, surnamed Eckendorf, sonne of R. Abr. now dwelling at Mentz: of my free will, without constraint, thee Sara, surnamed Turmerle, daughter of R. Levi, which hitherto hath benee my wife, haue determined to free, forsake and divorce: And now to forsake, free, and put thee from me, that thou mayest bee thine owne, and at thine owne free will and pleasure mayest depart whither thou wilt, and none from hence-forth for euer shall prohibiue thee: And thou art so freed, that thou mayest marrie to any other man.

h. Syn. c. 30.

This divorce may not bee done in euery place, but they haue some speciall place appointed, noted, and knowne, situate on some knowne Riuer: wherto certaine chiefe Rabbines are called by writing, if there bee none there dwelling, which consummate the businessse. By the old ḥa Law, a woman might be reconciled to her husband before the Bill of divorce giuen, not after.

The obseruation of the brother, to marrie the wife of his brother deceased without issue, or else to lose the inheritance, which was testified by pulling off his shooe, and spetting in his face; is now thus ruled by the Rabbins, that none shall marrie such a widow, but rather suffer the premised ignominie; which is performed in this sort. She comes before the chiefe Rabbi with five witnesses, where the Rabbi demands, if she haue been three months a widow, if her husband had a brother unmarried, if the partie conuented bee hee, &c. and lastly, if shee bee fasting (for otherwise she might not spee in her brothers face.) Of him also the Rabbi asketh like questions, and receiuing a denyall of marriage, there is brought a shooe of singular fashion for that purpose, which hee putteth on his right foot bare, and then setteth himselfe against a wall. The woman comes, and disclaiming his affinitie, stoopeth, and with her right hand (for if she want a right hand, it putteth the Rabbins out of their right wits to skan, whether with her teeth, or how else it may be done) vnlooseth the shooe, and taking it off, spets in his face, so that the five witnesses may see it, saying, Thus it shall be done with him which will not build the house of his brother.

For this they
24.

In the time of her vncleannesse, a woman may not enter into the Synagogue, nor pray, nor name the Name of G o d, nor handle any holy booke; which if they obserue, the Rabbins promise them longer life. As soone as she knoweth of her vncleannesse, she presently separateth her selfe from her husband the space of seuen dayes, not touching him, nor sitting on the same seate, nor eating in the same dish, or on the same cloath, nor may drinke out of the same cup, nor stand against him, nor speake in his face. If one will giue any thing to the other, one layeth it on a bench or table, and goeth away, and the other commeth and taketh it. They say it procureth the Leprosie in the Children which are then gotten, which they obiect to Christians.

Of the Jewish Beggars, Diseases and Penances.

He poorer Lewes on the Friday night, and every Festivall, entering into the houses of the richer, beg prouision for the Feast. And if any be exceeding poore, the Rabbines make him a licence to beg, therein testifying of his honestie and Jewish faith; wherewith hee wandereth through the Countrey, visiting all the Lewes he can finde. And if hee come to a place where are many Lewes, hee sheweth his licence to the chiefe Rabbi; or to the Clarke which calls men to the Synagogue, or to the Elders, or Ruler of the Synagogue, which is as their Confull, or to the Over-seers of the poore, and craueth their fauour: which granted, hee standeth with two others at the doore of the Synagogue, and beggeth; or else those two goe from house to house and beg for him. The like is done when a poore Lew hath a daughter marriageable, to beg for her dowrie. When poore Lewes trauell, they may turne into another Lewes house, where (their prouerbe is) the first day hee is a ghest, the second a burthen, the third a fugitiue.

The falling sicknesse is vsuall among the Lewes, and they vse to imprecate it to each other in their anger, as they also doe the plague. In a generall pestilence they write in their Chamber strange characters and wonderfull names, which (they say) are the names of the Pest-Angels. And I once saw (sayth our Author) Adiridon, Bediridon, and so on, the word Diridon riding on quite through the Alphabet, written with great letters in their houses, as a present remedie for the Plague. The Leprie they haue seldome, which may bee attributed to their dyet.

Now the Sword and Scepter is taken from them, in stead of other penalties, they inflict sharpe penances according to the nature of the crime. Thus the Adulterer satisfieth for his hot lust in cold water, wherein hee is inioyned to sit some winter dayes, and if the water be frozen, the Ice is cut, and hee set therein vp to his chine, as long as an Egge is roasting. In Summer time hee is set naked in an Ant-hill, his nose and eares stopp'd, and after washeth himselfe in cold water. If the season bee neither cold nor hot, hee is inioyned a certaine kinde of fasting, in which he may not eat any thing till night, and then only a little bread and water is allowed him, and yet hee must alter endure the Ant or water-penence. In Me-drach is written, that Adam sat vp to the nose in water an hundred and thirtie yeeres, till hee begate Seth, for eating the forbidden fruit. If the penance seeme lighter, they enioyne him further to runne thorow a swarme of Bees, and when the swelling of his bodie through their stinging is abated, he must doe it againe and againe, according to the measure of his offence. If hee hath often that way offended, hee is bound to endure that penance many yeeres, yea sometimes a three yeeres fast together, eating bread and water at supper, other wise nothing, except hee rather chuse to redeeme this, with fasting three whole dayes together in each yeere, without tasting any refection at all, as Queene Esther did. When any hath lyen with a woman in her vncleanness, hee incurteth the penance of fortie dayes fast, and twice or thrice every of those dayes to receiue on his bare backe with a leather thong or girdle nine blowes: to eat no flesh or hot meate, nor drinke any wine, but on the Sabbath. If a man kisse or embrace his menstruous wife, the case is alike. A Robber is adiudged three yeeres banishment, to wander three yeeres thorow the Cities where Lewes dwell, crying aloud, I am a Robber, and suffer himselfe to bee beaten in manner aforesaid. He may not eat flesh, nor drinke wine; nor cut the hayte off his head or beard: hee must put on his change of garments, and shirts vnwashed. He may not wash himselfe: every moneth once he must couer his head: hee must weare his arme, wherewith he committed murther, fastened to his necke with a chayne. Some are enioyned that where they sleepe one night, they may not sleepe the next, that they may wander ouer the world like Cain. Some are constrained to weare an yron brest-plate next their skinne: and some to throw themselves downe before the doore of the Synagogue, that they which goe in may tread on him. That Iew which accuseth another before a Christian Magistrate, is accounted a Traytor and neuer made reckoning of after.

They call this prayer Tzidduck baddin, the subiect wherof is the iustice of God; calling for pardon in the name of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, acknowledging that by three things the foundations of the world are founded, the Law, worship, and piety to the dead: calling for deliuerance for the blood of his seruants shed in the 856. yeere for the confession of his holy Name, and for the merit of the onely-begotten, which was seuen and thirty yeeres old, in whose place a Ramme was taken; concluding with mention of their Captaines slaine in the 136. yeere. Tee Fathers of the world which sleepe in Hebron, open vnto him the gates of the garden of Eden, and say, His comming be in peace. Tee everlasting hills of the double caue, open vnto him the gates of the garden of Eden, and bid him welcome, Tee Angels of peace, go forth to meete him, vnto locke to him the gates of Paradise. Tee keepers of the treasures of the garden of Eden, open the gates, and let N. enter, & enjoy the fruites of Paradise; good things bee at his right hand, pleasant things at his left. Heare this, O Lord, and let his comming be in peace.* Then lay they him into the ground, and his nearest kinsmen cast in the first earth: after which they turne to the East with diuers other blessings. When they retorne, they blow themselves backward three times, and throw grasse ouer their heads, signifying their hope of the resurrection, according to that Eccl. 6. 14. and your bones shall bud as the grasse: saying also, Dust thou art, and to Dust thou shalt retorne. Then doth every one murther a Prayer to himselfe, as he goeth out of the buriall place. In the porch of the Synagogue, God shall destroy death for ever (say they) and wipe away all teares from their eyes, and will take away their reproach from all the earth, for the Lord hath spoken it. Then enter they into the Synagogue, and leape vp and downe, and change their Seates seuen times, and there say ouer their Purgatorie prayer Kaddish ch. The Mourners goe bare-foote seuen dayes, and eat no Fleish, nor drinke Wine, except on the Sabbaths and Festiuals. They bathe not in three and thirty dayes after, cut not their nayles, worke not, make a pittifull howling, &c. The child mourner for his Father a yeere. The sonne eleven moneths saith out his Kaddish; for meane sinners are freed sooner: but the wicked stay the whole twelue moneths: and therefore to persist the twelfth moneth in his prayer, should be to acknowledge his father a wicked man. And for the effect hereof, Rabbi Akiba met once in the way a man, with an Asse-like burthen of sticks, which vpon examination confessed, That hee was a Purgatorie-ghost, carrying to burne himselfe, such bundles every day. Rabbi Akiba enquired if hee had a Sonne or Wife, and where; and finding out his sonne, taught him this prayer, which was so effectually, that in a dreame this Ghost returned to the Rabbi with thanks for his deliuerance, and sayd, hee was now in Gan Eden, or Paradise. Rabbi Akiba signified this to the Iewish Synagogues, with injunction to teach their Children this prayer.

But to returne to our Funerals: when they are come backe to the mourning house, they wash their hands, but obserue not the Mosaisall Rites, because the Temple is not standing. Then doe they powre out a long blessing ouer a cup of Wine, and another ouer their Meate, exceeding much longer. Their Purgatorie-Prayer, or (as Genebrard calleth it, their) Requiem, vel libera, is this: It is better to go into the house of mourning, then into the house of feasting, in which is the end of all men: which let the liuing remember. Let vs heare the end: Feare God, and keepe his Commandements; this is the dutie of euery man. A sure rest in the high habitation vnder the wings of God, in the degree of the Saints, shining as the brightness of the skie. The change of bonds, pardon of sinnes, grant of saluation, indulgence and merite from the sight of him which dwels in Heauen, and a portion in the life to come: therelert the portion be, and the dwelling of the soule of the wife Master N. The Spirit of the Lord make him to rest in Gan Eden, and giue him peace, as it is written in Esay, Let peace come, and let him rest in beds, walking before it, he and all the deceased of Israel, through his merite, Amen. They write also on the Tombe, Let his soule bee in the Garden of Eden, Amen. Or, Let his soule bee bound in the bundle of life. And sometimes, Thou art the Tombe of N, which departed into Eden, such a day of such a moneth and yeere. Thus poore Purgatorie with Iewes and Romits is preached by walking Ghosts. They haue a light burning for the dead seven dayes. They powre the water out of the doores, because the Angell of Death washed his sword (lately vsed) in water, and enuonemeth it. This his sword he holdeth in his hand at the beds head, hauing on the end thereof three drops of gall. The sicke man spying this Deadly Angell, openeth his mouth with feare, & then those drops fall in, of which one killeth him, the second maketh him pale, the third rotteth and putrifieth, Elias & Lautia addeth, that after a man is dead, the Angell of Death cometh and sitteth on his Graue, and presently the soule entrench into his body, and hee maketh him stand on his feet, hauing to that purpose, in his hand a chayne, halfe of yron, and halfe of fire, wherewith hee striketh him. At the first blow his members are dissolued, at the second his bones are scattered; then come the Angels, and gather them: at the third hee is brought to dust and ashes, and returneth into his Graue. And this, sayth R. Meir, is more grievous then the iudgement of Hell: for the iust, and the sonnes of the Princes, and abortiues are iudged therewith, except they which dye on the Euen of the Sabbath, and in the land of Israell: of which you haue heard their rolling opinion before; neither will wee roll this stone to our Reader againe.

§. I.

Of the Signes of the comming of their Messias.

He Iewes generally beleue, hope, and pray for a Messias; but such a one, whose Kingdome shall bee of this world, and who shall (to vie the Apostles a phrase, who were also, euen after Christs death and resurrection, partakers of this dreame) Restore the Kingdome to Israel. And because the Scripture speaketh sometimes of the poore, contemptible, and dejected state of the promised Messias, sometimes of the puissiance, renowne, and glory of his Kingdome: they therefore frame to their conceits, two Messias, one poore and simple, but a mightie warriour, whom they call Messias Ben-Ioseph, the other Messias Ben-David;

David; after the other in time, but before him in glory, and the true Messias: howsoever even this also bee in their opinions but a meere man, and one which shall marry and leaue behind him a remayning and raigning posterity. The Cabalists (according to their transcendēt mysteries) out of the name Adam, which the Hebrewes write without points, Adam, gather, that the soule of Adam, by a Metempsychosis passed into David, and that of David into Messias, which yet lyes hid for the finnes of the Lewes.

The ancient Lewes looked for this Messias to bee sent them about that time, when Iesus came in the Flesh: as that Prophecie which is fathered on Elias testifieth, to wit, that the world should bee two thousand yeeres Tobu, empty and without law, two thousand vnder the Law, two thousand vnder the Messias: and accordingly Christ Iesus came into the world about the yeere after the Creation, 3963. The Lewes reckon 202. yeeres fewer in all their computations, then the Christians. Vpon this occasion, and in regard of the generall expectation of the Messias, about that time rose so many Sects, and especially that rebellion of Ben-Cochab, before spoken of, to whom R. Akiba (famous for his foure and twenty thousand Disciples) gaue testimony, and called him Messias the King. But this Ben-Cochab, the sonne of the Starre, Numb. 23, was by Adrian (as you haue seene) besieged, taken, and executed, and was called after Ben-Cozabb, the sonne of lying. They therefore, when as they found no Messias, said, that the time was deferred, because of their finnes: and after denouced Anathema to him, that should set downe the time of his coming: And being conuincid in their consciences, that the Prophecies of this time were already past and accomplished, they affirmed in their writings, that hee was then borne, but did not yet reucale himselfe, because of their finnes. R. Salomon Iarchi writeth, that the ancient Lewes thought he was borne on that day, in which Ierusalem was last destroyed; but vncertaine where he hath lye hid. Some say that he abideth in Paradise, tyed by the haire of a womans head: so interpreting that of the Canticles, The 4. haire of thy head is as purple, The King is tyed in the rapiers; by rapiers meaning Paradise. The Talmudists write, that hee lay at the gates of Rome among the Lazars and Leapers, according to Esay 53.

Before he cometh, they write, that ten notable miracles shall happen to warne them thereof. First, God shall raise vp three Kings, which shall make profession of the true Faith, but shall indeed betray it, and seduce men, and cause them to deny God. The louers of the Truth shall flee and hide themselves in caues and holes of the earth, and these Tyrants shall pursue and slay them. Then, shall there be no King in Israel (as it is written) no Pastor, no holy men. The heavens shall bee shut vp, the people shall be made few: for these Tyrants (which yet by diuine dispensation shall raigne but three months) shall impose ten times as much, as was before exacted, and they which haue not to pay, shall lose their heads. And from the ends of the earth shall come men, blacke and loathsome; the dread of whose countenance shall kill men: for they haue two heads, and seuen eyes, sparkling like fire.

The second Miracle shall bee a great heate of the Sunne, causing Feauers, Pestilences, and other diseases, so that the Gentiles shall digge themselves graues, and there lye and wish for death. But the Israelites shall haue this heat to be as wholesome medicine to them: so interpreting the 2. Prophet.

God shall make a bloody dew fall on the earth, of which the people, and the wicked of the Israelites shall drinke, thinking it to be good water, and shall die: it shall not hurt the iust, who shall sime, &c.

Fourthly, God shall make a wholesome dew to fall, whereof the indifferent meaner sinners, sicke of the former dew, shall drinke and liue, Hof. 14. 6.

Fifthly, The Sunne shall be darkened thirty dayes, and then receiue againe his light, whereby many shall embrace Iudaisme.

Sixthly, God shall permit the Edomites (or Romans) to rule ouer all the world: but so one especially, at Rome, shall raigne nine moneths ouer all the world, wasting large countries, laying heavy tributes vpon the Israelites. Then shall the Israelites haue no helper (as sayth Esay 49. 16). But after nine moneths God shall send Messias Ben-Ioseph of the children of Ioseph, whose name shall be Nekemias, the sonne of Husiel. Hee shall come with the race of Ephraim, Manasse, Beniamin, and Gad, and the Israelites hearing of it, shall flocke to him, as Ieremie sheweth, & Convert yee to the Lord, yee rebellious children, I will take yee, one of a City, and two of a Tribe, &c. This Messias shall ouerthrow the Edomites, and slay their King, and destroying the Empire, shall carrie to Ierusalem, holy vessels, reserved in the house of Elham for a treasure. The King of Egypt also shall make peace with the Israelite, and shall kill the men about Ierusalem, Damascus and Ascalon; the same whereof shall affright all the inhabitants of the earth.

which shall resort all the wicked of the world, and shall incestuously conuerse therewith. Hence shall God frame an Infant in the same, which shall with breach of the marble come forth. This shall be named Armillus the wicked, the same which the Christians call Antichrist, of ten elles quantitie of bredth and length; a spanne bredth betweene his eyes, which shall be red and deepe in his head; his hayre yellow, the soles of his feet greene, deformed with two heads. Hee shall professe himselfe the Romane Messias and God, and shall be accepted of them. He shall bid them bring him the Law which hee hath giuen them, which they shall bring with their Prayer-booke: hee shall cause them to beleue in him, and shall send Ambassadors to Nehemias the sonne of Husiel, and to the people of Israel, commanding them also to bring him their Law, and to acknowledge him for God. Then shall Nehemias goe vnto Armillus with three hundred thousand Ephraimites, carrying with him the booke of the Law; and when he comes at him, hee shall reade out of the same this sentence, I am the Lord thy God, thou shalt haue none other Gods in my sight. Armillus shall reply, that there is no such sentence in their Law, and therefore they should acknowledge him for God, as well as the Gentiles. Then shall Nehemias ouerthrow two hundred thousand of Armillus his Armie: whereat Armillus shall be so wrathfull, that hee shall assemble all his forces into a deepe valley, and there shall destroy (with many other Israelites) this Nehemias. All Nations shall then expell the Israelites, and such affliction shall befall them, as neuer since the beginning of the world. At this time shall the Angell Michael come forth, and separate the wicked from Israel, as writeth 1 Daniel. They which remaine, shall flye into the desert, and for five and fortie dayes space, liue with grasse, and leaues, and hearbes; but all the wicked Israelites shall dye. Armillus shall after subdue Egypt, and shall come thence against Jerusalem, and seeke againe to waste it. These things after their manner, they fable out of the eleuenth and twelfth of Daniel.

The eighth Miracle is the arising of Michael, who three times shall winde his great horne, Es. 27. 13. and Zach. 9. 14. At the first sound, the true Messias Ben David, and Elias the Prophet, shall shew themselves to those deuout Israelites in the deserts of Iuda, who shall then gather courage: and all the Iewes in the world shall heare this sound, and shall confesse Gods deliuerance, and all that haue beene led captiue into Assyria shall assemble together. The same horne shall strike feare and diseases into the Christians and other people. Now shall the Iewes make great iourneys towards Ierusalem, and together with Elias and Messias shall come thither with ioy. Armillus hearing this, in his proud furie shall re-assemble his Christians against the Messias and Ierusalem. But God not suffering his people to fall out of one trouble into another, shall say to the Messias, Come place thy selfe at my right hand; and to the Israelites, Be still and wait for the great succour of the Lord this day. And then shall God rayne fire and brimstone from Heauen, as Ezekiel reporteth, wherewith Armillus and his Armie shall dye, and The house of Iacob shall be as fire, and the house of Ioseph as a flame, and the house of Esaus (the Idumæan Atheists which destroyed Gods house) as stubble.

At the second sound or blast of this horne of Michael, the graues at Ierusalem shall open, and the dead arise, and Messias Ben David with Elias shall reuoke into life, that Messias Ben Ioseph, and the Israelites shall send Messias Ben David into all Countries of the Iewes disposition, to cause them to come to Ierusalem; and the Nations with whom they are, shall bring them in their Chariots, and on their shoulders.

The last Miracle, is the third time of Michaels winding his horne, when God shall bring forth all the Iewes, which are by the Riuers Gofan, Lachbach, Chabor, and in the Cities of Iuda, and they without number or measure, shall with their Infants enter into the Paradise of Moses; and the ground before them and behind them shall be meere fire, which shall leaue no sustenance to the Christians. And when the ten Tribes shall depart out of the Nations, then the pillar of the cloud of Diuine glory shall compass them, and God shall goe before them, and shall open to them the fountaines flowing from the tree of Life, Esa. 49. 10. Imight adde to these miracles that of the Asse, which Abraham rode on when hee went to sacrifice his sonne; which Moses also vied when he returned into Egypt (and some say, Balaams Asse was the same) this shall the Messias ride on, according to Zacharias Prophecie, Zach. 9. 5.

Against these ten miraculous signes, fore-shewing Messias his coming, the most being full of troubles, they haue ten consolations: first, The certaintie of Messias coming: secondly, That hee shall gather them from all places of the dispersion, Ierem. 31. 8. but the Lames there mentioned shall be so cured, that They shall leape as Harts &c. thirdly, God will raise vp the dead: fourthly, God will erect a third Temple, according to the figure

Iewish tales of monstrous Birds, Beasts, Fishes and Men.

THeir cheere in these dayes shall bee the greatest Beasts, Birds, and Fishes, which G O D euer created; and no other wine then that which grew in Paradise, and was kept in Adams Celler till that time : the great Oxe Behemoth mentioned in Iob 4. and Psal. 50. 10. All the Beasts of the wood are mine, and the beasts feeding on a thousand hills, that is, Behemoth, which euery day feedeth on a thousand hills. But lest this deuouring beast should consume all the hills in the world, they tell you that hee is a stalled Oxe, still abiding in the same place, and what hee eateth in the day, groweth againe in the night. The huge Whale Leuiathan, or, as they pronounce it, Lipiasan, must honour also this Feast: of this they write in the Talmud; that to prevent filling the world with these huge monsters, G O D gelded the male Leuiathan, and the female is slaine, and preferred in pickle, for the iust, to be eaten in the times of the Messias, Esa. 27. The male Behemoth was gelded also, and the female was stored vp for this feast. Elia Leuita reporteth of a huge huge Bird, also called Barinechne, to bee roasted at this feast; of which the Talmud saith, that an egge sometime falling out of her nest, did ouerthrow and breake downe three hundred tall Cedars; with which tall the egge being broken, ouerflowed and carried away sixtie Villages. Wee will haue the Whetstone before we part. R. Barcannab saw a Frogge as big as Akra, a village of sixtie households : then came a huger Serpent and swallowed that huge Frogge. Lastly, the hugest, hugest Crow that euer the Rabbines saw, flew and deuoured these both; and flying away, sat on a tree, which tree sure could not be lesse then the three hundred Cedars before mentioned, if this Crow were but as bigge as that egge. R. Papa answereth, that he would neuer haue beleued it, but that hee saw it. (I hope they will pardon vs if wee be of the same minde.) But would you not saue heate of a man, holding like proposition & then let R. Saul tell you of his adventures in the burying of a dead corps, where hee encountered with a bone of a man, into which there flew a Raven, and the Rabbi would needs follow after to see what became of her; and so he went, & he went, three leagues in the hollow of the same bone, and could find no end thereof; and therefore returned: so he perceived it was one of the bones of Og the Giant, whom Moses had slaine. Perhaps you will maruell how Moses could archiue such an exploit. Forsooth, you must vnderstand, that Moses was ten cubits high, and had an Axe ten cubits long, and leaped other ten cubits in the ayre, and so gaue the deadly blow to Og, who (it seemes) was layde along in some deepe Trench, or else you will thinke the Rabbine lyed. Tuth, your incredulitie makes you vnworthy to heare their storie of R. Ossa, who beguiled the Angell of Death, of whom (when hee came to smite him) hee would in kinnesse needs learne his future place in Paradise; where with the deadly Angell was content, and went with him; yea, for his securitie, at his request resigned his deadly weapon into his hands. Thus at last they came at Paradise, where hee shewed him his place, which hee desirous to take better view of, required his helpe to lift him higher, and then with a quicke deliuerie leapt into Paradise. Thus did the poore cozened Angell misse his prey, and was glad with much a-doe to recover his sword from the Rabbine. And that you might see their skill, no lesse in Cosmographie then Theologie : Another was carryed to the place where Heauen and Earth meete, and kisse each other; where, whiles hee might take the more diligent view in obseruing those parts (which the Frier of Oxford neuer saw, nor Fansius with his Mephobites) hee hanged his Cloake on a window in Heauen; and suddenly it was conueyed out of sight. Hereat amazed that there should bee cheues in Heauen; a voyce told him it was the heauens motion, and at such an houre the next day he might attend, and againe obtaine his Cloake; which hee did accordingly. But to take view of other strange creatures, make room I pray, for another Rabbi with his Bird; and a great deale of roome you will say is requisite; Rabbi Knuchi on the 50. Psalme auerteth out of Rabbi Schindab, that Ziz is a bird so great, that with spreading abroad his wings, hee hideth the Sunne, and darkeneth all the world.

And (to leape backe into the Talmud) a certaine Rabbi sayling on the Sea, saw a bird in the middle of the sea, so high, that the water reached but to her knees; whereupon he wished his companions there to walke because it was shallow; Do it not (saith a voyce from heaven) for it is seven yeeres space since a Hatcher, by chance falling out of a mans hand in this place, and alwaies descending, is not yet come at the bottome. I perceive by your incredulous smiles, you will scarce beleue * that a Lyon in the wood Ela, roared suddenly, that all the women in Rome (four hundred miles from thence) for very horror proved abortive; and when he came an hundred miles neerer, his terrible noyse shooke the teeth out of all the Romans heads; and the Emperour himselfe, that caused the Rabbi to obtaine of God by his prayer, to make this triall of the Lyon, fell downe from his Throne halfe dead; and with much importunity requested his helpe, to cause him retire to his denne. But this roaring hath almost marred our Feast.

Their Messias his Feast.

20  Ver Wine you have heard of, fetched out of Adams Celler, Esay 27. 2. 3. and Psal. 75. 9. Before the Feast, Messias will cause these pretty creatures, Behemoth and Leviathan to play together and make them sport: but when they have wearied themselves in the fight, Messias with his sword shall kill them both; Esa. 27. 1. Then followeth the Feast, and afterwards his Marriage; * Kings Daughters shall bee among these honourable women: at thy right hand standeth the Queene in the golde of Ophir. Amongst the Messias his excellent women (Rabbi Kimchi expoundeth) shall bee Kings Daughters, for every King shall repute it to his owne glory to bestow a daughter on the Messias: But the true Queene shall bee one of the fairest Israelites daughters, and shall continually converse with him, whereas the others must come onely at call. He shall thus beget children, which shall raigne after him, Esay 53. 10. when he is dead.

30 Now the state of the Lewes in his time shall be such, that the Christians shall freely build them houses and Cities, and till their grounds, and bestow on them their goods; yea, Princes shall serve them, and they shall walke in faire garments, Esa. 60. 10, 11, 12. and Esa. 61. 5. 6. The ayre also shall be new and wholesome, Esa. 65. 17. by the benefit whereof, they shall abide sound, and liue long, and in their age bee as fresh as if they were young, Psal. 92. 14. 15. The Wheat once sowne shall alway grow vp of it selfe, no other wise then the Vines, Hosea 14. 8. And if any shall desire any raine for his field, or garden, or one hearb by it selfe, he shall haue it, Zach. 10. 1. Then shall bee peace among men and beastes, Hos. 2. 19. Esa. 11. 7. If there arise any warre amongst the Gentiles, the Messias shall accord them, Esa. 2. 4. They shall liue in great felicitie, full of the knowledge and praise of God. The earth shall be full hereof, &c. The Talmud also speaketh of a thousand yeeres, wherein the world shall be renewed (some what like the opinion of some Ancients in the Primitive Church) in which time the iust shall haue wings given them like Eagles, whereby they may flie ouer the face of the waters. But the bodies of the iust which shall rise againe, shall neuer returne to dust; Ricini in this and many other of their absurdities, seeks to giue an allegoricall interpretation; but which of the Heathen haue not so patronized their superstitions and Idolatries? as appeareth in the Poets, Philosophers, Chaldean and Egyptian Priests, whose mysticall learning cannot free their religions from being mysteries of iniquitie. Sixe thousand yeeres the world endureth, saith R. Katina, and a thousand yeere shall bee a desolation, and God onely shall bee exalted in that day (for one thousand yeeres is one day of the Lord) and it is written, A thousand yeeres in thy sight are as yesterday; and this is a Sabbath wherein shall be the feastings aboue mentioned. And thus did Elias asseirme, as is said two thousand yeeres the world was emptye, two thousand the Law, and two thousand Messias; but for the sinnes of that is wanting, which we see wanting. (This last clause, Ricini saith, is added by the Talmudists, which still expect their Mesias) eighty five Iubilees shall the world indure, and in the last, saith this Elias, shall come the Sonne of Danid.

20 Thus haue we heard the infancie of the Church in the time of her nonage, and of those Hebrew Patriarchs; wee haue scene also their present Infancie in these Iewish fables, the iust reward of Long darknesse rather than light. And so with our prayers to God, at last to take that Psalm of Moses from their hearts, that there may be One proper Shepheard, and one shepfull, and that meane-while, we may leaue preciously to esteeme, and reuerently to make vse of that light we haue; warned by the spectacle of Diuine Iustice in them, through so many ages blinded in so palpable fooleries; we will now leaue them and this Holy Land, and and seeke further what adventures we shall light on the next neighbouring Nation; hoping and craving for pardon of such prolixitie in this part of our Discourse, fitteth, of all the other in this part of our worke to be considered.

CHAP. XXI.

Of the hopes and hinderances of the Jewes Conversion.

When I had now (as I thought) brought this Jewish Relation to an end, and even wearied the Reader with that which might much more wearie the writer; that Prophesie of Paul, That all Israel shall bee saved, &c. which by most Interpreters is construed of the generall conversion of that Nation, after the fulnesse of the Gentiles bee come in (as in the beginning of this Worke is said) caused my traying Pen (ready to wander from these, so farre wandering from their holy Progenitors) to vndertake this taske, also to declare, what future hopes, and what present feares and lets may be conceived of their conversion to Christianitie. The hope (though it be yet tossed vpon surges of almost desperate Seas, yet) hath Anchoram sacram, a sure Anchor to relye on, and a kinde of obscure kenning of that wished-for Haue, where it would bee. For Non ita perierunt ad unum Iudaei, ut nulla super sit illorum salute spes. The destruction of the Jewes (saith Peter Martyr) is not so desperate, but that their is some Hope left of their saluation. And a little after (alluding to the Apostles mystic) Cum enim plenitudo fuerit iam ad Christum conuersa ex gentibus, tunc & Israelita accedent: For when there shall haue bene a full conuersion of the Gentiles vnto Christ, then shall the Jewes also come in. So Chrysostome: Quia * subtrauit plenitudo Gentium, in nouissimo saluabitur omnis Israel; because the fulnesse of the Gentiles hath come in, at last all Israel shall bee saved. The same hope is generally cherished by the rest of the Fathers. And D. Willet in a booke * written of this argument, brings to this purpose many authorities of Scriptures and Fathers, Gen. 9. 27. and 49. 10. Deut. 32. 7. Psal. 125. 1. Ezek. 37. 1. and 47. 4. Zach. 2. 12. and 12. 10. Mal. 3. 5. Luk. 15. 31. Ioh. 10. 16. 2. Cor. 3. 16. 1. Apoc. 3. 9. &c. and especially that in the elucient to the Romans, wherein many arguments are compiled together: confirmed also by the interpretations and testimonies of Origen, Athanasius, Chrysostome, Hierome, Augustine, Beda, Hugo Cardinalis, Aquinas, Gorham, Caluin, Beza, Bullinger, Martyr, to whom wee may adde diuers others. These indeed further our hopes, which yet depend more vpon Diuine goodnesse then on humane probability; the stabilitie of his Truth, which hath promised (as Paul also Rom. 11. expoundeth the former Prophets) The vnrchangeablenesse of Gods Election, the bottomselle Sea of his Mercies, the vnsearchablenesse of his Iudgements, minister hope beyond hope. Hereunto also may be added, the common grounds, both of Reason, which they hold with vs in Nature; and of the Scripture, the ancienter parts whereof, and especially the Law of Moses, they maintayne with equall acknowledgement, (and for the most part) with more forward industrie and zeale, then doe the commoner sort of Christians.

e Luth. in Mich. 4. 3. See also a whole booke of this Count. Iudaei, qui hoc sapiunt.

f Relation of Religion of the West parts.

But the 4 impediment which haue hitherto, and doe yet with-hold them from Christianity, doe exceed in number and power. For that fore-stalled prejudice of theirs, the glory of the Temple, the sacrifices and legall worshipps pait, their hopes then and still of such a Monarch to their Messias, as you haue heard of the splendour of their renowned Ancestors, the keeping of the Diuine Oracles, their peculiar tittle of being Gods people, haue bred in them such a swelling pride, that they naturally enuie and abhorre the very thought thereof, that the Gentiles should in these things either equal or succeed them.

Sooner (saith Martin Luther) then they would endure that the Gentiles (which in their daily prayers they curse and reuile) should haue any part with them in their Messias, and bee accounted co-heires thereof, they would crucifixe ten Messias: yea (if it were possible) would dee to death God himselfe, with all the Angels and creatures else, although they should therefore vndergoe a thousand helts.

Hence, in a great part, proceedeth their naturall and long continued obstinacie. And besides that prejudice, pride, and enuie, they are not a little scandalized from the Christians themselves, somewhat in regard of the mutuall differences and disagreements among Protestants; which, though in it selfe bad, is made much worse by the vnreasonable and vnreasonable exaggeration of their common Aduersarie, the Papist: but more, in respect of those which call themselves Catholikes, and are not, but even by these men are found to bee manifest Idolaters. A f scandall it is to see Gods Law neglected, and mans exalted with with rigour: a greater matter, at some times to eat flesh, then the adulterous pollution of the flesh at any time: the blasphemies of some Nations; these being interiections to the vulgar, and phrases of gallantrie to the Princes: the forging & packing of miracles; wherein the Friars and Iewes concurre with equall diligence, the one in contriuing, the other in discouering them. A scandall are the alterations which they are forced by the Inquisitors, to make in their Authors and Monuments of Antiquitie: thinking, that these deuices are our best euidences. A scandall is the vowing and praying to Angels and Saints, yea, more to the Mother of Christ, then to Christ himselfe, or to God, to whom alone they repute this is a due sacrifice. But the greatest scandall of all others, is the worshipping of Images. Indeede it seemed strange to me, and doth to the rest of my Brethren according to the flesh, (Nathaniel, a Iew) borne, baptized in London, before the Congregation at All-hallowes made this confession) euen vnto this day, in whom this blindnesse and hardnesse of heart is in part continued, through occasion giuen by them: that professe the name of Iesus: and not onely in vs, which are of the house of Israel, but in others, as the Turkes and Mahumetanes, which are the race of Ishmael. Wee and our Fathers and Elders say, and in our bookes call them by no other name, but Baal abodazara, Idolatrous Masters: a thing so detestable vnto vs, as nothing more, &c. They say vnto vs oftentimes, that they doe not worship him as gods, but God in them. Neither are the Heathen, we say, that are round about vs, so blinded, that they thinke the flocks and stones to be God, but they are perswaded that God may be worshipped in them. And yet they goe farther: for the Christians in Spaine and Portugall haue it written in their 20 Bookes, That the Virgin Mary is the Lords Treasurer, and that she bestowes gifts and graces vpon her seruants: That her Mercie pardoneth them, whom the Iustice of her Sonne might condemne, and that our saluation lieth in her hands. But our Law teacheth, That God is All-sufficient, hee giueth to whom he listeth, He will not giue his glory to another, &c. The Reader may (if hee please) from that Iew himselfe, in his printed Confession, be further informed of that Partition wall, which separateth the Iew and Catholike.

S. Apr. 1577.

They are so much the more scandalized, when they see the Catechismes recite the Decalogue, with omission of that second Commandement, which they thinke (as one of their greatest Rabbins contested with our Author) was the Ordinance of Christ himselfe. Yea, the Priests and Friars let passe in their Conferences with them for currant, their Iewish vpraizings, that Christ, a Carpenters Sonne, was an Image-maker, or at least an Author of their worshipping. As for those speculative plaisters of doxologie and haggela, of intention instrumentall and finall in worship of Images of the true, and Idols of the false gods, they are (as euen now you heard) the vnsauourest dregs to the Iew in the world.

h Rd. Well.

The poore Idiot, among the Christians, can as little distinguish as the Pagan, and both amongst the Christians is like honour done to Gods Image, and to that of Saints, and to them both, in like forme of worship, as amongst the Pagans. They are forced to be at some Sermons, and there are well edified by their hearing, when they see the Preacher direct his prayer to a Crucifixe, calling it his Lord and Saviour. Their Transubstantiation is a monster, as hideous as the former.

The meanes vsed to their conuersion are weake; especially in some places, where they haue not the New Testament in such Language as they can vnderstand: and the Inquisitors haue inhibited and taken from them all bookes written on that Theame, in defence of Christian Religion, or against it, alledging, they will haue no disputing in matters of Religion either way, like the Iesuits Edict at Dola, forbidding all talke of God, either in good sort or in bad.

But of all other, this is a good furtherance, that when in their Baptisme they deny the Demil and all his works, they must renounce their right and propertie in all their goods and possessions; the shamefull couetousnesse of hypocriticall Christians, hauing brought these instruments malorum within the compasse of the Devils works, presupposing (forsooth) that either the conuerted Iew, or his corrupt ancestors, haue scraped together such heapes of wealth by vsurie, or oppression, or some vnlawfull meanes or other. Therefore for the good of his soule, his body shall be left to beg or starue; while, with the leauing of his Iewish superstition, hee must likewise leaue all that he hath: and his new-receiued Religion must be a meanes to strip him of his riches, and to weane him from his wel-beloued Mammon, which that Nation is naturally so farr in loue with. This alone, to the world-bewitched Iew, is such a Partition-wall to keepe him from Christianitie, that he will venture soule and all, rather then thus betray himselfe, his wife and children, to extreme beggerie and want. And so much the worse, saith Victor Carbenis, one of these Conuerts, because in their Iewish estate they had not learned any Art which now might minister vnto them sustentance. Thus are they driuen to beg from doore to doore for their food, exposed not onely to this extremitie of want, but to the opprobries also of vnehriftians Christians, who Iewishly hate the name of a Iew; nor can the Jew be washed from it with the sacred tincture of Baptisme; whiles the scumme of the irreligious-religious vulgar Crosse and point at them; saying, There goes a baptized Jew (a name best fitting themselves) and on the other side their owne Countrymen hate and abhorre them as Apostataes, Renegadoes, and Fugitiues. And if any shew them kinder entertainment; yet (as a nine-dayes wonder) it lasteth but a little while, whereof the Jewes haue this proverbe, A new Convert is as a new or cleane cloth, which at first is pleasant, but after a little wearing groweth foule and loathsome: Especially, since the fairest of his preferment (to welcome him to our Religion) is to turne Friar: then which profession, nothing can be more hatefull to him, who accounteth it a course against Nature; and a breach of that Ordinance of God (Crescite & multiplicamini) of multiplying the world by a holy propagation in that Honourable estate of Marriage, which that doctrine of Devils hath made the Friar vnacceptable of. As for the example of Elias, and some other holy Men (whom our Popish Votaries would make Patrones of their disorderly Orders;) the Jew (herein more truly-Christian then the Papist) holdeth it a course extraordinary, and ordinarily preferreth holy Marriage farre before that seeming-holy Vow of Virginitie. Thus we see what our-ward scandals, besides their generall prejudice against Christianitie, doe hinder them from it: which offences, in behalfe of the Christians, together with that prejudice, Pride, and Enuie, and aboue all, that Veile which Diuine Iustice hath left vpon their hearts, God in his good time remoue, and grant, according to that Prophecie, That all Israel may be saved.

The later Inhabitants of Palestina, and the parts adioyning, since the dispersion of the Iewes till this day.

Of the Christian times before the Saracens.

And thus haue we ended our Iewish Relations; our next journey is into Arabia: a way dreadfull sometimes to the Israelites passing this way to Canaan, where yet their expected inheritance, their pillar of a cloud by day, and fire by night, their Manna, and many other miraculous effects of Diuine presence, might arme them against heates, droughts, desarts, serpents, enemies, and all opposition. Not so your Pilgrime: now leauing Palestina and the Holy Land, to visite these Arabian desarts full of emptinesse, stored with wants, and yet most fruitfull of that which is worse then barrennesse, the very Seminary of Mahumetane impious pietie. The very conceit whereof makes him (like the Riuer Iordan, which loeth himselfe in this wilderness, and therefore lingers as long as he may, diffusing himselfe in lakes by the way, as loth to mixe his fresh-waters with the Dead Sea) to stay and stray so long in Palestina: as he which knowes a Heathenish and Morish Mare mortuum, will swallow him (if he could sink) as soone as he is passed hence. Let vs therefore stay here a little longer to refresh our eyes wearied with Iewish spectacles, and take view of those which haue since succeeded them in habitation, in sinne, in iudgement. And where might wee better stay, or what part of the world can yeeld such varietie and multiplicitie of objects to both the eyes of the minde, Curiosity and Deuotion? No where such manifold alterations and diuisions of state, so diversified a Map of Nature, so multiplied rites of Religion in such differing sects of Heathens, Hebrewes, Mahumetons, Christians: No where Antiquitie shewing a grauer countenance: no where the Monuments of such mercies, the spectacles of such iudgements, such consolations, such desolations, such ambition of Potentates, and terraine furies from the East, the West, the North, the South; such Miracles, such Oracles, such consequence of Pilgrims looking as farre opposite as Samsons Foxes, with as fierie diuisions, whether in differing heresies of one, or differing names of diuers Deuotions; both Catholike and Hereticall Iewes, Saracens and Christians, concurring in visiting, adorning, adoring, these places with Titles and Rites of Holinesse. How often hath this country emied our Westerne world with Armes and Armies to recover it, and the Easterne in like manner to retaine it? How often hath it brought Armies of Angelicall spirits out of the highest Heaueus, to couer these Hilles with Chariots and Horse, of fire, round about the holy men of God? How oft? But what speake I of Men or Angels? God himselfe loued the gates of Sion, more then all the dwellings of the

the world: and IESVS CHRIST, the Angell of the Covenant, true GOD, and perfect MAN, here was borne, here liued, practised, died, ascended, and hence he sent his Apostles to bee Fishers of men, that the soanes of men might bee made the heires of GOD, co-heires with himselfe.

After, the Iewes for reiecting him, were reiectet out of both the heauenly and earthly Canaan; this country was inhabited partly by Roman Colonies, there planted for securitie of the countrey by the Roman Emperours, partly by such Syrians as submitted themselves peaceably to the Roman Empire, both that Ethnike before Constantine, and after in farre more flourishing estate vnder the Christian Emperours, till the daies of vn-christian Phocas.

This was the murderet of Mauritius his Lord, the vürper of the Empire, the exalter of the Roman See vnto the Ecclesiasticall Supremacie (with as good right as himselfe had to the State) a monster of mankind, vnder whom the Empire was neere an vtter overthrow, as by the Hunnes, Auares, and other Nations in the Welt; so especially by the Persians in the East; whose Emperour Chosroes overthrew that Armie which had conspired against Mauritius, and in the fourth yeere of Phocas ouer-ranne Mesopotamia and Syria: in the next yeere after carried much prey and many captiues out of all Syria, Palestina and Pienicia; in the seventh yeere of his raigne possessed Armenia, Galatia, Paphlagonia, and spoiled all as farre as Chalcodon. Yet saith Cedrenus, Phocas did more harme at home, then the enemy in the field. At the same time the Iewes made a commotion at Antioch, and slew (besides many other Citizens) Anastasius the Patriarch, in despight also putting his priuities in his mouth. But the Iewes paid much blood for this butcherie; and Phocas also himselfe the chiefe Butcher, was most mercilesly butchered presently after by Heraclius his successeur. They tell of a Reuelation to a certaine Holy man, that GOD had made Phocas Emperour, because hee could not finde a worse man by whom to punish that people: which I mention, that the world might see what a good Mid-wife Rome (then in trauel) had to helpe her babe Antichrist into the world. But to returne to the storie, Heraclius could not withstand the Persian insolence, but left in his first yeere Apamea, and Edeffa, and in the next Cæsarea, from whence they carried many thousands into captiuitie: in the fourth Damascus was taken, and in the fifth Ierusalem, where (by reason of the Iewish cruelty, who bought all the Christians they could to slaughter them) there were stine e ninetie thousand. Zacharias the Patriarch, together with the holy Crosse, and exceeding store of captiues and spoile, were carried into captiuitie. The next yeere they ouercame Egypt, Africa and Ethiopia, Chosroes neglects all ouertures of peace made to him by Heraclius, except they would deny their crucified God, and worship the Sunne. He also caused the Christians in his dominion to become Nestorians, the cause perhaps why almost all the farre Easterne Christians to this day are, or at least are called, Nestorians.

Against him Heraclius continued a six yeeres expedition, in which hee ouerran his countries, ouerthrew his Armies, sacked his Cities, Castles, and Palaces, and at last assisted his eldest sonne Siroes (whom Chosroes fought to dis-herit) against him, who tooke him, and hauing before expole him to all contumelious insultations, and almost starued him in a darke prison, and slaine all his other children in his sight; with abominable tyrannie hit his tyrannicall father to death. So died Chosroes; a successeur of Sennacherib, in the dominion of many the same countries, subiectiue to the like blasphemous impietie, and reward by like parricide. Heraclius in the ninth yeere of his raigne visiteth Ierusalem, restoring the captiue crosse and Patriarch by restitution of Siroes. He banished thence all the Iewes, prohibiting by Edict that none should come neere it by three miles.

§. II.

Of the Saracens and Turkes in Palestina.

HE Saracens had done good seruice in these wars against the Persians, which in the time of Heraclius began a new Religion and Empire, vnder Mahomet the founder of both: the second, after whom Omar ouerthrew Theodorus the brother of Heraclius in battell, and after him another Theodorus and Boanes his Generals, & forced the Emperour to abandon Syria, carrying the holy crosse from Ierusalem to Constantinople.

In the 26. of Heraclius hee entred Ierusalem hypocritically and pseudoprophetically clothed in a homely garment of Camels haire, and sought out the place of Salomons Temple, thereto erect another; subduing soone after the whole Persian State, and a great part of the Roman. Anno Dom. 641. did Homar build his Temple at Ierusalem with incredible costs in matter and workmanship, enriching the same with many and large possessions and reuenues; in the Musafike worke of the inner and outward part thereof expressing in Arabike letters letters, the Author, time, and charges of the building. The forme whereof is thus described by William Archbishop of Tyrus.^a The Church-yard was square, about a bow-shot in length and breadth, compassed with a high wall, having on the West square two gates, one on the North, and another on the East: on the South was the Palace. On every of these gates, and on the corners were high steeples, on which at certaine houres the Priests after the Saracenicall manner called them to prayers.

In this compasse none were suffered to dwell, nor to enter but with bare and washed feet, Porters being assigned to that purpose.

In the midst of this square, was another somewhat higher, whereto they ascended by staires in two places on the West side, as many on the South, and one on the East: in every 10 of the corners were Oratories or Chappels erected. In the middle hereof was the Temple raised of eight-square forme, cruised within and without with Marble and Musaike worke, having a sphericall rooffe, artificially covered with Lead. Both the inner and outward square was paved with white stone, whereby the raine water descended into many cisterns for that cause provided.

In the midst of this Temple within the inner row of pillars, there was a Rocke of prettie height, with a Caue vnder it of the same stone, vpon which, they say, David saw the Angell standing which smote the people with pestilence; after he had numbred them, where also he then built an Altar. This remained open to the view, till the Westerne Christians, winning the place, covered it with Marble, and erected thereon an Altar and Quire, Baumgarten (who 20 was at Ierusalem a hundred and nine yeeres since) and was thrust downe the staires by the Saracens, saith, this Temple is not now very large, and that it is twelue-corned, with a round steeple in the midst; thereon, (as on their steeple vially) a halfe Moone: within were reported to burne continually two thousand Lampes. The floore of the Church-yard being white Marble, occupying a bow-shot about the Temple, maketh such a reflexion of the Sun-beames, that a man is not able to endure it.

This Temple the Saracens haue in such reuerence, that the Soldan did then entitle himselfe the high Priest and defender of it. They call it the Holy Rocke. If any Jew or Christian enter therein, they compell him to deny his Religion, and turne Turke, or else they cut him asunder in the middle: which hapned to a Christian Maronite, about fixe moneths before, 30 who in a Turkish habite had entred: but being knowne, for feare denied his Faith, but with reluctation of his conscience reuoked this selfe soone after, and liued after such a dissembling three houres. Neere this Temple is another, sometimes called Salomons porch, by the Christians dedicate to our Ladie, larger then is now that of Salomons, in which eight hundred Lampes were said to burne continually. Vnder both these wee are told, that there is a large Vault with admirable rowes of pillars, able to receiue many thousands. Breidenbachius Chancellor and Deane of Meniz, who visited those places about twentie yeeres before him, writes almost the same things; saue that hee placeth but seuen hundred Lampes in this Temple of Salomon, or (as the Saracens called it) the Holy Rocke. The Soldan then liuing had built another neere it with eightie eight Lampes continually burning. Hee with 40 his companions had like to haue bene slaine by the Saracens, for offering to enter another Temple in Mount Sion, wherein was said to bee the sepulchers of the Kings of Iuda. The Saracens come farre in pilgrimage to the Holy Rocke (so they call it of the Rocke aforesaid, which is grated about with iron) which they dare not touch, for the reputed sanctitie and reported rarities thereof; *Melchisedech*s offering, Jacobs dreame of the Ladder (which yet some haue ascribed to the stone now at Westminster) Ieremies enclosing the Arke, by some supposed to be still therein; and a world of wonders told thereof. Ludolphus Sutherlandius relateth of this bloudie dissection of such as entred therein. But it is high time for vs to bee gone out of this fowle with vs cut asunder in the midst, and this prolixie Historie made shorter by the halfe.

Thus Palestina continued wholly subiect to the Saracens; who after being diuided into sects, the Egyptian called Siba, preuailed against the Persian or Easlerne called Sunni, and obtained all as farre as Antioch, and the Christians of those parts were in some tolerable condition, till the dayes of Heguen the Calipha, who rased to the ground the Temple of the Resurrection built in the time of Constantine, and repaired by Heraclius: hee forbade them the keeping of holy solemniities, and afflicted them with manifold other oppressions, forcing many to Apostacie. In the time of Daber sonne of Heguen the Church was re-built. Ann. Dom. 1048. But the greedie gouernours cruelly exacted on the Christians, still threatening if their purposes were not effected, to demolish their Temple. Yet these full sties were farre more gentle then those their meagre and hungry successours, the 60 Turkes, which hauing conquered these parts, tyrannized most cruelly both here and in the parts of the lesser Asia, Belpheh^b the Turke hauing ouerthrowne & taken Diogenes the Christian Asian Emperour in battell; whom hee vsed & a Settle; ascending or descending his Throne. Thus Tyrus, Raimond de Agiles testifieth, that the Sassans or Christians of those parts, of whom remained about Libanus sixtie thousand, at that time of the Franks inuasion, (so called as hee supposeth of Syr, the name of Tyrus till this day) endured such miserie both in this Turkish and that former Saracenic all slaueerie, that many were compelled to forsake their Religion, and be circumcised: some others for feare deliuered their young children to Circumcision, and some were violently taken to this purpose out of their mothers bowes, the father being slaine, and the mother violated. Churches were subuerted, Altars ouerthrowne, and superstitious Images by a contrary superstition were done away: and if any mans deuotion desired them in priuatie, they were forced by a monthely or yeerely price to redeeme them. They prostituted in Steues their sonnes and daughters, and yet the mother durst not weepe at the sight.

§. III.

Of the exploits of the Franks and other Westerne Christians in Palestina.

TWENTIE eight yeeres they groaned vnder this Turkish yoke, from which they were freed by the Franks and other Westerne Nations, vnder the conduct of Godfrey of Bullion, Robert of Normandie sonne to the Conquerour, and other, who by the instigation of Peter the Eremit first, (whom they so admited, that his words and deeds were accounted diuine, and the very hayre plucked off his Mule for Reliques) and after of Pope Urban (calling a Councell at Claremont to this purpose) crossed themselues: to warre in and for the Holy land against the Infidels. God blessed their designs, and gaue into their hands all the three Palestina's: for so they were diuided according to the three chiefe Cities, Ierusalem the first, the second vnder Casarea, the third adjacent to Scythopolis, and subiected by the Christians to Nazareth. From Antiochia to Egypt, and as farre as Edesse, was subdued to the Christian Faith and Scepter, farre more then Dauid or Salomon possessed. They had (saith Petrus) foure principalities, that of Edesse, chiefe Citie (after his account) of Media, the second of Antiochia, the third of Tripoli, the fourth of Ierusalem. But of their happie atchieuements another place is fitter. They which list to be acquainted with these warres; besides Tyrensis, Vitriacis, Sannitis and others of later times, may out of the writings of diuers eye-witnesses which were in that first expedition, satisfie themselues, as Robertus Monachus, Raimundus de Agiles, Fulcherius Carnotensis, and diuers others.

Ierusalem was entered on the twelfth of Iuly 1099. being Friday; and after much blood and slaughter in the Citie, they set vpon those which had betaken themselues to Salomons Temple (so was that called which Homar built) where, saith Robertus Monachus, was so much blood shed, that the slaine bodies were rolled by the force thereof, and armes or dismembred hands swamme vpon the blood, and were ioyned to strange bodies: the killing soldiers were scarce able to endure the hot vapours of the blood of the slaine. Guibertus Abbas saith, the blood reached to the ancles; Baldricus, to the calfes of the legges; Raimond de Agiles, that they rode in blood vp to the knees, and to the brydles of the Hories, and Fulcherius, that there were slaine in this Temple about ten thousand, and many of them were tipped vp by the Franks to finde gold which they had swallowed, and the bodies after burned in heaps to finde the mettall in the ashes. Albertus Auenensis addeth, that the third day after the victorie, for feare of the remained captiued Saracens, (lest they might ioyne with the enemy against them) and in furious zeale, they made a fresh massacre, slaying those which for pittie, or couetousnesse of rancome, they had in hotter blood spared: not the honour of Noble Matrons, nor the delicacie of tender Maydens, nor the children yet in the wombes of their pregnant mothers, nor the Infants now sucking at the breast, nor the hopes of innocent yonglings, playing or crying by the mothers hauds; not sighes, teares, promises, prayers, lamentable cries, twining embraces of the legges, bodies, hands of the bloudie Souilder, could stay the hand euen then giuing the fatal blow, but Ierusalem was now againe filled with slaine carcasses. Generally it is agreed, that they found much wealth in the Citie to pay them for their pines. Soone after they encountered an Armie of three hundred thousand Saracens, which they ouerthrew, being but twentie thousand Christians: where Robert Duke or Earle (for I finde both Titles often giuen him, but in ancient Stories of those times, both hee and King William his father are ofteneft called Earles) of Normandie tooke tooke with his owne hand, the chiefe stander of the Enemy (being a long speare covered with siluer, with a golden Globe or Apple on the top, hauing slaine the bearer, and thereby testifying the enemy and putting them to rout) which was long after referred as a monument in the Temple of the Sepulchre.

Many other victories being obtained, the Saracens were either expelled Palestina, or subjected to the Franks, and the Christians which were poorer & few recovered freedom. Yet as few as they were in the Cities, Raimond tells of three score thousand Surians, or Christians of that Countrey, which in this long Saracenicall night continued their habitations in the Mountaines of Libanus. But of this is no maruell: for even till these dayes, notwithstanding the manifold changes and changes of those Regions and peoples, there haue in the Mountaines and Desarts of Palestina and Syria liued some Nations, neither acknowledging the Saracenicall Law nor Empire.

Of the Azopari and Assysine.

Azopari.

Were the Azopari which liued in Caves in the Desarts of Ascalon, which King Baldwin the successour of Godfrey sought to smother and fire out of their dens, and by cunning Strata: gems destroyed as many as hee could: and iustly. For these being blacke in hue, blacker in conditions, vied to rob and slay such as they could lay hold on. Such were the Assysines, which liued in the Province of Tyre, as Tyrinus reports of them: not farre from Antaradus, which had ten strong holds with the Countrey adiacent, and were thought to bee in number sixtie thousand. Their gouernment went not by inheritance, but by Election: the chiefe or Grand Master of them being called The Old Man, who was obeyed in whatsoever hee commanded, were the attempt neuer so dangerous. If he gaue to one or more of them a weapon, and enioyned the killing of such an Enemy, Prince or priuate man, they gladly undertooke it, with the death of that partie, or themselves in attempt. Both Saracens and Christians called them (the reason of the name vnknewne) Assysines. For the space of foure hundred yeeres they were zealous followers in a preciser course of the Mahometan Sect. But about the time when our Author the Archbishop of Tyre wrote this, their OLD MAN grew into distaste of his Religion; and by reading the Scriptures, became desirous of Christianitie. Hee perswaded his Subiects also to forsake Mahometisme, prohibiting their Fasts, demolishing their Molches, allowing Swines flesh. He sent also to Almaricus King of Ierusalem, offering to turne Christian, if hee might liue peaceably, and bee released of two thousand Byzantines, which hee yeetly paid for quietnesse to the Knights Templers, who had certaine Castles bordering on him. The King was content to pay this money himselfe; but by the treacherie of the Templers, the Legat was slaine, and foule scandall inflicted on the Christian name, the Assysines neuer after returning to their old Mahometrie, or turning anew to Christianitie. Mathew Paris relateth, that these Assysines thus closely and treacherously murdered Raimund Earle of Tripolis Anno Dom. 1150. Paulus Emilius affirmeth, that these Assysines came out of Persia, that they were taught from their child-hood diuers Languages, and to conceiue it meritorious of heavenly reward to kill the enemies of their Faith, that their OLD MAN was called also Asfada. Two of them (saith hee) slew Raimund, two of them after slew Conrad Ferratensis walking in the Market-place of Tyre, which Citie hee had defended against the enemies, who being executed therefore, seemed very cheerefull. And Saint Leuis himselfe hardly elaped the like treacherie.

Marcus Paulus reporteth of one in the North-East parts of Persia, called The Old Man of the Mountaine, by proper name Aloudin, which had built a strong Castle, and therein an imaginarie Paradise, who vied that Assafine myserie, promising to reward these murderers with the pleasures of Paradise, a taste of which in all fleshly delights hee had before given them. In the Tartarian conquest (sayth Odoricus) he had so slaine diuers Tartars, which therefore besieged his Castle, and after three yeeres siege forced it for want of victuall. So Paulus; but Haithonus hath seuen and twentie yeeres, and that then it was yielded for want of clothes, and not of meates: hee calls this Castle Tagido, and the inhabitants by the former names of Assafines. This was done by Haalon the Tartar Anno 1263. About a hundred yeeres since they tell of the like Paradise of Aladenles in those parts destroyed by Selm the Turke: but I thinke it was rather the memorie of Aloudin, then any truth of Aladenles. It is most remarkeable, that Marcus Paulus testifieth of two Deputies or Lieutenants vnder him, the one in Churdislan, where the like generation of irreligious and Dogzjin or Drusians.

ANother like both People and Sect, Brethren in euill, were the Dogzjin, of whom Beniamin thus writeth. About ten miles from Sidon, there is a certaine people which holds warre with the Sidonians, called in their language Dogzjin, or others called Pagans, of no Religion or Sect: They dwell in the Mountaines, in Caues, and holts of Rocks, obeying no King or Gouernor, but liue at randome in the highest Hills, and steepest Rockes, three dayes iourney vnto the Hill Hermon. They are infamously incestuous, the Fathers polluting their owne Daughters. And in a solemnitie which they yeerely celebrate, all both men and women come to a common Feast, where they change Wiues with each other. They hold that the soule, when it departeth out of the body of a good man, passeth into some Infant then begotten: but of a bad man, into a Dog or other Beast. Their knowledge is according to their life. There are no Iewes amongst them, but sometimes Artificers, and diuers come vnto them for Marchandize, and goe away againe, and the Iewes are gently entertained of them. This people is very swift in running vp and downe those hills, and not to be vanquished of other men. Thus saith Tudela.

Martin a Baumgarten relateth, that the Venetian Consull told him of a Sect not farre from Tripoli, which vsed at certaine times promiscuous lusts, the Father with the Daughter, the Mother with the Sonne, and each with his next Mate: The issue thereof if Male, to be killed with needles, as sacrificing their blood, the Females preferred. Hee names them not. But it is likely to be the posteritie of those Dogzjin, perhaps that of killing their Males being added by such as make bad things worse (and yet Epiphanius reporteth of the Gnostikes, as great or worse abominations) for euen the Duell himselfe may be slandered. But long before his time, Jacobus de Vitruaco did write of a certaine miserable people liuing in the Mountaines, and not farre from Tripoli, which in great part obserued the Law of Mahomet, but had another budden Law which they said they might reueale to no man, but to their owne Children, when they grew to be of ripe age. Their wiues and daughters, with an implicit faith professe a beliefe in the same, but know it not. And if the Sonne should vpon any cause reueale it to his Mother, the Husband would slay his Wife, and the Father his Sonne. These ate Swines flesh, and drinke Wine, and of other Saracens are accounted Heretikes. These haue their workes of darknesse in secret, wherein they practise filthinesse, and such thing: as are contrarie to the Female sexe, and therefore feare lest their wiues would not endure their execrable rites, if they were therewith acquainted.

Howsoever the case standeth, a filthy Sect it was and is. For euen still it continueth: and (if my coniecture deceiue not) these are those Drusians of which many Authors haue written, filially furnishing them to bee the Relikes of the Latine Armies, and of those Franks which sometime possessed these parts of Syria. I deny not but that some of these might ioyne vnto them, in and for that fellowship of filthinesse; as heere in these parts, many debauched beasts, with those beastly Gypsies: yea, I thinke that the Assassines and these, since the Tartars destroyed the chiefe of that Sect in Persia, and possessed the parts of Syria, haue growne into one people; receiued also into their societie whatsoever dregges of Nations, male-contentes, exiles, and vniuely borderers, those Mountaines could secure, in, and throw all the changes of State and Dominion, which those Countries haue suffered; which freedome they retyed not onely to the weaker, and more vntitled government of the Mamelukes and Egyptian Soldans, but euen still continue (in some sort) notwithstanding the Ottomans greatness. Circumcision they embrace with the Turkes, vsed the libertie of Christians in drinking Wine, and more then beastly licentiousnesse in incestuous copulations with their owne Daughters. Thus Botero. Knolls in his Turkish Historie saith, they follow one Iman, a Prophet of their owne, and are not Circumcised. But I haue learned of a friend of mine, one Master Pannesse, who hath had acquaintance with them, that they are Circumcised. And that they are of those Dogzjin which Beniamin mentions, it is apparant by their place of abode, by their hereticall Sect and Customes so like, and by their name easily changed from Dogzjin to Dotzjin, and so to Drozjin or Druzjin, an easier change then so long a time, and forsaie pronunciation vsually admit.

* Cartwright, Barbaro, and others.

Biddulph writes, that they retain still Baptisme, and the names of Christians, but are colled Rosties, that is, Infidels. Selym the second sought to bring them vnder the Turkish yoke, and his successors likewise till these dayes, yet both these and the Arabians were neuer made fully subiect. Thus the ancient Scythians, the Reisbuti in the Mogols Countrey of Cambia, the Curdi, other Mountaine inhabitants and borderers (as also a long time the Welshmen in Wales) vnder the greatest Soueraignities haue enioyed a kinde of freedome, secured by the mountainous situation, their naturall hardinesse, and the greatest cause, their pouerrie, as a bootlesse bootie, and worthlesse conquest, to buy barenesse and barrenesse with the price of blood. These Drusians are a people warlike, and religious obseruers of their owne superstition, yeelding due obedience vnto their naturall Lords: they wear long coats, reaching to the knees, buttoned before, and no breeches: and vie the Arcubuse and Scimarar. They are increased in numbers, (which might come to passe by the long warres, which the Westerne Christians with often inuasions made in those parts after they were dispossessed of the Kingdome of Ierusalem; the same seconded by the Tartars a long time: and after it was the confines of the Turkish and Mamalukes Empires: so that it is no maruell if they bee of sundry Nations and Religions, being the confluence of so many people, and sinke of so many Sects, howsoeuer the Drusians name bee predominant. They inhabit from Ioppa, to Czarca and Damasco. Some dissensions among their Princes gaue opportunitee to Ebrain Bassa, An. Dom. 1585. to spoyle their Countrey, and extort what hee could, one of them helping to cut the others throat, yet neuer could he force Man-Oglito to come in and submit himselfe, although herein he used the Turkish forces, and wildest stratagems, then also inuesting Aly Ebreo-Carus in the foresaigntie, swearing him to the Turke, and carying with him Ebene-Mansur, and Serafsadin, two of the Drusian Princes which had submitted themselves in his Gallies, as prisoners to Constantinople.

Knoke Anar. 3.

- They are still sit is the Relation of a Traueller) gouerned by a succession of Princes whom they call Emirs. The present Emir of Sidon, is Faccardine, a man neuer scene to pray, nor in a Mosque; small of stature, courageous and tyrannicall. Hee neuer commenceth battell, nor executeth any notable designe, without the consent of his Mother a woman skilled in Magickes. To his Fowne hee hath added a Kingly Signiorie, what by his sword, and what by his stratagems. He pickt a quarrell with Ioseph Emir of Tripoli, and disposset him of Baruc, and after sackt Tripoli it selfe, and forced the Emir to flie to Cyprus: and when with the forces of Damasco (for hee got to be made Seidar or Gouernour of the Souldierie there) he sought to repaie his losses in the field, the Damascens were foyled, and pursued to the gates of their Citie, the conquerours lodging in the Suburbs, whence they were removed by the force of fifteene hundred thousand Sultanies. This was Anno 1606. Thus vnder the tytle of a Subiect to the Turke, but yeelding obedience at large, he holdeth Gazir, Batut, Sidon, Tyrus, Acre, Saffet, or Tyberias, Diar, Camer, Elkiffe, the two heads of Iordn, the Lake Be-mochom his (now called Houle) and Sea of Tyberias with the hot Bath adioyning, Nazareth, Cana, and Mount Tabor. Saffet is his principall Citie, in which are many Iewes. The grand Signior often threatens his subuersion, both for his incroaching, and intelligence with the Florentines, which hee diuerteth with gifts and fauour: but yet provides for it by fortifying his holds, able to hold out a long warre, hauing also fortie thousand expert souldiers in continuall pay, besides the advantage of the Mountaines, and in greatest extremities, the Sea and the Florentine. Hee hath the fifth part of the increase of all things, and head-money for all Castell within his dominions, and two Dollers yeerely for the head of every Iew and Christian. The Marchants are there so safe, that they may trauell with their purses in their hands, yet subiect to tyrannicall seizures, vpon the death of Factor or Owner. But more then enough of these Drusians, and other peoples mingled with them. Biddulph mentions Vseph Beg, or Lord Ioseph, which in the Mountaines holds out against the Turke: he tells also of one Asan Balhaw, which ruleth like a King in an ancient Citie called Achiller, paying duties to the Turke successively from his predecessours of the house, as it is sayd of Sanballat, and is called Eben Sumboloc, and his Kindred call one another Amiogli, for they account themselves Ammonites. This Bashaw is old, and referreth matters of gouernement to his kinsman Vseph Beg. It should seeme they are some reliques of the Cutheans or Samaritans, which perhaps ioyned with the Drusians in many things. There are also in these parts of Palistin many Arabians, which it seemes haue pestered those places euer since the inuasion of Homar, if not before; and these still vse to pray vpon the Pilgrims that trauell to Ierusalem, notwithstanding the conduct of Ianizaries. Of these Arabians, one Sect is called * Bedouins, which imagining the day of euery mans death fatally destind, neuer goe armed to battell, vsing only Spears and Swords, disdainning Bowes and Arrowes, as tokens of cowardise. These are false alike to Christians and Saracens, easily betraying either, alway adding themselves to the strongest: dwell in Tents, goe clothed with skins, wander vp and downe in Tribes, still seeking fresh pastures, feed on Milke, and commit the care of all businesse to their wiues. Some of the Easterne people worship to the East, which they say, they learned of their fathers that were Christians, themselves being Mahumetians, yet account other Saracens hereticall: and some esteeme the Sunne to bee the chiefe God. Thus Vitriacus.

Of the vncbristian Christians.

Such are and haue beene the vnholly Inhabitants of the Holy Land since the Jewes expulsion, neither can wee say much better of their conquerours the Persians, Arabians, Turkes, Tartars, Mamalukes, and after these the Turkes in the Ottoman Dynastie: no, nor can wee commend the Christians for much Christianitie, whether the native Sutors, (some of which haue passed through all these changes without any great change, either to the Saracenicall or Westerne Rites from their Greekeish) or their invaders and conquerours. For these soone degenerated into an vncbristian Christianitie, and were called Pulam, succcessors of the places, not the conditions of those which passed thither with Duke Godfrey. They gaue themselves to effeminate delicacies, to excess in dyet and apparell, full of intestine discords and ciuill contentions, coozners and false, addicted to Witch-crafts and Diuinations, contumeliously abusing Pilgrims, whom deuotion had brought from farre Countries thither, or which came to helpe them against the Saracens, calling them in scorne the sonnes of Hernand. The Maronite Christians were in times past sixtie thousand, but now are few: neither is this a fit place for discourse of that and other Sects of Christians liuing in, or frequenting these holy places, Nestorians, Iacobites, Abassens, Armenians, Georgians, Greekes and others. But the conditions of the Inhabitants at that time, wee mention as the cause of the losse of that Countrey to the Saracens: the Clergie minding more (as a Clergie man of their owne expresseth) the Churches goods then her good; to fleece, then to feed their flockes; the Regulars enriched with possessions, religion brought fourth wealth, and the daughter ate vp the mother. The Native Laytie melted in lusts and pleasures, grew more fearefull then women, except they were assisted with the Frankes, English, or other Westerne people: strengthening themselves in the strength of their contentions, against their Christian brethren with Saracenicall assistance. Their wives they mewed vp very close from the sight, almost of brethren and nearest kindred, scarce suffering them to visit the Church once in a yeere: some of the greater ones erecting Altars in their wiues bed-chambers, whereon some sillie Priest might mumble his Paros mummus. They the more enraged, yfed all meanes with womens wiles and deuillish wils by Sorceries, or any other meanes to effect their filthy purposes. It was also made a refuge and receptacle of the most disordered persons in these Westerne parts, Theeues, Robbers, Perjured, Adulterers, Traytors, Murderers, Parricides, Pyrats, Apostate Monks, and Nunnes, which became common harlots, and other monstres in shapes of men and women, passing the Sea to this Land entituled Holy; where Caelum non animam, changing soyle not soule; they practised the like villanies with lesse shame, being further from their friends. And easily might they escape after greatest mischiefs, either running as Renegadoes to the Saracens, or escaping by ship to some neere Iland, or to such priuiledged Sanctuaries, as euery Religious house afforded, to the preiudice of iustice and Religion. Some also which in Europe had beene condemned for some crimes, by mediation of friends obtained this exchange of punishment to be sent hither, where they became harbourers of Whores, Gamers, Murderers, and for further impunitie were at a yeerely fee with the great ones. Neither could the feare of humane Iustice, or diuine Iudgements reclaim them, many terrible Earthquakes happening amongst them, (by one of which Tyus was almost vterly together with the Inhabitants destroyed) shake their earthie hardened hearts, or moue them to relent. No maruell if the Land could no longer brooke such Inhabitants, but exposed them to the sword of the Saracens, and then againe (for so the father when hee hath chastened his children, casts the rod into the fire) to the Tartars, and from one to another, till the Turke now Lords it amongst them in fort as you haue heard. And euen still the wickednesse of the people in vnnaturall lusts, and namelesse filthinesse is such, that I abhorre further to write of it: so is this paradise of the world, both in bodily and spirituall pleasures and fruitfulnessse, now become a desolate wilderness for the one, and disconsolate in the other, whiles one is loath to sow for another to reap. Insuper Dominus, & Insuper iudicia tua.

CHAP. I.

Customes thereof.*

ARABIA is a very large Region, ^a lying between two Bayes or Gulfs of the Sea, the Persian on the East, and that which hereof is called the Arabian, on the West: On the South is the Ocean; on the North is Syria and Euphrates. ^b Plinius sets downe the Northerne Limits, the Hill Amanus, ouer against Cilicia and Commagena; many Colonies of them being there planted by Tigranes the Great: it thence (sayth hee) declineth to our Sea and the Egyptian shore, and to the heart of Syria to Mount Libanus. By a certaine workmanship of Nature, it much resembleth the forme and site of Italy. ^c Arabia signifieth Holy, as Solmus affirmeth. But in the Scripture רַבִּי Harabi signifieth both a robber by the way, and an Arabian. So Ier. 32. In ⁴ the wayes thou hast sate for them as the Arabian in the Wildernesse, in the vulgar Latine is translated, Expellans eos quasi latro insidians in solitudine. Saint Hierome interprets רַבִּי ^e Arabia & vesper & cornus & planities & occident, and acknowledgeth the finesse of the former name in Ieremie, answering the condition of the people giuen to robbe on the borders of Palestina, and all Travellers from Ierusalem to Iericho. Thus hee comments on that place of Ieremie, which he translates, Quasi latro in solitudine, the Hebrew being Harabi. Hence Martin del Rio, Adeo autem latrocinijs infames, ut Hebraei Arabi latro-nem denotet, sicut Chananæus Mercatorem, Chaldeus Mathematicum. From the practice of the people their proper names became appellatives, an Arabian for a robber, (as Sarak also) a Chananite for a Marchant, a Chaldean for a Mathematician. The Nations of this wide Tract of Land are many. It is the next to bee spoken of in this our Discourse, according to Geographicall methode, as confining vpon Iudæa, whence wee last departed.

¹ Some deriue the name from Arabu, the sonne of Apollo and Babylonia. And the forged Berosus of Annius telleth, That Ianus Pater sent one Sabius into Arabia Felix, Arabus into Arabia Deserta; and Petræus into Petræa, all Nephewes of Cham; all indeed the Sonnes of Annius his braine. True it is, that Arabia is commonly diuided into those three parts, Petræa, Deserta, and Felix. Of the Nations in Arabia, Plinius writeth largely, amongst the rest naming naming the Saracens, whom S. Hierome often, Epiphanius also, and other of the ancient Fathers mention, of which we are anon to speak at large. But long before Plinie, the Scripture speaketh of the people of this Region, not only those which are said to descend of Cush, the sonne of Cham, but of many others, which descended of Abraham, as Ishmael the sonne of Abraham, by Hagar; and Zimram, and Iokshan, and Medan, and Midian, and Ishbak, and Shuah, with their posteritie the issue of Abraham by Keturah: who, after that Seba, and Sabbetha, and Rama, and Sabthea, had peopled some parts of Arabia, were sent away with their portions Eastward to the East Countrey, that is into Arabia; where it is likely they mingled their Seed and Generations with those former of the posteritie of Cham: for therefore it seemeth Moses wife, Ziporah, was called a Cushite, or (as some read) an Ethiopian, notwithstanding shee was of the Countrey Ethiopia in Africa, but a Midianite of Arabia, of Abraham's race; which Countrey, because the posteritie of Cush had first inhabited, and happily had mingled themselves in marriages with them, shee is called a Cushite, which some wrongly expound, an Ethiopian, if they understand it properly, although Cush were also the Father of the Ethiopians. But of this name Ethiopia, sometimes taken more largely, otherwhiles more straitly, you shall see more in our seventh Booke, the first Chapter. This posteritie of Abraham are, in Scripture, often called the children of the East. Saint Hierome reckons also to Arabia the Humans, Mosabites and Ammonites; and certaine it is, that the places sometimes by them inhabited, are now accounted to Arabia. The many names of the Arabian Nations, they which will, may read in Plinie and others. Mohamed & Ben-Iacob Sirazita, Author of the Arabike Dictionary, affirmeth, that Laarob (called Ierab, Gen. 10. 25.) sonne of Cabbrian, or Iekhan, was Author of the Arabike tongue, which was brought to perfection by Ishmael son of Abraham; who dwelt in a Region called Araba of that Laarob, whence the whole land of Arabia tooke name.

The name Felix, or Happie, is given to the Southerly parts of Arabia, for the fertility thereof; the name Petraea to a second part, of Petra the seat Royall, after called Arach, of Aretas an Arabian King.

The Desart Arabia hath a name answerable to the nature thereof; being, in great part, without Inhabitants, for the barrenesse of the soile: as is also a great part of that which is called Petraea. This Desart Arabia is also called Astera, Inferior, Cana, and of the Hebrewes Cedar. It is bounded on the East with Babylonia, and part of the Persian Gulfe; on the North with Melopotamia, neere to Euphrates; on the West, with Syria and Arabia Petraea; on the South, are the Mountaines of Arabia Felix. Neere to them and to Euphrates it hath some Townes, and is frequented with Marchants, otherwhere partly unpeopled, partly (Strabo therefore termeth it Scenitis) fed with such Roving Arabians, as have no dwelling houses, but remove to and fro, seeking where to finde pasture for their Beasts, and lodge in Tents.

David accounteth himselfe miserable for this dwelling in the Tents of Kedar, or (as Tremellius reads it) y^e as the Scenites of Kedar. Thus did the Patriarkes of old, thus did the Scythians, and thus doe the Tartars, and the Arabians in Asia, Africa, and Europe, at this day, toming, rousing, robbing: and therefore the Jewes call the Tartarians Kedarim, because of their like courie of life.

They which dwell in Townes and Cities, observing a more ciuill life, are called Moorees, the other Arabians, in more proper appellation, or Beduines. The name Moorees was given them of the Spaniards, because out of Mauritania they invaded Spaine, and now is taken usually, not so much for the Inhabitants of the Arabian Cities, as for all of the Arabian and Mahumetan superstition. Bosra is the chiefe Citie.

Arabia Petraea adioyneth on the West and North to Syria; on the East to the Desart Arabia, on the South to the Happie. Plinie, Strabo, and Ptoleme, call it Nabathæa: Some thinke, of Naboth, sonne of Ishmael. Tyrius calls it Arabia Secunda. Now it is called by Rufcelli, 50 Barab; or after Ziglerus, Barra; or Bathalatha, after Castaldus. Mela ascribeth the Hill Casius hereto: which, faith hee, is so high, that from the fourth watch of the night, or the last quarter thereof, it sheweth the Sunne-rising. But Nonius Puntianus correcteth him, saying, there are two Casii, the one of Syria, the other of Arabia, and that this report is to be applied to the Syrian Casius: wherein Sebottus is of another minde.

Night to Syria it is more plentifull, then in other parts. The scarcity of wood and water, with the barrenesse of the soile in other places, shew how it is maligned of the Elements. Both in this part, and the former, they had need goe strong and well accompanied, for feare of robbrie and spoile, which the Arabians attend.

This part is famous vnto all Generations, not so much for the Amalakites, Midianites, and for other their bordering Neighbours (of whom, and their Religion somewhat is spoken before) as for the miraculous passage of the Israelites through the same, and abode therein fortie yeeres, in which time they received the Law, were fed with Manna; their Meate, Drinke, Clothing, Iudgements, Mercies, continually yeelding miraculous evidence of Gods presence amongst them.

Bellonius visited the Mount Sinai: he z faith a is a mile and a halfe from Horeb, and farre higher: from whose top, (which is hard stone a of yron colour) may both shores of the Red Sea be seene. This Sea is not therefore called Red, because either the ground or the sand, or the water thereof is Red, as Bellonius hath obserued, for none of them is b so. The people thereabouts take care for no other houfes than the boughes of Palme-trees, to keepe them from the heat of the Sunne (for raine they haue but feldome: the cattell are lesse there than in Egypt). In the ascent of Mount Sinai are steps cut out in the Rocks: they beegynne to ascend it at breake of day, and it was afternoone before they could get to the Monasterie of Maronite Christians, which is on the top thereof. There is also a Meschit there for the Arabians and Turkes, who resort thither on pilgrimage as well as the Christians. There is a Church also on the top of Mount Horeb, and another Monasterie at the foot of the Hill: besides other Monasteries, wherein Iulv religious people, called Caloveri, observing the Greeke Rites, who shew all (and more then all) the places renowned in Scriptures, and Antiquities to Pilgrims. They are neither flesh nor white meates. They allow food vnto strangers such as it is, rice, wheat, beanes, and such like, which they set on the floore without a cloth, in a wooden dish, and the people comfote themselves to eate the same, after the Arabian manner, (which is to sit vpon their heeles, touching the ground with their toes, whereas the Turkes sit crosse-legged like Taylors.) There is exarant an Epistle of Engenius Bishop of M. Sinai, written 1569, to Charles the Arch-duke, wherein hee complaineth, that the Great Turke had caused all the revenues of the Churches and Monasteries to bee sold: whereby they were forced to pledge there Holy Vessels, and to borrow on Vfurie.

Arabia Felix stretcheth from hence Southwards, having on all parts of the Sea : againt which it doth abut the space of three thousand five hundred and foure miles. Ungel calls it Panchaea, now ^d Ayaman, or Giamen. This seemeth to bee the Countrey wherein Saba stood, chiefe Citie of the Sabazans, whose Queene visited Salomon : for so the Jewes reckon howlocuer the Abissins challenge her to themselves. Aben Esra on Dan. 11. calls this Saba Aliman or Alieaman : and Salmanticensis, Ieman, ^e which is all f one (for all is but the Article) signifying the South : as the Scriptures also call her Queene of the South. For so it was situate, not to Ludza alone, but to the Petrea and Defari Arabia. The name Seba or Saba agreeth also with the name of Sheba, Gen. 10. 7. As for Sheba the Nephew of Abraham by Keturah, it is like he was founder of the other Seba or Saba in Arabia Deferta, the elder posterie of Chush, having before seateed themselves in the more fertile Southerne countrey; and because both peoples, thesein Arabia, and those in Africa were comprehended under one generall name of Ethiopia, hence might those of Africa take occasion to vsurpe the Antiquities of the other. Yea, it is more likely that these Abissins in Africa a thousand yeeres after that the Queene was buried, were seateed in Arabia, and thence passed in later ages into Africa, subduing those Countreies to them. For so hath Stephanus, Actus 13. ¹⁰ Agas : & de Zaidus. The Abissins (so we now call those Ethiopsians in the Empire of Presbyter John) are Nation of Arabia, beyond the Sabazans : and the Nubian Geographer diuers times mentions Salomons wife in Arabia, which I cannot interpret but of that Queene : so that out of Arabia they carried this Tradition with them, as it is likely, into Africa, where want of learning, and plentie of superstition, had so increased their Legend of this Queene, as we shall after heare.

Beniamin Tadelens' weth likewife, that the Region of Saba is now called the Land of Altman, and that it extendeth fixtene dayes journeys alongh the Hills : in all which Region there were of those Arabians, which had no certaine dwellings, but wandered vp and downe in Tents, robbing the neighbour Nations (as is also reported of the Saracens neere Mecca, which gouernment of Mecca, both Beniamin and Salmancenis is adioyne to that of Aliman, or the Kingdome of Saba : for so, faith he, the Lewes in those parts fill call the chiefe Citie of that Kingdome.) It hath flore of Riuers, Lakes, Townes, Cities, Cattell, fruits of many forts. The chiefe Cities are Medina, Mecca, Ziden, Zebit, Aden. Beniamin addeth Theima, or Theman, a Citie walled fiftene miles fquare, enclosing ground for tillage in the walls. Tillmas also, Chibar and others. There is flore of fluer, gold, and varietie of gemmes. There are also wilde beafts of diuers kinde, as flore for the Phoenix, because I (and not alone) thinke it is fable, as neither agreeing to reason nor likelihood, and plainly disagreeing to the Historie of the Creation, and of Nashs Arke, in both which God made all Male and Female, and comanded them to increase and multiply, I thinke it not worthily recitall. One wonder of Nature done in Abisa Citie of this Region, will not, I thinke, bee distastfull : cited by Phothius out of Diodorus Siculus, written in some part of his workes which is now wanted. One Diaphantus a Macedonian being married to an Arabian woman in that Citie Abis, had by her a daughter.

daughter called Heraus, which in ripe age was married to one Samades, who having liued a yeere with her, did after trauell into farre Countries. In the meane time, his wife was troubled with an vncouth and strange discafe: A swelling arose about the bottome of her belly, which on the seventh day breaking, there proceeded thence those parts whereby Nature distinguishing men from the other sexe: which secrets shee kept secret notwithstanding, continuing her womans habit till the returne of her husband. Ludovicus Vertomannus, or Barthema (as Ramusius nameth him) tells & at large his journey through all this threefold Arabia: he trauelled from Damasco to Mecca Anno 1503. with the Carauan of Pilgrimes and Marchants, being often by the way fet vpon by Arames of those Theeuish and Beggerly Arabians. This journey is of fortie dayes trauell, traouelling two and twentie houres, and resting two for their trespast. After many dayes they came to a Mountaine inhabited with Iewes, ten or twelue miles in circuit, which were naked, and were of small stature about five or sixe spannes high, black of colour, circumcised, speaking with a wominish voice. And if they get a Moore in their power, they slay him a lue. They saw there certaine white thornes, and in the same two Turtles, which seemed to them as a miracle: for in fiftene daies and nights they had neither seene Birds nor Beasts. They giue their Camells by the way not aboute five Barly loaues at a meale, as bigge as a Pomegranate, and drinke once in three dayes. At the end of eight dayes they stayed a day or two to rest them. Their Pilot directeth their journey by the Compasse (in Diadorus times, they obserued the North-starre) no lesse then if it had bene at Sea. They trauelled five dayes and nights through the sandie Sea, which is a great plaine Champaine, full of a small white sand-like meale: where if, by some disaister, the winde blow from the South, they are all dead men. And although they had the winde at North, yet could they not see one another about ten paces off. And such as ride on Camels, are inclosed with wood, with holes to recieue the aire; the Pilots going before with their Compasse for direction. Many dyed there for thirst, and many with tulesse, drinking too much when once they came at water. When the North windes blow, those sands are driuen to a heape. He supposed that Mummia was made of such as the sands had surpris'd and buried quicke: but the truer Mummia is made of embalmed bodies of men, as they vse to doe in Egypt, and other places. For I haue read, not onely of Women, but Infants also, (which were not likely to take such dangerous iourneys) whose bodies haue bene thus vfed to Mummia. As for the other parts of Arabia, they which list, may by this our Author, by Plinie, Niger, and others be informed further. The like iourney to this of Barthemas, is related by diuers latter Trauellers, Monsieur de Monfau, Anno 1608. went with a Carauan of 10000. from Aleppo to Bagdat. Their trauell (he sayth) was all by night, as well to auoide the vehement heate of the day, as to be guided by the starre. Their guides call themselves Pilots. They trauelled thirty dayes till they came to Nane, where they take water vpon Euphrates. They saw no beasts but Asles, Roes and Gazels (a kinde of wilde Goates) and Stagges innumerable, so wilde, that they often ranne through the Carauan: No fowles but Pigeons, which nestle in the ruines of olde Townes, sometimes inhabited, where also they made vse of olde welles, otherwise hauing no water but what they carryed in Borachoes made of whole Goates skinner. There can bee no path, by reason of the continuall motion of the sand by the wind. Their King hath 100000. horsemen subiect to him (gallant horse, men almost naked) himselfe subiect to the Turke.

To come to the disposition of the people, they are small, naked, beggerly. What they haue done in Asia, Africke, and Europe by force of Armes, vnder the name of Saracens and pretence of Religion, shall follow in the next Chapter: What they fill doe, if they meete with purchase, Trauellers know to their cost. Visually Arabians are reckoned eyther Marchants or Theeues: the one hauing certaine habitations, or else trading abroad. Serabo, Plinie, and Solinus admire their wealth, as selling much to others, and buying nothing, thus treasuring vp the wealth of the East and West, the Parthians and Romanes. Their Marchandize was golde, siluer, frankincense, with other spices. Their golde by Diadorus testimony was often found in whole pices, pure and shining, so that it gaue splendor and lustre to the gemmes inclosed therein: whence happily that of the Psalmes, To him shall bee giuen of

of the gold of Arabia. The ancient practice of Marchandise among some of the Arabian people, and namely, the Ismaelites, see in Scripture recordeth. For their ancient Religion, it is not like it could be good, when as they had no had an Author of their flocks, as Jacob Cham: the fountes of Abraham were better instructed; but as they were borne after the flesh, and not according to promise, so it they and some of their posteritie did a while hold the Truth (as the History of Iob and his friends cunctely) yet this lasted not long; but soon after in Leurie was God knowne, and he dealt not so with any other Nation. Herodotus (Father of the Greeke History) affirmeth in his Thalia, that the Arabians worshipped Dionysius, whom they named Vrotat; and Vrania, whom they called Allat; these alone they esteemed gods. They haue their Maidens like to Dionysius, in a round forme about the temples. Suidas telleth that they were excellent Archers, their Arrowes were as long as themselves: their Bowes they bent not with hands, but with feet.

Curio in his Saracenicall History testifieth of them, that as they descended in great part of Abrahams race by Ismael, the fountes of Keturab, and by Esau: so they of old had, and still retain in many rites obserued by the Hebrewes; as numbering by Tribes, and marrying onely within their owne Tribe: every Tribe also had their owne King (which it seemeth the Tent-wandering, or Scythians Arabians obserue still.) That some succeedeth not which is eldest, but hee which is borne first, after hee is proclaimed King or Ruler, being of Noble race on both sides. They vsed also Circumcision. For their Religion in old times; some were Christians, of which (about the times of Mahomet) there were many Sects: some were Iewes; others worshipped the Sonne and Moone; others, certaine Serpents; others, some Kindes of Trees; and some a Tower called Alcaba, which they supposed Ismael had built; and some others, some other Deities. Clemens Alexandrinus obiecteth to the ancient Scythians the worship of a Sword, to the Persians the like deuotion to a Riuer, adding, that the Arabians worshipped a Stone. Arnobius hath also the same Testimony, explaining that Stone to be rude and vnformed: a fit Deitie for rude, stony, senselesse worshippers.

Eusebius tells that they vsed humane sacrifices, which not onely Sardus confirmeth, saying that they sacrificed every yeere a child, whom they buried vnder the Altar; but Nicephorus also reported of one Naaman a Schenite Arabian, a Chieftaine amongst them, who in zeale of that superstition, killed men with his owne hands, and sacrificed them on the Altars to his gods: In the time of Manricius, warned by a vision, became a Christian, and with him an innumerable company of his, whom hee offered a liuing, vnbloudie sacrifice in Baptisme vnto Christ.

When they entred league with any, their manner was, that one standing in the midst betwene both parties, did wound the hand with a sharpe stone, in the palme neere to the thumbs of them both, and taking flocks of the garments of them both, anointed with that blood seven stones set in the midst of them: Meane while inuoking Dionysius and Vrania: and then this Mediator becommeth suretie for the partie, who thereby esteemeth himselfe bound to obserue it. And this did they make league with Cambyses. To these two Arabians gods, Great Alexander would haue added himselfe a third (saith Arrianns, in his life.) He made great provision to invade them, both because they had sent him no Embassage, and for that they worshipped onely these two Deities; Heauen, for that it containeth the Sun and Stars; and Dionysius, because he had invaded the Indians: and therefore equalling this his owne expedition to that of Dionysius, hee would also for robbing of men, be reckoned a god. Strabo saith, that in respect of the wealthinesse of this Countrey, he had thought (had not death preuented him) to haue made Arabia the Imperiall seat. Hee affirmeth also that Sesostris the Egyptian King, passing through Arabia, in that his renowned expedition, erected there in diuers places Egyptian Temples and superstitions: that the Troglodytes which dwelt in Caves, and bordering on the Egyptians, by some reputed Arabians, were circumcised as the Arabians and Egyptians were. The Arabians by testimony both of old and late Writers are accounted no warlike people. Virgil sings of them, Molles sua thura Sabae. In elder and later times they were gouerned by their Phylarchs, or heads of the Tribe or Linage. They take Tributes and Customes accordingly, rather by a robbing force, then ciuill forme; making their will their law. On the one side of Euphrates, they acknowledge some obedience to the Turkes, such as it is; On the other side no so much, as appears by the passage downe Euphrates, recorded by Gastrop Balbi, William Parry, and others, in some places paying a Custome, in others like to be robbed of all. The ancient Arabians which dwell in the Cities, are said to haue in each Citie a Prince, faire houses and Temples after the Egyptian manner: and then Strabo saith, Arabia Fœlix was diuided into siue Kingdomes.

The Nabathæans worship the Sonne, burning Fra. kinence on an Altar vnto him. They neglect the bodies of the Dead, burying euen their Kings in a dung-hill. Of the other Arabians hee reporteth, that they vsed incestuous copulation with Sister and Mother. Adultery with them is death: but that onely is Adultery, which is out of the same Kindred, other wife all of the same blood to use the same woman is their (incestuous) honestie. When fifteen brothers (Kings Sons) had by their continuall company tyred their wine and only sister, she desired a meane to rid her selfe, or at least to ease her somewhat of that trouble. And therefore whereas the custome was, that he which went in, left his staffe at the doore to prohibite others entrance, shee got like staues, and alway hauing one at the doore, was disburthened of their importunitie; euery one that came, thinking some other had bene there before them. But they being once altogether, one of them stole from his fellowes, and finding this staffe at the doore, accused his sister to his father of adultery, whereof by discovery of the Truth shee was cleered. Linschoten = telleth of the like practice obserued by the Nairos in Cochín, leaving their Armes at the doore, when they enter to their Nana-Kinwomen, which they vse like wife in common, being neuer married.

Their Circumcision they obserued, as ^a some write, at the thirteenth yeere of their age, imitating Sonnet herein. Euery one abideth in his Fathers profession. The possessions and wealth are common to the whole kindred. Alexander ab Alexandro nameth Dysares an Arabian Deitie, Their Priests hee saith were attired in linnen garments, with Mitres and Sandals. ^b Salmus affirmeth, that they abstaine from Swines flesh: neither will that sweet aire of Arabia breathe life to that sordid and stinking creature. This is the Happie Arabia, where happinesse maketh them vnhappy: their sweets = breeding bitter effects in diseasing their bodies, which they are forced to cure with the sents of Brimstone, and Goats beards burnt. That which others admire, and almost adore for rarenesse and excellencie, is here there common fuel for their fire: ^d Vulcanus deuouring iawes being fed with herbs, shrubs, trees, gummies, spices, for humane and diuine uses most esteemed.

Frankincense (saith ^e Plinie) groweth onely in Arabia, but not in euery place thereof. About the midst of the Countrey is Sabota (the chiefe Citie of the Sabæans) in a hie Mountaine: eight Mansions from thence is the Region of Frankincense, which is called Sabba, that is, a mystery: looking toward the East, euery way guarded and made vnpassible by Rocks. The soyle is Reddish, inclining to white. The length of the Frankincense-wood is twentie schanti, the breadth halfe as much, (a scanti in this account is five miles.) Other Arabians besides these and the Mingzi see not this tree, nor all of these, but onely some three hundred Families, vnto whom the right of these Rites deuolueth by succession. Therefore they are called Sacri; Holy, neither may they in the time, when they cut them, bee polluted with knowledge of Women or with Funerals. What manner of tree it is, Plinie saith he knew not, nor any Romanto his knowledge. They gathered it in the Spring and Autumne; they cut the trees from whence it sweateth. There needs no watch to keepe them, but the innocencie of the Inhabitants. When Alexander in his youth bestowed large store of Frankincense in his deuotions, Leonides his Master told him, hee should so doe when he had conquered the Countrey where it grew: Hce after enioying (some part of) Arabia, sent him a ship laden with Frankincense, and bade him serue the gods plentifully. The Frankincense, when it is gathered, is carried on Camels to Sabota by one way, out of which to goe were capitall. There they pay the tithes to a god which they call Sabis. The Priests take it by measure, not by weight. Certaine portions are allowed to them and to the Kings Scribes. Plantus therefore ^f calls it Frankincense Odor Arabicus. Virgil calls it Panchæan, and Sabæan Frankincense. The manifold Rites which the Heathens vsed in their holy things with this drug, Strackius ^g sheweth at large. Here also grew the Myrrhe in the same woods, and among the Troglodites. But this and Cinamon, and other things which grew else where as well as here, need not much discourse. They vsed yet some Religion in gathering of their Cinamon, as ^h some obserue, sacrificing before they began, and after diuiding what they had gathered, with a sacred speare assigning a portion to the Sunne: if the diuision be iustly made, the Sun sealeth his consent by fire, with his beames; consuming the same. Thus much of their Spices, and holy drugs.

Of their other riches I meane not to speake, saue of their sheepe with great tayles, some of which weigh fortie pound. These kinde of sheepe are common through Africa, euen to the Cape of Good Hope, neere to which, at Soldania, our men haue bought many for little pieces of old iron. ⁱ Leo saith, he saw one at Cairo, whose tayle, supported by a Cart with wheelles (for else he could not haue carried it) weighed fourescore pound, and heard of such as weighed a hundred and thirtie pound. ^k Paul, presently after his conuersion, preached the Gospel in Arabia.

Panchæa, and another Iland, called Sacra, are adioyned by ^l Diodorus to Arabia, both fertile (as hee saith) of Frankincense. In Panchæa is the Citie Panara, whose Inhabitants are ^m called the Ministers of Iupiter Tryphinius, whose Temple is thence distant threecore furlongs, admirable for Antiquitie, Magnificence and nature of the place, it is two hundred foot long.

long, the breadth answerable, hauling in it large Statues; and about it the houses of the Priests. Many fountains there springing make a navigable streame, called the water of the Sunne, which is medicinable to the bodie. The Countrey about; for the space of two hundred furlongs, is consecrated to the gods, and the revenue thereof spent in Sacrifices. Beyond is a high mountaine, called the seate of heauen, and Olympus Triphylus: where Caelus is said to haue instituted the Rites there yeerely obserued. The Priests rule all in Panchza, both in ciuill and religious eases: and liue very deliciously, attired with linnen Stoles and Mitres, and party-coloured Sandals. These spend their time in singing Hymnes, and recounting the acts of their gods. They deriue their generation from the Cretan Iupiter. They may not goe out of their sacred limits assigned them, if they doe, it is lawfull to kill them. The Temple is enriched with gifts and offerings. The doores excell for matter and workmanship. The bed of the god is six Cubits long, and four broad, all of gold faire wrought. The Table stands by, nothing inferior. In the midst is another bed of gold, very large, grauen with Egyptian letters; in which are contained the gifts of Iupiter, Caelus, Diana, and Apollo, written by Mercurius. Thus fatre Dionysius mentioneth Hierosimus an Arabian King, which had six hundred children by Concubines. Some are of opinion that the Wise-men, which by the ancient conduct of a Starre came to Ierusalem, (the first fruites of the Gentles) came out of Arabia. Scaliger mentioneth a conquest antiently made and holden by the Arabians in Chaldaea. Philostrophus saith, the Arabians are skillfull in Auguries, or Diuinations, because they eate of the head and heart of a Dragon, That they eate Serpents, Solinus affirmeth. Athenensis saith, That the Arabians vsed to maim themselves, if their King hapned to bee maimed, and that in the same member; and in another place hee citeth out of Heraclides Cnemaus, the delicacies of this Arabian King, and his quiet or idle course of life, committing matters of iudgement to Officers: and if any thinke himselfe wronged by them, hee pulls a chaine fastned to a window in the highest part of the Palace: Whereupon the King takes the matter into his hand, and whether part hee findeth guiltie; dyeth for it. His expences were fiftene Babylonian Talents a day. The Arabians kill Mice, as a certaine supposed enemy to the gods, a custome common to them with the Persians and Ethiopians. The women couer their faces, contented to see with one eye; rather then to prostitute the whole face. They kill not vipers, but scare them away with Clappers from their Balsame-trees, saith Pausanias, when they gather that commoditie, because they thinke them consecrated to those Balsame-trees; vnder which they liue and feed of that liquor; with which also they cure themselves if they are bitten of them.

The Arabike tongue is now the common language of the East, especially among such as embrace the Mahometan Religion: this language in the first diuision of tongues, according to Epiphanius, was begun in Armor, the first speaker and Author thereof. It is now the most vniuersall in the world, as Bibliauer, Poëllus, Scaliger, Aldrete, and Claude Ducret in his late Historie des Origines des Langues de cest vniuers, doe proue at large; from the Herculean pillars to the Molluccas, and from the Tartars and many Turkes in Europe, vnto the Ethiopians in Africke, extending it selfe; which was neuer granted to any other language, since that first confusion and babbling at Babel.

CHAP. II.

Of the Saracene Name, Nation, and proceeding in Armes: and the succession of their Chalisfaes.

§. I.

Of the Saracens before MAHOMET'S dayes.

THE Arabians are distinguished by many fir-names; the chiefe whereof (saith Scaliger) are the Hagarens (so called of Hagar the hand-maid of Sara) whom the Arabians call Erabelbagiari, and Ebmagarin; and the Saracens, still called by their neighbours Esarac; that is, theeuils. The Hagarens were more ciuill, whose chiefe hold was Petra, and their Princes were all entituled Aræte, as the Egyptians Ptolæmæ; Hierome in many places affirmeth, that the Ismaelites, and Hagarens are the same which now are called Saracens: so in his Commentarie on the second of Ieremie, Cedar (saith he) is the Region of the desert and of the Ismaelites.

Plinie^d mentioneth that the Saracens placing them neerer to the Nabathians, Ptolemy^e likewise nameth the Scenites, so called of their tents, which with themselves, their flocks, and substance, they removed vp and downe from place to place. Posteritie hath called all these Tent-wanderers (saith^f Scaliger out of Ammianus Marcellinus) Saracens: and so doth Ptolemy in the next words call the next adioyning people, seating them in the Northerly bounds of Arabia Felix. In the same Chapter he setteth downe Saraca, the name of an Arabian Citie. Some Authors haue written, that because Ismael was sonne of Hagar a bond-woman, his nicer posteritie haue disclaimed that descent, and deriued their pedigree, and name from Sara: Puerperamque, saith Hierome, assumentes sibi nomen Sara, quod scilicet de ingenua & domina videantur esse generati. Iosephus Scaliger, in his Annotations vpon Eusebius Chronicle, after that hee hath cited the former testimony of Ammianus, and of Onkelos on the thirtie fesen of Genesis, addeth the authoritie of Stephanus; who affirmeth Saraka to bee a Region of Arabia, neere the Nabathians, of which hee thinketh that the Saracens borrowed their name, Wee know (saith Scaliger) that the Arabian Nomades are so called; for SARAK in Arabicke soundeth as much, that is, (saraces & dapsuues) theuifish or robbers, such as the Cypak-Tartars, bordering on the Turkes, the Baidoliers in the Pyrenean hills (and the Bouders sometimes be wix: England and Scotland.) De Sara, periculum: To call them Saracens of SARA, is ridiculous: for then either they must bee called SARAKI, or seee SARACA. Mr. Brewood saith that Sara signifies a Desert, and Shakan to inhabit, in the Arabick; and therefore as they are called Scenites of their Tents; so might they also of the D-farts their not habited habitation be called Saracens. Booke of Lang. c. 13. And Erpenius saith, that this name is unknowne to themselves, but all the Muhammedans generally call themselves Muslmos, or Muslemans, which signifieth Beleuers, as if all else were Infidels or Heretikes. * Marcellinus thus writeth of them; this people stretcheth from the Assyrians to the fells of Nilus: all warriours, half naked, in coloured jackes. None ploweth or planteth, but they wander vp and downe without houses or lawes; their life being alwayes in flight. Their wives they hire & couenaunt with for a time: which breed child in one place, and bring forth in another, and neuer rest. Their food is Venison, Milke, Hearbes, and such Fowles as they can take: the most that wee haue scene, know not the vse of Wheat or Wine. Like Kites they snatch their prey, but stay not by it whether they winne or lose. They are such, as the Romans need neuer wish them their friends or their enemies. In the time of Iulian they made our roads and spoyles on the Roman Provinces, because they were denied their wonted Rapiers by Iulian, who told them that hee had better store of iron then gold. Saint Hierome interpreteth this Prophecie concerning Ismael, That hee should be a wilde man, his hand against euery one, and euery mans hand against him, of this robbing, rousing, roguing life of his posteritie. Significant semen eius habitaturum in eremo, id est, Saracenus vagos incertisq; sedibus, qui vniuersas gentes quibus desertum ex latere iungitur, incurant, impugnantur ab omnibus. In his second Booke against Iouinian, hee testifieth that their food was the milke and fesh of Camels, a creature easily bred in those barren deserts: but they thought it vnlawfull to cate swine fesh, and that swine were feldome, or not at all found among them. The Prophet Ieremy teckoneth their Tents Camels, and Flocks, as their greatest wealth, in that his Prophecie of their destruction by Nabuchodonosor.

This name Saracene may well besit that course of life which they embraced. In the more Southerly parts of Arabia, they are more ciuill and rich, dwelling in Cities, and haue quicke trade, which all are wanting about Medina and Mecca, places so renowned by the life and death of Mahomet^m. Neither doth it seeme probable, that those which are called Agarens in the continued succession of so many ages, as appeareth, 1. Chron. 5. 10. and Psalm. 82. 6. would after grow ashamed of that: or that Ismael, which deriued the hopes concerned of ISAAC the sonne of SARA, would nourish his posteritie in the same hope, or leaue them any honourable memory of SARA, who had reiectied him together with his mother. Yea, and their owne superstitious Legend proueth the contrary, as shall appeare in the next Chapter.

For their Religion, in old times, One saith, * That the Saracens adore the Starre of Venus, and in their praying cry, Alla, oua, cubar *, that is, God, and Venus. Ioannes Meursius noteth thereon, That they worshipped the Image of Venus, set on a great stone, on which they beleue, that Abraham lay with Hagar, or else that hee tied his Camell thereunto while hee was sacrificing Isaac. P. Scaliger calleth her Chubar and Chobar, and saith that neither Circumcision, nor the Friday Sabbath, were of Mahomet's institution, but of ancient ancient time both those rites had beene vsed by the Arabians, and left by him as hee found them: q Herodotus testifieth that the Arabians worshipped Ahlat, which is the Moone; for still they call the Moone newly horned Helal: and the Turkes and Saracens salute the new Moone at her first appearance, with a kind of veneration. In Sylburgius his Saracénica, is reported; that the Saracens, till the time of Heraclius, worshipped the Morning-Starre and Venus; which they called Chabar, that is, Great, Cedrenus also affirmeth this to bee an ancient Ascription of the Arabians, in worship of Venus, whose Starre they say is Lucifer the Morning Starre, which for the greatnesse they call in their language Cnbar to this day: (saith hee) ἡ δὲ Ἀγοστήριος ἑὸν βροχόσταλον, naming VENUS a god. For proofe whereof wee will vnsfold a great mysterie of theirs. The workes of their profane prayer are, ἄλλᾳ ἄλλᾳ, ἢ ἡδὲ, ἄλλᾳ. Alla, alla, signifieth God, God, Oua greater, Cnbar great, or Imna, and Venus; that is, God is the greater God, and Venus a great god. And certaine both in earth and in their Paradise, their chiefe deuotions seeme still to hold of Venus. In the beginning of the Spring, and in the beginning of Autumne, the Sunne entering into Aries and Libra; the Arabians vsed (which they had borrowed from the Zechiam and Altharchuma, people of India) to cast stones vpon heapes, being naked and bare-headed, with great cries, and going about their Idols, kissing the corners in honour of their gods: This they vsed at Mecca in honour of Venus: and therefore in that Sollemnitie did they cast stones vnder their priuities; because those parts were vnder her dominion. Oncely whereas askednesse was immodest, some ordained that they should bind a cloth about their reines. This Mahomet found before his time, and did not rectie, as hee did some Idolatrous Rites; but in their pilgrimage Rites they still obserue it. Properly they called the morning Starre Chobar or Cnbar: but as the Phœnician Asarte was with them in their confused worship, both Imna, Venus, and the Moone: So they intended the like in this Arabian deitie. For as Orania, and Ahlat, and Venus, were the same, as Herodotus auertheth: so the same confusion of deuotion was in Arabia, as well as in their neighbour-countrey, Pœnicia. Their Circumcision, it seemeth, came from Ismael and the rest of Abrahams sons of old: their Friday-sabbath from this Cnbar-deuotion: both before *Mahomet*s time, as was also the abstinence from Swines-flesh, as we before haue obserued out of Saint Hierome, who also mentioneth this their worship of Chobar, so interpreting those words of Amos, The Starre of your God; that is, saith hee, Chobar, or Lucifer, which the Saracens still worship to this day.

f Hieron. in Amos.

And in the life of Hilarion, hee telleth, that Hilarion passing thorow the Desert, came to a Citie or Towne called Eluta, on that very day whereon their Annuall solemnitie had gathered all the people into the Temple of Venus, for they worship her (for the Morning-Starre, to the worship whereof the Saracen Nation is addicted.) These hearing that Hilarion passed by, who had before cured many of them, came flocking about him with their wives and children, crying in Syriack, Barab; that is Blesse vs. Hee in courteous and milde words, perswaded them rather to worship the liuing God, then those stones; promising, if they would beleue in Christ, hee would visite them oftner. Marvellous was the grace of God: they suffered him not thence to depart; before hee had laid the line for building of a Church; and their Priest, crowned as hee was, was marked with the signe of Christ. Thus farre Hierome.

Some of the Arabians dwell in Cities, some in the Desarts; those better ciuiliized & fit for Arts; which inhabit the Desarts are called Bedauja or Beduais, that is, the people of the Desert; exceed in numbers, and wander without houles, vsing tents made of Cotton wooll, or of Goats and Camels haire, alway mouing and remoouing as water and pasture moue them, carrying their wives, children, and vensels on their Camels. Their horses are leane, little, swift, laborious, bold, and the horse-men actiue beyond beleefe, darting and catching with their hand the same Dart in the horses swiftest race before it cometh at the ground; and auoiding a Dart throwne at them by sleightie winding vnder the horses sides, or belly: also taking vp weapons lying on the ground whiles the horse is running, and in like swift race, hit the smallest marke with Arrow or Sling. Their armes are Arrows, Iauelins with iron heads, swords, (which they vse not to thrusts, but strokes) Daggers, Slings, and vse the same in aduersie fight, or in auersie flight. They lie in wait for Carrauens, prey vpon trauctlers, liue at rapine and spoile, and often make themselves the Great Turkes Receiuers and Treasurers; and raise new Imposts on all such as they can enforce, whether Trauctlers or Cities; obeying neither the Ottoman nor any other Soueraigne, but being diuided in innumerable Families, obey the heads of their owne Families or Tribes. These Tribes are distinguished by the Names of their first Parents, as Abi-Hetal, Abi-Rifice, Abi-Zaid, and six hundred others, all esteemed and saluted gentle, and equall in rights. Their food is browne bread, new and sowre milke, cheefe, goats, and camels flesh, pulle, hony, oile and butter.

Rice is esteemed a great delicacie, by reason of their Tradition that it came of Mahomet's sweat. For say they, when Mahomet compassed the Throne of God in Paradise, God turned and looked on him, which made the modest Prophet sweat, and wiping it off with his finger, six drops fell out of Paradise: one whereof produced the Rose, the second Rice, the other four his four associates. They vse a certaine hodge-podge or frumetic of boiled wheat laid after a drying in the Sun, then beaten & boiled with fat flesh til the flesh be consumed. This they call Herese, & say that Gabriel the Angel taught it Mahomet for the strengthening his reins; whereby one night he fought against fortie men, and in another had fortie times carnal dealing with women. These might seem calumnies, devised by some Mahometan aduersaries, if the former author (both learned in and zealous of the law of Mohamed) had not related the same in a chapter of the choise of meats. Mohamed or Mahomet commended also the eating of gourds of the Melongene, affirming, that hee had seene this plant in Paradise, and measured the quantitie of mens wits by their eating store hereof. When he was once in prison (saith Ben-sidi-Ali) the Angell Gabriel came downe from heauen, and carried him in Genna Elenasam, or the Garden of Pleasures, where amongst others he saw this shrub, and he asking why it grew there, the Angell answered, because it hath confessed the vnnite of God, and that thou art a true Prophet. Their garments are bafe, a cotton shirt with very wide sleeves, an upper garment of wooll woven with white and blacke lines of Goats or Camels haire; their feet are bare. Their nobler sort go better clothed and vse shooes, a red leather girdle, a white tulipan of cotton or linnen of few folds. Their women goe almost naked, in a blew smocke of cotton, linnen head tire, and face veiled. They vse eare-rings, chaines, brooches, and rings of glasse, or other base matter, and die or paint with blew markes made with a needle their cheekes, armes, and lips. Thus much of the Bednines.

His robbing and reguing people liued in much obscuritie, vntill that darkenesse brought them to light, and a Religion newly stamped by Mahomet, in a secret and iust iudgement of God, for the contempt of the Truth, was by as new a kind of preaching (viz. force of Armes) obtruded on the luke-warme world. For when as Mahomet, of whose life followeth a large discourse) had observed that sicke state of the Empire afflicted with Iewish rebellion, Persian inuasion, and Nestorian infection, besides the securitie of the Head it selfe, Heraclius then Emperour: he thought good to take Occasion by the Fore-locke, and to strike whiles the yron was hot. First, * vnder pretence of Religion, hauing inueigled a multitude of Disciples, he made a commotion in Arabia: and being therfore driuen out of Mecca, many of his followers resorted to him: Of whom hee appointed Captains and Leaders of the rest, Ubequar, Omar, Ozmen, Alisre, Talant, Aznabenus, Zadenni, Zadennu, and Abnobeid. The Arabians (as some affirme) aided Heraclius in his warre against Cosroes the Persian: and after that warre ended, the Arabians complaining for want of pay, the Treasurer answered, that there was scarce sufficient for the Greek and Romane Souldiers, much lesse for that company of Dogs. Whereupon, as long before on like occasion they had rebelled in the reigne of Julian, to now engaged, they departed into Syria, and adioyned themselves vnto Mahomet, who euen then after the Persian victorie had obtained (some say) of the Emperour whom he serued in those warres, to himselfe and his followers, a Region to inhabit; the Emperour so rewarding his exploits in the late warres. Mahomet with this supply affailed Mecca, which diuers times before he had in vaine attempted, and tooke it, with other pieces in Arabia, viz. Hunam, Ietrip, Tambie, &c. He afterwards created foure Generalls, whom he called the fourre sharpe swords of God, and commanded them to goe in to the four parts of the world, and to kill all such as would not embrace his Law. These foure were Ebnubzer, Ubequar, Omar, Osman, and Ali. Ebnubzer went into Palestina, but was ouerthrowne by Theodorus Begarus, Casars Lieutenant. About the same time died Mahomet, and this * Ebnubzer succeeded him; although Mahomet had designed Ali his successor. At this death (saith Cedrenus) a Comet appeared thirte dayes together, at Noone in forme of a sword from the South to the North, foresignifying the Empire of the Arabians. Ebnubzer or Abnubacher (for diuersly is this Ebnubzer called) hauing by his might, and the assistance of Homar and Osman, obtained to be a Califa, ouerthrew the Imperiall, and soone after died. Homar the next Califa, wanne Bofra, the chiefe Citie of Arabia, and all the Countie

Country as farre as Gabata, and put Theodorus, the Emperours brother, to flight. Hee besieged Damascus, and hauing broken the forces that came to rescue it, obtained it: subduing also all Phœnicia. After that, turning his forces into Egypt, Cyrus the Bishop of Alexandria staid him, with promise of two hundred thousand pieces of gold for yeerely Tribute. This was disannulled by Heraclius, and Emanuel the Deputie denied the payment: whereupon entering the second time vader conduct of Hamrus, Egypt was conquered. After two yeeres siege, Ierusalem also was wonne, into which hee entered clothed in a garment of Camels haire, and very homely, professing great sanctitie. Hee built a superflitious Temple, where that of Salomon had stood. Laidus one of his Captaines subdued Edesse, and all Mesopotamia. Afterwards placing Muauis ouer all the Countries betweene Euphrates and Nilus, he invaded Persia: where the Persians lost both their King Hormisda, their State, Religion, and Name: of Persians being conuerted into Saracens. This victorious Homar made Ierusalem his Royall seat, and while he was praying, was murdered by his seruant.

Ozmen, the succeeding Caliph sent a great Armie into Africa, vnder the leading of Hucha: who overcoming Gregorius Patritius, and destroying Carthage, subiected all that Province to their Empire; finding Tunes the Mother-citie: but soone after translated that honour to Chairon, which he built thirtie six miles from the Sea, and a hundred from Tunes. In the third yeere of his raigne Muauis the Deputie of Egypt, with a Naue of seuen hundred, or as others say, of a hundred and seuentie saile, assailed Cyprus, and taking Constantinia, wasted the whole Iland: and hauing wintered his Armie at Damascus, the next yeere besieged Arad in Cyprus, and won it, and dispeopled all the Ile. Thence hee invaded the continent of Asia, and carried away many prisoners: and after in a Sea-fight with Constantin the Emperour, dyed the Lycian Sea with Christian blood. Hee wan Rhodes, and sold to a few the brazen Colosse or pillar of the Sun, which laded nine hundred Camels, sometimes reckoned one of the worlds seuen wonders, made in twelue yeeres space by Chares. After this hee afflicted the Cyclides Ilands in the Archipelago, and then sent his Fleet against Sicilia, where they made spoile with fire and sword, till by Olympius they were chased thence. Muauis himselfe with an Armie by land entered into Cappadocia: laid hauing over-run all the neighbouring Armenia, vnto the hill Caucasus. But meane while Ozmen, besieged in his house by Ali his faction, slew himselfe, when hee had liued eightie and seuen yeeres, and reigned twelue. The Saracens could not agree about their new Prince: Muauis and Ali with great armies, being Corruials of that dignitie; and Ali being treacherously murdered by Muauis meanes, in a Temple neere Cusa, a Citie of Arabia, was there buried, and the place is of him called Massadalle or Ali his house: for (if you beleue the Legend) his corps being laid on a Camell, which was suffered to goe whither hee would, he staid at this place. Of this Ali or Hali, Mahomet Cousin, the Persians deriue their sect, and tell of him many Legendary fables. Bedwell calls this place, in his Arabian Trudgman, Masjed Ali, that is, the Mejid, Mosque, or Temple of Ali. Albacem, the sonne of Ali and *Fatima Mahomet*s daughter, was by Muauis his owne hands crowned, and by him soone after poisoned. Thus was Muauis sole Caliph, who granted peace to the Emperour, on condition that hee should pay him euery day ⁱ tenn pounds of gold, and a Gentleman-seruant with a horse. Damascus was now made the Seat-Royall. Of which Citie, although wee haue said somewhat in our first booke, yet let vs bee a little beholden to Beniamin Tudelensis, to shew vs the Saracenicall face thereof. In his time it was subiect to Neraldise (as hee termeth him) King of the children of Thogarma, that is, the Tuikes. The Citie, saith he, is great and faire, containing on euery side fiftene miles; by it slideth the River Phaphar, and watereth their Gardens: ^k Amana is more familiar, and entrench the Citie, yea, by helpe of Art, in Conduits visitheth them priuate houses; both striding in emulous contention whether shall adde more pleasure or more profit to the Citie, by Naaman therefore in the heate of his indignation preferred before all the waters of Israel. But no where is so magnificent a building, saith Beniamin, as the Synagogue of the Ismaelites, which is therein: the people call it the Palace of Benbadad. There is to be seene a wall of Glasse, built by Art-Magicke, distinguished by holes as many as the yeere hath dayes, and so placed, that euery day the Sunne sheweth them fitted in order to his present motion, each hole hauing therein a Diall with twelue degrees, answering to the houres of that day, so that in them is designed both the time of the yeere and of the day. Wit in the Palace are Baths and costly buildings, so rich of gold and siluer as seemeth incredible: I saw there hanging a ribbe of one of the Enakims or Giants, nine Spanish palmes long, and two broad, on the Sepulchre was written the name of Abchamaz. After this, in the time of Tamerlan, the magnificence of their Temple was not quite extinct, but as is reported, it had forie great Porches in the circuit thereof, and within nine thousand Lamps hanging from the roofo, all of gold and siluer. For the Temples sake at first he spared the Citie, but after, prouoked by their rebellion, hee destroyed it.

destroyed it and them. Neither were the walls of Damascus rebuild'd, till a certaine Florentine for love of the Gouvernours daughter denying his faith, became Mahumetan, and after that both Gouvernour and repaire of the Citie; in the walls engraving a Lyon, the Armes of Florence. He was honoured after his death with a Moskee, and worshipp'd after the manner of their Saints, the Saracens visiting his tombe, and (having touched the same) stroking their beards with their hands. There did our Author see a large house compass'd with high walls, which was inhabited with Cats. The reason forsooth is this: Mahomet sometime living in this Citie, made much reckoning of a Cat, which he carried in his sleeve, & by lucky tokens from her, ordred his affaires. From this dreame the Mahumetans make so much of Cats, and hold it charitable almes to feede them, thinking that he should prouoke the judgement of God which should suffer a Cat to starue. And many of them are found in the shambles begging or buying the inward of beasts to nourish Cats: a superstition more likely to defend from the Egyptians, who for the benefit they received by Cats in destroying their vermine, of which that Countrey yeelds store, in a Heathenish superstition deified them. But let vs returne to Muawi; hee subdued the Sect of Ali in Persia, and after invaded Cilicia, and sent (to aide Sapores) a band of Saracens, which assisted Chaldean, and sacked Armaria a Ciry of Phrygia; and with a Fleete invaded Sicill, rooke Siracuse, and carried away with them the riches of Sicilia, and of Rome it selfe, lastly fleeced by the Emperour, and here herded. Another Armie of Saracens, over-running the Sea-coast of Africa, led away eight hundred thousand prisoners.

Muawil and Casim on the other side subdued to Muawi, Lydia, and Cilicia; and after, with Senus another Saracen General, besieged Constantinople, from April to September, and taking Cizicum, there wintred their forces, and in the spring returned to their siege, which they continued seven yeeres; but by Divine assistance, and force of tempest, they were chased thence. And Constantine slew three hundred thousand Saracens, in a battell (nor long after) against Susna the Nephew of Muawi, and compelled the Saracens to pay a great tribute. Isidore traigned after the death of Muawi his father (a better Poet then Soldier) hee loomed dead. Neither did his successours Murwan and Abdalan live two yeeres in the roome. Abdimelec was chosen Caliph, who descended from Hali, when as Abdalan of the lineage of Eubocara (the Arabians call this the Marauian race, the other Abazian) had possessed himselfe of that title by force, whom Casim the kinsman of Abdimelec overthrew. Casim after this victorie, entering Damascus, plucked Isad (one of the former Caliphs) out of his grave, burned his bones, and hurled the Ashes into the riuer, and cruelly persecuted all the Marauian stocke.

Hereupon Abedramon one of that house, with a great number of his friends and followers fled into Mauritania Tingitana, where he was welcomed of the Saracens there being, and first intirelled himselfe Murammumim, which signifieth The Prince of Beleaguers, and then builded a Morocco. Abdimelec having other yeens in the fire, neglected this: first, appeasing tumults in his owne state; then overthrowing the Emperour in the field: after, receiuing (by treason of the Deputie) Armenia; winning that part of Persia, which yet was subiect to the Romans, and by his forces spoyling Thracia, whiles the Greek were diuided amongst themselves. He also chased the Romane Garrisons out of the coast-Townes which they held in Afrike. Abdimelec being dead, Plutus the sonne of Abedramon succeeded, vnder whom the Saracens, besides the spoile of Galatia, conquered all Afrike betwixt Niger and the Sea, a little piece excepted at the mouth of the straites, subiect to Rodericus the King of Spaine: Mucac was made Lieutenant of the Saracen Empire in Afrike. To him Isulamus Exile of Cepta full of indignation against his Prince, for dishonouring his faire daughter Caba, about the yeere 712. offereth the conquest of Spaine, if hee would furnish him with some competent forces of his Saracens. This raylor, thus strengthened with the authoritie of this place (being Gouvernour of the Ile Yndis, and diuers places in Africa and Spaine) backed with his friends, and aided with the Saracens, overthrowed the Gothish Empire, which had now ruled Spaine about three hundred yeeres: Rodericus losing the field and his state, and spending the remnant of his dayes with an Hermite, in a solitarie desert of Lusitania. Isulamus himselfe was after slaine by the Saracens, as were the Spanish Traytors; the last end of vniuersal treacherie. Scaliger out of an Arabian Geographer, calleth that Captaine, Musfer or Mosfer, son of Nurzir of the Marwan stocke, who had with him a valiant Captaine named Tark or Tarik, of whom the Hill and the Strait is named (as the vulgar pronounce it) Gibraltar, properly Gebel Tarik, & that is, the Hill of Tarik, because hee had shipped ouer his Barbarians thither, and fortified himselfe in that Hill, in the ninthie yeere of the Hegira: which hee did, least his barbarous souldiers should forsake him, and therefore also caused his ships to bee burnt. This Plut, Quatid, Walid, or Oelid (for thus I finde his name diuersified in Authors) besides these his conquests in Afrike and Europe, achieved by his Captaines

great exploits in Asia; among which, one called Kotejbah Eben Moslems, conquered Korasan as farre as Tarquestan, with all the Countrie of Maurenaher and Korazran. On the other side Moslema ben Abdel Malek forced the Græcian Emperour to tribute. Hee also erected many publike buildings, the most famous of which was the Mosque at Damascus. Osafse his Deputie in Karalan was so cruell, that he put to death about a hundred thousand persons in that Countrey during his government, besides an infinite number slain in the warres. Hee had thirtie thousand slaues of diuers Nations. This Caliph died, Anno Dom. 715. A. Heg. 95. after Mircond account. Persia was not yet fully subdued; Gerion and Tarbestan, two Prouinces thereof, were brought vnder in the time of Soleyman, Suleiman, or as Curio calls him Zulciminus, the next Caliph. He sent Malsmas with a great power into Thrace, where having spoyle the Countrey, he laide siege to Constantinople: Zulciminus his Master assaulting it by Sea, with a Naue of three thousand Ships, in which siege hee died, Anno Dom. 719. Aumar, his successeur, had no successe in this attempt, partly, through the violence of frost, causing famine and diseases in his Campe, and partly, by force of an artificiall Glasse, wherewith Leo the Emperour cast fire amongst the enemies Fleet, and firing euen the Seas about the ships: that by this subtiltie & force of remspe, of three thousand saile, five ships onely are said to haue escaped. Gizad, sent with supply of three hundred and threescore ships, durst not approach for feare of this fire: and the Saracens by their Caliph were reuoked, when the plague had slain in Constantinople three hundred thousand people. In his time Aly Eben Abas, one of the descendents of Abas, Vncle to Mahomet, wattered for the Chalifare, challenging it to his stocke. But Aumar or Homar was poysoned by Oebon, and Tesid or Gizid succeeded: whose reigne was troubled with the warres of Aly aforesaid, still continuing his challenge.

After him A. 724. succeeded Oebon his brother, which had poysoned Homar. Persia had some broiles which he pacified. He being murdered, succeeded Walid, or Euelut sonne of Tesid; in whose time the bottome of the Sea, nere the coasts of Asia minor, burned, and sent fourth smoake first, and after, heapes of stones, with which the shores of Asia, Lesbos, and Macedonia were filled, and a new lland took beginning of the heaping together of earth, which was annexed to the lland called Sacra.

The Saracens in Spaine erected amongst themselves many petty Kingdomes, and by their diuisions made way to Pelagius, with some remainder of the Spaniards to recover some of their lost countrey, who dying in the yeere 732. his sonne Eafila succeeded, in whose time the Saracens passed the Pyrenzan Hills into France, where Theodericus the second was then King, but Charles Martell, Master of the Kings house, ruled, as did his father in that office before, and his sonne, (both Pipins) after him. The Saracens tooke Narbonne, and after Burdeaux killing in it, man, woman, and childe, and raising the Temples to the ground; they passed Garunna, and euerturned Angolefine and Bloys, and came into Turon, where Eudo the Gorth then King of a great part of France, in wars with Martell, for feare of the common enemy, entered league, and with their ioynt forces slew thre hundred and seuentie thousand Saracens; and those of Nauarre slew the rest that escaped, in their returne. But when Eudo was dead, Martell tooke part of his Kingdome from his sonnes, Hnoldus and Vaisferus, who thereupon recalled the Saracens, which vnder the leading of Astinus tooke Auenion by the treason of Mauricrus then Gouernour, from whence, and out of France they were driuen by Martellus.

The Saracens made foure inuasions into Thrace while Euelut was Caliph, to whom succeeded, Anno 744. Gizid the third, who wasted Cyprus, and carried away the people into Syria. After him and Isc (which two ruled not two yeeres) Marwan reigned; and after, another of the same name, and the Saracens were diuided, Tebud Dadac, and Zulciminus, challenged each to himselfe the Soueraignie: and when all these were ouerthrowne and slain, Asmulinus amongst the Persians raised vp the seruants to murder their masters, and with them hee ouerthrew Iblinus with one hundred thousand Saracens; and after, Marwan himselfe with three hundred thousand, who fleeing into Egypt, was there also vanquished and slain in a Temple.

This murder grew through the faction of the Abassian stocke, who conspired against him, because he had slain one of their kindred. Abulabas the chiefe of this conspiracie, succeeded him, in the yeere 749. and removed the Chaliphate to that family from the Marawians, in the yeere of their Hegira 132. after the Arabian computation; as we follow Scaliger herein; and he the Chronicle which Abraham Zacutus gathered out of the Monuments of the Ismaelites. In the former relations, we haue principally followed Curio his Saracenicall History; though by the way we haue borrowed of others also.

Of the Arabian Chalifes, their Citie Bagadet, with many Persian, Indian, and other occurrences under them.

TANIK MIRKOND writes, that the family of Abas had still from the first challenge continued their quarrell, and that Oelid, to satisfie them, had caused the sonnes of Abdala (one of the Abasians) to be proclaimed his successours: one of which, Safa, in this warre against Murruan, forced him to flee to Mesera, or Cairo in Egypt, where hee was taken and put to death, and with him eightie persons of the family of Ben Humia. They did also breake open their Sepulchers, and burnt the bones, sparing onely one of that line Hamarben Abdala Azie. Safa was sonne of Abdala the sonne of Aly, whose father was Abdula the sonne of Abas. Hee had for Wazir or Vezir (which I mention, to shew the antiquitie of this custome in the Saracenicall regiment, still observed by the Turkes and Persians, as chiefe Counsellour and swayer of the State) Abualemeh, whom for conspiracie hee put to death, placing in his roome Kaleb Barmaqu. He made his three Vales chiefe Governours of the Prouinces, David, or Daud of Medina; Mecca; Abdula of Syria, Egypt, and Africke; and Safa hee sent to Korofan, the chiefe Citie whereof is called Mechad, whereas Ismael Sophi and his successours are interred. This Citie is fortified with three hundred Towers, each from other a Musket shot distant. Thus Mirkond. This Safa, or (as Curio calls him) Abulabaz being dead, Abugephar Elmantzar succeeded. Hee imprisoned the twelve sonnes of Hafin, the sonne of Ali, where they perished: He began first to build the Citie of Bagdet. Mirkond saith, that in the 145. yeere of the Heg. having finished a warre against some Rebels in Arabia, parting from Cufa, hee crossed Mesopotunia, and comming to the banks of Tygris, the bountie of the soyle, and commodious situation for the visiting of his Prouinces, caused him to build this Citie, which by reason of many pleasant and delightfull Gardens which are in that Countrey, the people called Bagadad, of Baga a Persian word, which signifies a Garden. Hee dyed vpon the way to Mecca A. Heg. 759. or after Zacuth 758. Iohn di Barros ascribeth this Citie to the same Bagisfar also, for so hee calleth him; but Curio to one Monamat long after. Scalliger I thinke this to bee Seleucia, a Citie built nigh vnto Babylon by Seleucus, neere the meeting and mixing of Euphrates and Tygris; of which see our Babylonian Historie in the first booke.

Mabdi his sonne succeeded A. H. 165. Mirkond calls him Mahadi Bila. In his time Akremben Ocem (sometime Secreatarie to Abusalem, Governour of Karalon, slaine by Amisfar) revolted from his subiection and Religion. Hee had but one eye, and was of terrible aspect: hee not onely sought to bee acknowledged for King, but would bee worshipped as a God, couering his face with a vail, saying, That men were vnworthy to see his face, and many Prouinces receiued him for King. But Mahadi sending a strong power against him, his partakers poysoned him, and then gaue out, that hee was ascended into Heauen. But as many of his kindred and followers as were taken, were burned, and the Countiees subdued A. Heg. 169. To Mabdi succeeded Elida Bila Musfa, which after fiftene moneths dyed, and Arachid Bila Harun his brother succeeded. Against him rebelled Rafis Eben Nacer of Samarkand, who entituled himselfe King, in expedition against whom Arachid dyed A. H. 193. Mahamid Amin was his successour, to whom hee gaue all he held in Alep, and thence Westward: to Mahamun another sonne hee had ginen Persia and Karalon; to Racem the third, Aderbaion and Diarbek. This diuision caused another, in which the Chalife seeking to dispossesse Mahamun by force, was ouerthrowne, Bagadet (whither hee was pursued) taken, and himselfe slaine A. 198. Mahamun or Mamon was the next Chalife, against whom the Governours of Aderbaion and Karalon rebelled, which hee pacified as he could. Hee spent much to haue all the bookes of Phylosophie, the Mathematikes, and Physike, which hee could get, to bee translated out of the Greeke. He dyed A. H. 210.

Abu Esach Matacon, or Mutezam, the fourth sonne of Harun, succeeded. Hee built Samartah on Tygris North wards from Bagdet, which soone after was ruined. Siftom, a Prouince neere the Persian Gulfe, rebelled, and long warres continued in Persia. This Matacon wanne much from the Grecian Emperour. Hee dyed after hee had reigned eight yeeres, leauing behind him eight Sonnes, and eight Daughters, with eight thousand Slaues. Hee had taken eight Cities, (the chiefe of eight Realmes) and put to death the eight Kings thereof. Hee left eight millions also of Treasure, hauing lued (to make vp eight eights) fortie and eight yeeres.

Wacel succeeded, in whose time by a three yeeres famine Karalon was almost dispeopled. Afterwards they returned, and warred against the Mayusi, Heathenish people in Persia, (whereof (whereof, saith Mirkond, there are great numbers at this day) which worship the fire, of whom they made a great massacre. Methucal, or Almote Wakel Bila Isafar succeeded, A. 222; in whose reign the descendants of Aly did tise, for that he sought all meanes to hinder their pilgrimage to his Sepulchre, breaking the bankes of Euphrates, with the inundation thereof into the desert, stopping their passage. Montacer sonne of this Chalife, murdered him by his slaues, A. H. 234. but dyed himselfe within fixe moneths after. Abul Abas Hamed his next heyre, after fivie yeeres rule, was cast into Prison by his Souldiers, and there famished. In Persia the Deputies or Gouernours had vnder many Chalifes succeeded by a kinde of inheritance, the Chalife confirming the succession to the heyre. But in these dayes arose one Acem Ben Zeyd Alauuy, that is, Sent of God: hee entred into Persia, and tooke diuers Cities and Prouinces thereof: Mosabbhin the next Chalife enioyed the seate but sixteen moneths. He dyed A. H. 242.

Almatez Bila followed the thirtie three in order of their Chalifes. He sent Mesa Ben Bua ka against Acem Ben Zeyd, and recovered much from him which he had seised on in Persia; But after three yeeres and a halfe, this Chalife was forced by his souldiers, finding him in a Stoue bathing himselfe, to drinke a pot full of cold water, which sodainly killed him. Morady Bila succeeded with like fortune, slaine of his Souldiers, after eleuen moneths. In these combustions the Chaliphate was deulded, one reigning in Bagdet, the other in Egypt, whose historie you may finde in our Egyptian relations.

Almat Hamed Bila succeeded in Bagdet the thirtie fivie Chalife. Persia was now rent with many factions: for besides Taber the allowed Gouernour, and Acem Ben Zeyd which still continued his warres, a new Capitaine Yacub Leys arose, who ouerthrew Taber, and slew him. This Yacub was a Tinker, as his Father also; after that, a Capitaine of Robbers: then (fishing in those troubled waters) tooke part with another Rebelle in Siston, and sharing the Countrey, by his fellowes misfortune became sole Lord. After this hee preuayled against Taber and Acem, and brought Persia vnder him, following his designes against the Chalife himselfe, now much terrified with his fame, and was likely to haue preuayled, if hee had not dyed by the way A. H. 268. His brother Hamer Ben Leys succeeded in Persia, Karaton and the rest of his conquests, the Chalife himselfe adding thereto Hierak, the chiefe Citie whereof (sayth our Author) is Hissabon, making him Chena of Bagadet, which is the Ioueraigne Magistrate of Iustice, next the Chalife: but Maidzed Bila Hamed the next Chalife flew him, being before vanquished by Ismael, to whom he gaue the tytle of King of Mauremahar, Karaton, Scyras, Siston and Kermon; Gerion also and Taberstan, which hee tooke from Mahamed Ben Zeyd Alauuy. Moktasy Bila was next Chalife, and after him his brother Moldader Bila, who dyed A. H. 301. And Isafar Ben Maiazed succeeded. All this while was Persia and the neighbour-Countries subiect to warre and contention, each calling his owne, whatsoeuer hee could get and hold by force. The particulars I forbear to recite. In these times the Arabians robbed Mecca, carrying from thence great spoyles, which the superstitious Moores had offered: amongst the rest, carrying away a stone to Cusa, a holy Relique, brought (forsooth) by Adam out of Paradise, and afterwards it befell to Ismael the sonne of Abraham, and (I know not when) was brought to Mecca. It is white by nature, but being touched by sinners (it were a sinne to deny it) proued blacke. But Saint Rumwald at Boxley, and many other Popish stones or blockes had like vertue.

Isafar our Chalife dyed A. H. 320. About these times Abusua (Zacuth calls him Bania) a poore Persian dreamed that he pist fire, which inflamed the countrey, and deuiding it selfe into three parts continued long. An Astrologer interpreted, that hee should command great Prouinces, in which his sonnes should succeed him. Elkaher, or Kaher Bila Mahamet Ben Maiazed was the next Chalife, whose eyes his Souldiers put out after eighteene moneths, and gaue his place to Racibila. Hee cut off the hand of Eben Mokale his Wazir, and hanged it on a gibbet, for writing a Letter without his priuie. Hee ordaind also that the Wazirs should preach the Law to the people, which till that time the Chalifes themselves had performed. Muktasy succeeded. In his time was a great famine and pestilence. The Souldiers put out his eyes, A. H. 330. after which he liued fortie two yeeres. But his sonne Mosachy Abdel was Chalife. Now did the three sonnes of Abusua finde meanes to make themselves Lords of Persia, and the adjacent Regions, one of which warred vpon the Chalife, tooke him and put out his eyes. A. H. 334. and placed Motjab Bila Fazle, in that dignitie. In his time the stone aforesaid was recovered from Cusa (being redeemed at the weight in gold) and restored to Mecca. And now the Chalifes began to bee but shadowes of that quondam bodie, and Lords in name. Tayaba, Abdel, Carim was Chalife after Motjab: in whose time the posteritie of Abusua had ruinated Bagadet by their warres, which was by Azadu Danle (one of them) re-edified A. H. 368. This Prince shewed himselfe fauourable to his Diuines, Phylosophers, Physitians, and Poets, and gaue leaue also to the Christians Christians his subjects to build Churches, bearing part of the charge. Hee built a goodly Hospitall at Bagadet, A.H. 371. and endowed it with great revenues, and another at Seyras not inferior. Hee dyed, A. 372. and left his inheritance to his three sonnes, of which Scerfa Daule went into Persia, and Scams Daule to Bagadet, which soone after possessed his brothers state then dead, and associated Babao Daule the third brother with him in government, who proved sole heyre by the treason of mutinous Souldiers which murdered Scams Daule, A.H. 380. Babao depoled the Chalife in the first yeere of his raigne; although the possession of the place since the time of the Daules or Abusjids' race, was but an Ecclesiasticall power, plumed of the Temporall soueraintie. Hee gaue the place to Kader Bila Hammed, the fortie fixe in order of Chalifes. At this time Mamud Gafney raigned in Karafan and Maurenabar; who taking the aduantage of the minority of Fakero Daules sonnes, (Fakero himselfe and Babao being dead) much altered the face of the Persian and Malu-metane affaires.

ploites in India, Persia, &c.

From this time forward, the Daules with ciuill contentions weakened each other. Great were the broyles also in all the Northerly adioyning Countries; the Kings of Bokara, Turquestan, Nichabur, Samarcand, with all the Prouinces in, or neere those parts of Persia, fryed in ciuill combustions, every man measuring his right by his Sword and Speate. Mamud at this time hauing chased away his brother Ismael, contracted friendship with Ileebkan King of Turquestan, and made a prosperous expedition into India, as his Father Sabutaquin had done before; which Ileebkan enuying, treacherously entred into his country, and forced Mamud to returne; but Mamud being victorious, Ileebkan strengthened himselfe with a new confederacie of Kaderkham, King of Kasakotan (a country in Catay) whose great forces forced Mamud to vfe the helpe of the Turkes, and with the Calangues, Gaznecys, and Aueganys, aduanced, and (fighting on a Elephant) obtayned the victorie. A.H. 397. Now did Mamud returne to his Indian expedition, seeking to conuert the Indians to his Religion, where hee fought with Badan an Indian King, and ouerthrew him in battell, taking fortie Elephants, and rich spoiles; and the Indians retyring with their treasures, and the riches of their Pagodes (or Idolltemples) Mamud entred heere also, where Atirkand sayth, hee tooke Kuen millions of dragmes of gold, 700. Ingots of gold, with store of pearles and gemmes. Hee ouerthrew also the Gaotes or Guzarates. In Karafan was at this time such a famine, that the people did eate vp one another. This being done, A.H. 400. Mamud went against Bagadet, and by strait siege forced Kader Bila the Chalife to yeld himselfe, and redeme his peace with money. After this, and some new exploites in Persia, hee returned into India, where he againe did great Acts; and at his returne, ouerthrowing Nealataquin, gaue the government of Korazzin to Altunzar one of his Captaines. In a fourth iourney into India, hee ouerthrew Gulkand a Pagan King, who seeing himselfe vanquished with the losse of fiftie thousand men, fearing a beautifull wife which he had, should come into his enemies hands, flew her, and himselfe also. In a fifth expedition hee ouercame Gipal and Iandebal two Indian Kings, and returning to Gaznecan, built a stately Temple or Mosque, as a Thanksgiuing for his victories; and then entering into Persia, tooke Rey and Hisspahan in Hierak (now the seat of Abas the Persian King) from Maidu Daule, whom hee dispossessed of his Kingdome. At this time were great quarrels among the Daules in Persia, Kerman, and Diarbek; and Mocheraf preuayling against Salton, called himselfe King of Kings. A.H. 411. Gelala (another of the Daules) was the yeere after made King of Bagadet.

A.H. 416. Mocheraf dyed at Bagadet, and the yeere after, the Turkes tooke, fired, and spoiled Bagadet. This made them call Gelala againe to their succours, who not long before was defeated at Bagadet, and forced to flee to Bafora; and now entering, went to the Chalifes house to kisse his foot, A.H. 419. But the Turkes which hee brought with him, falling to mutinie for their pay, the Chalife was forced to become pay-master. Mamud amidst his conquests dyed, A.H. 421. and Mahamed his sonne succeeded, and the next yeere followed Kader the Chalife, which had enioyed (without great ioy in it) his place fortie one yeeres, and Kabens his sonne succeeded. Masud the other sonne of Mamud warred vpon his brother, whom by treacherie of Ihsuf and Amu Aly traytors to their Master, hee tooke and put out his eyes. Hee that loued the treason, rewarded the Traytors, the one with yrons in a dungeon, the other with more open, and yet more close ayre, in hanging. Thus hee ruled Karafan, Gaznecan and Hierak, and sent Altunzar Governour of Korazzin against Taquin, who held Samarkand and Bokara, which warres were bloudie. But A.H. 424. his Garrisons in India, and the Countrey of Gibal revolted, in recompence of which hee subdued Gerrion and Taberistan. Togazel * or Togozelbek and Sakarbek Salanguis, two Turkish Captaines, subdued many of his Townes in Karafan, and forced Alaan Daule and Abusale out of their Governments; whereupon Masud returning, was by other of his enemies ouer-throwne. Herewith enraged, hee put many Turkes to death which had fought in this last battell, but faintly on his part : and making an expedition into India, by treacherie was taken of his followers, and soone after slaine : his blinde brother Mahamed recouering the state, but not his eyes; and therefore resigning to his sonne Hamed, who againe was disposed by Moadud the sonne of Masud. But the Turkes in Karalan and Marsenabar would not acknowledge him, and in the 435. of the Heg. had the victorie against his atmie. Other Turkes also going out of Turquetian, spoyled the Countiees of Garmeer and Kandachar. This seemes a true storie of the Turkes beginning of greatnesse in Persia, then that which is vually received : and is thus by Mirkend a Persian Historian deliuered. Moadud hauing cleiued Labor, which his Vassals in India rebelling had besieged, marched against the Turkes, but dyed in the way A. H. 441.

At Bagadet matters had continued in confusion. They had reuolted from Gelata Daule, and proclaimed Abulganiar King, but hee refused : and the Turkes soone after fired the Towne, and spoyled it. This continued till A. H. 428. when the cold was so extreame, that the river Degile or Tygris was frozen twelue dayes together, and the Snow lay three spans deepe here. A. H. 434. Ebrabem Neah Salinquis a Turke, entred Persia in the Prouince of Hierak, and tooke Amedon. Tokzelbek before mentioned tooke Rey, and spoyled all Persia with a victorious Armie. Hee also through the diffentions of the sonnes of Abulganiar, after their Fathers death, found meanes to encrease himselfe. And the Chalife of Damascus forced Kahem the Chalife of Bagadet to flee to Tokzelbek for succour : whereupon hee entred Bagadet, and put all to fire and sword, rifling the very Sepulchers to search for Treasures. Heooke Malek Rham the successour of Abulganiar, whom before hee had helped to winne icyras, and the best part of Persia, and imprisoned him, where hee dyed. And thus the Emire of the Daule being deadly sicke, soone after dyed. Abd Rachid also the successour of Moadud was so pursued by Tokzelbek, that at last in a Fort hee was (through the corruption of his Guard by money) taken and murdered. Then did hee, marrying a sister of the deceased, reclaime himselfe King. But not long after being in a publike place to receive the salutations which they are accustomed to make in those parts, ten of the chiefe men conspiring together, slew him.

Kahem or Alkahem dyed A. H. 467. and Almokady Byla was Chalife the fortie eight norder. In his time the Turkes and Ferragoad (the other sonne of Masud) came to composition. Almoftazer Byla succeeded his Father in the Caliphate, A. H. 487. in whose time Bagadet hauing beene ruined by the ouerflowing of Tygris, the situation was changed, and it was new built on the other side of the riuer towards the East, where it now stands in a more commodious feat, hauing had twentie five Chalifes since the foundation by Abulnazar, and yet not one of them dyed in it. Hee liued in peace and dyed A. H. 512. This storie is thus told by Zacuth. In his time the Astrologers fore-told an exceeding deluge, not so great as in the dayes of Noah, because then (said they) were seuen Planets in coniunction with Pisces, whereas now there were but fixe, Saturne being excluded. This made the Inhabitants of Bagadet afraid, because of the low situation : and caused them to stop the passages of the waters. The Ismaelites, which of deuotion performed their Pilgrimage, were most of them drowned. The Calipha for this cause arayed the Astrologer, which fore-told this, in royall pparell. Almoftarched Byla Fazele his sonne succeeded : hee warred against some Princes of Persia, and seized vpon some Prouinces of Masul Salinquis King of Karalar, but Masud did the better, and slew the Chalife A. H. 529. His sonne and successour Rached Byla sought to reuenge his death, but hauing conquered a great part of Persia, was slaine also by Masud A. H. 532. He following his victories, made himselfe Master of Bagadet, and placed Almokady Byla in the Caliphate, who taking aduantage of Masuds death, which hapned soone after, marched into Persia, and recovered that which Masud had vsurped, which he enioyed peaceably, and dyed A. H. 555. And now the Chalifes became great Potentates againe. His sonne Almoftanger Byla Issuf succeeded the fiftie three Chalife. After his death which was through heate, by shutting the doore when he was in the Bath, succeeded A. H. 566. Almoftanzy Benur Elah Azen : and hee * dying, A. H. 577. Nacer held the place fortie seuen yeeres : vnder whom Bagadet did greatly flourish. During his gouernment the Salinquis were vanquished by the Korassmians. Alahar Byla Mahamed, the next Chalife enioyed but nine moneths ; his sonne Almoftancer Byla euenteene yeeres, in whose time the Mozoles or Tararians wanne some Prouinces, but by him were diuers time defeated. Almoftanem, or Musftanem Byla Abdula was the fiftie eight, (others reckon but fiftie foure) and the last of the Chalifes of Bagadet the thirte seuen of this family, which had commanded about five hundred twentie three yeeres, in the Persian Chronicles of Mirkend, and others esteemed as Kings thereof. Hee dyed A. H. 655. I confesse Zacuth and Mirkend doe not ally agree in names, times, and relations, nor yet much disagree. I haue heere most obserued ued the later as the larger. Not long before, one Bada profiting himselfe a Prophet sent of GOD, had of the summe of all Nations gathered an Armie, wherewith hee committed much excessse and slaughter in Asia, both of Jewes and Christians. In the time of this last Chalife, the Tartar King Chita, made his brother Halacho King of Irak and Mesopotamia, who besieged and sacked Bagded, and slew Muistatzen. This Chalipha was flattered by his commandement in the midst of his treasures, because hee would not employ the same (through niggardise) for his owne defence. From that time there hath been no Chaliph (saith this Arabian Historie) in Bagdet. In him ended the Abassian line, of which had beene five and thirtie Chaliphases.

§. IIII.

Of their Tytles, Greatnesse, and Learning.

FTER Mahumet or Muhammed the false Prophet, the first Captaines of warre were called Emirelmumenim,^a that is to say, Præfetti orthodoxorum, the Captaines of the Sound-believers: and after, because, vnder cloake of Religion, they seized on the Primacie and tyrannic (spirituall and temporall) they named themselves Caliphs:^b that is, Vicars. Bedwell interprets, successours. The first Emirelmumenim, was Abu-becker. When by his successours, Gouvernours^c were sent into Spaine and Africa, they for a time held the same as Deputies, although to their power nothing lacked but the Tytle of a King, yet they professed to doe all in the name of the Emirelmumenim, untill afterwards they tooke that Tytle also themselves, and became absolute. Whence all the petty Kings of Spaine, and the African Potentates, were called Emirelmumenim; and the Kings of Barbarie are so stiled at this day, even as the French King is called Christianissimus, & the Spaniard Catholicus. The Legats of the Chalipha were called Naibin, which also signifieth the same that Chalipha; but this was made peculiar to those Saracen tyrants, which vied both Swords (to speake in the Romish language) supreme in matters Divine and Humane. Thus observeth Joseph Scaliger^e of these names: whereby appeareth, that Emirelmumenim was not given onely to Abdramon and his successours in Africa, as is before observed out of Curiæ.

Beniamin Tudelensis nameth the Chaliph, which in his time ruled in Bagded, Amir Almuhammadin Alghabassi, which Montanus translates, The Prince of the believers which live in penance, or heaviness: But I rather incline to Mr. Seldens coniecture, that it is Emirelmumenim of the Abassian race or kindred: for so Beniamin adds after that the proper name of this great King was Al-ghabassi Hhaphisi, whom I take to bee the same which is before called Moktaphi, the first fillable in that name being common (as you see) to many of them, and Ktaphi or Chaphisi not so unlike as many names proue in their transmigration from one language to another. He reports that he had a Pallace of three miles compass within the Citie, within which was a wood or grove of Trees of all sorts, both barren and bearing, Beasts also of all sorts for game, and in the midst thereof a great lake with plentie of Fish, neither wanted there Fowles for varietie of disport. He was skilfull of the Hebrew, and well respected that Nation. He had imposed this rule on himselfe, not to vse any meate or apparel, which hee had not first earned: to which purpose hee made fine Mattes, which being sealed with his owne Seale, were by his Courtiers sold, the great men buying them for their vse. None of the Ismaelites (so he calleth the Mahumetans) might see his face: and the Pilgrimes which came from Mecca, in the Land of Eliman, and passing this way, desired to see him, vsed to enter the Pallace, and there cryed out, O Lord, Light of the Ismaelites, and Sun-beame of our Law, shew vs the brightnesse of thy face. But hee answered them nothing, as not seeming to regard them. Then his Courtiers and great Attendants sued for their vsing, saying, O our Lord, spread thy peace over these men which come from farre Countries, &c. Then would hee look out at the window a skirt of his garment, which they devoutly kissed; and (when one of those great men had said, God be with thee) returned full of gladnesse to their home, where they were receiued almost with veneration for so happie an exploit. Euery of the Princes which attended on him, had his severall Palaces within the great Pallace, and were duely observed, wearing also yron chaynes, because they had once conspired to set vp his brother. But they had the reuenues of Townes and Cities belonging to them, brought them by their Officers, notwithstanding.

Thus did hee conferre his Maiestie with the people, and securitie with his owne. I omit the Edifices and pillars of gold and silver, adorned with Gemmes, which hee mentioneth in that Pallace: Out of which the Chaliph came but once in the yeere, in the month Romades,^{or}

or their Easter solemnitie, at which time they resorted thither out of farre Countries to see him, as if hee had beene Mahomet. He was then carryed on a Mule, royally apparelled, and crowned with a Diadem of vnspcakable price, on which he ware a blacke cloih, in token that the day of death would obscure all that pompe and splendor. The Princes of Arabia, Media, Persia, Tuboth, did attend him: and thus he went to the great Temple built in the gate of Bofra. The people, men and women, all cloathed in silke & purple, salute him, Peace be on thee our Lord King: He saluting them with his hand, or mouing his garment. Being thus conueyed to the Porch, with musick also of all kindes, and dances, he ascendeth a Tower of wood, and there maketh a Sermon of his Law; the wife-men of the Simacites applauding his learning, the people answering, Amen. After this, hee giueth them all his blessing: and a Camell is brought to him; which hee killeth for the Paschall Feast, and causeth the Princes to distribute pieces of the flesh of the beast which himselfe had slaine; this they esteeme a great gift. This done, they depart, the King returning by another way, by the banks of Tygris, alone, (the Princes passing in the Riuier) vnto the Palace. Hee had built a Palace on the other side of Tygris, on a branch of Euphrates, which floweth by one side of the Citie, in which hee had rayled great Houses, Hospitals for the sicke, and for the poore, and for mad men, with all prouision for them at his charge. This I haue beene bold to intert out of this Jew, because I know none other Author that can acquaint vs with the State of Bagled in the time of her chief flourishing, before it was destroyed by the Tartars.

Thus haue wee giuen you a Coronographicall view of the ancient Chaliphes, with their first and greatest Conquests, omitting the lesser and later: as in the yeere 807. in Sardinia and Corsica: in 826. in Crete; 843. in Sicily; and presently after in Italy, ouer-running Tuscan, and burning the Suburbs of Rome it selfe, with the Churches of Peter and Paul 845. the next yeere in Illiria, Dalmatia; besides the taking of Ancona: in 847. chased by Pope Leo from Illiria. These with other their affaires of warre in Lucania, Calabria, Apulia, at Beneuentum, Genus, Capua, (which Cities they tooke) I passe ouer. After this great battlegrew lubbely and vniwelde, it fell vnder the weight of it selfe, none so much as the Saracens ouerthrowing the Saracens, as their 6 Sects and Diuisions make plaine. Neuertheless, this diuisioning and disuoyating notwithstanding, their Religion euen still couereth a great part of the world. For besides the triumphing sword of the Turke, Persian, Mogore, Barbarian, and other Mahumetan Princes: such is the zeale of the superstitious Mahumetan, that in places furthest distant, this their Religion hath bene preached, which they trade together with their Marchandize, euen from the Atlantike Ocean vnto the Philippines: It hath founded in China, it hath pierced Tartaria: and although the name of Christian extendeth it selfe into so many Sects and Professions in the Countries of Asia, Afrike and America, besides Europe (almost wholly Christian;) yet it is hard to say, whether there be not as many Disciples and Professors of this ridiculous and impious deuotion, as of all those which giue their names to Christ, in whatsoever Truth or Heresie, Master Brerewood accounteth the Mahumetans more then the Christians, in proportion of fixe to foure.

Thus hath the Field and the Church stooped to Mahomet: wee may adde more, (Saul among the Prophets:) learning hath flourished among the Mahumetans, at first vnlearned and rude, but enemies to learning in others. Yea, they haue sought to propagate their impious Mahometrie, and extirpate the Christian truth by that pollicie of Iulian, prohibiting all learning to their Christian subiects. Such a decree of Abdalla, A. 766, is recited by Theophanes.

When the Kings of Africa possessed Spaine, they founded Vniuersities both at Marocco (it is Scaligers report) and in Spaine, allowing yearly stipends to the Professors. And in those times was great ignorance of good learning in the Latine Church, when good Disciplines flourished exceedingly amongst the Muhammedans. Yea, whatsoever the Latines writ, after the industrie of the Arabians had acquainted them with their ignorance, is wholly to be ascribed to the Arabians, both their Philosophie, Physicke, and Mathematicks. For they had no Greeke Author which was not first translated into Arabike, and thence into Latine, as Ptolomey, Euclide and therest till Constantinople being taken by the Turkes, the Greeke Exiles brought vs backe to the Fountaines. John Leo testifies, that many ancient Authors and great volumes are amongst them, translated out of the Latine, which the Latines themselues haue lost. But now the Muhammedans are growne artlesse in Africa: only in Constantinople may good Arabike & Persian works be gotten by the helpe of the Tewes. Lud. Vuer & faith, That they translated Arabike out of the Latine, but he was not so well able to iudge thereof, although he rightly ascribeth the corrupting of Arts to vnskillful translations, and sheweth the difference of Athenois or Auerrois is Aristotle (as the Latins haue him) from the Greeke. But his inuictue is too bitter in condemning all the Arabians, as vnlearned, dotting, and sauouring more of the Alcoran, then of Art: and the Spaniard might beare some grudge to that Nation, which so many hundred yeeres had spoiled Spaine: still leauing the fourth part of the Spaniish Language (as Scaliger testifieth thereof) Arabike, in monument of their Conquest.

Of their learned men were Auicenn, Auerrois, Auenpace, Algaral, &c. Philosopher; Mesue, Rafis, and many other Physicians and Astrologers, mentioned in the Chronicles of Zacutus; Leo, and Abisfada Ismael, Geographers; Carraon, Bagdad, Fez, Marocco, Corduba, &c. were Vniuersities of Saracen Students. But now Learning and Schooles are decayed and ruined: euen as at first also it was amongst some of them little countenanced, as appeareth by that Hagag in the 96. yeere of the Hegira, who being Gouvernor or King of Irak, in his sicknesse consulted with an Astrologer, Whether the Stars had told him of any Kings death that yeere: he answered, That a King should die, but his name was Ceni: Whereupon Hagag remembering that at his birth his mother had imposed that name on him: I shall die, saith he; but thou shalt go one houre before: and presently caused his head to be smitten off. An vnhappie Harbenger in regard of his Art: an vnhappie Art which can better tell others Destinies then their owne. But no maruell in Hagag, who was fleshed in bloud, that his Herodian Testament should bee thus bloudie, who in his life had in that Median Province slain an hundred and twentie thousand men, besides fiftie thousand men, and fourescore thousand women, which perished in his imprisonments.

Baghdad (which is also called Dar-afsalam, that is, The Citie of Peace *) recieued that name of a Monke called Bachdad, who as Ben-Casem writeth, serued a Church builded in that Meadow. But Abu-Giapar Almanfur the second Abasfazan Chalipha, who wanneit, A. H. 150. named it Dar-afsalam. It is the Citie Royall of Mesopotamia, now called Diabect, which the said Almanfur placed in a large Plaine vpon Tigris, and diuided by the River into two Cities, ioyned by a Bridge of Boars. This Citie built in this place, Almanfur ruled many yeeres, and after him other Chaliphates, till the 339. yeere of the Hegira, in which King Aadab-eddauile and Saif-eddauile tooke it, who with their Successors enioyed it till Solyman the Ottoman Emperour subdued, and is now ruled by a Bascia, with many Iranizaries. But heretofore Almad Abi Baer of Bachdad, in his Annals, will shew you more. This Citie is famous for Schooles of all Sciences, both in former and the present time. Here Almad Afzalami a famous Poet wrote his Verses. Here Alpharabius the renowned Philosopher and Physician, borne at Farab in Turcomania, professed these studies publicly with great applause, and leauing many of his Schollers in this Citie, went to Harrair of Mesopotamia, where finding Aristotles Booke, De Auditu, hee read it fortie times, and wrote vpon the Booke, that he was willing againe to read it. Hence hee went to Damascus, and there dyed, A. H. 339. Thus Ben-Casem in his Booke, De viridario Elefiorum.

Bochara is an ancient Citie vpon Euphrates, in a Village belonging whereto Honain Abi Bensina (whom the Latines call, Auicenna) was borne, A. H. 370. Hee gaue himselfe vs Physicke very young, and was the first which became Physician to Kings and Princes, who before in that Country vsed o no Physicians. He published neere an hundred bookes, some of Physicke, some of Philosophie, a Dictionary of Herbes and Stones, Verses of the Soule, &c. He liued eight and fiftie yeeres, and dyed in Hamadan. He had runne thorow all Arts, at eightene. Thus Ben-Casem. But others affirme, that a certaine Physician flourishing of great note, vpon whom no praying nor paying could fasten a Disciple, left the secrets of his Art should bee made common: the mother of Auicenna offers her sonne to doe him selfe service in decoctions, and other meaner offices, which hee could not doe himselfe, nor was there feare of danger from him whom nature had made deafe, and therefore dumbe. Hee made tryalls, and found Auicenna deafe, as he thought, and entertaigned him, who watche his times, and transcribed his bookes and notes, sending them closely to his Mother, which after his mothers death hee published in his owne name.

Damascus is called of the Arabians, Sciam, and Demasc, of the Syrians Darnisc, It is luxurious in Fruits of all kinds, rich in Oliues, and Yron of excellent temper by nature, and so bettered by Art, that no Helme or Shield can withstand it. It is seated in a large Plaine at the roots of Libanas, there called Hermon, fixe miles in compass, double walled, with a strong square Tower in the midlt, built by a Florintine, beautified with Springs, Market places, publike Buildings, Meskits, Bathes, Canes, and all sorts of like weauing, and in all ancient times with Learning and learned men. Here flourished Saint Damascen: and here Almotanabbi excelled in Arts and Armes, emulous of Mohamet, but not with like success. Hee was called Nabion, that is, The Prophet; this Motanabbi, that is, Prophecying: he wrote the Alcoran elegantly and eloquently; this excelled in Prose and Verse: both his Followers, but this mans Disciples after his death were disperst, which happened, A. H. 334. Ben-Casem also relates, that Mohamed Abi Abdillab professed Philophie in this Citie, and to dispute with all commers, and wrote a huge Booke, De unitate existentis principium. He dyed there, A. H. 638.

Aleppo is called of the Inhabitants, Haleb, the chiefe Mart of all the East, frequented by Persians, Indians, Armenians, and all Europeans. The Port is Scanderoon, called by the Inhabitants Escanderouch. The soyle is very fertile, and nourisheth abundance of Silkwormes. A. H. 923. Sultan Selim tooke it, and found therein infinit wealth. Scarfeddin which wrote the Victories of the Othomans in two Tomes, saith, that it had of Gold and Silver coyned 1150000. & a mightie masse vncoynd; Vests of cloath of Gold, tisued or wrought with gold, silk, and scarlet, about 300000, besides abundance of Gems & Pearls. And besides other wealth innumerable, it had eight Agmories well furnished. It now flourisheth in the next place to Constantinople and Cairo, and may be called, Queene of the East: Here are store of Gems, Amber, Bengroin, Lignum Aloes, and Muske, which is taken from a little reddish beast, beaten with many blowes on one place that the blood may all come thither. Then is the skin so swolne and full of blood bound straight that the blood may not issue: and put into one or more bladders, is dried on a beasts backe till the bladder fall off of it selfe, and that blood after a moneth becomes excellent Muske. At Aleppo was borne that great Grammarian Othman Abu Homar, surnamed Ben-ellibageb, which wrote Cafia and Sciasia of Grammer, and dyed, A. H. 673.

Mahomets Life after the Histories of Christians.

THe life of Mahomet is at large described by diuers Authors, but I finde it no where so fully as before the Alcaron in the Italian Edition, the sum whereof, and of the other reports touching the same, is this. Ismael was the first (according to that Italian Author, others ascribe it to Abraham) that built the Temple at Mecca, and hauing to wife an Egyptian Idolatrese, had by her twelve sonnes, which (as he saith) being disperfed in Arabia, Persia, Armenia, sowed so many sorts of Religion: and Chedar his second sonne, placed in the Temple of his father (vpon an high Tower called Alquibla) an Idoll named Alleeb and Alleez, instituting certaine ceremonies: and amongst the rest, the sacrificing of a Ram, in remembrance of that Ram which was presented to his grand-father Abram at the offering of Isaac. Of Chedar descended Thebic, and so in order, Caab, Numbub, Almucaien, Ablucen, Acaba, Amubajen, Amir, Celif, Nisca, Abhimasita, Andrem, Scaad, Mudbar, Iges, Mudicia, Hudbaifa, Chineve, Anafere, Melich, Phajce, Paliff, Lunai, Cabnai, Morta, Chelef, Facien, Abdamanef, Abdalmutalif, Abdalla the supposed father of Mahomet: his mothers name was Hennina or Hennia a Iewish (as some write) his father was an Ethnieke or Pagan Idolater. His base condition and obscuritie was such, that the Turkes themselves doubt whether he were an Arabian or Persian, notwithstanding that genealogicall rabble. Richerius reporteth, that he was a Cyrenean by birth, and that in the time of his minoritie or child-hood, he was by some Plagiaries stolne away from his friends, and sold to the Ismaelit-Marchants. Others say, that hee was abandoned both of father and mother, and (according to the cruell custome of that barbarous people) sold to strangers. From so base a beginning did this cunning Impollor and Seducer of the world arise to be the scourge of Princes, and disturber of the world.

He was somewhat comely of person, and of sharp wit, and therefore was made ouer-keer of the businesse of Abdalmutalif his Master, or (as some say) his Grand-father: and traded for him in Soria, Egypt, and Persia, and after his death, inherited his goods: continuing his trade of Marchandize with a great man of Corozan, he succeeded him in his bed & wealth, by the marriage of his widow Gadisa (whom others call Adega the daughter of Hulert) and that (as some suspect not vnprobably) by the helpe of Sorceries and Incantations. With this widow, after shee was become his wife, he liued in his wonted course of life thirteene yeeres, and had by her one sonne, and three daughters. And by this means growne great, he aspired higher; assembling to himselfe a company of theues, vnthrifts and out-lawes, which with him became voluntaries and aduenturers in the warres of the Emperour Haracius against the Persians: in which he valourously behaued himselfe, and was wounded in the visage, and Cosdroes the Persian King was overcome.

After this, Mahomet desiring further how to satisfie his ambitious desire of Soueraigntie, met with occasion fitting those his aspiring designs. The Arabians being deuid their pay

^c This mutiny, according to others, hapned many yeeres after that Mahomet had vnder the cloake of Religion furthered his ambition and rebellion.

(as is said) raised a mutinie and ^e rebellion: these chose Mahomet to be their Captaine, who vsed them as his instruments of robbery and violence about the countreys of Mecca. But the Nobles opposing themselves against him; hee, perceiuing that their power and authoritie would be a perillous rub in his way, thought it his safest course to insinuate with them; and therefore sought by alliance to winne their better liking, taking some of their daughters to his wiues; of which he had at one time eleven, and in all his life fifteen, besides two slaves.

Heraculus at that time fauouring the Heresie of the Monothelites, & neglecting the affaires of the Empire, Mahomet proejects tooke better effect. Hummar also and Mauchia caused all Soria, and Iudza and Egypt to rebell. Sergius at that time a Nestorian Monke of Constantinople (thence for that Heresie excommunicated) resorting to Mahomet kindled these sparkes into a great fire, perswading him to countenance his Rebellion, with the pretence of Religion; the rather now that Heraculus had offended the Christians by his exactions and Heresies, and the Iewes, by new cruelties, because by Magicke he had bene warned to beware of the Circumcised Nation. Thus some male contented Iewes, and some hereticall Christians being called to counsell, it was agreed, that hee should professe himselfe to be chosen in this turbulent state of the world, to bring vnto the same a New Law, appointed hereunto by Diuine authoritie: to the Iewes assuring himselfe their expelled Messias; to the Christians promising amidst so many Heresies, The rule of Truth; to the excommunicate Hereticks, restitution of their persons and goods; to seruants, libertie; to subiects, immunity from tribute.

^f He neither was circumcised himselfe. (saith in Arabian noblesman in confusion of the Aleoran) nor did command any thing thereof in his law, but the Arabians vsed Circumcision before his time. g Saifusino calleth him Bakra, and addeth also, Nicholas as a Priest of Rome.

And thus hee caused himselfe of Sergius to bee baptized, and to bee ^e circumcised also of Abdalla a Iew, hauing before bene a Paynime. After, hee got himselfe into a Cauce two miles from the Towne called Garbe, continuing there two yeeres in companie of Sergius and Abdalla, which acquainted him with the Christian and Iewish Principles: and in the night resorted to his wife, whom he perswaded to this vaine beliefe by Zaidus his seruant, rewarding him therefore with freedome, and proclaiming (as by an Edict from Heauen) the like libertie to all seruants of all sorts, which would follow him. This rout resorting to him, and by their numbers strengthening his faction, their masters not a little aggrieved, gaue out a rumour, that Mahomet was mad, and possessed of a Diuill, and that an euill end would befall him and his followers. And although they might haue gotten him into their hands, yet in regarde of his nine vncles, and some noble Families linked him in kindred, viz. the Corasites, the Hassinites, the Benitamines, they abstained from further rigour.

Thus with the helpe of Sergius and ^h Barra a Iacobite; and Cilleus in the caue, with the fauour of his two vncles, Hanza, and Alaben at Mecca, with his elder brother (that tooke his daughter Fatima) and Eubocara (a chiefe man of that place, afterwards his father in law) he composed after his and their pleasure Constitutions and Canons, and published the same at Mecca; with protestation that the Angell Gabriel had bene sent to him from God, as in old times to the Prophets, to teach him these things. And in the first place commanding them to believe in God the Creator of heauen and earth, the causer of raines and fruites, that insideth death on men, and after to letten them vp to giue them either, in reward of their good workes, Paradise; or of their bad, Hell; and such other things, neuer before heard of among these simple Idolatrous Inhabitants of Mecca, he grew in great estimation.

For in Persia and Arabia, before this time, some worshipped a Tree, which they called Putulangua, offering sacrifices thereto: some an Idoll, called Blismum; and some the Sunne; and others vsed other Idolatries; spread by the so many sonnes of Ismael: and therefore the ruder multitude, astonished with these Propheticall and Angelicall titles, were easily bewitched. And by degrees he published his intended wickednes, not sparing outrageous villanies, as ^b the stealing of a Camell, the murdering of a Iew sleeping vnder a tree. Yea, hee pretended not humane infirmities, but diuine authority, to his most mischieuous designments. For example, being lustfully affected to ⁱ Zamech, the daughter of Gaifis, the wife of Zaid, ^j he writ in his Law, That after vow or promise of marriage, it was lawfull for him to enioy her, and (if he pleased) to take her to his wife. And being reprehended, that Assa his ^k wife was dishonest with Zaphagam, the son of Almuchaithum, the Angell (forsooth) said, she was chaste. And being found by his wiues, with Mary the wife of Macobe, the King of the Iacobites, he in another Chapter is absolved of his oath, and free to lye with any woman, not being able to containe himselfe, notwithstanding he had sworne so to do. And by the same authority he enioyned them penance, for blaming the Prophet. And willing to diuorce one of his wiues, but fearing the greatnesse of her kindred, hee frameth one Chapter, bl. ming him for fearing man more then God. Meeting once with a woman on the way, hee would haue abused her, but the refusing, he set vpon her Assa (Lettice bestitting his lippes) affirming that that woman had more sinned, then if shee had slain an hundred men. And the Saracens to this day, saith ^l Petrus Alfonsi, deplore that fact of this Saracen woman.

He

He wanteth not his miracles also in his Legend. As he journeyed in the heate of the day with ^m his Camels, a Cloud couered his head from the scorching heate of the Sunne, about the fiftieenth yeere of his age. And when hee first entered the Caue, he saw the Angell Gabriel in his proper shape, with white wings on a seate of gold betwixt Heauen and Earth, who brought him his Prophecie : and going to Mecca to tell his wife ; the Beasts, Trees, Strouts, and Herbs, saluted him with the name of a Prophet, and a messenger of God ; and the trunk of a Tree standing in the way, diuided it selfe for him to passe betwene, and then after closed againe. Hee also, to satisfie his incredulous vnckle Buzellima, caused the Moone to descend from heauen, which entred into his scēdē, and after parted it selfe in two, and then ascended againe. To satisfie the peoples doubtings, he caused a Bull (taught before to come at his call) to bring on his hornes a Chapter, which hee there had tyed, to testifie the truth of Mahomet.

m Mahomet's miracles.

But while the fame of this Prophetical Function filled the mouthe of the vulgar with acclamations, it no lesse filled the hearts of the Nobles of Mecca with disdain, who sought therefore to apprehend him ; but hee closely fled to Ierrib or Medina with his followers, where he liued with the name of a Prophet thirteene yeeres. From this flight they begin the computation of their Hegira : the word Hegmahr signifieth a persecution for Religion. Wherein Mahomet imitated the Christians of those parts, who accounted their yeeres from the persecution of Dioclesian. That his flight hapned on the sixteenth of July An.Dom. 622. on Friday : Therefore doe they keepe holy the Friday. And because then the Moone shewed her new hornes, that became a sacred ensigne to the Mahometans : and on Towers where they watch to obserue the new Moone, they set vp an horned Moone, as Christians on Steeples vie to erect the Crosse. For then there was no new Moone day of thre moneth Muharram ⁿ, but was the second day after the Iewish account : and therefore the new Moone might then be seene. But for the Friday it was obserued, before Mahomet's time, as shall after be shewed. Hee deprived certaine Carpenters poble Orphans of their patrimonie, and consecrated their House into a Temple. This Citie being for most part inhabited with Iewes, they asked a signe in confirmation of his Office. He said, That hee was not sent with miracles, but denunciation of Armes heere, and Hell hereafter : and those which would not receiue his new Doctrīne, he expelled by force. Being absolute Lord heere, he aspired also to the Dominion of Mecca. He sent thirtie Horse with Hanzeta to rob the Marchants, travelling thither : but being then preuented, hee sent foure yeeres after, five hundred of his best Souldiers vnder Huzaida to assault Mecca, but hee also was discomfited ; yet not desisting his enterprize, seuen yeeres after hee atchieued it, and after eleuen batells entred and sacked the Towne, and gaue the spoyle to his souldiers : and for feate, the neighbouring Cities submitted themselues. Mahomet here with encouraged, assaulted the Persians and Egyptians, exchanging with those hee conquered, his new Religion for their old wealth and libertie, binding the Gouvernours thereunto. But now being old, and through his intemperances weake, and diseased also with the falling Sicknesse, he coloured his often falling with pretext of Gabriels brightnesse, and the vnufferable splendour of his presence.

E. I. lib. 2. c. 1.*

Hee was of meane stature, large sinewes, browne colour, broad face, with a cut lip, and had one of his fore-teeth stricken out in one Expedition, and in another his face wounded : He had a great head, thicke haire, long shankes, not proportionable to his head. He was of few words, but deceitfull ; couetous, and withall prodigall, (but of other mens goods) and in deeds of lust equalling himselfe to fornic other men, or (as some say) fittie. When hee was threescore and three yeeres of age, he dyed ; of which he liued in trade of Marchandize thirtie eight, and in the Caue two ; at Mecca ten, in Medina thirteene. He had commanded, that they should not burie him ; for that on the third day after hee would ascend in bodie and soule into Heauen. Meanwhile the Earth being poysoned with the stinke of his Carcasse, they buried him, not at Mecca (as some affirme) but at Medina. His Law, in his life-time, sustained many alterations ; Cellenus his Scribe writing what himselfe pleased : and the seuerall parcels of the same being collected by Odmen, one of his successors, this Booke was thereupon called Alcaron, that is, a Summarie, or Collection of Precepts. Thus Mahomet aduantaged himselfe with the mutinous Rebels, Fugitiues, Vnchristes, Apostata-Iewes, and hereticall Christians in that diseased State of the Empire : the body whereof was afflicted on the East by the Persians, on the West by the Gothes and other Barbarians, and fretted within his owne bowels by intestine rebellions : the Soule thereof being no lesse torne and rent by the Sects and Heresies of the Arians, Donatists, Nestorians, Pelagians, and others. He fishing in these troubled waters, set on foot his new Religion, to bring light to the Gentiles, and to mitigate to the Iewes and Christians the seueritie of the Law and Gospell. But the Mahometans themselves doe report otherwise, fabling of this Fabler great matters, as if hee had been the Promise and Hope of Nations, and the most excellent personage of the World.

They haue written a Booke of the generation of Mahomet to this effect: o The Booke of the generation of Mahomet, the Messenger of God, (the Prayer and Salvation of God bee vpon him) from Adam and Eue, to the time when God brought him forth, gracious perfect, and fit for himselfe. When as Kabaalchbar had learned out of the Scriptures, and by Astrologie, that this Prophet should be borne to the world, hee heard, That there was a man borne in Ileras, a Citie of Arabia, hauing all such markes and tokens, as hee had fore-seene by the Prophecies and his Art, viz. A spot on his fore-head, a print betwene his shoulders, &c. And to satisfie his desire, hee went thither to see; where finding those tokens fulfilled in young Mahomet, hee thereupon expounded the darke myserie of his farre-fetched Light, learned of his Master Kabelmedis, in this manner: When Adam was newly created, as he stood vp, his braine shaked and made a noyse, as the leaues doe, which are shaken with the winde: whereat Adam wondering, God said vnto him, The sound which thou hast heard, is the signe of the Prophets and Messengers of my Commandements. Take heed therefore that thou commit the Seed of Light onely to wor-¹thie Loynes, and to a cleane Wombe. And this ¹ Light of Mahomet that should be borne, ² shined from the face of Adam; as the Sun or Moone at the full. And when hee had begotten Seth, that Light passed instantly from the face of Adam into the face of Eue, in so much, that the birds of the Aire, and beasts of the Earth, wondered at her beautie. Yea, the Angels, eue-³ry day saluted her, and brought her odours out of Paradise, till she brought forth Seth alone, hauing before at eue-ry burthen, brought forth a brother and a sister.

Seth inherited this Light, which remained betwene heauen and earth, the Angels there-⁴by ascending and descending vpon Seth, and crying alwaies, Reisyeer thou Earth, worthe of the Light of Mahomet, on him be Prayer and Salvation of God. Adam drawing neere to his end, declared vnto him, by his Testament, the myserie of that Light, and the Genealogy of the Prophets. Then descended Gabriel accompanied with threecore and ten thousand Angels, ⁵ bringing eue-ry one of them a white lesse and a pen, which signed the writing, for the continuance of the order of the Prophetical generation. Seth received this writing, & was clothed with a double red garment, shining as the Sunne, as fast as the violet-flower.

From him it passed by succession to Noe and Sem; then to Abraham, at whose birth two lights from the East and West (meeting in the middle) lightened the whole world: and the Angels were heard singing, That it was the Light of the Prophet, Mahomet who should be borne of his Seed, whose Word should bee in the vertue of God. This Light passed from Abraham to the face of Hagar, being with childe, and after to Ismael; and God told him, That the soule of Mahomet, in the beginning of the Creation, was mingled with his, and that his name in Heauen should be Asmet, in Earth Mahomet, in Paradise Abnabrazim. At this ⁶ Sara grieved, vntill three Angels comforted her with the promise of Isaac. From Ismael it remoued to Keidar his sonne, who being indued with ⁷ seven Gifts, married Nutia of the Land of Isaac, but, being warned by an Oracle, he tooke to wife Agadira an Arabian; and after, by diuine warning, carried the chest of this Light vnto Iacob. Then was Hamel borne to him, and receiued the same Light; in which succeeded Thebicht, Hamijsa, Adet, Adwre, Adne, Machar, Nizar, Mular, Alex, Madraça, Horoima, Kniena, Anfira, Melic, Falthem, Luis, Galbren, Kab, Murran, Cudai, Abdamef, Hesim, a man by diuine testimonie free of all vncleanneffe. To him did all Kings offer their daughters in marriage, and among the rest Con-⁸stantine, which he refused, and married Selue, the daughter of Zor, and had by her Abdama-⁹lab, whose Light caused raine in drought. To him an Elephant portraied himselfe, and said ⁹ with mans voice, Saluation be on you, and on the Light that shineth out of your Reines, Dignitie, Fame, Honor, and Victorie bee on you, and that there should procede from him a King, greater then all the Kings of the earth: Another time, as hee slept on the stone which was placed by Abraham in his Oratorie at Mecca, hee dreamed of a chaine reaching East and West, and to Heauen, and to the Depth, which was presently conuerted into a flourishing hearb. Noe and Abraham presented themselves interpreters of this Dreame. Abdalla his sonne, the father of Mahomet, had a Tutor giuen vnto him: to defend him from his enemies, who seemed a man, but was none. Hee was preferred from the lying in waite of the Iewes, by threecore and ten Angels, which seemed Men. Hee wedded ¹⁰ Ermina, and therefore two hundred Women perished for his be-¹⁰ loue: some hanging, some burning themselves.

When the prescribed time was come, in the moneth Dulheia, on a Fryday-night, God bad bad Andreas to open the gates of Paradise, that the innermost of his secret might be manifested: for it pleaseth mee (saith hee) this night to transport the Light of my Prophet from the herines of Abdalla into the wombe of Ermina, and that it come into the world. This being done, as Abdalla, the Iudge and Lord of the Arabians, went into the house of Prayer, hee perceived a great light to lighten from his house vp toward Heauen, and presently dyed. On the twelfth day of Rab, on a Tuseday, Mahomet was borne, circumcised and all frolick. And then all Idolls fell and became blacke: All Kingdomes were destroyed, and not one stood vp-right. Lucifer was cast into the bottome of the Sea, and in fortie dayes could not get out, and then called his fellowes, and told them, that Mahomet was borne with the power of the sword, who would take away all their power. The same also, God caused to bee proclaimed in Heauen and Earth. His mother said, that she was deliuered of him without paine, and Angelicall Birds came to nourish the child, and a man clothed in white presented him with three keyes, like to Pearles, which he tooke; the key of Victorie, the key of the Lawes, and the key of Prophecie. And after came three persons with shining faces, presenting him a Cauldron of Emeralds, with four handles, which Mahomet accepted as a signe of his rule ouer all the world. The Birds, Clouds, Windes, Angels, contended for the nourishment of the child. But the cause was determined by heavenly voice affirming, That hee should not bee taken from the hands of men. An Ass, almost famished, worshipped him, and receiuing him on her backe, became Herald to this new Prophet, with mans voyce proclaiming the worthinesse of her Carriage. Three men carried him vp into a Mountaine: of which, one opened him from the breast vnto the Nauell, and walshed his entrailes with snow: the second cleaued his heart in the middle, and took out of it a black graine, saying, That it was the portion of the Deuill. The third made him whole againe. Seraphin nourished him three yeeres, and Gabriel nine and twentie, who gaue vnto him, in the fortieth yeere of his age, the Law, and carried him to Heauen. This his iourney is related by Friar Richard, sometimes a Rudent in the Vniuersitie of Baldach, Chapter 14. and in his 1. life.

Gabriel, with threecore and ten paire of wings, came to Mahomet, in the chamber of Aissa, his best beloved wife, and said, That God would haue him to visit him where he is; and brought with him the best Elmparac, or Aborach, of nature betwene a Mule and an Ass. This beast told Mahomet, That hee would not take him on his backe, till he had prayed to God for him. His steps were as farre as one could see, so that in the twinkling of an eye hee had brought Mahomet to Ierusalem. Then Gabriel with his girdle tyed the beast to a Rocke, and * carried Mahomet on his shoulders into heauen: where he knocked, and the Porter opened. Here Mahomet saw * troupes of Angels, and prayed twice on his knees for them: and amongst the rest, old Father Adam, reioicing for such a Sonne, and commending him to his prayers. Then hee brought him to the second Heauen, which was a iourney of fife hundred yeeres, and so forth on to the seauenth Heauen: Heere hee saw the Angelicall people, euery of which was a thousand times greater then the World, and euery of them had threecore and ten thousand heads, and euery head threecore and tenne thousand moutthes, and euery mouth seuentene hundred tongues, praying God in seuen hundred thousand Languages. And he saw one Angell weeping, and he asked the cause: who answered, That he was Sinne. And Mahomet prayed for him. Then Gabriel commended him to another Angell, and he to another, and so forth in order, till he came before God and his Throne. Then God (whose face was couered with threecore and ten thousand clothes of light, and from whom Mahomet rood two stones cast below) touched him with his hand, the coldnesse whereof pierced to the marrow of his back-bone. And God said, I haue imposed on thee and on thy people Prayers. When hee was returned as farre as the fourth Heauen, Moses counselled him to returne back, to obtaine ease vnto the people, which could not beare so many praiers, which he did oftentimes, till there remained but few, thus returning to his Elmparac, he rood backe to his house at Mecca. All this was done in the tenth part of the night. But when he was requested to doe thus much in the peoples sight, he answered, Prayed by God, I am a Man, and an Apostle.

The Booke Asfar (saith Bellonius) telleth further, That in this iourney Mahomet heard a womans voice, crying Mahomet, Mahomet, but hee held his peace. Afterwards another called him, but he gaue no answer. Mahomet asked the Angell, who they were: He answered, That the one was shee which published the Iewes Law, and if hee had answered yea, all his Disciples should haue bene Iewes: the other was shee which deliuered the Gospel, whom if hee had answered, all his followers had bene Christians.

Which fallall opinions maketh them hardie. The fourth was of Emerald, hee was Isoph and the Angell of Compassion, weeping for the sinnes of men. The fifth of Diamond, and in it Moses. The sixth of Rubie, and in it Isaiah & Isidore. The seventh of Iasp, and in it Iesus Christ. All these recommended them, lyes to his Prayers.

The said Booke telleth, that GOD gaue him a five-fold priuiledge. First, that he should bee the highest creature in heauen or earth: Secondly, the most excellent of the sonnes of Adam: Thirdly, an vniuersall Redeemer: Fourthly, skilfull in all languages: Fifthly, that the spoiles of Warres should be giuen him. Gabriel after, (saith that Booke) carryed him to Hell, to see the secrets thereof, and the seuen gates thereof, &c. where (as in the place fittest for him) we will leaue him. The booke of the vertues of Mahomet lieth, That in glorying of his strength hee would boast, that hee had knowne his eleuen wiues successiue-ly in one houre.

One of their Chronicles telleth of his Martiall affaires. This Chronicle reckoneth from Adam to Noe one thousand two hundred fortie and two yeeres: From thence to Abraham, one thousand and fourscore: Hence to Moses five hundred and fiftene: After him to David, five hundred threescore and nine, and from this time to Christ, one thousand three hundred and fiftie: from whence to Mahomet is numbred six hundred and twentie, in all five thousand three hundred threescore and sixteene, from Adam to Mahomet. All the Prophets were in number an hundred and twentie thousand, and the Messengers of GOD three hundred and fiftene: whereof Adam, Seth, Esau, Noe, Abraham, were Hebrewes; Huth, Sebath, Ishmael, Sebath, Mahomet, were Arabians.

If this Historie of Mahomet's life be long and tedious, I thought good, out of an Arabian Chronicle, to adde this Epitome thereof. His Mother dyed in a iourney to Mecca, when he was fourescore yeeres old, and his Nurse restored him to his Grand-father Abdalmutalif, with whom hee liued eight yeeres. The Seraphim preferred him, but was neuer seene. After that, Gabriel was his Guardian, of whom hee receiued the Law, which he kept close three yeeres, communicating it onely to some of his owne opinion, by whose helpe hee became Priest and Prince of the Arabians and Satacens, and about eighteene moneths after was carried into Heauen: and being returned into the Earth, hee tooke Eubocara, Ali, and Zaid, to be his companions in this enterprise. He went to Zaif, or Athar, and preached publicly, and thence to Mecca, ten yeeres going from place to place. And of his Conuerts, he chose some for guard of his Person, who sware the obseruance of his Law, to the number of fortie, who now with Word, now with the Sword, set forward this Doctrine. After ten yeeres, Mecca was peopled onely with beleueurs, and all Arabia was conuerted without difficultie. Then hee sent to the neighbouring Kings to become of his Religion: to the King of Persia, to the Roman Emperour, to King Cinna, to the Lord of the two Seas, to the King of Ethiopia, &c. After hee returned to Ierib, and on Tuesday, the twelfth of Rab, in the eleuenth yeere, dyed. His Sepulture was appointed by GOD, in the house of Ayfa his Wife, in the chamber where hee was wont to sleepe, where, at this day is a Temple of bricke. His bodie was wrapped in three white clothes, without any pompe. His seale was a siluer Ring, with this inscription, Mahomet the Messenger of God. He went twice on Pilgrimage, and nineteene times conducted an Armie.

a Nabi, a Prophet.

The place of his buriall is at Medina, surnamed of him Talnabi, that is, of the Prophecy not (as some write) at Mecca. Neither doth his corps hang in the ayre by force of Loadstones drawing vp his yron Coffin or Chest, but lieth buried in the ground (if any whete) as Ludouicus Vertommus, by his owne view, hath obserued. Of this place, and of Mecca, we shall speake more, in relating the Rites of the Pilgrims that visit them.

The Booke of the Policies of the Turkish Empire.

Some relate otherwise of the death of Mahomet, as that hee dyed at fortie yeeres of age, being poysoned by one of his disciples, called Albanor, to make triall of his boasting Prophecies, that he would rise againe within three daies after his death. This Albanor after coming to see him, found his bodie torne in pieces, and deuoured of dogs: whereupon gathering together the bones that remained, into a Coffin, hee caused them to bee buried. Which in my minde is not so probable as the former report. The day of his death Scaliger accounteth the tenth yeere of the Hegira, on Munday the twelfth of Rabie 1. or rather the euening before, that is, the sixteenth of June, in the yeere of our Lord 631. and was borne the fifth of May, An. Dom. 570. on the same day and moneth, sixtie three Arabike yeeres before.

Vnto this which hath been spoken, I haue thought good to adde out of Arabike Authors, collected by Gabriel and Iohn the Maronites this which followeth. Mahomed was borne at Mecca, and in the fortieth yeere of his age, and as Ben-Casem hath, in the 933. of Alexander the Great, began to viter his doctrine, first priuily, after that publicly: whereupon hee was banished the Cite in the fiftie two of his life, or according to Abdullatif Ben-Iussif, the fiftie three, and fled to Tahreb, from which flight, which they call Hegeration, or Hegera, which hapned A. D. 622. or thereabouts. And although this yeere 1623. bee to them 1032. Yet, because they reckon according to the yeeres of the Moone, which they say consist of three hundred fiftie four daies, the Moones course hath in this space exceeded that of the Sunne, some moneths about: thirte one yeeres. Whereupon their moneths are vncertaine.

saine. In this Citie by subtile hypocrites, Mahomed became Politicall and Ecclesiasticall Prince; and beganne to procure the friendship of many, and to promulgate his lawes by degrees. In the second yeere of his flight, he enacted his lawes of Fasting; in the third, forbade wine and swines-flesh; and so proceeded with the rest, that within eight yeeres, hee brought into subjection Mecca (whence he had beene expelled) and Muna, and went forward with his law and conquest. As concerning his wives, Ben-Casem saith, he had foure: hee is also reported to haue many harlots and concubines: and in this Chapter Surao-Ibaqa, or de vacua, hee bids them marrie one, two, three, or foure wives a man, and to take as many concubines as they are able to keepe. Ben-Sidi Ali saith, That he gloried that he had the power of ten Prophets in copulation giuen him by God: yea, he alcribed all his villanies to God, by ministration of the Angell Gabriel. His first wife was named Chodaige, by whom he had two sonnes, and foure daughters, Zainab, Fatema (whom Ali married) Om Kalibum the third, and Rakia the fourth (both which Abu-beer married.) His second wife was Aisfe daughter of Abu-beer the first Chalifa, which was but six yeeres old (Ben-Casem is our Author) when Mohamed tooke her to wife: the Moslemans call her The Mother of the faithfull: who besides the knowledge of tongues, perused diligently the Arabike histories, loued exceedingly, and alway praised Mohamed. The third was named Mary, which brought forth to Mohamed Ebrahim, surnamed Casem (whence Mohamed is often called Abulcasem) though Ben-Abdlatif will haue Ebrahim to be one, and Casem another; but Ben-Casem saith, he had but three sons, of which Ebrahim Casem dyed at eightene moneths, and Taibet and Taber his sonnes by Chodaige, dyed both in their cradles. *Mohamed*s last wife was Zainab, whom also they call The Mother of the faithfull, before the wife of Zaid Ben-Harteb, *Mohamed*s Maister, who diuorced her, whereupon Mohamed gladly rooke her to wife.

He had foure Councillors or Companions; the first, Abdollah, or Abu-Bacr, his sincerest and most inward friend, a man very rich, and releuer of *Mohamed*s necessities, his successeur after his death. He dyed the thirteenth yeere of the Hegira, and sixtie three of his age, and was buried in the same graue with Mohamed. The second was Homar the sonne of Chattab, surnamed Faruq, who succceeded Abi-Bacr, and ruled ten yeeres and six moneths. Hee was the first which was called King of the faithfull, and writ the Annalls of the Moslemans, and brought the Alcoran into a Volume, and caused the Ramadam Fast to be obserued. He was slaine the twentie three of the Hegira, and buried by Abi-Bacr. The third was Othman, who in his twelue yeeres raigned subdued Cyprus, Naifabur, Maru, Sarchas, and Maritania, and dyed A. H. 35. and was buried in the buriall place of the Citie. Aali is the fourth, who is called also Emir Elmumenin, that is, King of the faithfull; Hee was slaine A. H. 40. in the sixtie three of his age, and was buried in the Citie Kerbelai. Hee was Vncles sonne, or Cousin-German to Mohamed, and his sonne-in-law, and deare familiar from his youth, and revealed the Moslem law together with Mohamed; whereupon hee was wont to say, I am the first Moslem. And therefore the Persians detest the other three Chalifas, as heretikes, burne their writings wherefoeuer they finde them, and persecute their followers, because forthwith they were so impudent, to prefer themselves before Aali, and spoiled him of the right due by Testament. Hence are wars & hostile cruelties betwixt them & the Turks, and Arabs. Mohamed the false prophet, in the eleuenth yeere after his Hegira or flight, and the sixtie three of his age, dyed at Medina, and was buried there in the graue of Aisfe his wife. Here is a stately Temple and huge, erected with elegant and munificent structure, daily increased and adorned by the costs of the Othmans, and gifts of other Princes. Within this building is a Chappell not perfectly square, covered with a goodly rooof, vnder which is the Vine of stone, called Hagiar Monaiar, sometimes belonging to Aisfe aforesaid. This is all covered with gold and silke, and compassed about with yron grates gilded. Within this, which shineth with gold and gems, *Mohamed*s carcasie was placed, and not lifted vp by force of Load-stone or other Art; but that stone-Vine lieth on the ground.

The Moslem Pilgrims after their returne from Mecca, visit this Temple, because Mohamed yet liuing was wont to say, That hee would for him which should visit his Tombe, as well as if he had visited him liuing, intercede with God for a life full of pleasures. Therefore do they thither with great veneration kisse and embrace the grates (for none haue access to the Vine of stone) and many for loue of this place leaue their Country, yea, some madly put out their eyes to see no worldly thing after, and there spend the rest of their dayes. The compass of Medina is two miles, and is the circuit of the wall, which Adhd Addaule King of Baghdad built A. H. 364. The territorie is barren scorched Sands, bringing forth nothing but a few Dates and Herbes.

of the Composition of the Alcoran.

He Booke of Mahomets Law is called by the name of ALCORAN, which signifieth a collection of * Precepts, and Alfurcan, (as it is expressed and expounded in a Booke, ^b called, The Exposition or Doctrine of the Alcoran) because the sentences and figures thereof are fuetered and distinguished, for Al's the Article, and phurcan signifieth a distinction, or as some say, Redemption. Claude Duret citeth an opinion that of the Hebrew word Kara, which signifieth the Law or Scripture, cometh this word Koran, which with the Article Al signifieth the yeppis the Scripture, as with them it is esteemed : The like hath Soranzo. Maister Bedwel in his Arabian Trudg-man, saith, that the Thema is not KARANA, conunxit, colligit, as before is deliuered; but KARA which signifies to read, so that Alcoran in Arabike, is iust as much as Hammikra is in Hebrew, that is, the Text, Corpus iuris, the authentical bodie of other Law. It is called in that language the Koran, without the Article Al, and Korran (so Cantabrigie, and Alchion Alphacri Korran inquad) as if one should say, their Bible, Scripture, or Booke of the Law.

The Word of God (saith Mahomet in that Booke) came not to mee all at once, as the Law vnto Moses, the Psalmes to David, and the Gospell to Christ. The Sentences or Chapters thereof are called Azoaras, which is interpreted a Face, as wee call them Capita, Heads. So saith one which hath written Notes vpon the Alcoran : but Maister Bedwel (who hath published an Index or Table of all these Azoara's or Chapters with their Arabike Titles, as they are named and cited by the Mahometans) saith, That they call the name of the Chapter Sura, and with their Article Assura, or Suraton, Assurato. And hee deriues of the Hebrew word Zabar that Azoara : but this Arabike Sura is expressed not by Zam, He, but by Sm, Wam, and Resh, differing letters, being no other then the Syrian Suriya, which signifieth, principium initium. For as the Bookes of Moses in the Hebrew, and the Sections of the Ciuill and Canon Law : so these Chapters, for the most part, are denominated of some notable word in the beginning of the same : and are so cited by Mahometans and learned Christians. Yet these sometime name it by the interpretation, as the chap. Albacara, the chap of the Cow, because the word so signifies. The stile * is not in Meter, as some haue imagined : for Iosephus Scaliger ^d (a great Criticke, and reputed one of the greatest Linguists in the world) affirmeth, That that Language is not capable of metrical measures by quantities of Syllables; as neither the Hebrew, Abyssine, or Syrian. Hee saith yet, That the Alcoran is composed in Rime, but such, as is not in any tunable proportion ; but that word, which maketh vp the Rime, being sometimes neerer, and sometimes farre beyond all harmony, distant from that word whereto it answereth. A hobbling kinde of Rime, saith Maister Bedwel (in his Index Alcorani) and rude Poeme, without all care, for (it is Possellus his testimony) you shall haue a period of two hundred Syllables to rime, and hold like cadence as other very short. Scaliger adds, that at the end of such Rimes are set the figures of Flowers, or some such matter : which if it be so, the Turkish nicetie of making no likeness of any thing in their Carpets, or other workes, is stricter then these Alcoran bookes themselves : and indeed is not common with them vnto other Mahometans, who vse their libertie in this point.

For the words and * phrase ; no man euer writ any thing in Arabian more rudely (saith an Arabian Christian in confutation hereof) and much better might Muzelisin, Helba, and Alabazbi the Ethiopian, and Calliata Ellecce, which vpon emulation composed also euer one an Alcoran, glory of those their Workes, containing more honestie and truth. Neither hath it pleased any noble or wise man, but the rude vulgar : of which sort the wearie Labourers gladly gaue eare to his promise of Paradise, the poore delighted to heare of Gardens in Peris, and Bankrupts and Felons easily listened to securitie and libertie. The language is vulgar, (Possellus also testifieth) and without all Art of Gramma- such as is obserued of their learned Writers ; without all bounds of reason or eloquence. The Method ^f is so confused, that our Arabian Author (who liued before it was so generally embraced

Bad Rime, as you have heard, and worfe Reason. Hierome Samanorola ^e hath the like faying, That no man can finde herein any order: Nor could fo confuted and foolifh a Worke proceed from any naturall or supernaturall light. It is yet craftily ^f contriued, when hee hath fet downe fome wicked doctrine, prefently to lace and fringe it with precepts of Fasting, Prayer, or good manners: alwayes taking away things hard to bee beleued or praifed: and where it beluerech any truth, it is maymed with defect, eclipsed with obfcuritie, and ferueth for a tale to falshood. Erpenius hath tranflated the Chapter of Ioseph, containing a hundred and feue Venes; the fecond of which calls it Coran, and the next Alcoran, the Article added, his Annotation is Per verbum Dei intelligunt legem (quam que Coranus ipfis dicitur, & quam Muhammed ipse persuasit calum ad se demissam. And although the matter bee abfurd and impious, yet he faith (others perhaps haue of zeale faid otherwife) that this Coran is compofed with fuch puritie of fpeech, accurate analogie, and expreffed with perfection of writing, that deuerdly it is to them the matter and rule of Grammar. They call it Koran of a word which fignifies to read, as a reading Lecture, or collection of Chapters, as the learnedft Arabs will aue it. It is not much leffe then the New Teftament in words. The Arabs extoll it aboue all creatures, and ranke it next to God, and thinke him vnworthy to lue, which toucheth it in reuerence as a co-temner of God. They vse it therefore with all reuerence, nor will permit a Chriftian or a Jew to touch it: to fit on it is a grieuous crime capitall to Jewes or Chriftians. Nor may they themfelues touch it vnwafhed, and therefore write on the couer thereof, Let no man touch it but he which is cleane. In it are one hundred and fourteen Chapters of vnequall quantitie (that of Ioseph the twelfth) the fecond as large as the laft fortie. The firft is our of fix Verfes, and therefore not reckoned a Chapter by our Country-man Robert of Reading, who alfo diuides the fiue following into more by tenne, that the feuenth is his feuenteenth. Euery Chapter hath the name of the firft word, or of the fubieft, as this is called Ioseph; the firft, opening, becaufe it presents it felfe at the opening of the booke. It was compofed out of diuers papers of Muhamed, found at his houfe (which hee professed to receiue from Gabriel at diuers times) by Ahubeer his father in law, the Numa of that Saracen Empire. Each Chapter is called Soraton, and with the Article Assurato, whence the Latine call it Alcoran (z. for f) and o. a. for o. u) as in the word Alcoran: it is not to be conftrued vultus, but gradus, a degree or ftep; for thefe fteps the whole is paffed: and each of thefe was a tefton alfo to be conned of children and of his difciples. After thefe fancies had caufed him to bee expelled Mecca, he fled ten dayes off to Iatrib, and there diuulged the reft. This is called Medina, and Medinatnabi, the Citie of the Prophet: and hence fome Chapters haue title of Mecca, fome of Medina. This flight was the fifteenth of July at night, A. 622, which is their Era or computation of their yeeres, reckoned by the Moone: fo that their 1026, begat the twentieth ninth of December A. D. 1616. Euery Chapter confifts of Verfes very vnequall and lame affected rithmes. Yea, fometimes a fentence is patched in, to make vp a rithme. Before euery Chapter is prefixed Bismillahirrahmanirrahimi, for fo they read it coined together with Articles, as if it were all one word: the fignification is, In nomine Dei miferatoris mifericordis, that is, In the name of God fhewing mercie, mercifull, which is as much as summæ mifericordis, exceedingly mercifull (or mercifull in Aft and Nature.) To thefe words they afcribe innumerable myfteries and vertues; fo that they thinkethat almoft no worke can haue good fuccell, vnleffe they preface it with this fentence. Therefore in the beginning of their bookes they vse it, and whatfoeuer bufinelle they goe about (if it be to mount their horfe, or fet forth to rowe a boat, &c. as I haue beene told.) Alfo there are in the beginning of Chapters, fourteene myfticall words of the fignification, whereof the Arabs profefse their vncertaintie, and Ahubeer was wont to fay, That in euery booke God kept fomething feeret to himfelfe, which in the Alcoran were thofe myfticall beginnings of Chapters. Diuers haue diuerfly deuifed to hunt out Cabalifticall fenfes and ftate-periods, with other vanities from them. They hold that all the Alcoran was fent in one night, which they call therefore, nox demiffionis & nox potentia, and left it might breed a contradiction that fome parts were deliuered at Mecca (for fo it muft be written, not Mecha) they fay, that Muhamed receiued them by pieces of the Angell, as occasions required; but hee from God all in one night: and fo they will haue the name fignifi: alfo a booke: fent from heauen. Thus much Erpenius in his Annotations on that Chapter, wherein alfo he blameth the old tranflation of Robert Reading, as in other things, fo in that, that when his miftrefle brought Ioseph before other women, they were all (faith the tranflation) menstruous, and cut their hands, faying, hee was rather an Angel then a man. He tranflates for menstruate sunt, magnificauit eum, they magnified him; adding concerning that cutting off the hand, that it is ftill an vie of the Arabs, Perfians, and people of the Eaft to exprefle loue. hath told mee that that translation of Reading is generally reasonable well done; nor is so faultie as some will have it, or much reading lupply that way. As for other lupply, it needs a sword (like that Gordian knot) rather than a penne, that (as by the sword it hath bene obruded on the world, as a iust punishment of ingratitude to the Sonne of God the eternall Truth; and not by reasons or Scriptures, which it corrupts, mingles, mangles, maines, as the Impostors obliuion sometimes, sometimes the memorie of his owne designs occasioned, so) by the sword and fire it may be rooted out of the world againe. The first Surat of Chapter, which is the Pater noster or daily prayer of the Muhamedans, I will transcribe out of Erpenius, called by them, Opening, as before is said, and the Mother of the booke, foundation, treasure, and perfection. In the name of God, the shewer of mercie, mercifull. Praise to God the Lord of the Creatures, the shewer of mercie, mercifull; the King of the day of Iudgement. Wee worship thee, and we call upon thee. Direct vs into the right way, the way of them who are gracious towards them, without anger against them, and not them which erring not, Amen. The Copies of ^d the Alcoran were diuers; and after Mahomet's death made (it it could be) worse, at least otherwise, then he left them. For Hali had one Copie left him by Mahomet, which the Iewes corrupted, adding, racing, changing at their pleasure, and promised him their assistance, if hee would professe himselfe a Prophet. But Ozimen commanded all the Bookes to be brought and deliuered into the hands of Zaidi and Abdalla, to bring all into one booke, and, where they dissented, to reade after the Copie of Corau, and to burne all the rest.

They thus composed the Alcoran, whereof they left foure Copies, which after were lost. And yet Hali, Abinalib, and Ibenmusa then refused to deliuer their Bookes: Whereupon arose diuers Readings, and afterward diuers Schismes; which to compound, others often denouced by like labours after, but could not thoroughly perfect the same. Neither doth that which we haue translated, agree with those things which Frier Richard, and others cite out of it, in their consultations thereof.

The truth thereof is such in his deuising of new, and seeking and altering the old, that it is not probable in Vnus opinion, that euer hee read the Old and New Testament: For (saith ^e he) though I thinke of him exceeding badly, yet thinke I him not so mad to change and wrest the Scripture, there especially, where it made nothing against him; but he had partly heard of such things, partly was soperfawded by his fellows, Apostata-Iewes and Christians. This rining, hath, confused, paking worke, disagreeing each Copie from other, and all from truth and honestie, hath bene so translated into Latine ^h once by an English man, Robertus Ketensis; and after by Ioannes Sejobiensis, a Spaniard, at the Councell of Constance; and after out of Arabian into Italian, published by Andrea Arimbene. The first and last of these (that of Robert of Reading, and the Italian) translations are here by vs followed. For the Arabike I vnderstand not, nor can warrant this, when so great a man as Sealiger findeth great fault with it: He that vnderooke to mend the Latine stile, marred the sense; and the Italian beguileth the world, in professing to haue translated out of the Arabike. Thus Sealiger, who mentioneth another translation then in hand, which we are almost out of hope to see. In the meane while, such as we haue, we giue to you.

It containeth Chapters, or Azward 124. euery of them beginning, In the name of the mercifull and pittifull God. Euthymius Zigabennus mentioneth but 113. Mr. Bedwell saith, that all the Arabike Copies which euer hee saw, whether written in the East, or West amongst the Moores in Barbarie, doe constantly with one consent reckon 114. The reason of this difference is this, some Interpreters doe not account the first for any Chapter, but make it a kinde of Preface. Robert of Reading of the second Chapter maketh foure, of the third three, of the fourth foure, of the fifth two, of the sixth three. The first ⁱ of these are the words of Mahomet, and is called the Mother of the Booke, and is as it were their Crede: the rest are all deliuered as the words of God; hee being induced as speaker. The first is in this sense. In the name of the mercifull and pittifull God. Thanks bee vnto God, the Lord of the World, mercifull, pittifull, Iudge of the day of Iudgement. Wee pray vnto thee: wee trust in thee. Lead vs into the right way, the way of them whom thou hast chosen, not of them with whom thou art angry, and of the Infidels. Pollitellus k thus translateth it. In the name of God, mercifull, pittifull. Praise bee to God, King of the World, mercifull, and pittifull; King of the day of Iudgement; O let vs serue him, and wee shall bee helped; Direct vs in the right path; the path of them with whom thou art well pleased; without anger against them; and they shall not erre. This prayer is (saith hee) as common to them as the Lords Prayer to vs; and is so ouer and ouer with battologies by some of them repeated, that they will say ouer the same word, or two, or three words an hundred times, saying, Alhamdu lillab, hamdu lillab, hamdu lillab, and so on with these, and the other words in like manner. And thus doth the Priest ^l in their publike prayers; which (they say) supplieth the defects of such as are negligent in praying: some will say, and repeat it in the fields, till with weariedness they fall downe.

Others with wheeling about their bodies, till they be besides themselves, and then in imitation of Mahomes, utter some ridiculous, obscure, phantastical speeches. They diuide it into seuen periods, which they call miracles, as they are here by the points. That which is before them, In the name, &c. Mahomes yfed to utter alwayes, when hee arose from his sicknesse or traunce; and therefore is prefixed to all the Chapters; and by deuout Authors also in the beginning of their Philosophicall workes. By these words, the point, and the right point they vnderstand the Alcoran. Now let vs see the Doctrine contained in this booke, which with much labour I haue thus reduced into Theologicall heads, reducing that which therein is confusedly heaped and handled in diuers places, to this Method, naming the Chapter or

Þ. I I.

The Doctrine of the ALCORAN brought into common Places.

OF GOD he writeth, that he is One, necessary to all, Incorporeall, which neither hath begotten, nor is begotten, nor hath any like him: the Creator, long-suffering, fearecher of the heart, true. That he will confound inchantments, that without his gift, none can beleue (this his Alcoran) that hee hath no sonne, for hee needeth nothing^b, and he which setteth a second in the place of GOD, shall goe into hell, Az. 31. and he hath no partaker, 32. yet in Az. 67. hee induceth God, speaking thus: To Christ the sonne of Marie, wee haue given the Gospell, that by him men may obtaine the loue and fauour of GOD: and that the beleeuers amongst them (Christians) shall receiue a great reward: as also in Az. 2. he saith, Euery one whosoever liueth rightly, be he Iew or Christian, or if he leaue his owne Law, and embrace another, if hee worship GOD, and doe good, shall vndoubtedly obtaine Diuine fauour. Az. 2. The Creator said, I am the onely Creator, alwayes the same, pittifull, mercifull, besides whom there is none other; whose miracles and great workes are vnto the wise the frame of Heauen and Earth, the intercourse of night and day, the ships in the Sea fit for the vse of men, raine for the refreshing of the earth, the composition of all creatures, the windes, the cloudes, &c. 15. Insooke and worship one GOD alone. 43. All the miracles of GOD cannot bee written, if all the Trees in the world were pennes, and the Sea seuen times greater, and were inke; with whom it is a small thing to raise the dead.

* Of God

b Az. 10.

OF THE BIRTH OF CHRIST hee writeth thus, Az. 29. Wee sent our Spirit to Marie (the best of all women, and the wombe vntouched, Az. 31.) in likeness of a man, professing himselfe a Diuine Messenger concerning a Sonne, &c. And when shee in trauell plained, Christ came from vnder her, and said, Fear not: and when some childe with her about the child, the childe it selfe made answer, I am the Seruant and Proper of God. Hee saith, the Iewes did not slay Christ, but one like him: Az. 11. and vbraitheth them for not receiuing him, Az. 2. and chap. 4. To Christ the Sonne of Marie, properly communicating our owne soule, wee haue given him strength and power more then other Prophets: yet chap. 13. he disclaimeth that worship which is done him and his mother.

Of Christ

Az. 4. Wee giuing our soule to Christ, the Sonne of Marie, preferred him before all others, that had beene exalted by me, to speake with GOD, to power and vertue. He inserted the Prayer of the Virgins Mother, when shee felt her selfe with childe by Ioachim; and maketh Zacharie to be the Virgins Tutor. 5. Who (hee saith) for his vnbeliefe was dumbe thre dayes. The Angell saluted Marie, saying, O thou purest of all women and men, leuoted to GOD. Ioy vnto thee of that great Messenger, with the Word of GOD, whose name is ISVS CHRIST, an excellent man, at the command of the Creator: he shal come with Diuine power, with knowledge of all learning, with the Booke of the Law and Gospell; shall giue Commandements to the Israelites; shall giue life; cure diseases; shew what is to be eaten, and to be done; shall confirme the Old Testament; shall make some things awfull, which before were vnawfull, &c. Hee acknowledgeth that his Mother knew not him. 11. They say (the Iewes) that they killed Christ, the Sonne of Marie, the Messenger of GOD, but it was not true, but they crucified in his stead another like him; for the inopprehensible GOD caused him to goe vnto Him. ISVS is the Spirit, and Word, and Messenger of GOD, sent from heauen. 11. And GOD spake to him (Az. 13.) and gaue him cleane and blessed soule, whereby he made yellow formes of birds, and breathing on them, made them live. Hee cured one borne blinde, and the leprous, and raised the dead. GOD taught him the Booke and Wisdome, and the Gospell and Testament.

Concerning

e Of his law,
lowers therof.

Concerning e his LAW and ALCORAN, he handleth it in the second Chapter of Alcoran, which beginneth thus. In the name of the mercifull and pittifull God. This booke without any fallshood or error, shewing the Truth (to them which loue, feare, and worship God, and are studious of prayers and almes) and the obseruation of the lawes giuen of God from heauen to thee and other thy Predecessors, and the hope of the world to come, hath manifested the true Sect. For this bringeth the followers thereof to the highest, inicheth them with the highest good, as to the vnbeleueurs and erroneous, it menaceth truly the greatest euill to come. This hee after applieth to Paradise and Hell, which is due to the Enemies of Gabriel, which intimateth this Booke to his heart by the Creator, and to all the Enemies of God and Michael, and the Archangels. This his Alcoran hee calleth, the establishing of the Law of the Israelites: and Az. 21. hee arrogateth to his Booke, wisdom and eloquence: and 47. hee saith, ^d it was composed of the incomprehensible and wife God, cury where agreeing with it selfe, and calleth it (63.) the Booke of Abraham: and (69.) if it should be placed on a Mountaine, that Mountaine for Diuine feare would be dissolved. Those which will not be conuerted, take and slay, by all means intrapping them: and fight against them till they be your Tributaries and Subiects, And 18. the fifth part of all the prey is due vnto God, and his Prophet, and to your Kindred and Orphans, and the poore. Those that are taken in Warre, kill or make slaves; but pardon them if they will turne to your Law, and God also will pardon them. Such good Warriours shall haue full pardon. The fewes and Christians (contrarie to that hee said before) let God confound. He hath sent his Messenger with the right way and good law, that he may manifest and extoll it aboue all lawes. Of the twelve monthes, foure are to be consecrated to fight against the enemies. Those that refuse this war-fare, lose their foules, and they which flie in the day of battell (Az. 6.) doe it by the Deuils instigation, thus punishing them for their former sinnes: Yea, the Deuils themselves Az. 56. being conuerted thereby, say to their Diabolical Nation, We haue heard a Booke sent after Moses, which approacheth all his sayings, and teacheth the true and right way. And Az. 12. hee calleth the Alcoran a Booke of truth sent from about, a Confirmer of Christs Precepts: Hee saith, Az. 15. That Moses deliuered some things in writing, more vnwritten. He makes his Booke to bee the same which God had taught Abraham, Ismael, Isaac, Isaac, Moses, and CHRIST. Az. 5. he saith, his booke contains some things firme, and without exception, some things contrarie, which froward men peruent to controuerfies: but the exposition thereof belongeth to God onely, and to the wisest which beleuee that all of it came from God. Az. 6. he excites them to defend it when hee shall be dead or slaine, and God will reward them. Neither can any die, but by the will of God, to wit, in the time appointed. They which in the expedition shall haue pardon, which is better then all possessions, and an easie iudgement. And they which die in the wayes of God, are not to bee esteemed dead, for they lue with God. That life is firme, this and all worldly things mutable. 7. If the Alcoran (Az. 9.) were not of God, it would haue many contrarieties in it, which himselfe yet Az. 5. confesseth. They which are well (Az. 10. and remaine at home, are not of like merit, as they which goe to warre. The fire of Hell is hotter then the danger of warre. And although thou (Prophet) shouldst pardon the resister of God and his Messenger seuentie times, yet God will neuer pardon them. The sicke and weak, and such as haue not necessities, are excused from this necessitie of warre: but to the good Warriours God giueth Paradise, in reward of their foules and goods, whether they kill or be killed, Az. 18. 19. And in 57. Kill the vnbeleueurs whom you conquer, till they haue made great slaughter. God could take vengeance on them, but hee chooseth rather to doe it by you: he shall lay defensible and blindness to the faint-hearted. Yet in 32. and 98. as contrary to himselfe hee affirmeth, that hee is sent onely to teach, not to compell force men to beleue: and Az. 4. Offer no man violence for the law; then the right way and the euill are opened: except wee expound it rather, that fewes, Christians, and all vnbeleueurs, are compell'd to bee tributaries and their slaves; nor forced to their Religion, but instructed onely; which agreeth with their practise. From this Doctrine and the of Definie in the 50. Az. hath isset their forwardnesse to the warre, and the greatness of their Conquests. Agreeable to this doctrine is their manner of teaching: the Reader or Preacher (as saith Frier Richard, Student amongst them in the Vniuersitie of Baldach) holdeth a bare sword in his hand, or setteth it vp in an eminent place, to the terror of the gaine-layers.

diuine miracles, and humane Disputations, prouing
with the sword.

But Disputation e and reasoning about his Law, hee vtterly dissiketh, Az. 32. To such e will dispute with thee, answer that God knoweth all thy doings, which in the last day shall determine all controuerfies. And 50. Nothing but euill cleaueth to the heart of such as vnwisely dispute of diuine Precepts: but commend thou thy selfe vnto God, that knoweth all thing things. And Chap. 4. 15. Hee is commanded to goe away from such. This Booke is giuen to take way discord from men: miracles he disclaimeth as insufficient prooffe & for ought it should make plaine the mountaines, and make the dead to speake; yet they would be incredible: But it is thy dutie onely to shew them my Precepts, As. 23. And As. 10. Yee which are good, beleue in G O D, in his Messenger, and in the Booke sent from Heauen. They which first beleue, and after deny, and become incredulous, shall haue no pardon nor mercy of G O D, but shall goe into the fire. And (11.) We will bring infinite euill vpon him, that will not obey G O D and his Messenger, and will be Disputing. To them which I demand that the Booke may raine vpon them from Heauen, thou shalt say, That some asked a greater thing of Moses, that he would shew G O D vnto their eyes, and were therefore smitten with lightning from Heauen. (12.) To Iewes and Christians, G O D hath giuen disagreements, till G O D shall determine the same at the day of Iudgement. Make not your selues Comparisons of them which deride our Law. No man receiueth the perfection of the Law, but he which beleueth the Testament, and this Booke sent of G O D. 14. They which erre will say, Let G O D shew vs miracles. These hurt none but their owne soules, for if they should see all g miracles done, they would dispute with thee, saying, That they could not be done but by enchantments. Thou shalt not come to them with marvellous miracles; for they would refuse them, as odious things. 15. Dispute not with them which will not heare; and if they demand miracles, say, G O D only doth them: I know not the secrets of G O D, and follow nothing but that which G O D and the Angell hath commanded; and if Angels should speake to such, they would not beleue. 16. G O D himselfe and his blessed Spirit haue compounded this most true Booke. 26. 44. They which say his Law is new or fained, go to the Deuill. 47. He induceth some gaine-sayers, saying, We will not leaue not shipping our Images for this letter and Rimer. Yet is he alone come with the truth, confirming all the other Messengers. 55. He saith, I (G O D) writ this Booke with my owne hand. 56. The vnbeleuers say I am a Magician, and haue fained it: but then I pray G O D I may haue so part in him when he shall be our Iudge. Say not there are three G O D S, but one G O D alone without a Sonne, to him all things are subiect. Christ cannot deny but that he is subiect to G O D, as well as the Angels. 12. We sent Christ, to whom we gaue the Gospell, which is the light and confirmation of the Testament, and the right way to him which feareth G O D. The complement of the Iewish law. Therefore let euery seruant of the Gospell follow his precepts, other wise he shall be a bad man. No religion or law attaines to perfection, but such as obey the precepts of the Testament and the Gospell, and this Booke (the Alcoran) sent from G O D. To beleueing Iewes and Christians he promiserh pardon: but As. 13. preferres he Christians to the Iewes. All that say that Christ is G O D, are vnbeleuers and lyers (Christ himselfe hauing said, Yee children of Israel beleue in your G O D and my Lord) of whom he which will be partaker, shall be cast into the fire eternall. Christ is but the Messenger of G O D, before whom were many Messengers: and his Mother was true, and they did eat, good people exalt not your selues in your Law, further then the truth. 3. The soule of Christ was cleane and blessed, he cured the leprous, raised the dead, taught wisdoms, the Testament, and the Gospell. The vnbeleueing Iraelites beleued that he was a Magician. And 4. We haue giuen a good place and abounding with water to the Sonne of Marye, and to 55. for hauing done such miracles in the world.

Of the Creation he affirmeth (As. 2.) that when G O D had made the world, he disposed the seven Heauens: he told the Angels he would make one the vnto himselfe in the earth: they answer, We in all things are subiect to your Maiestie, and giue praise vnto you: But he will be wicked, and a shedder of blood. Then G O D rethifying, that he knew a thing not knowne to the Angels, taught Adam the names of things, by himselfe, not knowne to the Angels, and therefore commanded the Angels to doe reverence before Adam, which wicked Belzebub refused; they obeyed. And As. 25. We made man of clay, and I breathed to him a portion of mine owne soule, after that I had created the Deuill of pestiferous fires: Belzebub refused to humble himselfe to this man (made of blacke mire) he was armed, and when he desired respite till the resurrection, it was denied: and therefore he said he would teach all euill things, that they shall not giue thee thanks, &c. Of the Angels affirmeth (45.) that some of them haue two wings, some three, some foure: and (52.) the Heauen would fill vpon men, were it not for the Angels that call vpon G O D.

Of PARADISE he dreameth in this sort. As. 5. and 65. He which feareth G O D, shall receiue the two Paradises full of all good, pleasant with streeming fountaines. There they shall possesse rings of Gold, Chaires, Jewels, clothed with Cloth of Gold: their beds shall be of Gold, and this for ever. There they shall lie on silken and purple Carpets, and shall be accompanied with many Maidens, beautifull as the Hyacinth and Pearles, neither deflowered of men or Deuils, neuer menstruous, sitting in pleasant shades with their eyes fixed on their husbands : their eyes large, with the white of them exceeding white, and the blacke very blacke, lying on the shining Greene. Faire young men shall serve them with Vials and other Vessels, full of the most excellent liquor, which shall neither cause head-ach nor drunkenness, and shall bring them the choicest fruits, and flesh of fowles. They shall there heare no filthy or displeasing word : and (Ac. 86.) In Paradise shall be a dministred to them in well-wrought vessels of glasse and silver, drink, as the favourite Ginger, out of the fountaine Zelzebil : they shall have garments of silke and gold, chaines of silver, blessed Wine, Maidens likewise with pretty breasts : there shall be tall trees of colour betweene yellow and Greene. They shall have in Paradise all pleasures, and shall enjoy women with eyes faire, and as great as Eggs; sweet smelling Rivers of Milke and Honie, and fruits of all sorts. Ac. 1

o Mahomet guile of his wickedness, often speaketh of it : that he may not be thought such a son.

p Of the Prophets in Scripture.

q Such tales as these of Abraham, Salomon, &c. you shall finde both in the Jewish and Popish Legends, as if the Jew, Papist, & Mahometan, had contended for the wisdome : which any one that readeth shall finde.

OF HELL 1 hee saith that it hath seven gates; that it shall make the wicked like to fleas, that they shall be fed with the tree Execum, which shall burne in their bellies like fire; that they shall drinke fire; and being holden in chaines of seuentie cubits, shall be kept sure; the fire shall cast forth embers like Towers or Camels. They which contradicted, shall be punished with the fire of hell : they which feare, shall goe into Paradise; and as it were in a MIDDLE SPACE betwixt the one and the other, there shall stand some other with hope and expectation of Paradise. We have set Angels over hell, and have appointed their members 84. 98. There shall be fountaines of scalding waters, and they shall cate vpon a reede, but shall not satisfie their hunger : they shall be bound in chaines. 121.

He sometimes excuseth his owne baseness, as Ac. 17. where he saith he could not write nor read, adding that his name and mention is in the Testament, and Gospel, and 36. The unbelievers (saith he) murmur that he is followed onely of Weauers, and the raskall rout. And 53. Art-magike, and that I haue fained it. And in 64. The Moone was diuided, and they say, it is Sorcerie. (The tale is told by Frier Richard thus : Mahomet pointed to the Moone with his thumb, and middle finger, and it was diuided, the two pieces falling on the Hills of Mecha, which entering into Mahomet's coat, was made whole againe.) Hee sometimes extolled himselfe, blasphemously inducing Christ, thus saying to the Israelites; O yee Israelites, I being sent a Messenger vnto you from GOD, asseme by the Testament of which I haue in my hand, that a Messenger shall come after me, whose name is Mahomet, of whom they shall say he is a Magician. 71. His beaulty prerogative he boasteth, (43.) saying, he is the seale and lay of the Prophets. To Thee, O Prophet, we make it lawfull to lie with all women which are given thee, or which thou buyest, and thy Aunts, thy Kindred, and all good women which freely desire thy company, if thou be willing : and this is permitted to thee alone. Diuorce these, couple thy selfe to those at thy pleasure. And being by some of her his wives found in bed with Marie the wife of a Iacobite Christian, hee is aware that he would neuer after vse her company : but after being impotent in his lusts, hee ordaines a Law to himselfe, Ac. 76. Why doest thou, O Prophet, make that lawfull for the loue of thy woman, which GOD hath made vnlawfull? GOD full of pittie, and giuer of pardon, hath commanded thee to blot out, or cancell thine oathes.

Of his journey to Heauen, to receiue the Law, he speaketh. Ac. 63. and 82. mingling instructions of deuotion. 83. Thou, O Prophet, rising in the night, spend halfe the night, or a little more or lesse, in watching, and continually and deuoutly reade ouer the Alcoran : bee thou iust, patient, and refuse not to wash thy garments, O thou man clothed in woollen. 43. Let none enter into the house of the Prophet, before hee call; but let him stand without the gate : let none doe dishonestie within his house, let none hurt the Prophet in any thing, or haue his wife after him.

Some v Prophets hee mentioneth, not named in Scripture ; and of those there named hee telleth many fables. Ismael was a true Prophet, and found a good man before GOD. Ioseph nine yeeres imprisoned for the Queene. Abraham ouertrew his Fathers Idols, and should haue bene burned for the same; but the fire lost his force. The Mountaines and Birds that praise GOD, were subiect to Dauid, & Salomon learned Magick of Ara and Mara, Diuels so called : hee knew the language of Birds; and when hee was in the middelt of his Armie, consisting of Devils, Men, and Birds; the Lapwing brought him newes of the Queene of Saba's coming, to whom by this Lapwing hee sent a Letter, &c. Of the Armie the Ants of Pilmiros being afraide; one Ant perswaded her fellows to get them in to their holes, lest they should bee troden on. Moses married Pharaoh's Daughter. (37.) On Aschemel made the golden Calf in the Desert against Aaron's will. Pharaoh requested Him to build a Tower, whereon to climbe to heauen, to the GOD of Moses: (50.) In the thietime of Noe they worshipped Idols, whom hee nameth Huden, Schuan, Aguta, Lamut, Nacem.

The Prophet Hub was sent to the Nation Haath, to teach them the worship of one G o d: and Sebale to Themuth; and Schaibe to Madian; and Abraham and Lot to the Sodomites; on whom, because they were incredulous, it rained yellow and sharpe stones. (Ac. 21.) Moses was sent to Pharaoh, &c. His scope of these Narrations is, that bee is sent likewise a Prophet, and therefore iudgement will pursue them which refuse him, as it did those incredulous Nations. These fauour of a Jewish helpe. Hee telleth also of Alexander a Mag. that hee had all knowledge the found the Sunne, (where it lay resting in a yellow fountaine) and the mountaines in which it riseth. And finding men without vse of speech, hee diuided them from other men, &c. Ac. 28.

He proueth substantially that there shall be a RESURRECTION by the History of the seuen Sleepers, which slept in a Cauer 360. yeeres. (28. Ac.) and (49.) Hee saith, that at the time of death, G o d taketh away the soule at an houre knowne, restoring it to some; to some, neuer: at the first found of the Trumpet all shall die, except those which shall bee protected by the will of G o d: at the second found all things shall reuiue, and be iudged: and (66.) The earth shall tremble, the mountaines shall be brought to dust, and the whole company shall bee diuided into three parts: some before, others on the right hand, both which sorts shall be blessed; but those on the left hand, in their left hands shall receiue the scroll or sentence of their condemnation. And (79.) In the last Iudgement the earth shall be ouerthrowne, the heauen shall be powred forth. (8.) Angels shall beare vp the Throne of God. And (80.) The heauens shall vanish as smoke, and the earth shall bee plucked as wooll. And (111.) There shall be set vp the ballance of Iudgement: they to whom shall befall a light weight, shall lue, but they which haue a heauie weight shall be cast into fire. The booke of bad Workes shall bee kept in the bottome of the earth; the booke of good Workes in a high place.

In diuers places of the Alcoran, the better to colour his filthinesse, hee hath dispersed good SENTENCES, like Roses scattered on a dung-hill, and flowers in a puddle: concerning Almes, Prayer, Tithing, Iustice, &c. Others he hath of another sort, establishing his owne Tyrannie and Religion. Ac. 26. Swines-flesh, Bloud, that which dieth alone, and that which hath the necke cut off, not in Gods Name, is vnlawfull. * Be chaste euery where, but with your owne wiues, or such as are subiect to you, and doe serue you. Euery Adulterer shall haue an hundred stripes in the presence of many. He which accuseth a woman of Adulterie, not prouing it by foure witnesses, shall haue eightie. The iealous husband accusing his wife, must sweare foure times that hee chargeth her truly; and a fifth time curse himselfe, if hee bee otherwise. The woman must doe the like to cleere her selfe. (43.) After a woman be diuorced from one, any way may marrie her. (19.) Trust not a sonne or a brother, except hee be of your owne Law. 72. On Friday when they are called to prayer, they must lay all businesse apart: when prayers be ended, they may returne to their commodities, Redeeme captiues; and thy finnes by good workes. About Circumcision I finde no inunction in the Alcoran. In the 3. 8. and 9. Ac. Hee permitteth all licentiousnesse with all women which they haue of their owne: but prescribeth washings after Venery, and after naturall easements. Loue not your enemies: the women of another faith proue first: and if they fauour the vnbeleeuers, diuorce them. 52. The women must couer their faces. 43. Wilfull murder is prohibited. Ac. 10. But casuall killing is to be satisfied with redemption of some good man, and the kindred recompensed, except they forgieue it.

THE going on PILGRIMAGE, and the perpetuall abode at the Temple of Harar (that is, vnlawfull, because nothing but there holies are there) lawfull we repute of equall merit. They which loue it not, or doe it iniurie, shall sustaine grievous euils. Abraham founded this Temple, Ac. 6. and blessed it, and cleansed it, for them which abode there, and for the Pilgrims. Hee preached one G o d without partaker, and the pilgrimage to this Temple, that on the dayes appointed they might, in naming G o d, sacrifice beasts, wherewith to feast themselves and the poore, and might fulfill their voves, and goe in Procession round about the old Temple, a worke which G o d will greatly reward. Ac. 32. and 39. In the times of fasting and pilgrimage hunting by land is vnlawfull, except that fo gotten bee bestowed on the poore at Mecca: taking fish by Sea as they goe or returne, is lawfull. Ac. 13. The vnbeleeuers are not worthy to visit the Temple Harar. And these good Pilgrims are not equall to the good warriors. 38. He entred into the Temple Harar with his head shauen.

Ac. 2. We enioyne vnto you (as to your Predecessors) FASTING in the time thereto appointed, and in a certaine number of dayes, that is, in the moneth Romadan, in which, this Booke (which differeth betwene good and euill) was sent you from heauen. Euery one must obserue it, but the sicke and traueller, and let them doe the same in the remainder of the time. The rich vse to satisfie their fasting with almes; let them doe both the one and the other. He permitteth you the vse of your wiues in the night, because it is hard and impossible to abstaine. But let none vse their company in the Temples. Fast all the day, and when night is come, eat and drinke as much as you please, till the morning. By the Moone is knowne the time of Pilgrimages, and of Fastings, whereby is knowne that you loue and feare God. Spend your money in the loue of God in Pilgrimage, not despairing. Hee that is impotent, and that is not accompanied with his wife in the Pilgrimage, must fast three dayes in the voyage, and seuen after his returne. To the sick, fasting with almes is sufficient. They which purpose this Pilgrimage, let them not giue their mindes to any euill. Let them not be ashamed to aske necessaries. 2. Hold it for iust and good to enter the house at the doore, not at the side, or back-side thereof. 35. Salute those which yee meete, when ye enter into the house.

His answer.

Ridiculous is the confirmation of this holy Law, by such variety of OATHES, as I am almost afraid to mention, in regard of our Gull-gallants of these times, who would sometimes bee at a set in their braue and brauing phrases, if they should not haue variety of Oathes and curses, to daube vp with such incriedions all imperfections of speech, and make smoother way for their current of their gallantie. But yet euen for their sakes, let vs mention a few, that they may see Mahomet had as braue a humor this way as they. He induceth God swearing by lesse then himselfe, as by the order of Angels, by the Alcoran, by the blowing Windes, by the waggerie Cloudes, by the sayling Ships, by the Mount Sinai, the Heauen, the Sea, the euening Saffre, the West, his Pen and Lines, the guiltie Soule, the Deuils, by the Morning, ten Nights, the Pascheouer, by the Figges and Oliues, by the Dawning, and Twil- light, and a World more of the like: onely he saith (Alcoran 100-) that he may not swear by the earth, nor by the Sonne like to the Father. Yet he allowes not others to sweare or forswear: as after you shall see.

Inheritances and lust dealing.

Az. 8. They which eate the inheritance of Orphans, euermakinge fire shall eate them. Be faithfull in keeping and deliuering their goods, for God taketh knowledge of all accounts. Let one Sonne haue as much as two Daughters. In barganing vse no lying, slaying your owne soule. The couerous shall haue endlesse punishment: he that killeth vnwillingly, shall giue to the Kindred of the partie slaine, another man, or if he cannot doe that, let him fast two monethes together: he which killeth wilfully shall be cast into the fire. Az. 70. It is no sinne to reuenge injuries.

Courtesie. Mortall Sentences. Sententious loquacious Car-nifex.

Salute him which saluteth thee, for saluation is much pleasing to God.

Az. 27. Worship one God alone. Honour thy Father and Mother, and doe them good. Giue them no bad word when they are old. Be subiect with all humility, and pray God to pardon them. Giue to the poore and to your kindred, but not superfluously: for they that doe superfluously are of Kinne to the Deuil. Shy not your children for no cause. Bee ye not Fornicators; for that is wickednesse, and a bad way. Be reuenged on Murderers. Say nothing till ye know it; for you must giue account of your saying. 26. In disputing or reasoning vse onely good words. Answer in honest sort to him which asketh thee. 27. Be iust in weight and measure. 27. The Deuill standeth ouer the makers of songs and lies, that is, the Poets, if they amend not, doing good. 68. If you cannot giue, be daily in prayers. Pay your tithes, following God and the Prophet. They which do not good but for vaine glory and ostentation, shall bee damned. 118. The Histories which are in the Old Testament are so cited by him, as if hee neuer had read them, so many dreames and lies are inserted.

Washings and Prayer.

Az. 12. Before PRAYER WASH the face, the hands, the armes vp to the elbow, the fette vp to the anckles; and after carnall company wash in the Bath; and if water cannot bee had, with dust of cleane earth. God desireth cleannesse. 9. In prayer let them be sober, that they may know what they say. 2. God will not aske why men pray not toward the East, for the East and West is his; but will demand of the workes which they haue done, of their Almes, Pilgrimages, and Prayers. He commandeth that they be humble in prayer, and that in prayer they turne towards Mecca. Every one which shall pray asking that which is good, which way soeuer hee shall turne him, shall be heard of God: although the true manner of praying be toward the Center of the Temple of Mecca. They which are good, make their prayers to helpe them by their patience and abstinence. God dwelleth in such men. Pray according to the vsuall custome in all places, the foot-man on foote, the horse-man on his horse.

Almes.

Az. 3. He that giueth his owne for Gods sake, is like a graine that hath seuen eares, euery of which containeth an hundred graines. Good men loose not your Almes by vaine glorie. 4. Giue almes of the good gaires of your money, and of that which the earth produceth; but God respecteth not gifts of that which is vniustly gotten. Satan perswadeth you to giue nothing for feare of pouertie. To giue almes publickly is good, but to giue privately is better: and this blottech our finnes. Giue especially to those which stay in one place, and and are ashamed to aske. 6. G O D will giue Paradise to them which in time of famine and scarcetie giue liberally, and which receiue iniuries, and repent of their finnes.

Ac. 2. Euery one which draweth nigh to death, let him leaue of his money to his family and kindred to distribute in almes, and they which shall change that vice, shall be iudged of the Creator, &c.

Ac. 2. They which are intreated to belceue the Diuine Precepts, say, they will follow their Ancestors in their Sect. What, would yee follow your Fathers if they were blinde or deafe? Will yee be like them in being mute, blinde, and foolish?

Ac. 2. O good men, E A T E that good which he hath giuen you, and giue him thanks; aboue all other things calling vpon him. Abstaine from that which dieth of it selfe, from Swines flesh, from blood, and from euery other creatur that is killed, and not in the name of the Creator. But in case of necessity it is not sinne; for G O D is mercifull, and will forgive you this. 12. Eat not of that which is drowned, burned in the fire, and touched of the Wolfe. 16. Eat nothing which hath not before bene blessed. To the Iewes we made many things vnlawfull, because of their wickednesse. 2. Hee which shall contradict this Booke, shall continually bee consumed in vnquenchable fire, and none of his workes shall helpe him.

Ac. 3. To them that doubt of W I N E, of C h e s s e, S c a l e s, and of T a b l e s, thou shalt say that such sports, and such drinckes are a great sinne, and although they be pleasant or profitable, yet are they hurtfull finnes; if they say what shall we then doe, thou shalt say, the good things of G O D. Periwade them to seeke the Orphanes, and succour them as their Brethren, or else G O D will make them so poore, that they shall not be able to helpe either themselves or others. 13. Wine, Chess, and Tables, are not lawfull, but the Devils inuentions, to make debate amongst men, and to keepe them from doing good. Let none goe on hunting in the Pilgrimage moneth.

Ac. 3. Take not a W I F E of another Law, nor giue your daughters to men of another Law, except they before conuert to your Law. Let no man touch a woman in her disease, before she be well censed. Vise your wiuies, and the woman which are subiect to you, where, and how you please. Women which are diorced, may not marrie till after four moneths, hauing had three times their menstruous purgation. Let them not deny their husbands their company at their pleasure. They are the heads of the women. After a third diorcer from one man, they may not marrie the same man againe, except they haue in the meane time bene married to another, and be of him diorced. Let the woman nurse their children two yeeres, receiuing necessaries of the fathers. After buriall of a husband, let them stay vnmarried four moneths and ten daies; and not goe out of the house in a yeere after. Take yee two, three, four wiuies, and finally, as many as in your minde you are content to maintaine and keepe in peace. It is vnlawfull to marry with the Mother, Daughter, Sister, Aunt, Neece, Nurse, or the Mother or Daughter of the Nurse; and take not a whore to wife. 9. Let the wiuies keepe their husbands secrets, or else let them be chastised, and kept in house and bed, till they be better. 10. Let the husband seeke to liue peaceably with his wife. 31. Cast not thine eyes on other mens wiuies, though they be faire. A woman convicted of adulterie by testimonie of four women, must be kept in her house till shee die and let none come at her. Ac. 8. If you loue not your wiuies you may change them: but take away nothing of that which is giuen them.

Ac. 3. Swear not in all your affaires by G O D and his names. They which forswear themselves shall haue no good thing in the world to come. And 35. Swear not rashly, for G O D seeth euery thing. They which sweare from their hearts are bound thereto before G O D; and not else. To redeme such an oath, they must feede or cloath ten poore men, or fast three daies. Ac. 13.

Ac. 4. Offer violence to no man in respect of the Law, for the way of doing good and euill is open. 4. G O D gaue first the Testament, then the Gospell, and lastly the true Booke, the Assurance of the Law, in confirmation of those former.

Ac. 4. They which liue of V S U R I E shall not rise againe otherwise then the Devils: they embrace that which G O D hath laid is vnlawfull: but they say vsurie is as Merchandize. Ye which are good faere G O D, and forsake Vsurie, lest the anger of G O D, and of the Propher assaile you. Take onely the principall; and if he cannot pay you, stay still he can, and giue him almes; for this shall be better for you. And Ac. 6. Euery one which feareth G O D, must very much beware of this vice, fearing the fire prepared for vnbeleuers. And Ac. 11. ascribeth the miseries of the Iewes to their wickednes and vsuries.

Ac. 4. & 15. He which repenteth him, and leaueth his sinne, obtaineth pardon, and the cancelling of that which is past; but returning againe thereto, hee shall suffer eternall fire. In the 5. Vnto bad men is denied humane and diuine mercie, except they repent. G O D ca-reth little for the conuiction of them, which, after that of Infidels they are made beleueurs, be come worse. Such shall suffer without any remission intolerable punishment. 10. G O D pardoneth lesse faults, but not criminall.

Friendship.

Az. 5. Let no man reckon him a good friend, which is an vnbeleuer, except it be for feare. If betwixt you there grow discord, laying aside all stomacke, doe the will of G O D, and become Brethren together, imitating G O D, who hath deliuered you from the fire, and from dangers. 6. G O D would not that any should doe euill to those of his owne Nation, and those which consent to your Law, but rather their profit and commoditie.

Infidels.

Az. 6. Thinke not that euer Paradise shall be open vnto you, if you be not first valiant and couragious in battaile: and before you enter into battaile, prepare your selues for death: and after the death of the Prophet Mahomet, defend the orders by him giuen with Armes. No man can die, but when G O D will, that is, when his time is come. Those which flee out of the warre, are prouoked of the Deuill; but G O D pardoneth them which repent. They which die in the way of G O D, are not truly called dead: They liue with G O D. Let none feare them which are gouerned of the Deuill. 7. Be patient, and you shall haue eternal life. 10. Accompanie not with vnbeleueurs, neither in friendship, nor other businesse. They which goe on warfare for G O D and the Prophet, shall receiue abundance in the Earth, and after death the mercie of G O D. They which refuse (except they be sicke or children) shall be cast into Hell. Neglect not prayers in your expeditions. Some may pray, whiles other stand in Armes. Pray not for them which hurt their owne soules. 18. Look to your selues that there be no discord amongst you.

His last Azara is this: In the Name of the mercifull and pittifull G O D; sanctifie thy selfe, and pray continually, and humbly vnto him, which is Lord of all Nations, Lord of all, G O D of all, that he will defend and deliuer thee from the Deuill, which entreteth into the hearts of men, and from deuillish and peruerse men. (From Mahomet himselfe, and from his diuellish and peruerse Law. AMEN.

Thus haue I endeouored to bring some order out of confusion, and haue framed these heads out of that Alcoran-Chaos, * where is scarce either head or taile: this tale they haue and beleuee (for what will not? What shall not they beleuee, which refuse to beleuee the Truth?) that he which readeth this Booke a thousand times in his life, shall haue a woman in Paradise, whose eye-browes shall be as large as the Raine-bow.

But amongst the more studious and iudicious the manifold contradictions therein, hath bred no scruple, as in their ordinary discourses in speech and writing may appeare. For (as many Merchants and such as haue liued with them, report) it is a common thing to heare from themselves obiections and doubts touching their Law: in their Bookes also and Tractates are contained many Morall sentences and exhortations to vertue and holinesse of life, and those things called in question which the Alcoran hath seemed to determine. Of these their Bookes Master Bedwel hath lately translated and published one, a Dialogue written some fix hundred yeeres since, in which many scruples are propounded and left vndecided: many things found contradictory; yea, and the Bookes of the Old and New Testament, commended and approued, and the Doctrine of the Trinitie explained: the exceptions also made by the other Mahumetans to the Gospell, answered. In that booke it is affirmed, that there were written by Mahomet a hundred and twentie thousand sayings, of which only three thousand are good: the residue false; that the descent of the Moone into Mahomet's sleue is impossible: that shedding of blood is too slippery an argument for prooffe of Doctrine: that the Sunne, his beames, and heat, doe represent the Trinitie and Vnitie: that the state of Paradise is like to that of Angels, without meate, drinke, women; and therefore that voluptuous Paradise is one of Mahomet's fictions; for himselfe, saith hee, did write some things in iest: that it seemeth absurd, and against reason and faith, to follow a Law, which (it selfe saith) none can vnderstand but G O D: that the Alcoran in the Assura Ienas, sends men to the Iewes and Christians for the right vnderstanding thereof: that whereas it sayes Christ is the word of G O D, it followes hee is the Sonne of G O D, as reason and speech, the Sunne and his rayes, are one Essence, and the Vnderstanding, Will, Memory, in one Man: that the Christians could not (as the Mahumetans obiekt) blot the name of their prophet out of their Scriptures, seeing the Iewes and Christians, and Heretiques and Chir-

Christians haue alway bene watchfull aduersaries to each other: and they are more ancient sixe hundred yeres then Mahomet: that the storie of the speaking Ant, and other things are triuiall and impertinent: that Moses Law was giuen with open miracles, and the Gospell approved with diuers languages, and martyrdomes; that theſe nor any Law of G o d hath therein any contrarieie: that virginitee is a chiefe and bodily good, and their prophet writes of himſelfe, polygamy, adulteries and the like, with many libidinous precepts and practiſes: that theſe things ſeeme contrarie, that the Deuills ſhall be ſaued, the Iewes alſo and Chriſtians, which yet he counſelleth to ſlay, with other like contradictions: that their prophet onely vnderſtood the Arabike, and by an Interpreter heard that which is contained in the Bookes of Iewes and Chriſtians (which eaſily appears in his falſifying the Hiſtories of the Bible) that hee hath no Teſtimony but his owne: that there are many aſurd things in their law not confirmed by Miracle: and others excuſe them by Metaphors, &c.

Theſe things are there religiously diſcourſed with ſhew of reuerence to their Law, but exceeding magnifying of Chriſt and his Goſpell: which is ſo generall with the more learned ſort, that ſome alſo haue hazarded their liues in this quarrell. And Auſen that learned Phyſician ſaith againſt their Paraſitie, that wiſe Diuines more reſpect the minde, the coniunction whereof with truth is a felicitie beyond thoſe ſeuſuall pleaſures of the bodie. And were it not for ſeuſuallitie, ignorance, and the ſword, theſe Alcoran-fables would ſoone vaniſh.

CHAP. V.

Other Muhametall ſpeculations, and explanations of their Law, collected out of their owne Commentaries of that Argument.

Such writings as haue come to our hands, touching *Mahomet*s doctrine and Religion, that ſeemeth moſt fully to lay them open, which is called by ſome, Scala, a booke containing the expoſition of the Alcoran, in forme of a Dialogue, tranſlated into Latine by Hermannus Dalmata, and made the twelfth Chapter of the firſt Booke of the Alcoran in Italian. I haue therefore preſumed on the Readers patience; to thoſe former collections out of the Alcoran it ſelfe, to adde theſe enſuing, as a further explanation of their opinions. The Meſſenger of G o d (ſo beginneth that booke) was ſitting amongst his fellowes (the praier and ſaturation of G o d bee vpon him) in his Ciſtie Iſrah; and the Angel Gabriel deſcending on him, ſaid, G o d ſalureth thee, O Mahomet, &c. There came ſoure wiſe-men, Maſters in Iſrah, to prooue thee; the chiefe of whom is Abdia-Ben-Salon. Mahomet therefore ſent his couſin Hali to ſalute them; and they being come to Mahomet, after mutuall ſalutations, Abdia telleth him, that he and his fellowes were ſent by the people of the Iewes, to learne the vnderſtanding of ſome obſcure places of their Law. Mahomet aſketh, if he come to enquire, or to tempt. Abdia ſaith, to enquire. Then Mahomet giuing him full leaue, he beginneth, hauing before gathered out of the whole bodie of their Law, an hundred moſt exquisite queſtions. The principall dreſſes you ſhall here haue.

Abdia. Tell vs (O Mahomet) whether thou bee a Prophet or a Meſſenger? Mahomet. G o d hath appointed me both a Prophet and a Meſſenger. Ab. Doeſt thou preach the Law of G o d, or thine owne Law? Mah. The Law of G o d: this Law is Faith, and this Faith is, that there are not Gods, but one G o d, without partaker. Ab. How many Lawes of G o d are there? Mah. One, the Law and Faith of the Prophets, which went before vs, was one; the Rites were different. Ab. Shall we enter Paraſitie for Faith or Workes? Mah. Both are neceſſarie; but if a Gentile, Iew, or Chriſtian, become a Saracen, and preuent his good Workes, Faith onely ſhall ſuffice: But if Gentile, Iew, or Chriſtian, doe good Workes, not in the loue of G o d, the fire ſhall conſume both him and his worke. Ab. How doth the mercie of G o d preuent his anger? Mah. When before other creatures Adam roſe vp, he ſieſed and ſaid, G o d be thanked: and the Angels hearing it, ſaid, The Pittie of G o d be vpon thee, Adam, who anſwered, Amen; Then ſaid the Lord, I haue receiued your Prayer. Ab. What be the four things which G o d wrought with his owne hands? Mah. Hee made Paraſitie, planted the tree of the Trumper, formed Adam, and did write the Tables of Moeſe. Ab. Who told thee this? Mah. Gabriel, from the Lord of the world. Ab. In what forme? Mah. Of a man ſtanding vpright, neuer ſleeping, nor eating, nor drinking, but the praife of G o d. Ab. Tell me in order what is one, what is two, what three, ſoure, ſixe, ſixe, &c. to an hundred. Mah. One is G o d without Sonne, partaker or fellow, Almighty Lord of life and death. G O D* made man of giner, the mire of froth : this was made of the tempests ; these, of the sea : The sea, of darkness ; the darkness, of light ; this, of the word, the word of the thought ; the thought of Iacynth, the Iacynth of the commandement ; Let it be, and it was. Ab. How many Angels are set ouer men ? Mab. Two, one on the right hand, which writeth his good deeds ; another on the left, which registreth his bad. These sit on mens shoulders. The booke is made of the greatest Emerald ; the words, of Pearles, the cover of pitie. G O D over-looketh the same an hundred and sixtie times in a day and night. The heauen is made of smoke of the vapour of the sea ; the greenesse of the sea proceedeth from the mount Kaf, which is made of the Emeralds of Paradise ; and compasseth the world, bearing vp the heauens. The gates of heauen are of gold, the lockes of light, the keyes of pitie. Above the heauens are the sea of life, above that the cloudie sea ; then the stie sea, the stony sea, the darke sea, the sea of solace, the Moone, the Sun, the Name of G O D ; Supplication, Gabriel, the parchment rased, the parchment full written, all these in order one ouer another. Then about all these, the threecore and ten spaces of light ; then threecore and ten thousand troups of Angels on them, in euery troupe fise thousand Angels alway praising the Lord of the world ; about these the limits or bounds of Angelical dignitie ; and about the same the banner of glory, and then spaces of pearles, and in their orders one above another, the spaces of Grace, of Power, of Diuinitie, of Dispensation, the Foot-stool, the Throne, the house of the Vniuers.

Ab. Are the Sunne and Moone faithfull or not ? Mab. They are faithfull, and obey euery command of G O D. Ab. Why then are they not of euall light ? Mab. G O D created them euall, but by this it came to passe, that the vicissitude or intercoule of day and night was vncertaine, till Gabriel flying by the Moone, darkened her with the touch of his wing. Ab. How many orders are there of the Starres ? Mab. Three, the first of those which hang by chaires from the Throne of G O D, giuing light to the seuenth Throne ; the second chaile away the deuils, when they would enter into heauen ; the third, in the sight of the Angels. There are seuen seas betwene vs and heauen. There are three windes : the first barreth the second tempestuous, which shall blow the fire in the day of Iudgement ; the third nippeth which wrooted in that mire with his snout, and by the stinke thereof was produced out of his nose a Moule, which gnawed the boards of the Arke: Noe fearing this danger, was bidden to strike the Lion on the forehead: and by the Lions breath was a Cat engendred, mortal enemy to the Moule. But to returne from this stinking tale, to refresh our iellues with the like sweets of this Paradise. He addeth, that there they haue the wiues that here they had, and other Concubines, whom, how, when, wherefoeuer they will.

Abd. But why is Wine lawfull there, and here vnlawfull? Mah. The Angels Aras and Maros, were sometime sent to instruct and gouerne the world, for bidding men, Wine, iniustice, and murder. But a woman hauing whereof to accuse her husband, inuited them to dinner, and made them drunke. They inflamed with a double heat of Wine and Lust, could not obtaine that their desire of their faire Hostesse, except one would teach her the woe of ascending to heauen, and the other of descending. Thus she mounted vp to heauen. And vpon esquire of the matter, there was made the Morning-Sarre, and they put to their choice, whether they would bee punished in this world, or in the world to come: they accepting their punishment in this, are hanged by chaines, with their heads in a pit of Babel, till the day of Iudgement.

Hell, saith Mahomet there, hath the floore of Brimstone, smoake, pitchy, with stinking flames, with deepe pits of scalding Pitch, and sulphurous flames, wherein the damned are punished daily: the trees beare most loasome fruits, which they eate.

The day of Iudgement shall be in this sort. In that day Go d will command the Angel of Death to kill every Creature; which being done, hee shall aske him if nothing bee aloue: Adriel the Angell of Death shall answer, Nothing but my selfe. Then goe thy waies betwixt Paradise and Hell, and last of all kill thy selfe. Thus he, folded in his wings, prostrate on the earth, shall strangle himselfe with such a bellowing noise, as would terrifie the vntie Angels, if they were aloue.

Thus the world shall bee emptye fortie yeeres. Then shall Go d hold the Heauen and Earth in his fist, and say, Where are now the mightie men, the Kings and Princes of the World? Tell mee (if yee be true) whose is the Kingdome, and Empire, and Power? Repeating these words three times, he shall rise vp Seraphiel, and say, Take this Trumpet, and goe to Ierusalem, and sound. This Trumpet is of sixe hundred yeeres iourney. At that sound all Soules shall come forth, and disperse themselves vnto their owne bodies, and their bones shall be gathered together. Fortie yeeres after hee shall sound againe, and then the bones shall resume flesh and sinewes. After fortie yeeres the third sound shall warne the Soules to re-possesse their bodies: and a fire from the West shall driue every creature to Ierusalem. When they haue here swum fortie yeeres in their owne sweat, they shall with much vexation, come to Adam, and say, Father Adam, Father Adam, Why hast thou begotten vs to these miseries and torments? Why sufferest thou vs to hang betwene hope and feare? Pray to Go d, that hee will finish his determination of vs, betwene Paradise and Hell: Adam shall excuse his vnworthinesse for his disobedience, and send them to Noe, Noe will post them to Abraham, Abraham to Moses: He shall send them to Iesus Christ: To him they shall come, and say, The Spirit, Word, and Power of Go d, let thy pitie moue thee to make intercession for vs. He shall answer them, That which you aske, you haue lost. I was indeed sent vnto you in the power of Go d, and Word of Truth, but yee haue erred, and haue made me Go d; more then euer I preached to you: and haue therefore lost my benefit. But goe to the last of the Prophets, meaning him with whom thou now talkest, Abdias. Then shall they turne to him, and say; O faithfull Messenger, and friend of Go d, we haue sinned, heare vs, holy Prophet, our only hope, &c. Then shall Gabriel present himselfe to helpe his friend, and they shall goe to the Throne of Go d. And Go d shall say, I know why you are come: Faile be it that I should not heare the prayer of my faithfull one. Then shall a bridge be made ouer Hell, and on the top of the bridge shall bee set a ballance, wherein every mans workes shall bee weighed, and those which are soued, shall passe ouer the bridge, the other shall fall into Hell. Abd. How many bands of men shall there be in that day? Mahom. An hundred and twentie; of which, three only shall be found faithfull; and every Band or troupe of men shall be in length the iourney of a thousand yeeres, in breadth sixe hundred. Abd. What shall become of Death? Mah. He shall be transformed into a Ram, and they shall bring him betwene Paradise and Hell. Then shall arise much dissensions betwene these two peoples, through feare of the one, and hope of the other. But the people of Paradise shall preuaile, and shall slay Death betwene Paradise and Hell. Abd. Thou, O Mahomet, hast outcome, and I beleue, that there is but one Go d Almighty, and thou art his Messenger and Prophet.

In this long and tedious Summarie, of that longer and more tedious Dialogue, compared with the former Jewish opinions, touching their Behemoth, Leuiathan, Ziz, Ierusalem, Swines flesh, the Angell of Death, and other their superstitious opinions, may appeare, that the Iewes were forward Mint-masters in this new-coyned Religion of Mahomet.

In the beginning of this Dialogue, are mentioned their five Prayers, and their Ramadan, or Ramazan: Of which, that Arabian Noble-man, in confutation of the Alcoran, writeth thus: ^b He which hath fulfilled these five Prayers, shall bee praised in this world, and in the next. They are as follow: Two kneeling in the morning, after-noon, foure; at Vespers, or a little before Sun-set, foure; after Sun-set, foure; at their beginning of supper, two; and after supper, when it is darke, two; in all eightene kneeling in a day.

Their Lent ^d, or Fast of the Moneth Ramazan, is thus: In the day time they must fast from Meate, Drinke, and Venerie, till the Sunne bee downe: then is Riot permitted them, till a white threed may be discerned from a blacke. But if any be sicke, or in journeying, he may pay at another time the same number of dayes.

Sampſates Iſphacanes, a Persian, in a letter written to one Meletius, which had conuerted to Christianitie, and fled to Constantinople, to reduce him to his former vomit, allegeth this saying of God to Mahomet: I haue made all things for thee, and thee for mee: obiecteth to Christians the worship of three Persons, the Father, Mother, and Sonne, the worship of many Gods. And how (saith he) can God haue a Sonne without a woman? And how can they agree together? How can God be made Man? And why could he not haue saued man by a word, but, as if he had beene hindred through weaknesse, did therefore become man? And if he were God, how could he suffer? Yea, the name of Mahomet, saith hee, was expressed both in the Old Testament, and the Gospel, Christ himselfe commending it, which the Christians haue raced out: yea, from euermasting it was written on the right side of the Throne of God. And the Musulmans deriue their faith from Abraham. This I haue inserted, to shew the vaine conceits they haue of our Religion, and their blinde confidence in their owne, with their carnall dreames of Diuine Myſteries, and diuellish flanders of our Scriptures, which they know not: their scandall also from the worship of Images and Saints.

Frier Richard ^k reciteth among Mahometts opinions, That of threecore and thirteene parts of the Saracens, one onely shall be saued; and, that the Deuils shall once bee saued by the Alcoran; and that the Deuils call themselves Saracens, fit companions with them in their holy things.

Some ⁱ make it a Canon of Mahomet, That they should looke toward the South when they pray, that when they pray they should say, God is one God, without equal; and Mahomet his Prophet: which, Lod. Barthema saith, Are the Characters of the profession of a Mahumetan, and that, by the pronouncing of those words, hee was tried whether he was an Infidell, or no. These words, saith the aboue-said Arabian (as they affirme) before the beginning of the world were written in the Throne of God.

Bellonius ^m in his Obseruations telleth out of their Bookes, that there is a Tree in Paradise which shadoweth it all ouer, and spreadeth her boughes ouer the walles, whose leaues are of pure gold and silver, each of them after the Name of God, hauing therein written the name of Mahomet. And that if a Christian, at vnawares, should pronounce the said Prayer, La illah, &c. God is one God, and Mahomet his Prophet, hee must either die or turne Turke. Such reputation haue they of this forme, which they call a Prayer, with as good reason as the Aue Marie among the Romists, wherein yet they pray not for any thing. Bellonius also saith, That they hold the Heauen to be made of Smoke, and the Firmament stablished on the horne of a Buffal, by whose stirring Earthquakes are caused: That there are seuen Paradises, with Houses, Gardens, Fountaines, and whatsoeuer sense accounteth delectable; where they shall enioy all delights without any sorrow, hauing Carpet, Beds, Boyes, Horses, Saddles, Garments, for cost and workmanship most curious, and readie for attendance. Those Boyes richly adorned, when they haue satisfied their hunger and thirst, shall present euery Saracen a huge Pome-citron in a golden Charger, and as soone as they shall smell thereof, there shall thence proceed a comely Virgin in gallant attire, which shall embrace him, and hee her; and so shall they continue fiftie yeeres. After which space ended, God shall shew them his face, whereat they shall fall downe, not able to endure the brightnesse, but hee shall say, Arise, my seruants, and enioy my glory; for heereafter yee shall neuer die, nor be grieved. Then shall they see God, and each lead his Virgin into his Chamber, where all pleasures shall attend them. If one of those Virgins should come forth at midnight, shee would lighten the world no lesse then the Sunne, and if shee should spee into the Sea, all the water thereof would become sweet. Gabriel kepeth the keys of Paradise, which are in number threecore and ten thousand, each seuen thousand miles long. But hee was not able to open Paradise, without Inuocation of the Name of God, and Mahomet his friend. There is a Table of Adamant seuen hundred thousand dayes iourney long and broad, with leaues of gold and silver about it, where they shall be feasted.

disput. cent. Set.

There is extant a Constitution of Methodius, Patriarke of Constantinople, touching the diversities of Penances (according to the diversitie of the offence) to be performed by such as haue revolted from the Faith to Mahometisme. Likewise, there is a fragment of Nicetas, wherein are expressed the abjurations, and renunciations of Mahomet, and his Law by new converts, both before Baptisme, when they were admitted into the number of the Catechumens, and at Baptisme, as was then vsed in the Church, some of which I here mention, as fitting to our purpose. After the Anathema pronounced against Mahomet, Alti his sonne-in-law, Apompicertus, Baiecer, Amar, Talcan, Apupachren, Sadicer, and the rest of his confors and successours; also against Gadise, Aise, and others his wives, with Phatuma his daughter: he Anathematizeth the Core, that is, Mahomet's Scripture, and all his learning, lawes, Apocryphall narrations, traditions, and blasphemies. The fifth Article is against Mahomet's Paradise, there thus expressed, That in it are foure Riuers, one of cleare water, a second, of sweet milke, a third, of pleasant wine, a fourth, of honie: and that the Saracens at the day of Iudgement (which shall be five hundred thousand yeeres after his time) shall liue carnally with their wives under the shadowes of certaine trees, called Sidra, and Telech, and shall eat what fruites and birds they will, and shall drinke of the fountaines Caphura and Zinciber, and wine out of the spring Theon. Their age shall be the same with the heauens: their members foure cubits: they shall haue their fill of lust in the presence of God, who is not ashamed. Sixthly, He Anathematizeth Mahomet's Angels, Aroth, Maron, Tazapha and Marona, with his Prophets, Cind, Zalech, Soap, Edrei, Duaciphel and Lechina. Seuenthly, His doctrine of the Sun & Moone, and his challenge to be the Key-bearer of Paradise: also his house of Mecca, in the midst whereof, they say, is a stone representing Venus, on which Abraham lay with Hagar, and tied there to his Camell, when he should haue sacrificed Isaac: where the Pilgrimes holding their eare with one hand, point to the stone with the other, and so turne round till they fall downe with giddinesse. He renounceth likewise their casting seven stones against the Christians, and the tale of Mahomet's Camel, and them which worship the Morning-starre, or Lucifer and Venus, which the Arabians call Chohar, that is, Great. And thus hee proceedeth in two and twentie Articles, abandoning his former sect: after which he desireth Baptisme.

Of like subiect are the Catecheses Mystagagice, or instructions of Peter Guerra de Lorca, concerning conuerting and keeping from Mahometisme, in which are rehearsed, and refused a great part of their superstitions, dedicated to King Philip the second: But King Philip the third, hath otherwise conuerted the Moores of Spaine, for whom he writ this booke, by an vtter subuersion & turning them quite out of his dominions. He therein telleth of the deuls appearing to Mahomet in forme of a Vulture, with a beake and feathers of gold, professing himselfe to be Gabriel, sent of God to teach him his Law: that Mahomet would not permit Iewes to turne to his Law, without baptizing them first vnto Christianity: that the Saracens worship the New-Moone: that the women spend all their time and care to adore themselves for their husbands lust, and because they respect fatnesse in their wives, these therefore with idleness, sleepe, and diet according, doe far themselves like Swine: that a Mahometan may attaine to that perfection, that he may satisfie for sinne past, and after liue without sin, especially by Fastings and Pilgrimages: that the blessed Virgin shal (as they dreame) in the other life bee married to that cursed monster Mahomet: that women shall rise againe in the male sex, and shall also haue women for their lust, which shall bee produced out of certaine trees: with diuers other things scarcely objected to them by others. Thomas à lesu another Spaniard, hath written prolixly of this Argument, but I may not here now follow him.

Let me yet be bold out of certaine Arabikes of the best note to adde the Creed, the Commandements, Mescuites, with other Mahometan Rites and Customs, collected by Gabriel and Iohn, two Maronites, and first touching the Easterne Languages and Authors.

Arabike Authors.

There are in the East eight principall Languages, the Arabike, Persian, Turkish, Hebrew, Chaldee, Syriack (which little differs from Chaldees) Greeke, and Armenian. The Arabike is most noble and vsuall, and is extended as far as Mohamed's name, as their sacred Language, know to all Moslems of better fashion. In this is their Alcoran and their publicke Prayers, and most of their Lawes. Yea, saith Zaberi, the blessed in Paradise visit. In this also are written their Bookes of Physicke, Astrologie, Rhetorike. The Persian hath little but Poets and Historians, the Turkish almost nothing; the Chaldee and Syriack are nigh lost, as the Greeke. But Auerroes, Algazel, Abu-Becer, Alfarabius (called of the Moslems, the second Philosopher) Mohamed Ben-Isaac, and Mohamed Ben-Abdullah adorned the Arabike: besides very many Astrologers, Mathematicians, Physicians, and Historians. Ben-Sid Auli reckons one hundred and fiftie, which haue written on their Law; Ben-Casem, innumerable Grammarians and Rhetoricians.

Now for the Moslemans Religion, Ben-Sidi Aali expresth it to consist herein, that they beleene all the speeches made by Gabriel the Angell to our Prophet, when hee questioned him of the things to bee beleued and done: which are these, to beleene in one God to whom none is equal (this against Christians) and that the Angels are the Seruants of God, to beleene in the Scripture sent to the Apostles, diuided in their opinion into one hundred and foure Bookes, of which tenne were sent to Adam, fiftie to Seth, thirtie to Enoc (called Edris) ten to Abraham, the Law to Moises, the Psalms to Dauid, the Gospel to Iu, or Iesus Christ; lastly, the Alcoran to Mohamed. That they hold these sent for mens good, and beleene in the Resurrection after death, and that some are predestinate to fire, some to Paradise, according to the will of God (for it is said in the Alcoran, there is none of you which hath not his place in Paradise, and a place determined in Hell) that they beleene also the reward of the good end punishment of the bad; and the intercession of the Saints. Also this is of the things to bee holden, that they firmly beleene in the Diuine Pen, which was created by the finger of God. This Pen was made of Pearles, of that length and space that a swift Horse could scarcely passe in five hundred yeeres. It performeth that office, that it writeth all things past, present, and to come: the Inke with which it writeth is of light; the Tongue by which it writeth, none vnderstandeth but the Archangel Seraphael. That they beleene also the punishment of the Sepulchres for the Dead are vsed often to be punished in their Graues, as happened in a certaine Sepulcher betwixt Mecca and Medina.

The Precepts of the Moslemans are, first Circumcision, not on the eighth day, as to the Iewes, but at the eight, ninth, tenth, eleuenth, twelfth yeere, that they may know what they doe, and may professe their Faith with vnderstanding. And although most hold women free; yet in Egypt they circumsise women at thir eene, fourteene, or fiftene yeeres-old (may of them till then goe stark naked) and Sidi-Ben Aali saith, that it was commanded to men, but is vsed to women for honour.

The second Commandment is Prayers hourly, which in the Church, at home, or abroad, they are bound to performe, five times in the day and night: first, at break of day: the second, about noone; the third, in the afternoone; the fourth, after Sun-set, when the Stailes begin to appeare: the last, in the first watch, or before mid-night (for after, it is vnlawfull, saith Ben-Sidi Aali) neither may any transgresse these houres without sin; yea, saith he if one were cast into the Sea, and knew the houre of Prayer, if he be able, he ought to doe it; as also women in trauell must hide the Infants head as they can, and doe it. Trauellers when they perceiue that houre is come, goe out of the way and wash; or if they haue no water; lightly dig the Earth, and make shew of washing, and go not thence till they haue finished their Devotion. Thirdly, Almes is also commanded; and they which are so poore that they cannot giue to Orphans and the poore, must helpe in Hospitals and High-waies, by such seruice to satisfie God. Fourthly, Ramadhan Fast of thirtie dayes is commanded from morning to Sun-set, and the Stars appearing: for then after euening Prayer they eate any food (except Wine) with Bacchanall cleere, and tumults. Fifthly, Pilgrimage once in their liues to Mecca and Medina is also commanded; and sixthly, to fight against the enemies of their Faith is no lesse commanded; not to preach by the Word and Meekenesse, as Christ, but by the sword and Warre, to invade and reuenge. And if by their persons and blood they cannot, they must (saith our Author) by their purse and goods helpe the Prince herein. And if they die in War, the sensuall pleasures of Paradise, Riuers of Milke and Honey, becomfull women and the like, are their present purchase. Therefore do they giue to Apostataes, which become Moslemans, an Arrow borne vp by their fore-finger; the Arrow signifying Warre, and that one Finger the Vnitie of the Deitie. Their last Commandment is washing with water, which is three-fold, one before Prayers, handled in three Chapters by Ben-Sidi Aali, thus performed; the armes stripped naked to the elbow, they wash the right hand and arme, then the left, after the Nose, Eares, Face, Necke, Crowne, Feet to the ioynts, if they bee bare, or else their shooes-tops; lastly, their Priuities; meane-while mumbling their Devotions. These washings, they thinke to wash away their Veniall and lighter sinnes; for their greater they vse Batches, and say all the bodie must be washed to wash away Crimes. The third washing is of their secrets by themselves, or their Seruants after the Offices of Nature, deliuered by him in two Chapters, too foolish and filthy to be related. Adde the prohibition of Images painted or carued, Thefts, Homicides, Robberies, Adulteries, Swines-flesh, Wine, strangled blood, and things dying of themselves, and all vncleane creatures.

He also instructs at large of their Testaments and Funerals. The Moslemans being sicke, presently send for an Abed, Religious man, or Santon to strengthen them in the Faith, and propound heauenly things to him, reciting somewhat out of the Alcoran. And if the Discale be very dangerous, they wash and make their Testament; and are bound to restore all ill-gotten goods, giuing the creditors a bill of their hand, And if they know not to whom to restore, they must bequeath a summe of money to publike vse, Hospitals, Melchirs, Bathes, the poore and Religious persons: yea, for that respect they let Captiues at libertie, as is read that that Aucenna did; some giue Bookes to publike vses; some, other things. Ben-Sidi Aali saith, it is Mohameds precept, that the third part of mens goods bee bestowed on publike vses. And if a man die intestate, they say other dead men will chide him. When they are dead, the bodie is washed, the Nose, Eyes, Mouth, and Eares stopp'd with cotton; better apparel is put on, white shirts, and Tulipants. Then is the bodie carried to the buriall place without the Citie with a great troupe; the Santonies or Religious going before, then the men promiscuously, after the Corps; followed by women howling, lamenting, shrieking, till they come to the Graue. There are those Garments taken away, and the Corps shrowded in a white sheet, and put into the Graue with the face to the South. After the couering with Earth, many Prayers are made, and much Almes is giuen to the poore to doe the same.

Mescuites, or Moschees, or
nies in them.

Touching the Easterne Customes, Ben-Sidi Aali hath written of the structure of Mescuites. Before them is a large floore paved with Marble, in the midst is a square Lauer, where they which come to pray vse to wash themselves. After this is a great Hall without Images or Pictures, the Walls bare, not shining with Gold or Gems: the Pauement matted, on which the vulgar sit; the Rich vse Carpets spread for them by their Slaves. From the Roofe hang many Lampes, which are lighted in Prayer time, and that being ended, are put out. These Churches are for the most part round & couered with Lead; and haue adioyned high Towers which serue for Steeples, with foure Windowes open to the foure Windes; whereon the Priests at set-times ascend, and with a strong voyce call men to Prayers. Which being ended, and their Legall washing being done, all of them leauing their Shoes on a rew at the threshold of the Gate or Porch, they enter with great silence. The Priest beginneth the Prayer, and all follow, and whilst hee kneeleth they doe so, and rise when hee stands vp, and imitate him in the eleuation or depression of the voyce. None yauneth, cougheth, walketh, or talketh, but in great silence, after Prayers they resume their Shoes and depart. No woman may come to the Mescuites at these set houres, if shee bete any men, nor may haue any societie of men, except the Priest, which directeth and goeth before them with his voyce in their manner of praying, as saith the said Author.

Easterne adire

They are permitted not to enter the Mescuites, but to stand at the doore, and must bee gone quickly before the men haue done their Prayers. He addes that the womens Church is the inner part of their owne houle. Such is their dis-respect of women; notwithstanding, Mohameds promises in his Alcoran, that many, say they, enter not Paradise, but may stand at the doore with Christians, and see the glorie of the men.

The Garments of the East are commonly long, some slit on the right and left hand, some whole. The vpper Garment hath wide sleeves. Their head-tire is a Tulipant but differing of Princes white and fine, artificially wreathen, rather long then round: of their Cadies and Musens very large, of fiftie or sixtie Els of Calico round and wreathed; of Citizens lesse, of Serifs or Mohameds posteritie greene: of Souldiers and Seruants long and white. Christians vse not white nor round ones: the Maronite Patriarke and his Suffragan Bishops weare a huge Tulipant, round and blue, with a blacke hood vnder it: other Priests lesse, and no hood. The women are pompous, but coming abroad weare a couering made of Horie-haire before their face, that they may see and not be knowne, not if their owne Husbands meet them; neither if they did know, would they salute, it being a shame for a woman to see some speaking with a man. Their Chaines, Brooches, and other Ornaments, and Paintings of their Eyes, Browes, and Fingers ends, I omit. Both men and women are so addicted to neatnesse, that they are very carefull lest any drop of vrine spot their clothes in making water or going to stoole, and would then thinke themselves vnclane. They therefore then sit downe (like women) and wash; or if no water may bee had, wipe with three stones, or a three cornered stone, as Ben-Sidi Aali in his Chapter of washing warneth. They thinke it vnlawfull to spit or pisse on a brute creature. In food they abstaine from strangled and blood; and Moslemans, from Swines-flesh. They loue Iunkets: they breake bread anuut it not. Their Table is a round piece of Leather, to which they come with washing and Prayers promised. They vse not Forkes, but Spoones of Wood of diuers colours, and where they need not them, three Fingers, as Ben-Sidi Aali warneth. Pewter and Porcelaine is in much vse, but other Vessels of Plate or Gold, saith hee, Mohamed forbade, saying, The Deuill vsed such, the common drinke is water; the better sort adde Sugar, sometimes Amber and Muske, &c.

CHAP. VI.

Of the Pilgrimage to Mecca.

WE haue heard of the antiquitie of this Pilgrimage in the former Chapter, derived from Adam, who was shaven and circumcised for that purpose: and the Alcotan nameth Abraham the founder of the Temple, &c. Pittie it were, that the last of the Prophets should not honour that which was first instituted by the first of men. If wee will rather beleue that Arabian before mentioned, we shall finde another originall; namely, That whereas two Nations of the Indians, called Lechian and Albarachuma, had vied to goe about their Idols naked and shaven, with great howlings, kissing the corners, and casting stones vpon an heape, which was heaped vp in honour of their gods, and that twice euery yeere, in the Spring, and in Autumne: the Arabians had learned the same of the Indians, and practised the same at Mecca, in honour of Venus casting stones backe betwene their legs, the parts of Venus in the time of Mahomet. Neither did Mahomet abrogate this, as he did other Idolatrous Rites: onely for modesties sake they were enioyned to gird a piece of linnen about their Reines. Petrus Alphonsi an ancient Author, who of a Jew had become a Christian, thus relateth this Historie. The Ammonites and Moabites erected two Idols, one of white stone called Mercurius, in honour of Mars: the other of blacke, called Chamos, in honour of Saturne. Twice a yeere these men scended to worship them; when the Sunne entred into Aries, in honour of Mars, and then at their departure they cast stones (as before is said:) when the Sunne entred into Libra, in honour of Saturne; at which time they sacrificed naked, with their heads shaven. The Arabians also worshipped them: Mahomet did not abolish them, but placed the Image of Saturne in a corner, with his back-part forwards; and buried the Image of Mars in the ground, and laid a stone ouer it. These stones he permitted them to kisse, and with shaven crownes, and naked backs to cast stones backwards betwene their legs, which they say, is done to carry away the Deuill. This is suffered to bee done at Mecca in honour of Venus. But wee auer alreadie heard, that Venus was the ancient Arabian and Seracenicall Deitie, to whom they performed such Rites of old.

Sup. cap. 5.

Mecca, or (as they call it) Mecca, signifying an Habitation, containeth in it about six thousand houses fairely built, like those of Italy: Other walls it hath not, then such as Nature hath environed it with; namely, With high and barren Mountaines round about, some report, That betwene the Mountaines and the Citie are pleasant gardens, abundance of Figs, Apples, Melons, and that there is store also of Flesh and Water, But seemeth, that this is of later industrie, not of Natures indulgence, if it be true. For Lud. Barthema, or Pertoman, being there in the yeare 1503. saith, That the place was accursed of God, as not bringing forth Hearbs, Trees, Fruites, or any thing, and besides, hauing great scarcitie of water, and is serued with these things from other places. It is gouerned by King (tributarie, then to the Soldan, now to the Turke) called the Seriffo, lineally descended from their great Seducer, by his daughter Fatima (the onely issue of this libidinous pagamous Prophet) married to Hali. All of this kindred are called Emyrs, that is, Lords, loathed with (or at least, wearing Turbants of) Greene, which colour the Mahumetans will or suffer other men to weare.

c Pertoman. Lib. 1. cap. 14.

The number of Pilgrimes which resort hither, is incredible. From Cairo commeth a Carouan of deuotion, some to Mannon, some to Mahomet, either for trade of Merchandize, or for Superstition, and another yeerely from Damascus: besides those which come from the Indies, Ethiopia, Arabia, Persia, &c. Lud. Barthema saith, That (at his being at Mecca) of the Carouan of Damascus wherein he went, were five and thirtie thousand Camels, and about thrie thousand persons: of that of Cairo were three score and foure thousand Camels, and ow in these times about fortie thousand Camels, Mules, and Dromedaries, and fiftie thousand persons, besides the Arabian Carouan, and of other Nations;

This Mart of Mecca is much impaired, since the Portugales haue intercepted the Indian commodities, which by a Carouan from thence, were wont to be brought hither.

Let me desire the Reader to haue patience, and goe along on this Pilgrimage, with one of these Carouans, thorow these Arabian Deserts to Mecca and Medina: and because that if Cairo is the chiefe, wee will bestow our selues in it, and obserue what Rites they obserue before they set forth: what by the way, and at the intended places of their deuotion. Touching the necessitie whereof, they thinke, that they which goe not once in their liues, shall, after death, goe to the Deuill. Yea, some, for deuotion, plucke out their eyes after ho ly a sight.

m Pilgrimage
to Mecca. Histy

The moneth Ramadan (or Ramadhans, the ninth moneth in their Kalender, containing thirtie daies, as you haue heard) is their Lent; falling sometime high, sometime low, being that whole moneth, during which time the Pilgrimes and Merchants resort to Cairo from Asia, Greece, Barbarie, &c. After their ^m Lent ended, they observe their Easter, or Feast, called Bairam, three daies. Twentie daies after this Feast, the Carouan is ready to depart. Against this time, they assemble themselves at a place, two leagues from Cairo (called Birca) attending the coming of the Capitaine. This Capitaine of the Carouan, whom they call Amarilla Haggi, is renewed every third yeere; and to him the Grand Signior, every voyage giueth eightene Purles (each containing fixe hundred twentie five Duckats of gold) for the behoofe of the Carouan, and also to doe Almes vnto needfull Pilgrimes. He hath foure Chausi to serue him, and foure hundred Souldiers, two hundred Spachi, mounted on Dromedaries, and as many Ianizaries riding on Camels. The Chausi and Spachi, the Capitaine maintaineth at his owne charges: The Ianizaries haue their prouision from Cairo. He hath eight Pilots for guides; which Office is hereditarie.

They carrie fixe pieces of Ordnance to terrifie the Arabians, and to triumph at Mecca. The Merchandize that goeth by Land, payeth no custome; that which goeth by Sea, payeth ten in the hundred. At the Feast, before the Carouan setteth forth, the Capitaine, with his Retinue and Officers, resort vnto the Castle of Cairo, before the Basha, which giueth vnto every man a Garment, and that of the Capitaine is wrought with Gold, the others according to their degree. Moreouer, he deliuereth vnto him the Chifus Tunabi, or Garment of the Prophet; a Vesture of Silke, wrought with these letters of Gold, La illa ill' alla Mahomet Refullala; that is, There are no gods but God, and Mahomet is the Messenger of God. After this, he deliuereth to him a Sute, wrought curiously with gold; and a couering of greene vcluet, made in manner of a Pyramis, about nine palmes high, wrought with fine gold, to couer the Tombe of the Prophet Mahomet, and many other coverings besides of gold and silke to adorne it. The two former are for the house of Abraham in Mecca.

Then the Capitaine having taken his leaue, departed accompanied with all the people of Cairo, in manner of a Procession, with singing, shouting, and a thousand Ceremonies besides, and passing the gate Bab Nassara, laich vp, in a Mosquita, the said Vestures very felyly. This Ceremonie is performed with such publike resort, that it is not lawfull for any man to forbid his wife the going to this Feast: for shee may, vpon such a cause, separate her selfe from her husband, and lie with another man. The Camels which carrie the Vestures, being adorned with cloth of gold, and many little bells, the multitude streweth flowers and sweet water on them; others with fine cloth and towels touch the same, referring these for reliques. Twentie daies after this Feast, the Capitaine, taking the vestures out of that Mosquita, repaireth to Birca, where his Tent abideth some ten daies. In this time, they which meant to follow the Carouan, resort thither, and amongst them, many women attired with triffes, tassels, and knots, accompanied with their friends, mounted on Camels. The night before their depart ure, they make great feasting and triumph, with discharging their Ordnance, Fire-works, &c. showing, till, at the breake of day vpon the sound of a Trumpet, they march forward on their way.

From Cairo to Mecca is fortie daies journey, traouelling from two a clocke in the morning till the Sun-rising: and then hauing rested till noone, they set forward, so continuing till night, obseruing this order till the end of their voyage, without change; except at some places, where, in respect of water, they rest sometimes a day and a halfe to refresh themselves. The Carouan is diuided into three parts; the fore-ward, the maine battell, and the reer-ward. The fore-ward containeth about the third part of the people; and amongst these, the eight Pilots, a Chausi, and foure knaues, with bulls sinewes, which punish offenders on the soles of their feet: In the night time they haue foure or fise men goe before with pieces of drie wood, which giue light: they follow the Starre, as the Mariners. Within a quarter of a mile followeth the maine Battell, with their Ordnance, Gunners, and fifteene Archers, Spachi, The chiefe Physician, with his Ointments and Medicines for the sicke, and Camels for them to ride on. Next goeth the fairest Camell that may be found in the Turkes Dominion, decked with cloth of gold and silke, and carrieth a little chest, made of pure Legemete, in forme of the Israelitish Arke, containing in it the Alcoran, all written with great letters of gold, bound betwene two tables of Massie gold. This chest is couered with silke, during the voyage; but at their entring into Mecca and Medina, it is couered with cloth of gold, adorned with Jewels. This Camell is compassed about with Arabian Singers and Musicians, singing alway and playing vpon Instruments. After this follow fifteene other most faire Camels, every one carrying one of the abovesaid vestures, being couered from top to toe with silke. Behinde these, goe the twentie Camels, which carry the Captaines money and prouision. After followeth the Standard of the great Signior, accompanied with Musicians and Souldiers, Souldiers, and behinde these, lesse then a mile, followeth the reere-ward; the greatest part Pilgrimes; the Merchants for securitie, going before: for in this voyage it is needfull and vially, that the Captaines bestow Prelents, Garments, and Turbants vpon the chiefe Arabians, to giue him free passage, receiuing sometimes, by pilferings some damage: notwithstanding, They passe by certaine weake Castles in the way, Agerut, Nachel, Acba, Biritem, betwene which two last is the Riuer of Iethro, and the Ponds of Midian, where Mefer fate downe. At Iebbir, the first Towne subiect to the Seriffo of Mecca, they are receiued with much ioy, and well refreshed with the plentie which that place yeeldeth. They finde other filthy Commodities also more then plentie, which fact (they hold) purgeth them from a multitude of finnes, and encrease their deuotion to prosecute the voyage. The next day they goe towards Bedrihonem, in which place groweth shrubs, where our Issueth balm. Hereby they lodge one night, in memory of a victory here obtained against the Christians, at the earnest prayers of their Prophet, dreaming of Drums, heere still sounded by Angels, as they passe. The next morning by Sun-rising, they arrive at Bedrihonem, where euery one washed himselfe from top to toe, couering their priuities with a cloth, and their shoulders with another white one; and they which can goe in this habite to Mecca, merit more; they which cannot make a vow to offer a Ram at the Mountaine of Pardons. After this washing, it is not lawfull for any man or woman to kill a Flea or Lowse with their hands or nailes, till they haue accomplished their Vowes at that Mountaine.

This night they come within two miles of Mecca. The next morning they march on, and the Seriffo meeting them, resigneth his government to the Captaine, during his abode there; and the Captaine giueth him a garment of cloth of gold, with other Jewells. After this, hauing eaten together vpon Carpets and Hides, they rake with them the gate and garment aboutefaid, and goe, attended but with few, to the Mosquita, and there cause the old to be pulled downe, and put the new couerture on the house of Abraham: and the old vesture is the Eunuches which serue in the said Mosquita, which sell it deare to the Pilgrimes, euery little piece being accounted a most holy Relique. And well may it be so, for (can you doubt of it?) putting the same vnder the head of a man at his death, all his finnes must, by vertue hereof be pardoned. They take away the old doore, which is the Seriffos fee, and ser in place the new. Thus after some Orisons, the Captaine returneth to his pansion, the Seriffo remaineth in the Citie.

That you may be the better acquainted with this Mosquita, & house of Abraham you are to know, that in the midst of the Citie is the great Mosquita, built (they say) in the time when their Prophet liued. It is foure-square, euery square halfe a mile, being in all the circuit two miles, in manner of a Cloyster: The galleries round about are in manner of foure streets; these streets being separated from each other with Pillars, of Marble some, and some of Lime and Stone. In the midst of all separate from the rest, is the house of Abraham. This Mosquita hath fourescore and nineteene gates, and five steeples, from whence the Talismani call the people to their deuotion. And the Pilgrimes, which are not provided of Tents, resort hither, men and women lying together; their House of Prayer becoming a den of Theues. Barthema saith, that this Temple is round, like the Coliseo at Rome. That at euery entrance is a descent of ten or twelue steps, on both sides whereof stand Jewellers, which sell gems onely. Within it is vaulted, gilded, and odoniferous, beyond what can be spoken: for there are foure or five hundred men which sell powders to perfume dead corpses, and other sweets. It seemeth, that since his time the temple and house of Abraham are altered. This house is foure-square, made of speckled stone, twentie paces high, and forie in circuit. And vpon one side of this house, within the wall, there is a stone of a span long, and halfe a span broad, which stone (they say) fell downe from heauen; a voice from heauen at the same fall, being heard, that wheresoener this stone fell, there should be built the house of God, wherein hee will heare the prayers of sinners. Then was the Stone as white as snow, but now, through the kisses of sinners, it is become so blacke as it is. The entrance into this house is small and high. There are without this house one and thirtie pillars of brasie vpon square stones, sustaining a threed of Copper, reaching from one to another, on which are fastened many burning Lamps. The founder of these was Solyman. Being entred into this house through that difficult passage, there stand two pillars of Marble at the entrance: in the midst are three of Aloes-wood, couered with tyles of India, of a thousand colours, which serue to vnder-prop the Terrazza, or rooffe. It is so darke, that they can hardly see within for want of light; nor is it without an euill smell. Without the gate five paces, is the Pond Zunzun; that blessed Pond which the Angell she wed to Agar for her sonne Ismael.

Of their Feast Baraim is said already: About fixe daies after they be come hither to Mecca, they celebrate another Feast called Bine Baraim, that is, the great Feast, which is also called, The Feast of the Ram. In thoe daies space they prepare themselves hereunto with due ceremonies:

ceremonies. First, departing from the Carouan, guided with such as are skilfull in the way, they goe twentie or thirtie in a companie walking thorow a street, which ascendeth by litle and litle, till they come vnto a certaine gate, whereon is written in Marble, Babel Salema; that is, the gate of Health. And from this place is descried the great Mosquita, and twice saluted, saying, Peace to thee, Messenger of God. Then proceeding on their way, they finde an Arch on their right hand, whereon they ascend fise steps, vpon which is a great void place made of stone: after descending fise other steps, and proceeding the space of a flight, thorow, they finde another Arch, like vnto the first; and this way, from the one Arch to the other, they goe and come seuen times, saying alwaies some of their prayers, which (they say) the afflicted Hagar said, whiles she fought and found not water for her sonne. After this Ceremonie, they enter into the Mosquita; and drawing neere vnto the house of Abraham, they goe round about it other seuen times, alwaies saying, This is the house of God, and of his seruants ABRAHAM. This done, they goe and kisse that blacke stone abovesaid; and then goe they to the Pond Zunzun, and in their apparell, as they be, wash themselves from head to foot, saying, Tobah Allah, Tobah Allah, Pardon Lord, Pardon Lord; drinking also of that muddie vsauourie water: and thus returne they, cleansed from all their sins, Euerie Pilgrime performeth these Ceremonies once at the least; the deuourer fort often.

An hundred yeeres since these Ceremonies were somewhat different, after Berithmaas relation. On the three and twentie of May, the people (before day) compassed that house of Abraham seuen times, alway touching and kissing euery corner. Ten or twelue paces from this house was another, in manner of a Chappell with three or foure gates, and in the middle thereof a pit of brackish water, threecore and ten yards deepe. Thereat stand fixe or eight men, appointed to draw water for the people; who after their seuen-fold Ceremonie come to the brink, and say, All this be for the honor of God, and the pittifull God pardon me my sins. Then doe those other powre vpon them three buckets full of water, from the top of their heads to their feet, be their garments neuer so costly.

The Carouan^r having abode at Mecca fise dayes, the night before the euening of their Feast, the Capitaine with all his company, setteth forwards towards the Mountaine of Paradise, called Iabel Arafata, distant from Mecca fiseene miles. This Mountaine, or (small) Hill rather, is in compasse two miles, incircled round about with the goodliest Plaine that mans eye hath seen, and rhar Plaine compassed with high Mountains. Vpon the side towards Mecca, there are many pipes of cleare fresh water, wherewith the people refresh themselves and their cattell. Adam and Eue, when they were banished Paradise, after they had been separated fortie yeeres, one in Nubia, and the other in India (as you heard before) met at this pleasant place, and here inhabited and built a little house, which they call at this day Boyt-Adam, the house of Adam.

Hither come also the same day the other Carouans of Arabia and Damasco, and all the inhabitants for ten dayes iourney round about, so that at one time here is to be seene about two hundred thousand persons, and three hundred thousand cattell. Now all this company meeting together, the night before the Feast, the three Hostes cast themselves into a triangle, setting the Mountaine in the middlest, and fill Heauen and Earth with flourishing, singing, hallowing, gun-shot and fire-works all that night. The next day being their Feast, in silence they attend their sacrifices and prayers onely. And in the euening, they which have horses mount thereon, and approach as nigh vnto the Mountaine as they can: others make the best shift they can on foot, giuing euery vnto the Capitaine of Cairo the chiefe place, the second to the Capitaine of Damasco, and the third to the Capitaine of Arabia. And being all approached, there cometh one of the Santonies mounted on a Camell well furnished, who at the other side of the Mountaine ascendeth fise steps into a Pulpit made for that purpose, and there maketh a Sermon to the people. The Contents whereof, are the benefits which God hath bestowed on them deliuerance from Idolatrie, giuing them the house of Abraham and the Mountaine of Pardons: adding, that the mercifull God commanded his Secretary Abraham, to build him an house in Mecca, wherein his successeurs might be heard, at which time all the Mountaines in the world came together thither with sufficiency of stones for the building thereof, except that little low hill, which for povertie could not goe to discharge this debt: for the which it became forrowfull, and wept thirtie yeeres, at the end whereof God in compassion said vnto it, Weepe no more, my daughter, comfort thy selfe: I will call all those that goe to the house of my seruant Abraham, that they shall not be absolved from their sinnes, vnlesse they first come to doe thee reuerence, to keepe in this place their holie Feast. And this I have commanded to my people by the mouth of my friend and Prophet Mabomet. This said, he exhortheth them to the loue of God, to prayer, and almes. The Sermon ended, at the Sun-setting they make three prayers: first for the Serifs, second for the grand Signior, the third, for the people: to which prayers all with one voyce, cry Amm Al

going to the Mountaine of Pardons.

Alas, Amin la Alla; Be it so Lord. Barthema addeth to the Sermon the Cadi or Santoné's exhortation to weepe for their sinnes, and knocke their breasts, with inuocation of Abraham and Isaac, to pray for the people of the Prophet; and reporteth further, that there were killed on the first day more then thirtie thousand Rams, or Sheepe toward the West, and giuen to the poore; of which there were thirtie or fortie thousand. Thus hauing had the Santonés blessing, and saluted the Mountaine of Pardon, they returne the way they came, in the middest of which way, is a place called Mina: and a little from thence foure great Pillars, two on each side of the way. If any passe not thorow the middest of these, he loseth all the merit of his Pilgrimage. And from the Mount of Pardons till they be passed these pillars, none dare looke backward, for feare lest his sins, which he hath left in the Mountaine, returne to him againe.

Being past these Pillars, euery one lighteth downe, seeking in this sandie field fiftie or threescore little stones, which they binde in an handkerchiefe, and carry to that place of Mina, where they stay five dayes, because at that time there is a Fayre, free and franke of all custome. And in this place are other three Pillars not together, but set in diuers places. Monumentes of those three Appatitions, which the Deuill made to Abraham, an to Ismael his sonne: for they now a dayes make no mention of Isaac, as if he had neuer bene borne. They say, that when as Abraham at Gods command went to offer his sonne Ismael, the deuill deorted him from the same: but seeing his labour lost, he went to Ismael, and bid him pittie himselfe. But Ismael tooke vp stones and threw at him, saying, I defend me with God from the Deuill the offender. These words the Pilgrimes repeate in their visitation of these Pillars, iurling away the stones they had gathered. From hence halfe a mile is a Mountaine, whither Abraham went to sacrifice his sonne. In the same is a great den whither the Pilgrimes resort to make their prayers, and there is a great stone separated in the middest by the knife of Ismael (they say) at the time of this sacrifice. Barthema reporteth that heere at Mecca he saw two Vnicornes: which I mention, because since that time I haue not found ny Author which hath testified the like sight. They were sent to the Seriffo for a present by an Ethiopian King.

The Caronan departing from Medina, as soone as they come in sight thereof (they call the place The Mountaine of Health) they alight, and going vp the hill, shout with loud voyces and say, Prayer, and health be vnto thee, O Prophet of God, Prayer and health be vpon thee, O beloued of God. They proceed on their iourney; and lodge that night within three miles of Medina, and the next morning are receiued with solemnitie of the Gouernour, Medina is a Citie two miles in circuit, with faire houses of lime and stone, and a square Mosquita in the middest, lesse, but more sumptuous then that of Mecca. This is called Medina at Nabi, that is, the Citie of the Prophet; in Barthemas time, it contained about three hundred houses, and was very barren, one garden of Dates excepted: but now they haue ore of fruits. This Temple is square, an hundred paces in length, fourescore in breadth, hath in it an Ile made Arch-wile, supported with foure hundred Pillars, and supporting as he saith) three thousand Lampes. In one part of this Mosquita was a Librarie of fottie ue Mahumetall bookes. Also within the same (in a corner thereof) is a Tombe built vpon foure Pillars with a Vault, exceeding in height the Mosquita: being couered with lead, and the top all inameld with gold, and an halfe Moone vpon the top, wrought within erie artificially with gold. Below there are round about great yron flaires ascending vp to the middest of the Pillars, and in the middest lyeth buried the bodie of Mahumet (not in a yron chest attracted by a Adamant at Mecca, as some affirme.) Or to say the truth, neither here nor at Mecca can they shew this Seducers bodie. For the Captaine of that Carouan of Damasco, in which Barthema went on this Pilgrimage, offered to the chiefe Priest of that Mosquita, three thousand Saraffi of gold, to shew him the bodie of the Nabi or Prophet; but (saith he) being the onely cause of my comming. The Priest answered proudly: How an those eyes, wherewith thou hast committed so much euill in the world, see him by whom is the world hath created Heaven and Earth? The Captaine replied, True Sir, but doe me that fauour, to let me see his bodie, and I will presently plucke out mine eyes. The Priest answered, O Sir, I will tell you the truth. It is true, that our Prophet would die heere to giue a good example: for he might haue died at Mecca, but such was his humilitie for our instruction: and presently after hee was dead, he was carried by the Angels into heauen. And there (saith the Captaine) is Iesus Christ the Sonne of Marie? The Priest answered, At the request of Mahomet.

In the night time by some fire-workes in the steeple, they would haue gulled the credulous people with opinion of miracle, vsing out-cries in the night, saying, Mahomet would rise againe: and when the Mamalukes could see no such light shine forth of Mahomet's Tombe, as they rumoured, they said, It was because they were flaures, and weak in the faith, and could not see heauenly sights.

To returne to the discouery of this supposed Sepulchre :ouer the bodie they haue built a Tombe of speckled stone, a brace and halfe high, and ouer the same another of Legmens, four-square in manner of a Piramis. Round about the Sepulchre there hangeth a curtaine of filke, which hideth the Sepulture from their sight that stand wihour. Beyond this in the same Mosquita are other two Sepulchres of Fatma and Hali : (who yet, as some say, was buried at Masâdall, neere Cufa : others say, hee neuer died, but his comming is still expected.) The attendants on these Sepulchres are fiftie Eunuches, white and tawnie, of which, three onely of the eldest and best esteemed white Eunuches, may enter within the Tombe; which they doe twice a day to light the Lampes, and for other seruices. The other attend on the Mosquita, and those two other Sepulchres : Where euery one may goe and touch at his pleasure, and take of the earth for deuotion, as many doe. The Captaine with great pompe presenteth that Pyramid-like Vestment (whereof you haue heard) for the Tombe, the Eunuches taking away the old, and laying on the new : and after this, other vestures for the ornament of the Mosquita. And the people without deliuer vnto the Eunuches, each man somewhat to touch the Tombe therewith : which they keepe as a Relique with great deuotion.

Here is a stately Hospital built by Cassubi, or Rosa, the wife of great Saliman, richly rented, and nourishing many poore people. A mile from the Citie are certaine houses, in one of which they say Mahomet dwelt, hauing on euery side many Date-trees, amongst which there are two growing out of one stocke exceeding high, which their Prophet, forsooth, grafted with his owne hands. The fruit thereof is alway sent to Constantinople for a Present to the Grand-Signior, and is said to be the Blessed fruit of the Prophet. Allo there is a little Mosquita, wherein three places are counted holy. The first, they affirme their Prophet made his first prayer in, after hee knew God. The second is that, whither he went when he would see the house of Abraham. Where when he sate downe to that intent, the Mountaines opened from the top to the bottome, to shew him the house, and after closed againe as before. The third, is the midst of the Mosquita, where is a Tombe made of Lime and Stone foue square, and full of sand, wherein they say was buried that blessed Camell which Mahomet was alway wont to ride vpon. Euen still (as one Mr. Simons, a Merchant and beholder thereof reported to me) they haue a superstitious custome at Caïro, of carrying the leg of Mahomets Camell (as they affirme) in a Coach, the women in zeale of their blinde deuotion, hurling their Shaffes to recieue thence some holy and blessed touch, for their Mahumeticall edification : as the Papists ascribe no small holinesse to the touch of our Ladies Image at Loretto with their beades, or other implements of their superstition, as my friend Mr. Berkley, an eye-witnesse, hath told me. Maruell much we may, that the Souldiers which crucified Christ, and parted his garments by lot, and Iudas which kissed him, and the Deuill also which carried his bodie out of the wilderness, and set it on a pinacle of the Temple, did not from such holy touches acquire much holinesse. But here a good intent was wanting, which though the Mahumetans haue, yet a Camels leg is not so holy as our Ladies Image ; Grant it : but they pretend Tradition and Deuotion no lesse then these ; and otherwise, there is as little warrant for that house and Image of our Ladie that they are true, as of the other. Blessed VIRGIN! whom all generations call blessed, and iustly admire for that holinesse, which with thankfulness to God, and charitie to man, wee are to imitate ; then these stones and blockes should thus vlture thy name, and (in a worle sacriledge) diuine worship, yea more then those holes of diuine institution, which were so farre from conueying a holinesse by touching, that being themselves touched by any vnclane thing, they recieued thence infection of vnclanenesse. And if Christ himselfe should thus be honoured, where, in all the Christian world are such Vowes, Pilgrimages, and Deuotions in his name, as here to the supposed Ladie of Loretto ? As if they would rather be Marians then Christians in their Religion. But who brought vs now to Loretto ? Nay, who can but inreading the one, thinke of the other, both being frequented so generally in Pilgrimages, Offerings, and I know not what superstitions ? Onely in this is Loretto worse, that it abuse th more holy names of God, and his Saints, to like vnholly holies. But of this subiect, that Reuerend and learned Deane, Dr. Suckesse hath largely and learely written, both in confutation of that impious Pamphlet of Giffords Caluino-Turcismus, and plainly paraleling the Mahumetans and Turkes in verie many points of their Religions. To him I referre the industrious Reader. Yea, the verie Narration of the Saracenicall and Turkish Rites by vs in this Booke, shall bee sufficient to them which know the Popish, in many things to discern and acknowledge the Kindred, and like hellish descent both ; like Samsons Foxes, hauing their rayles knit together with fire-brands, which both fill and empyre the world with their flames ; howsoever their heads looke contrarie, one toward Christ, the other toward Mahomet. That which I speake of Popish, I vnderstand of that which our Aduersaries maintaine by authoritie (not from Scriptures, or the ancient Councils Counties and Fathers, but) from the Popes pretended Supremacie and visible Monarchie, as lead and Vice-God in the Church; the Alcoran; whereof is his Decretals; Extraneous, onfistorie, Constitutions, and such Canons as their holy Ghost sent from Rome in a boxe, lately numbered at Trent besides, and against the Canonickall Scripture, which holy men of God writ; they were moved by the holy Ghost. But let vs backe to Medina. On the other side of the Citie re the Tombs of the holy Mahumetaus, Abubacher, Ottoman, Omar, which Barsetia faith, were eried in the same Temple with Mahumet, and all vnder the earth. A daies journey from Medina is a steepe mountaine, hauing no passage but one narrow path, which was made by Isa: who fleeing from the pursuing Christians, and hauing no way of escape, drew out his word, and diuided this mountaine, and so saued his life. The Captaine at his returne to a Cairo, is with a sumptuous Feast receiued of the Basha, and presented with a garment of cloth of gold: he againe presenteth the Alcoran, out of the chest to the Basha to kisse, and then it is laid vp againe. By this time your pilgrimage hath more then wearied you, haue made bold to trouble you a little longer, with this argument of *Mahomet*s Meccern pilgrimage, out of the Maronites collection from Arabike Authors.

Mecca chiefe Citie of Arabia Deserta, is called also in the Alcoran, Becca, the holy Citie of the Moslemans, both for *Mahomet*s reuelations there had, and for the Temple especially, called by them Kabe, or, The Square House, which they fable, was first built by Angels, and ften visited by Adam himselfe: and lest it should bee destroyed by the Flood, was lifted vp to the sixth Heauen, called Dar-as-Salem (The habitation of peace) after the Flood, Abraham built another house like to the former, by the shadow thereof sent from heauen to him. Thus writeth Iacob Ben-Sidi Aali. This is a Chappell, not very large, of square figure, open with pure Gates, by one of which the Ministers haue access; the other are, opened but once in the yeere. It glittereth all with Gold, and is couered with velts of Gold, an encompassed with elegant Iron-works, to keepe off neere commers. No man may enter it but certaine Elders, which haue long beards to their breasts, and remaine there night and day. Neere to this Chappell is a large marble Floore adorned about with eight huge Lights, and fixe and thirtie lamps of Gold, perpetually burning. Three pathes leade thereto whereon men and women goe bare-foot to the Chappell, which they compass sixe times with great reuerence, mumbling their deuotions; kisse the corners, sigh and implore the aide of Abraham and Mohamed. Round about all this place is a stately building of very elegant structure, as it were a wall; in which are numbered sixteene principall Gates to goe in and out, where hang innumerable Lamps and Lights of incredible greatnesse. Within this space betwixt the reues of pillars are Shops of Sellers, of Gemmes, Spices, Silkes, in incredible store from India, Arabia, Ethiopia: that it seemes rather the Mart of the World, than a Temple. Here doe men kisse and embrace with great zeale a certaine stone, which they call Hagiar Al-Musad, or, The Blacke stone, which they say, is a Margarite of Paradise, the light whereof gaue lustre to all the Territorie of Mecca. Before this, faith Iacob Ben-Sidi Aali, Mohamed commanded to recepe, to aske God pardon for sinners, and to crie with sighs and teares for ayde against their enemies. After they haue visited that Chappell, and the Stone, they goe to another large Chappell within the Temple, where is the Well, called Zam Zam; which is (faith the said Author) the Well which flowed from the feet of Ismael, when hee was thirftie and wept: which Hagar first seeing, cried out Zam Zam, in the Coprite or old Egyptian Tongue; that is, Stay, stay. There are many which draw water thence and giue to the Pilgrimes, who are commanded to wash therewith their bodie and head three times to drinke thereof, and if they can, to aspie some of it with them, and to pray God for health and pardon of sinnes. To this building is added a Noble Schoole or Vniuersitie, A. H. 949. by Solyman who adorned it by his coits by marvellous structure, and endowed it with reuenues.

After these visitations, all the Pilgrimes goe to a certaine Temple on a Hill, ten miles from the Citie, and flocking in great numbers, buy according to their abilitie, one or more Rams or sacrifice. And because some are of opinion, that the Mohamedans haue no sacrifices, we will relate what Iacob Ben-Sidi Aali hath written of their ceremonies. Dhiabbiia (so the Arabs call a Sacrifice) is a killing of beasts in the worship, and for the offering of God, and they are Lambs of fixe or seuen moneths at least; Camels of five yeeres, Bullocks of two yeeres. The males are to be chosen before females, and those cleane, white, infected by no naturall or violent defect, fatie, corpulent, borneyed. Every man must kill his owne Sacrifices, and rippe them with his owne hands, except in urgent necessities, and then he may substitute others to doe it for him. For euery one before they eate any thing, are bound to eate some piece of the Sacrifice; the rest, if they can, to giue cheerefully to the poore. They which are admitted to these Oblations, let them offer one Ram for themselves, another for the soules of the Dead, another for Mohomed, that in the day of Iudgement be deliuer them from calamities. These Sacrifices are offered to God in imitation of Abraham, which would haue offered his sonne Ismael to God; who going out of the Citie with him to a certaine Hill, called Mecca, Whiles the Pilgrims are heere busied in their sacrifices, Beduine Arabs assault the Caravans, and robbing them, flee to the Hills, and inaccessible refuges, so swift as if they did flye. And although all Armes are forbid in the Territorie of Mecca (which containeth on the East sixe miles, on the North twelve, on the West eightene, on the South foure and twentie, in which respect Mecca & Medina are called Alsharamain) yet they cease not to infect, & Pilgrims are here forced to Armes. This Territorie is barren for want of water and raine, hath very few Herbs and Plants, or other pleasures of Groves, Gardens, Vines, or greene objects; but is roasted with the Sunne, both land and people. And this haply is the cause that no man may breake a bough if they finde any Tree. Medina is called The Citie by Antonomafia, and Medina Anabi, that is, The Citie of the prophet: because Mohamed, when he was forced to forsake his Countrey Mecca, betooke himselfe to this Citie, then called Lathreb, and was made Lord thereof. It is an error that he was borne here, for he was borne and brought vp at Mecca.

CHAP. VII.

Of the Successors of MAHOMET, of their different Sects, and of the dispersing of that Religion, through the World.

MAHOMET hauing with Word and Sword published his Alcoran (as you haue heard) his followers after his death succeeding in his place, succeeded him in tyrannie. Eubocar, surnamed Abdalla, undertooke the defence of that faithlesse Faith and Kingdome, and that (as his Predecessor had done) partly by subtiltie, partly by force. For when as Mahumets Disciples had buried their new Religion, with their old Master, except a few of his kindred, hee applied his wits to recall them; and whereas a Hali, Mahomets nearest kinsman and sonne-in-law disagreed from him, and was periwaded by the Jewes to professe himselfe a Prophet, with promise of their best aide and assistance: Eubocar (or Ebnur) reconciled him, and as the Arabian Chronicle witnesseth, converted many Infidels, and slue the gine-fayers. He reigned one yeere, and three moneths and thirteene dayes. The next successefull Aomar (saith the same Author, Leo b termeth him Hamur) ordained their prayers in the moneth Ramazan, and that the Alcoran should be read through, which he caused to be written out, and vntied in one booke: He conquered Egypt by Hanir his Captaine; after that Damasco, Ierusalem, Gaza, and a great part of Syria were lubdued. He reigned ten yeeres and fixe moneths. c Ozmen or Ozimen succeeded, and reigned twelue yeeres, and after him Hali; and next to him his sonne Alhacem; and then Moani the great Conquerour, &c. These foure Eubocar, Aomar, Ozimen, and Hali, are the foure great Doctors of the Mahumetan Law: and Mahomet before his death prophesied that they should succeed him, and of their worthinesse.

But as Mahomet had pretended the name of Gabriel, to the dreames of Sergius, and other Apostata's of the Christians and Jewes, disagreeing both with the truth and themselves: so it was not long, that this untimpered mortar would hold together these buildings. For the d Alcoran being (according to diuers Copies thereof) read diuersly, was cause of different Sects among them. Ozimen, to prevent the danger hereof, commanded that all the Copies of their Law should be brought and deliuered into the hands of Zendi and Abdalla: who who conferring their Copies, should make one booke, and where they differed, should read according to the Copie of Corais. Thus these two according to the Kings Edict, to flabish an vniformitie in the reading of the Alcoran, hauing out of all those Copies framed one to be Authentickall, burned all others. Yet were they deceived of their hopes, partly, because Hali, Abitalib, and Ibenmucod, would not bring in their bookes, of which that of Hali was the same which Mahomet had left, and was after by the Iewes altered, putting out and in at their pleasure: & partly, because that booke, which they had thus culled out of the rest, to remain Canonickal, was lost, & of the foure Copies which they had written therof, by fire & negligence al perished. Eletragig would haue vsed the like policie after; but this many-headed serpent, which could not in the shel be killed, much lesse in his riper growth could be reformed.

Those foure Doctors aforesaid, emulous of each other, intending their owne private ends, sowed the seeds then, which fructifie in their venomous multiplication till this day. * Hali or Halls was Author of the Sect & Imenia, which was embraced of the Persians, Indians, and of many Arabians, and the Gelbites of Africa. Ozimen, or Odmen, began the Sect Banckesa or Xesais, and hath in diuers Countries his followers. Homar founded the Anusia, followed of the Turkes, Syrians, and in Zahara in Afrike. Ebocar (otherwise called Ebnber, or Abubquer) taught the Sect Melchis, generally possessing Arabia and Africa. These are holden as saints in the Saracene Kalender, as Scaliger testifieth, who had one in Semiarabike and Persian, wherein ouer against the 27. of December was written, the death of Phetima (she was the daughter of Muhamed) God haue mercy on her. Against the 10. of January, the death of Aln-Soker; God haue mercy on him: and so of the rest. Against the 16. of Nouember, the beginning of the fast Caphar: so they call the Christians: & on the 25. of December, the birth of Iesus. On the 7. of January, the birth of Moser: Which I mention to shew what honor they ascribe to them or rather, that dishonor, which in this confusion of light with darknes, the Prince of darknes in the form of an Angel of light, doth vnto them. Fr6 these 4. in proces of time arose other s 68. sects of name, besides other pedling factions of smaller reckoning. Amongst the rest the Mahabites haue bin famous; liuing for the most part as Heremites, and professing a morall Philosophie, with principles different from the Alcoran, One of these not many yeers since, shewing he name of Mahomet in his breast (there imprinted with Aqua fortis or some such like matter) assailed by a great number of Arabians in Afrike, & laid siege to Tripolis: where being betrayed by one of his Capitaines, his skin was sent for a present to the grand Signior. These Mahabites affirm, that when Hali fought, he killed a 100000. Christians with one stroke of his sword, which was a 100. cubits in length. The Cobrim are a sect ridiculous. One of them shewed him selfe riding in the Country of Algier, on a Reed, reyned and bridled as a horse; much honoured, for that on this Horse, this Ass had (as he said) rid an 100. leagues in one night. R. Moset Egyptius h writeth of two Sects of Moors, the one called Seperatists, the other Intelligents. Seperatists, both followed in their opinions by many Iewes. These later were of opinion, that nothing in the world commeth to passe by chance or accident, neither in generall nor particular, but all are disposed by the will and intent of God, as well the fall of a leafe, as the death of a man. The Seperatists in a contrary extreme, allow to man and beast a fitedome, and that God rewardeth all creatures according to their merits or demerits: his providence extending it selfe to the fall of the leaues, to the way of the Ants: & if one be borne defective, it is better for him, then if he had bin perfect, and so if any aduersitie befall him; for his reward shall be the greater in the world to come: yea, the beast which is slaughtered, & the Ants, Fleas, & Loufe shall not lose his reward from the Creator: the Moufe also which hath not sinned, & killed of the Cat, shall there be recompensed. (Now beasts pray for their soules, and Fleas and Lice prey vpon their bodies which hatched this beastly loufe Diuinitie.) The Intelligents cleueeth, that it is conuenient that men be punished in this life, and for ever in hell, because the Creator would: the Seperatist thinketh that vniust; and that whatsoever is punished in this life, shall be rewarded in the next, because su. h is the Creators wisdom. Neither may we beleeue the Rabbins, who reciting s. diff. ring opinions concerning the providence of God: first, the Epicures, which exclude it wholly: secondly, of the Seperatists: fiftly, his own, which he attributeth to the law of Moser; that every man hath free-wil, and all good befalls him in reward, euil for punishment, & what measure any man meteth, shall be measured to him again: but for her creatures, beasts, plants, and their operations, as of a spider catching a fly, & the like, he tributeth with Aristotle vnto chance, & not to diuine providence, which he appropriateth in things below vnto man. These opinions he ascribeth; that of Aristotle to Iob, that of the Seperatists to Bildad, that of Elihu to the Intelligents, that of Elihu is the same with his own: & then let him with Elihu sacrifice to expiate it. I. Leo d. 3. writeth, that one Elihu had written a large of the Mahumetan sects: of which he reckoneh 72. principall (which agreeth with our former number) every one accounting his owne to be good and true, in which a man may attaine saluation. And yet Leo there addeth, that in this age there are not found about two. * One is that of Lebhar; which in all Turkie, Arabia and Africa is embraced: the other Imania, currant in Persia and Corofan (of which in his proper place more.) So that by Leo's iudgement, all which follow the rule Lebhar or Habhar, are Catholike Mahometans; although of these the same Author affirms, that in Cairo and all Egypt are foure Religions different from each other, in Spirituall or Ecclesiastical Ceremonies, and also concerning their Ciuilt and Canon Law; all founded on the Mahometan Scripture in times past, by foure learned men, diuersly continuing the generall rules to such particulars, as seemed to them fitter for their followers; who disagreeing in opinion, agree in affection, and converse together, without hatred or vbraiding each other. As for those other Sects, it seemeth that they are, for the most part, long since vanished: and those differences which remaine, consist rather in diuersitie of rule, and order of profession, then in differing Sects and Heresies of Religion: except in some few, which yet remaine, of which * Leo thus reporteth: Fourescore yeres after Mahomet, one Elhesenbnu Abulhasen gaue certaine rules to his Disciples, contri-e to the Alcoran principles, but writ nothing. About a hundred yeres after Elharit Ibnu Esed of Bagdad writ a booke vnto his Disciples, condemned by the Calipha and Canonists.

But about fourescore yeres after that, another great Clerke reuiued the same doctrine, and had many followers; yet hee and they were therefore condemned to death. But obtaining to haue triall of his opinions by disputation, he ouerthrew his Aduersaries, the Mahometane Lawyers: and the Califa fauoured the said Sect, and erected Monasteries for them. Their Sect continued, till Maltesab, of the Nation of the Turkes, persecuted the same. But twenty yeres after it was againe renewed, and one Elgaxxuli (a learned man) writ seuen bookes, reconciling these Sects: and the Lawyers together: which reconciliation continued till the coming of the Tartars: and Asia and Afrique was full of these Reformers of their Law.
In old time none but learned men might be admitted Professors hereof: but within these last hundred yeres euery ignorant Idiot professeth it, saying, That learning is not necessary, but * the holy Spirit doth reueale to them which haue cleane hearts, the knowledge of the truth. These contrary to the Alcoran sing loue-songs and dances, with some phantasticall ex-tacies: affirming themselves to be rauished of diuine loue. These are great gluttons: they may not marry, but are reputed Sodomites.

The same our Author writeth of some which teach, that by good workes, fasting, and abstinence, a man may attaine a Nature Angelicall, hauing his minde so purified that he cannot sinne, although he would. But he must first passe through fifty degrees of Discipline: And although he sinne before hee be past these fifty degrees, yet God doth not impute it to him.
These obsecute strange and inestimable Pasts, at the first; after they lue in all pleasures of the world. Their rule was written in foure volumes, by a learned and eloquent man, Essebrauer:
and by Ibnul-farid, another Author, in exact and most learned Verse. That the Spheres, Elements, Planets, and Starres, are one God, and that no Faith nor Law can be erroneous, because that all men (in their mindes) intend to worship that which is to bee worshipped. And they beleeue that the knowledge of God is contained in one man, who is called Elcorb, elected and partaker of God, and in knowledge as God. There are other forty men amongst them, called Elanied, that is, f Dunces, because of their lesse knowledge. When the Elcorb or Elcorb dyeth, his Successour is chosen out of these: and into that vacant place of the theologie, they chuse one out of another number of seuentie. They haue a third inferior number of a hundred threescore and fise (their Title I remember not) ou of which they chuse, when any of the threescore and tenne die. Their Law or Rule enioyneth them to wander through the World in manner of Fooles, or of great sinners, or of the vilest amongst men.
And vnder this cloke many are most wicked men, going naked without hiding their shame, and haue to deale with women in the open and common streets like beasts. Of this basest are many in Tunis, and farr more in Egypt, and most of all in Cairo. I my selfe (saith our Author) in Cairo, in the street called Bain Eleafraim, saw one of them with mine eyes, take a beautifull Dame coming out of the Bath, and laid her downe in the middle of the street, and carnally knew her, and presently when hee had left the woman, all the people ranne to touch her clother, because a holy man had touched them. And they said, that this Saint de-merited to doe a sinne, but that hee did it not. Her husband knowing of it, reckoned it a rare fauour and blessing of God, and made solemne feasting and gaue almes for that cause. But the Iudges, which would haue punished him for the same, were like to bee slaine of the rude multitude: who haue them in great reputation of sanctitie, and euery day giue them gifts and presents.

There are another sort that may be termed Caballists: which fast strangely, nor doe they eate the flesh of any creature, but haue certaine meates ordained and appointed for euery houre of the day and night, and certain particular praies, according to the dayes and month

numbring their said Prayers : and vse to carry vpon them some square things, painted with Characters and Numbers. They affirme, that the good Spirits appeare, and acquaint them with the sayres of the world. An excellent Doctor, named Boni, framed their rule and prayers, and how to make their squares; and it seemeth to me (who haue scene the worke) to be more Magicall then Cabalisticall. One booke sheweth their prayers and sayings: the second, their square: the third, the vertue of the fourescore and nineteene names of G o d, which I saw in the hand of a Venetian Iew at Rome. There is another rule in these Sects, called Sumach, of certaine Hermites which liue in Woods, and solitary places, feeding on nothing but herbs and wilde fruites, and none can particularly know their life, because of this solitarie life. Thus saith Leo.

Beniamin Tudelenfis is telleth of a Nation, neere to Mount Libanus, which hee calleth Hbassifin, which varied from the ordinary sort of Ismaelites, and folloved a peculiar Prophet of their owne, whose word they obeyed, whether for life or for death: They called him Hheich al Hbassifin: his abode was at Kamos. They were a terror to all about them, saving asunder euen the Kings if they tooke any. They warred with the Franks (the Christians which then held Ierusalem) and the King of Tripolis. Their dominion extended eight dayes iourney. Zachamb mentioneth one Baba, which about the 630. yeere of the Hegira, fained himselfe a Prophet sent of God, vnder which colour hee gathered together a great Armie, wherewith he filled all Asia with slaughter and spoile, slaying Christians and Ismaelites without difference: till Giatbeddin King of Gunia, ouerthrew and destroyed him and his Host.

Besides the former; they haue other Heremites of another sort; one is mentioned by Leo, who had five hundred Horse, a hundred thousand Sheepe, two hundred Beeces, and of offerings and almes, betwixt foure and five thousand Duckets, his fame grew in Asia and Africke, his Disciples many, and five hundred people dwelling with him at his charges; to whom he enioyneth no penance, nor any thing: but giueth them certaine names of God, and biddeth them with the same to pray vnto him so many times a day. When they haue learned this, they retume home; he hath a hundred Tents for strangers, his Cattell, and Family: hee hath foure wines, besides slaues, and (by them) many children sumptuously apparelled. His fame is such, that the King of Telenfis is afraide of him: and he payeth nothing to any: such veneration haue they towards him, reputed him a Saint. Leo saith, hee spake with him, and that this Heremite shewed him Magicke-bookes, and he thought that this his great estimation did come, by false working of the true science; so the Heremite termed Magicke.

But these Heremites we cannot so well reckon a Sect, as a Religious Order; of which sort there are diuers in these Mahumetane Nations, as in our ensuing discourse shall appeare: To retume therefore to the consideration of the meanes vsed to preuent the varietie of Sects among them: The Caliphs sought to remedie these inconueniences by their best policie.

Mouais, about the yeere of our Lord 770. assembled a generall Councell of their learned men to consult about an Vniformity; but they disagreeing among themselves, hee chose six men of the most learned, and shut them vp in a house together with their Scriptures, commanding them that out of those Copies disagreeing (as you haue heard) they should chuse that should seeme best. These reduced the Doctrine of Mahomes into six bookes; forbidding any on paine of death to speake or write otherwise of their Law. But because the Arabians of Iubele and piercing wit, which studied Philosophy in the Vniuersities of Bagdet, Morocco, Cordous, and other places, could not but spee and discern the mad folly of the law, so palpable to any reasonable iudgement: It was therefore ordained, that the Philosophy Lecture should be taken away, and in place thereof they should read the Alcoran; providing for all these Students of their Law, their expences out of the publike charge, and inhibiting all further studie in Philosophy: inasmuch that they now (saith our Author, who himselfe was a Student in that Vniuersity) repute him not a good Saracen, who is addicted to that studie. This Frier Richard mentioneth another Prophet, named Solem, had in estimation with these Babylonians, which was after slaine by the Tartars. He and Cardinal Casana affirme, that the Saracens of the East differ in their Alcoran from those of the West, making the first five Chapters but one; and that they differ in the exposition thereof, and in the same Schooles or Vniuersities, one Sect condemneth another.

But in these times the Mahumetane Professors are chiefly distinguished by the seuerall Nations, of which are foure principall: the Arabians, Persians, Turkes, and Tartars (to which wee may adde the Mogore, as a fifth; whom the Iesuites, in their Epistles, report to haue from his former Mahumetisme, and to incline to Gentilisme.) Of all these, the Arabians are most zealous in their superstition; the Persians most agree to Reason and Nature; the Tartars are more Heathenish and simple, the Turkes are the freest and most Martiall. The Arabians account it their peculiar glory, that Mahumer was of that Nation, and that Mecca and Medina are there seated: and therefore haue laboured in the dayes of their former puissance by the sword; since, by their traffique and preaching, to spread their Mahumetisme through the World. Their first Seducers had possessed Syria and Palestina: Homar had added Egypt, and in a short time their Successors had prevailed in Asia, Africke, and Europe, as we have before shewed. All Mahumetans are called by vs Saracens, which Erpenius in his Annotations on his Ioseph, saith, is a name to them unknowne (so is China to the Chinois, Peru, to the Peruvians, &c.) but given them by others. They call themselves Muslimos, or Muslemans, of a word which signifieth Beleueers (as one would say in their sense, Catholike and Orthodoxe beleueers.)

They have bene such in Armes: and in diligence of Preaching they have bene as forward, and so continue. Seven hundred yeeres since, Perimal reigning in Malabar; they there sowed their Tares: and the more easily to take those Ethnikes in their net, they tooke their daughters in marriage; a matter of much consequence, in regard of their wealth, and practised of them to this day. They were Authors of great gaine vnto them by their trades and traffique for Spiety: and were suffered to inhabit, and plant Colonies amongst them. By their meanes, Calicut, of a small thing, became a great and rich Citie. And Perimal himselfe was perueried by them to their faith: who zealously inclined to their persuasions, resolved to end his dayes at Mecca, and put himselfe on the voyage, with some ships of Pepper, and other things of price, but perished by tempest in the way. From Malabar they passed to the Maldiu, and Zeilan, Somatra, Iava, Molucca, the Philippinaes, and in the Continent to Cambaia, Bengala, Siam, Malucca, Ior, Pam, and the huge Kingdome of China, preaching and planting their superstitions, as in the particular Histories of these Nations shall further appeare. They are in this respect so zealous, that euen the Arabian Mariners will stay behinde in the Countries of the Ethnikes, there to diuulge this their Sect: and in the yeere 1555, one of them pierced as farre as Iapon, there to haue laied their Leauen: but the Portugalls in these Easterne parts, treading in the same steps, by their traffique and preachings, haue much hindered their proceedings. The Tartars, Persians, and Turkes, require longer and severall discourses in their due place; and first, we will speake of them which are first in this ranke, the greatest of all Mahumetane States, the Turkes.

CHAP. VIII.

Of the Turkish Name, and first Originall.

Though some may thinke, that I have bene so tedious, in the relation of the Mahumetian opinions and superstitions, that, to speake any thing more, would seeme but as powring water into a full Sea: Yet, because there is in this World nothing certaine, but vncertaintie; it being diuine prerogative to be yesterday, to day, the same for euer: and that this Saracenicall Religion hath sustained her chances and changes, according to the diuersitie of times and places where it is and hath bene professed: so doe I hold it fit, as wee haue seene the foundation, to behold also the frames and fabriques thereon builded, and from that Foundation (or sinke-hole rather) of superstition, to lead you along the gutters and streames thence denued. And because the Turkes are preminent in all those things, which this profession accounteth eminent, it is meetest to giue them the first place heere, which elsewhere I take it: and after we haue set downe a briefe Historie of that Nation, and the proceedings of their state, to ascribe their theorie and opinions, and then their practice and rites of Religion. But before we come to the discouerie of their Religion, it is not amisse to search the beginning and increase of this Nation.

The name of Turkes signifies (saith Chitrenus) Shepheards, or Heard-men: and such it seemeth was their ancient profession, as of the rest of the Scythians vnto this day. Nicophorus (and before him Simocatta, from whom Nicophorus borroweth it) speaketh of the Turkes, and placeth them about Bactria: their chiefe Citie he calleth Taugast, which is supposed to be the worke of Alexander. Their Religion, hee saith, at that time was to worship the Fire, Aire, Water, and Earth, which they adore, and sing Hymnes to. They acknowledge God the maker of Heauen and Earth, to whom they sacrifice Horfe, Kine, and Sheepe: they haue Priests which diuine things to come. The Prince of Taugast, they called the sonne of

of God: They worship Images. The Prince spendeth the night with seven hundred women. The Tartars have now possessed the same Countrey; but long before, the same rites, as you may read in our Historie of them. To derive them (as some doe) from Trojans and Lewes, is somewhat farre fetched: nor is there much likelihood that they should receive their name of Turca a Persian Citie: the name is ancient, and applied by Mela and Plinie to a Nation of the Scythians, and their original is accounted Scythian by the most and best Authors. Benjamin Tudelensis calleth them alway by the name Targama. There are which bring a long Genealogie from Noahs Arke, vnto the Ottoman Family: herein disagreeing, while some will haue Magog, others Tubal the Author of their Nation. Leunclavius reciteth and refuteth the same. He writeth the name Turki, alleging Herodotus for his Author: and citeth many Authors to proue, that they descended of the Vnni or Vngri, which were called Turkes, of which there were two sorts, one Westerly in Pannonia, another Easterly neere Persia, called by the Persians Magores, he concludeth, that the Vnni or Turchi came from Iuchra or Iuchria (whence the name Iuchri might easily be deflected to Iurchi) beyond Tanais; and first after they had forsaken their owne Countrey, settled themselves neere Mecotis, from whence they passed to Chazaria, and some went Westward to Pannonia, some Eastward to Armenia, and thence into Persia.

Many probable Arguments might bee brought, to proue that they descended of the Scythians, whose wandering shepheardly-life, both the name, and their practise (in old times, and in some places still) expresseth. The first Expedition and militarie employment, which I haue read of the Turkes, (except what the feare of them compelled the Persians vnto, as in their Historie we shall after see) was vnder Caramus a rebellious Persian, about a thousand yeeres since, when Cosroes was King of Persia, and Mauritius the Roman Emperour: at what time many of them were slaine, and many taken, which confessed, that famine had forced them to those warres, for which cause they marked themselves with a blacke Crosse; a Ceremonie which they said they had learned of the Christians, thinking thereby to expell hunger. This hungrie Nation hath since bene a greedie and insatiat deuourer of Nations. Another expedition of theirs (which some reckon the first) was in the yeere 755. or after another account 844. at which time, passing through the Georgian Countrey, then called Iberia, they first seized on a part of the greater Armenia, which their posteritie holdeth at this day, called of them Turcomania. In this wide and spacious Countrey they romed vp and downe, without certaine habitation, a long time with their Families and Herds of cattell, like the ancient Scythian Nomades; and the Tartars, and the same Turcoman Nation at this day. Their language also, as Megiserus in his Turkish Grammar sheweth, hath great affinity, with the Tartarian, as also with the Persian (neere whom, and sometimes, as now will appeare, amongst them, they liued.) But from the Arabike it differeth altogether. Yet in their holies they most vse the Arabike, by reason of the Alcoran written in that language: Likewise they vse the Arabike Letters and Pricks. The beginning of their greatnesse is thus by Christian Historians related.

Of the Turkish Kingdome in Persia, and their other Conquests.

When as the Saracens Empire grew now vnweldie, through her owne greatnesse, and the Soldans, which were wont to conquer for the Chaliph, began now to share with him in his large Dominion: Mahomet (then Sultan, or Soldan of Persia) was for this cause hardly beset with the Chaliph of Babylon, assailed also on the other side by the Indians. He sought to strengthen himselfe against these enemies, with the new friendship of these Turkes, of whom he obtained for his aide three thousand hardie Souldiers, vnder the conduct of Togra Muculet, the sonne of Mikeil, a valiant Captaine, and chiefe of the Selzuccian Tribe or Familie, whom the Greekes commonly call Tangrolipix, and some Seldae, or Sadoe. By the helpe of this Tangrolipix Mahomet the Persian Sultan ouercame Pisafuris the Caliph. The Turkes, after this warre, desiring leaue to passe ouer the River Araxis to their Countrey-men, were both denied, and threatened, if they againe should seeke to depart. Whereupon they withdrew themselves into the Desert of Caramania; liuing there, and thence making roades into the Countreies adioyning. Mahomet sent against them twentie thousand men, which by a sudden surprize in the night, Tangrolipix defeated, and furnished himselfe with their spoiles. And now durst Tangrolipix shew his face in the field, where his Armie was increased by the resort of lawlesse perious, seeking after spoile. Mahomet on the other side, impatient of his losse, put out the eyes of the Captaines, which had the leading of the Armie, and threatned to attire the Souldiers, that had fled, in womens apparell; and raising another great Armie, set forward against Tangrolpiz, who was now fiftie thousand strong, and was presently made stronger by those threatened Souldiers, who fled from their Lord vnto him. They met at Isfahan (a Citie of Persia) and there Mahomet falling with his Horse, brake his necke: vpon which mischance both Armies comming to agreement, by common consent proclaimed Tangrolpiz Sultan in his stead; and so made him King of Persia, and the Dominion thereunto pertaining, which was done Anno 1030.

b Tangrolpiz first Sultan amongst the Turkes. An. De. 1030. Some call him Tangrolpiz and some Tancrolpiz.

Tangrolpiz opened the passages of Araxis to the rest of his Countie-men, whom hee exalted to the highest places of command, so bridling the Persians; and he and his receiuing in their new Conquests the yoke of the Mahumetan Religion. Ambition inciting him to further exploits, he warred also vpon Pisaftria the Chaliph: and after diuers overthrowes, slew him, and seized on his state. Hee sent Cutlu-Muser his Kinsman against the Arabians; by whom hee was discomfited: whercat aggrieved, hee went against them himselfe, but with like success. Hee sent Asan his brothers sonne to inuade Media, who in that enterprize was slaine: he sent againe Habraime Alim his brother, with an Armie of an hundred thousand men, who tooke prisoner Liparime Gouvernour of Iberia (who came to aide the Emperours Lieutenant in Media) whom Tangrolpiz frankly set free, and sent his Embassadour to the Emperour, proudly demanding him to become his subiect.

c Khalles Turkeish Historie. G. 7. 7. sec. sup. l. 2. c. vll.

Such hopes, and such hopes had Tangrolpiz, the seld Turke that ever was honoured with a Diademe. His sonne, and successeur Axan tooke Diogenes the Emperour of Constantinople prisoner in the field: But Cutlu-Muser, with his Cousin Melech (who in his Fathers dayes had fled into Arabia) rebelling and taking armes against him; as Axan was ready to ioyne battell with them, the Caliph (who retained the highest place still in their superstition, although dispoyled of his Temporalities) setting aside all his Pontifical formalitie, whereby he was bound not to goe out of his owne houle, thrust himselfe betwene these Armies: and with the reuerence of his place, and person, together with his perswasions, moued them to desist, and to stand to his arbitrement: which was, that Axan the Sultan should still enjoy his Dominions entirely: And that Cutlu-Muser, and his sonnes aided by him, should inuade the Constantinopolitan Empire, and should be absolute, and onely Lords of whatsoever they could gaine thereof. There was neuer any thing to that impietie more commodious, nor to our Religion more dangerous. For by this meanes Cutlu-Muser, with his sonnes in a short time conquered all Media, with a great part of Armenia, Cappadacia, Pontus, and Bithynia; which their designs were much furthered, by treasons and dissensions in the Greeke Empire. Axan the Sultan also gaue to his Kinsman Ducat and Malech, the gouernement of Aleppo, and Damasco, with the adioyning parts of Syria, by that meanes to encroach vpon the Egyptian Caliph, which accordingly they in short time did.

d The memorable Expedition of the Christian Princes into the holy Land. Historia belli sacri G. 7. 7. and many others write at large of these warres: vide Gesta Dei per Francos, see also sup. l. 2. vll.

But these their haughtie attempts were stayed, and being now in the flower, were cut shorter by that fortunate Expedition of the Christian Princes of the West, agreed vpon at the Councell of Claremont, and performed by Gualter Sensauer, Peter the Hermite, first and principall mouer hereof; Godfrey, Duke of Lorraine, with his two brethren Eustace and Baldwin, of the honourable house of Buillon; Hugh, surnamed the Great, brother to Philip the French King; Raymond and Robert, Earles of Flanders; Robert of Normandie, sonne to William the Conquerour; Stephen de Valois, Earle of Chartiers; Ademar the Popes Legate; Bohemund Prince of Tarentum, and others, conducting, as the most receiued opinion is, three hundred thousand Souldiers, in defence of the Christian Faith, against the Turkes and Saracens, which both ouerthrew the Turkes in the Iesser Asia, and recovered also the holy Land, The Principalltie, or (as some like it) the Kingdome of Antioch was giuen him by common consent to Bohemund Prince of Tarentum; the Kingdome of Ierusalem, to Robert: who (hearing of his Fathers death) refused it, in hope of England; and Godfrey of Buillon was saluted King.

The Turkes and Saracens, seeking to recover that which they had lost, lost also themselves; a hundred thousand of them being slaine in one battell: the like success had the Turkes after against Comrade the Emperour, at Meander: leaving for trophies and triumphall arches to the Christians, huge heapes, or hills rather, of their bones. Hereunto helped the dissensions among the Turkes, and diuisions of their state among diuers brethren. The Egyptians also paid tribute to the Christians: which Dargan the Sultan detaining, hee was by Almericus, the King of Ierusalem ouerthrowne in battell. Noradine the Turke, King of Damasco, sent thither also Saracen to aide Samar the Sultan (before expelled) to recover his state from this Dargan: but hee hauing won certaine Townes, kept them to himselfe, so that Samar betooke him to the patronage of Almericus, who ouerthrew Saracen in battell, and after besieged and tooke Alexandria, and Pelusium, seeking also to conquer Egypt to himselfe.

selfe: but indeed (as the euent proued) so subuerted his owne state. For Sanar sought helpe of Saracoon, and for feare of both their forces, Americus left Egypt. Saracoon, moued with ambition, treacherously slew the Sultan, and by the Caliph was appointed Sultan, the first of the Turkes that euer enioyed the same, to whom Saladine his Nephew succeeded. Hee (not expecting the Maiestie of the Caliph, as the Sultans before had done) stricke out his braimes with his Horse-mans Mace, and rooted out all his posteritie; the better to assure himselfe, and his Turkish successours in the possession of that Kingdome, vnder whom it continued to he time of the Mamalukes. Novadine also the Turke being dead, the Nobilitie disdaining he gouernement of Melchysala his sonne (yet but a youth) betrayed * that state vnto Saladine. And thus did he hem in the Kingdome of Ierusalem on both sides: and not long after, Aleppo was betrayed vnchristianly into his hands by a traitor, which gouerned the same for the Christians: Neither was it long, before he had (through discord and treson amongst the Christians) obtained † Ierusalem it selfe, Anno 1187. and after Ascalon, and Antioch also: Neither could the Christians of the West euer recouer the possession of that Kingdome; the cause continuing the same, which before had lost it, viz. dissension and treacherie, as the examples of Richard and Edward (first of those names) Kings of this Land doe shew.

About 1202. yeeres after Christ, the Tartars (of whom in their due place) hauing conquered East, West, North, and South, among others, ouerthrew that Togrian Kingdome of the Turkes in Persia, one hundred and seuentie yeeres before founded by Tangroltipis. The Turkes which remained (driven to seeke shelter from this violent storme) fled out of Persia into Asia the lesse: where Cutlu-Musur his successours (their Country-men) enioyed some part of the Countrey. And there many of them arriuing vnder the conduct of Aladin, the sonne of Cei Huseyn, descended also of the Selzuccian Family in Persia, taking the opportunitee offered by the discord of the Latines, with the Greekes, and the Greekes among themselves, seized vpon Cilicia, with the Countreies thereabout: and there first at Sebastia, and afterward at Iconium, erected their new Kingdome, bearing the name of the Aladin & Kings or Sultans.

The Tartars, vnder the conduct of Haalon, sent by Mango the great Cham, hauing conquered and starued the Chaliph of Babylon (as is before) ouerthrew the Turkish Kingdome of Damasco, and razed † Aleppo; the other arme of this faire and farr spreading Tree, being surprized by the Mamaluke slaues, who after Haalon's departure, recouered Syria and Palzstina, and were againe with great slaughter dispossessed of the same by Cassanes: a Tartarian Prince, who repaired Ierusalem, and gaue it to the Christians of Armenia, and other the Easterne Countreies. But Cassanes retyring into Persia to pacifie new broiles, the Sultan recouered the same; the Christians of the West neglecting the iust defence thereof, specially through the pride and contention of Boniface the Pope (contrarie to his name) filling a great part of Europe with faction and quarrells.

Of the Ottoman Turkes, their originall and proceedings.

THe Turkes in Asia paid tribute to the Tartar Cham, till (succession in the blood of Aladin failing) this Kingdome was diuersly rent, euery one catching so much as his might could bestow on his ambition. The greatest of these sharers was * one Caraman Almusius, who tooke vnto himselfe the Citie Iconium, with all the Countrey of Cilicia, and some part of the frontiers of Lycania, Pamphylia, Caria, and the greater Phrygia, as farre as Philadelpia: all which was after him called Caramania. Next neighbour and sharer to him was Saruchan: of whom Ionia Maritima is called Saruchaniti. The greatest part of Lydia, with some part of the greater Mylia, Troas, and Phrygia fell to Caraman, called of him Caramaniti: some part of Pontus, and the Countrey of Paphlagonia fell to the sonnes of Omer, which Countrey is called Bolli. These all were of the Selzuccian Family. But the foundations of farre higher fortunes, were then laid much lower by diuine providence, exalting Ottoman of the Oguzian Tribe or Family, who then held one onely poore Lordship, called Suguta in Bythinia, not farre from Olympus, giuen before to his father Erbogrus in need of good seruice: which he increasing, by winning somewhat from the weaker Christians his neighbours, afterwards erected into a Kingdome, which hath deuoured to great a part of the world, as is at this day subiect to the Turkish greatnesse. When the Tartars chafed (as is laid) the Turkes out of their Persian Kingdome, which Tangroltipis had there established, one Solyman a Turke (of the Oguzian Tribe) reigned in Machan † ouer a small small Realme, which for feare of those Tartars he also forsooke, and with a thousand of his people, fled, and seated himselfe in a part of Armenia, about Erzerum; and after, upon some better hopes, resolved to returne againe into Persia, but in seeking to passe the Riuer Euphrates, was drowned, and his followers disperfed, following their ancient Trade of wandering Herd-men. Hee left behinde him foure sonnes, Tencur-Teken, Isudogdis, Ertogral, the father of Ottoman, and Dunder. The two eldest returned into Persia. The two youngest staid, and with them foure hundred Families, with their Tent and Carts, their moueable Houses. And insinuating into the Sultan Aladin good liking, by sute and desert, this Ertogral was rewarded, as yee haue heard, being made Lord of Suguta, and Warden of those Marches: and liued there in securitie, till he was of great yeeres, and had scene much alteration in that state. He died Anno 1289. hauing liued ninetie three yeeres. And him succeeded by common consent, as Lord ouer the Oguzian Turkes, his sonne Ottoman, slouted therefore by the name of Osman Beg, or Lord Osman. Hee first got into his subiection a great part of the Castles and Forts of the greater Phrygia; equally protecting his Subiects, both Christians and Turkes: he conquered Nice, the name whereof is reuerend for the first Generall Councell of Christendome; and Aladin the second, Sultan of Iconium, sent vnto him a faire Ensigne, a Sword and Robe, with ample Charters, that whatsoever he tooke from the Christians, should be his owne: and that publike prayers should be said in their Temples for his health, which was of him humbly accepted, and such prayers made by one Dursu, whom hee had appointed Bishop and Iudge of Carachiser, Anno 1300. Neapolis was made his seat Royall. Hee sithed so well in the troubled streame of the Greeke Empire, that hee subdued the most part of Phrygia, Mysia, and Bythinia; and Prusa after a long siege was yielded vnto his sonne Orchanes, and made the Royall seat of the Ottoman-Kings, where Ottoman himselfe was buried 1328. His sonne Orchanes succeeded: Aladin his brother contenting himselfe with a priuate life, who after built two Mahumetan Churches, and another at Prusa. Orchanes also erected in Nice a sumptuous Temple, appointing a Preacher to presch to the people every Friday, and two faire Abbies: in the one of which, hee with his owne hands serued the sitangers and poore the first dinner. Hee was the first that builded Abbies among the Turkes, followed herein by most of his Successours. Hee got Nicomedia, and the Towne adjoining. He also wonne all Charafia, and at his returne built a Church and Abbey at Prusa, placing therein religious men, sought out with all diligence. His sonne Solyman, first of the Turkes that had possessed any foot in Europe, crossed the Hellespont, and wanne the Castle Zemenic, and after that Madimus, receptacles for the Turkes, which came ouer in multitudes, hee transporing Christians into Asia, to dwell in their room. And after, hee in Gallipoli, spoiling the Countie, and winning from the Greekes, who were negligent in preventing or remedying this danger. But Solyman dying with a fall, his old father Orchanes liued not two moneths after. A Prince very zealous in his superstition, who besides building diuers Churches, Abbies, Colledges, and Cells, allowed Pensions to all such as could in the Church pay the booke of Mahomet's law by heart, and competent maintenance to the Iudges that they should not sell iustice.

Amurath f, which succeeded, exceeded him in his blind zeale. Hee kept in awe the Turkish Princes in Asia, and wanne many Townes and Castles in Thracia: and amongst others, Adrianople the seat Royall of the Turkish Kingdome, vntill Constantinople was after subdued. This was done 1362. Hee ordained, that euery fifth captiue of the Christians, about fiftene yeeres old, should bee taken vp for the Turkish King, which were distributed among the Turkish hul-bandmen in Asia, to learne the Turkish Language, Religion, and Manners; and after two or three yeeres, choice was made of the better sort, to attend vpon the Princes person, and for his warres, called Janizars, that is, new Souldiers: which Order after grew to great account, and is yet a principall pillar of the Turkish greatnesse. Hee overthrew Aladin the Caramanian King, which made the other Princes of the Selzuecan Family to submit themselves vnto him. And buying himselfe in his new Conquests in Europe, after a great victorie obtained against Lazarus, Despot of Seruia, as he viewed the flaine carcases, was slaine of a wounded and halfe-dead Souldier; who comming staggering (as it were) to beg his life, stabbed this great Conqueror, with a dagger, hidden vnder his garments. Bainazet h his sonne and successour, oppressed most of the Mahumetan Princes in Asia, inuaded Valachia, besieged Constantinople eight yeeres, ouerthrew the King of Hungarie in battell, subdued the Caramanian Kingdome, and amidst his aspiring fortunes, is by Tamurlane deprived of his Kingdome and libertie, shut vp and carried about in an yron Cage; against the barres whereof he beat out his braines, Anno 1399. Mahomet his sonne (after much warre with his brethren) wholly possesseth the Ottoman Kingdome; both in Europe and Asia, almost quite overthrowne before by Tamerlane. Hee tooke the Caraimanian King, and his sonne Mustapha prisoner, who became his Vassalls, as did also the Valachian Prince; he died 1422. Amurath his successor winneth Thessalonica, the greatest part of Ætolia, inforceeth the Princes of Athens, Phocis, and Beotia, to become his Tributaries, oppresseth the Mahumetan Princes of Asia, subdueth Serua, spoileth Hungarie. Hee after retired himselfe to a Monastick life in a Monastier, which yet the affairs of State forced him to leaue againe. ^m Hee invading Epirus, at the siege of Croia dyed, 1450.

Mahomet ^a was there saluted Sultan in the field, a man equally vnequall and troublesome to the Christian and Mahumetan Princes. Hee wanne Constantinople the twer tieth of May, 1453. the taking whereof, is by Leonardus Chienji, ^a declared in a Treatise composed of that rhappie argument, and likewise by Cardinall ^e Isidorus Ruthenus. Hee wanne Trabezond, the Imperiall seat of another Christian Empire, 9 Anno 1460. Hence hee was called Empeour (a name not giuen to the Turkish Kings.) He burnt Athens, Anno 1452. Hee obtained Epirus and Myfia, Anno 1436. and did much harme against the Soldan and Mamalukes. He conquered Eubæa and Illyricum, in the yeere 1474. overthrowne the Persians; and in the last part of his bloodie life, he tooke (by Achmetus his Captaine) Otranto or Hydruntum in Italy, with no small terror to all Italy. Hee was fir-named Great, and is said to haue conquered wo hundred Cities, twelue Kingdomes, and two Empires: which he left to Baiazet his sonne, Anno 1481. His other sonne Zemes was forced to flee into Italy, where a great summe of money ^v was yeerely allowed the Pope to keepe him for his owne securitie, and for loue of his brother, whom Alexander the Bishop is reported ^f to payson, as some thinke, by composition with the grand Seignior. He had some warres against the Mamalukes, some against the Christians, more vnnatural against his brother, but most vnnatural and monstrous against his sonne Selym. His conquests were in Cilicia, Caramania, and Peloponnesus.

Selym, not content to haue thrust his father out of the Throne, aspired to a further effect of aspiring ambition, depriving him of life, from whom himselfe had receiued it. To this end he corrupted a Jew, Baiazeus Physician (whom Knolles calleth Hamon; but ^a Menasino, an ye-witnesse, nameth him Yfarabi) who with the powder of beaten Diamonds paysoned him; and for reward, when hee claymed Selym promise, had his head stricken off in the Tyrants preference. So much did he hate the Traytor, whose treason he so much loued. The body of Baiazet was embalmed, and interred at Constantinople, in a beautilfull Sepulchre, neere to he Mesehit, which himselfe had built, and Priests were appointed, which should eury day pray for his soule. Two of his Pages did Selym put to death, for wearing blacke and mourning apparell for their Masters death: and three others (whereof Menasino was one) hardly, by intreatie of Selym daughters, and some Bishops, escaped.

This Viper, that spared not his father, proceeded with bloodie hands to make an end of he rest of his Ottoman-kindred, beginning with five sonnes of his brethren, and adding the emnant, as hee could bring them into his power. And hauing thus founded his Throne in bloodie cruelties of his owne at home, no maruell if abroad his proceedings were no lesse cruell and bloodie towards his enemies. Of whom, the first which offered himselfe (after his domestick warres appeased) was Ismael the ^a Sophie: who with thirtie thousand Persian horse-men gaue battell to Selym (notwithstanding his three hundred thousand Turks) where was fought in Armenia, neere Coy, a terrible and mortall battell betwixt them: the Turks it last (very hardly) prevailing, by helpe of their great Ordnance: but so little cause had they to reioyce of their victorie, that this is reckoned among the dismall and disastrous dayes, termed by the Turks, The onely day of Doome. The next ^a yeere he entred againe into the Perian Confinnes, and there tooke Ciamassum, overthrowne Aladenles, the Mountaine King, who aigned in Taurus and Aniurus, and slew him. But his most fortunate attempts were against Campson Camrus, the Egyptian Soldan, and his forces of Mamalukes, whom by his multitudes notwithstanding their fame and valour, not inferiour to any Souldiours of the world) hee overcame; the Soldan himselfe being left dead in the place, August. 7. 1516.

Neither had Tummebeius his Successor any better success, but succeeded as wel in his fortune, as to his Scepter, who by treason of his owne, and power of his enemy, lost both his life and Kingdome all Egypt and Syria thereby accrewing to the Ottoman, Selym from thenceforth purposing to turne his forces from the Sunne-rising against the Christians in the West, came to his owne Sunne-set, the period of his raigne and life: a miserable disease (as an angrie Pursuiuant) exacting and redemanding his bloodie cruell spirit, an implacable officer of that implacable Tyrant to Tyrants, and Prince of Princes, Death, who at last conquered this Conquerour: or rather (if his ^v Epitaph written on his Tombe say true) conuicted him hence to seeke new Conquests. His disease was a Canker in the backe, (eating out a passage for his riporous soule) which made him rot while he liued, and become a stinking burthen to himselfe and others. He died in September, 1520. hauing before bequeathed bloodshed and dissolution

SOLYMAN, fit-named the Magnificent, succceeded his Father Selym in place, and surmounted him exceedingly in exploits. Belgrade, (which ominous name, did presage happinesse vnto him in his Warres and proceedings) was the beginning of his Conquests, wonne by the Turkes, August. 29. 1521. Rhodes receiveth him on Christmasse day, 1522. but withall exileth both Cheere, Christmasse, and Christians. Hee invadeth ⁂ Hungarie, and in the field discomfitteth and killen Lewer, and slayeth, or captiveth two hundred thousand Hungarians in that expedition, 1526. Hee entereth Hungarie the second time, 1529. and (after some butcheries therein) marcheth to Vienna in Austria, where he lost fourescore thousand of his Turkes, and then with shame & anger returned. In the yeere 1532. he returneth with an Armie of six hundred thousand men; to whom Charles the fifth opposed himselfe, and the Christian forces, in greater numbers, then hath in many ages beene scene, mustering in his Armie, at Vienna two hundred and threecore thousand men, whereof fourescore and ten thousand Foot-men, and thirtie thousand Horse-men were old Souldiers, to whom Solyman did not, nor durst not, bid bartell. Poore Hungarie rues in meane while, whether he getteth or loseth in Austria, being made his thorow-fare as he went and came.

After this he trieth his successe against the Persian, where hee taketh Tauris and Babylon, with the Countreys of Assyria and Media, ⁂ Anno 1534. each of which had sometimes bene Ladie of the World. At incredible costs he prepared a Fleet in the Red Sea, 1537. and taking Aden and Zibyth, two petie Kingdomes in Arabia, by his forces ⁂ besieged Dium, a Castle of the Portugals in the East-Indies, but without his wished successe. For the Portugals still retaineth their Indian-Seas and Traffique, and not onely freed that their Castle from Turkish bondage, but had means to fortifie it better, by the Ordinance, which the Turkes in their hasty flight had left behinde. A more dangerous plot did Solyman meane while contrive against Christendome, preparing his forces to invade Italy, and to that end was come to Augusta, an Haven in Macedonia, with two hundred thousand Souldiers, where Barbanissa, and Lutiz Bassa, his great Admirall, met him with his Fleet, to transport his Armie. But Solyman, first employed these Sea-forces on the coast of Italy, and tooke Caltrum; his Horse-men (which he had sent over in great Polanders) carried away the people, cattell, and substance, betwix Brundisium and Tarentum, fortie miles space; all the countrey of Otranto certified with feare of a greater tempest. But the Venetians turned it from the reit of Italy, vpon themselves (nor withstanding their league) by vnseasonable exacting of that Sea-courtesie, the vaying of the bonnets, or top sayles of some Turkish Gallies vnto them, as Lords of that Sea; for which neglect some of them were sunke. ⁂ Auria also, the Emperours Admirall, had surprised some of the Turkes stragling Fleet, and after held cruell fight with twelve great Gallies, full of Ianizaries and choise men, whom he ouerthrew and tooke. But the Ianizaries that were left, cast their Scimiters over-boord, least such choise weapons should come to the Christians hands. Solyman converting his forces against the Venetians, for the indignities mentioned, had almost fallen into the hands of the Mountaine-Theeves, which lived in the Acroceranian Hills: who in a strange resolution had conspired to kill him in his Tent, and had almost (to the wonder of the world) in a night, by unknowne wayes, suddenly effected it, had not the cracking of a bough discovered their Capitaine, who in a tree was taking view of

of the Campe, how to bring to passe his desperate designs. This their Captaine, (by name Damianus) was, after confession herof, come in pieces, and those wilde Mountainers (living in robberie, without Law or Religion) were, like wilde beasts, hunted to destruction.

The Turkes invaded Corfu, whence they carried sixteene thousand of the Islanders captiues. They likewise, in their returne, committed great spoyle in Zante, and Cythera, sacked Egina, Paros, and other Ilands in the Archipelago; bringing Naxos vnder tribute. Barbarossa sacked Bortorus, a Venetian Citie: The like did Vristo Obroatioin, and the Castle of Nadin. Nauplium also, and Epidaurus were besieged. But Ferdinand (who had entrued himselfe King of Hungarie, after Lewis his death) received a greater disgrace in Hungarie, by the Turkish forces, then befell the Venetians in all their losses: Cazicianer (the General of the Christians) shamefully flying and betraying his associates to the Turkish crueltie. The next yeere 1538. Barbarossa chaseth the Christian Fleet, in which the Emperours, Venetians, and the Popes forces were ioyned.

In the yeere 1541. Solyman againe inuadeth Hungarie, professing himselfe Protector of the young King, which Iohn, late King of Hungarie (who had held long warres with Ferdinand, about that Tide) had left behinde him his heire and successor. But vnder colour of protection, hee maketh himselfe Lord of Buda, the chiefe Citie, turning the Cattedrall Church into a Mosque; and maketh Hungarie a Turkish Province, bestowing Transylvania) and what he pleased, on the Orphan. Two yeeres after he reentereth Hungarie, and taketh Strigoniun: turning the Christian Temples into Malumeran, sacrificing there for his victorie, as he had done at Buda. Hee entred also into Alba Regalis, (where the Hungarian Kings ye entombed) another chiefe Citie of that Kingdome, and slew the Magistrates. I speake not all this while of the spacious Countries in Africa; which, from the Riuer Mulua, hee added to his Dominions: the Kingdomes of Algier, Tremisen, Tunes, Tripoly, &c. being annexed to his Turkish Soueraigntie. Howbeit Tunes, by ayde of Charles the Emperour, some what recovered her selfe, but breathed out againe her last gaspe of libertie, in the daies of Selym his sonne. And thus was Solyman victorious and happy; otherwhere victorious and vnsappy, when he was forced to dreine bartell against his owne bowels, and hauing murdered Musapha his eldest sonne (the hopefulllest branch in Turkish estimation, that euer grew out of the Ottoman stocke) hee warred against Biazet, another of his sonnes; whom, with foure of his children, he procured to be done to death in Persia. And after much domesticall trouble, in his seventh Expedition into Hungarie (his Fleet in the siege of Malra, being before, with great disgrace repulsed) he dyed at the siege of Zigeth, the fourth of September, 1566.

§. II.

Of SELYM the second, and AMVRATH the third.

SELYM, the onely sonne, which the bloudie father had left aliue, succeeded in the Throne, not in the prowesse and valour of his father. Neither hath any Turkish Sulran since his dayes, led their forces in person, but committed it to their Deputies and Generals; except once, when Mahomet the third, had almost lost his Armie and himselfe. Yet did this Selym, by his Bassaes, make him Lord of Cyprus, and also of the Kingdome of Tunis. But this sweet meate was sorely sauced, by his exceeding losse in the Sea-fight betwixt Hali Bassa, Admirall of the Turkes, and Don Iohn of Austria, Generall of the Fleet set forth by the Pope, Spaniard, and Venetian, 1571. wherein an hundred threescore and one Gallies were taken, forie funke or burnt, and of Gallions, and other small vessels were taken about threescore. The Turkish Admirall was then slaine. Wittingly did the Turke decant vpon this losse of the Turkes, and their gaine of Cyprus, comparing this to the shauing of a maus beard, which would grow againe: that, to the losse of an arme, which, once cut off, cannot be renewed. Lastly, Tunes came in, and Selym went out of his Turkish Soueraigntie, both in manner together, 1574.

Amurath his heire, began his Empire, with the slaughter of his five bretheren. The mother of Solyman (one of that number) slew herselfe with a dagger, for anguish of this losse. He in viewing a new Gallie, by the breach of a Peece, hardly escaped death, thirde of his company being slaine. And because the Plague was exceeding hot, hee by deuotion sought to appease diuine anger: and therefore prohibited all vse of Sodomic, Blasphemie, and Polygamie, and himselfe put out five hundred women out of his Serale. In a priuate habitec hee visited the Markets, and hanged vp the hoorders of come. He by the Tartars inuaded Polonia: and Henry of France, secretly leauing the Kingdome of Polonia, hee wrote vnto him to chuse Stephen Bassor for their King; in which letters he called himselfe, Gad of the Earth, Go-

OF MAHOMET the Third.

MAHOMET his sonne succeeded: who inviting his nineteene brethren to a Feast, sent them to learne his fathers death in the other world, accompanied thither with ten of Amuraths women, from whom issue was feared, which, with drowning them he prevented. Much adoe he had with his Janizaries at home, much losse in his Dominions abroad, for which cause he sent for Ferat Bassa out of Hungary, and strangled him, and sent Sinan his emulous coriuall in his roome, whom the Transylvanian Prince overhrew in battell, and after chased him ouer a Bridge (which he made a mile in length for his armie to passe ouer Danubius) with great losse of his people. His Bridge the fire and water liuided betwixt them; and the conceit of this ill successe (as was thought) procured his death some after. In the yeere 1597. Mahomet in his owne person enterprised these waeres, and not farre from Agria, on the sixteenth of October, fought a cruell battell with the Christians, wherein (had not Couetousnesse, rightly called the root of all euill, hindered) had bene achieved the most glorious victorie against those Barbarians, that euer Christendome was blessed with. Mahomet himselfe for feare, seeing his Ordinance (an hundred fourecote and tenne great Peeeces) taken, and his men slaine in multitudes, fled with Ibrahim Bassa towards Agria, hedding teares by the way, which he wiped off his bloudie face with a piece of greene sike, supposed to be a piece of Mahomets garment, carried with him as a holy Relique. But whiles the Christians were now halfe Conquerours, by greedie turning to the spoile, their victorie was wholly lost, and twentie thousand of them slaine, who had slaine three thousand Turkes. Mr. Barton the English Embassador, was present in the fight, and Mr. Thomas Glouer also, who in a large Iournall of this Expedition, testifieth that the great Turk was in great feare; but being animated by some about him, he rooke his bow and arrowes, and slew three Christians therewith. Those former reports hee mentioneth not. Not long after, he Bassa of Buda was taken, and the Bassa of Bosna, with some thousands of Turkes slaine; Anno 1599. Yet did not all his losses in the West, by the Christians vex the Great Sultan so much, as a rebellion raised in the East, which many yeeres continued. Casim Bassa of Caramania rose in armes against his Master, and hauing now done great matters, his Souldiers before fall to their Prince, became now also fall to him: hee flying, was after taken and tortured to death. His rebellion out-liued him, and was maintained by one, called the Scitiano, who ouerthrew Mahomet Bassa in the field, and the second time, in the yeere 1601. ouerthrew him with his Armie of fiftie thousand, and foraged all the Countrey almost as far as Aleppo, proclaiming himselfe the defender of the Mahometan faith, and soon after gaue the Bassa a third ouerthrow. The Turkes Embassadour, sent into Persia to demand the Sophies sonne in hostage, for the assurance of the peace betwene those two Monarchs was for his proud message put to the Bastinado, and grieuouly threatened, sent backe to the Grand Signior. The Scitiano's proceedings was much furthered, by the dissensions betwene the Janizaries of Aleppo and Damasco: but death stayed him, not his rebellion, which a younger brother of his prosecuted, against whom Hassan Bassa was sent, but lost himselfe and his Armie. The Rebels besieged Angole, and forced them to giue two hundred thousand Duckets to buy their peace. Meane while the Janizaries, after their insolent manner, in a mutinie forced Mahomet to commit the Capi-Aga, one of his greatest Officers, and some others, to whom the successe of these Rebels was imputed, to their cruell execution. The Rebels lacked Butze, one of the chiefe Cities, the Turkes Store-house for his Warres and Treasure for his reuenues; and the great Shah of Persia had taken Cotberie also from the Turkes. The Governour of Babylon inclined now also to the Rebels. Mahomet not able with force to preuaile, by faire meanes sought to winne them, and gaue them their demands, making Zellah one of their Chieftaines, Bassa of Bosna. Whereupon his men of warre entered into a resolution, to deprime him of the State, and to inuest therewith Mahomet his eldest sonne: about which an Astrologian being consulted, promised all happie success: (vni-happie foole, that knew not his owne approaching ruine, which Mahomet executed on him, together with young Mahomet the Prince, and fiftie other conspirators.)

He sent forth a Fleet of gallies against the King of Fesse, which hauing encountered with a tempest, was forced with a great losse to retire to their former Port. The chiefe rebel making shew he would come into Europe, as Zellah had done, Mahomet sent certain gallies to receiue him, but hee receiued them, and possessing himselfe of the gallies, slew the men, and mocked the Sultan. Hassan, a great Bassa, toynd himselfe also vnto them, about such time as Fauers was againe recovered by the Persian. All these disasters draue Mahomet to his deuotions for refuge, accounting these crosses to be inflicted for his sinnes, and therefore appointed publicke Prayers in all the Mosques of his dominion, and sent two Priests bare-headed and bare-footed to Mecca, on pilgrimage to pray for him. But not Mahomet either had no care to heare this, or else was so farre entreated, as to be better acquainted with this great Sultan in the place of his eternall residence, whither (about the yeere 1603.) Mahomet the Turke ^a was by death soone after sent. His sonne Achmat succeeded; for his eldest was strangled in his sight. He was buried in a faire Chappell, by himselfe for that purpose built in the place of his foot square, with foure Turrets or Steeples: in the midst is his Sepulchre, in a great Coffin of white Marble: his Turbant at his head, two exceeding great Candles of white Waxe, (standing but neuer burning) the one at his head, the other at his feet. The floore is couered with Mats, and faire Carpets on them. Round about are like Tombs for his wiues and children, but not so great and faire. Diners such Chappells there are neere to the Temple of Sophia, as of his father Amurath, with his five and fortie children, entombed about him, and of the other great Sultans, two Selym, Solyman, Baiazet, Mahomet, each having a faire Hospitall for the reliefe of the poore adjoining. Some of the great B. sses imitate the same. No other Turkes are buried in the Cities, but in the fields, with stones laid ouer, or set vpright, fashioned with some resemblance of the head, which beareth ensigne of his dignitie, & whether it be a man or woman, with letters engrauen further to testifie the same.

Of ACHMET.

ACHMAT ^b set a sure guard about his brother, and to prevent the insolencie of the Janizaries and Souldiers, distributed amongst them two millions and a halfe, and being fiftene yeeres old, was crowned Emperour. He was aid in behauiour and resemblance much to resemble Mahomet the Great, first Conquerour of Constantinople. At the same time the warres in Transylvania had procured such famine; that rootes, herbes, leaues of trees were their food: yea, a mother is said to haue brought backe into her wombe (by vnaturall meanes satisfying Nature) her six children: two men to care their mother: others to cut downe malefactors from the gallowes, and eate them. Horses, Dogs, Cats, and such like were rarities to the poore, and dainties beyond their reach. And if the State can be made worse, theues by robberies, and Souldiers by continuall spoiles, in taking away their goods, adde to their miseries. Cicala Bassa is sent against the Asian Rebels, and receiveth an overthrow: the second time he reneweth his forces, with renewing his fortunes, namely, the losse of thirtie thousand of his men. The Persian recouered the Countrie of Sirvan, and the Citie of Arusta, with the Countrie therabouts, and all that from the daies of Solyman had bene taken from them, except two or three places. Hassan Bassa is sent against the Christians in Hungarie, assisted with the Tartars, alwayes readie to helpe the Turkes, both because they are linked in marriages, like in conditions, and that huge Empire, for want of heires male of the Ottomans, is enuailed to the Tartar Cham: pay and spoile are no small motives also to fetch them into these Expeditions. Cicala Bassa is sent against the Persians, but defeated with all his power by the Persian.

In Hungarie they doe more with their money, to maintaine rebellions, then with open force. In the yeere 1605. a tumult arose among the Janizaries in Constantinople, and five hundred shops and ware-houses, with two hundred Iewes, and other persons to whom they belonged, were burnt: the Janizaries enriched themselves with the spoile. The Iewes haue made them Vaults, made fire-free to prevent the like danger from the Janizaries, who are thought purposely to fire them sometimes, and alway haue the office to quench it, or pull downe houses in neere danger, which they willingly protract, or performe in places fitted for pillage: Ignis ruina extinguitur: the remedie no lesse then the disease. Hungarie is at once Turkes, and the people flee into Polonia, or the Mountaines for refuge. The Rebels take great Townes, yea, they spoyle Sicilia and Austria. The German name growes odious to the Hungarian. Basfay, chiefe of the Rebels, is assisted by the Turkes, and called Prince of Transylvania; all Hungarie in manner following his ensignes. But the Rebels in Asia, and the Persian exploits, detained the Turkes from making vse of these occasions, else likely to haue swallowed Hungarie and Austria both: yet Pesth was before taken by them, and now Strigoniun. Cicala Bassa is againe overthrowne by the Persian, and with three hundred souldiers to Adena. The Bassa of Trebezond is sent to succour him, but is discomfited and almost all his Armie slaine. Achmat enraged, causeth *Cicala Bassa*s house at Constantinople, full of wealth and treasure, to be rifled. Adena is yielded to the Persian. The Bassars of Damasco and

Alippo

Aleppo had before fallen out, & taken armes. Damasco had ouerthrowne Aleppo in the field, besieged him, and forced him to composition. Now againe, Aleppo ouerthroweth him, and the Basses of Tripolis and Gazara his companions, with their Armie of threecore thousand men; took Tripolis; the Bassa whereof againe hee ouerthrew, and added to his garlands Damasco, the treasure of the Turks reuenue, and chief Citie of Syria. The Beglerbeg of Natolia sent his Lieutenant with a great Armie against him, but to their own ruine. He intercepted a Ship laden with the tributes of Egypt. The Persian sent him, in token of loue, a present worth fiftie thousand Crownes. Achmat is hereby forced to peace with the Christians, and to recall his forces out of Hungarie for this employment, Anno 1606. The Emperour yeldeth satisfaction to the Discontents in Hungarie, with free vse of religion to all, and Transylvania to remaine to Bosfay and his heires male for euer.

A fire at Constantinople kindled in a Jewes house by the Tartars, burnt many houses and Jewes, and foure millions of goods. Achmat in great magnificence went to his Moschee, to render thanks to Mahomet for a peace concluded with the Emperour. Hee now looketh Eastward with his power, and as Master Henrie Lello in his letter from Constantinople, dated April 2. 1606.) testifieth of him, he would needes at first be a Souldier, but the last Winter, hauing felt the cold winde from the tops of the hills in Bursia, which are all the yeere long covered with snow, and receiuing some hurt in his stomacke by drinking those cold waters, hee proued stomack-sicke to this expedition also, and giuing ouer his enterprise against the Rebels, it became one of Venus Knights, therein surmounting his Grand-father Murad, or Amanath. Anno 1607. hee sent the Visier Bassa, with an hundred and thirtie thousand against the Rebels, who persuaileth more by discreet appeasing of them, then by force. The Bassa of Aleppo three times withstood his whole forces; the fourth time fleeth towards Persia with his treasure. Aleppo is left to be taken, and the Garrison put to the sword: But the Bassa himselfe obtained pardon, with restitution of his goods taken from him in Syria. Another fire arose at Constantinople, and consumed two millions of goods, and 3000. houses to the ground. The Duke of Florence doth much harme to the Turks by the sea, 1608. The rebels make new commotions in Asia. Matthias the Arch-Duke standeth out with his forces against the Emperour, and commeth with his army toward Prague, obtaineth the Crowne and Royalties of Hungarie by composition, comes King to Vienna; but the Protestants refuse to sweare allegiance, till free vse of Religion in Austria by King Matthias was granted. Hee was crowned at Presburg. And in the yeere 1612, the Emperour Rodolphe being dead, he was chosen in his place. Anno 1610. the Persians ^d ouerthrew the Turkes in diuers batels, wherein many thousands of them were slaine. In the yeere 1613. The Turke ^e had prouided a great Army at Adrianople, to passe into Transylvania, and his Garrisons began some fires in Hungarie, and a new warre was there feared: but new occurrents in Asia altered that course. For the people in Natolia rose againe in rebellion, committing spoile and rapine: and in Arabia a certaine Rebelle vsurped the title of a King, and gathering together aboue fiftie thousand followers, had possessed himselfe of Aden, a commodious Citie for the Indian Merchandize, and fitly seated for the command of the Red-sea. The Persian King put his Embassadour to death, because hee had capitulated with the Turke, that his Master vnder colour of gifts should pay him a yeerely tribute: and sent the Turkish Legate, which was sent with the Persian Legate, backe to Constantinople, hauing first cut off his hands, and put out his eyes. Heereby the Turke was forced to employ his forces this way, which he had intended for Transylvania: and by the Bassa of Buda hath promised to keepe peace: hath sent also his Embassadour into Poland with a great present to the King, swearing by his God, his Horse, and Sword, to conserue the peace. This yeere also about Aprill was a great fire at Constantinople, which burned two thousand houses: the Merchants meane while labouring to conuey and saue their goods, ^f the Bassa Nassuffensis pretended, that a certaine Merchant of Aleppo (whom vpon that occasion hee found there weaponed) intended violence against him, and confiscated his goods (the chiefe cause of the quarrell) which amounted to an hundred thousand Chekins: which I mention, to shew the miserie of Turkish subiection.

In September the Duke of Aragon (hauing intelligence that the Turkish Admirall had departed from Constantinople with seuentie Gallies, with intent to fend aide against the Rebels in Syria) with his Naue of ten Sicilian Gallies fell vpon ten of the Turkish, and tooke seuen of them, with three Basses, and the Beg of Cyprus: freeing out of seruitude a thousand Christian slaves. These at Palermo went in procession with Oliues in their hands, the Turkes also following chained: and the Beg of Cyprus (when a huge summe was not accepted for his ranfome) killed himselfe.

Of the Emir of Said or Sidon we haue spoken elsewhere. Hee about the same time came with three Gallies to Liurno, bringing with him his foure wiues, tenne children and much treasure. Hee presented the Great Duke at Florence a Turkish sword richly set with stones, and the Dutcheffe with two Pearles esteemed at 60000. Crownes. Newes also came from Cyprus, that the Bassa of Damasco making an expedition against the Emirs sonne which he had leitt in Sayd, was by him overthrowne and forced to flee, leauing 20000. slaine in the field. The Emirs request was assistance of shipping. These broiles in Syria continuing, forced the Turke to seeke peace with the Emperour; the sonnes of Emir hauing slaine the Bassa of Damasco, and receiuing succour from the Persian. The Heiducks also in Hungary in the yere 1614. hauing done the Turkes much scathe: besides the vprores in Transyluania, where the Prince Gabriel Bathore was by a wile of the Imperials brought into an ambush and slaine, and Gabriel Bethlin Gabor obtaining to succeed, was by the Turke assisted, molested by the Imperials. The Persian also dispossesting the Georgians of most of their country for taking part with the Turke; and the sonne of the Bassa Nussuffensis before mentioned, (who was lately strangled after the manner of the Turkish execution of their Great ones) arose in rebellion, and committed much spoile by fire and sword in Asia: the Cossaks being as troublesome in the European frontiers. All these things forced him to seeke conclusion of a peace, to which purpose the twelfth of May, 1615. Achmet Chiaia his Embassadour entered Vienna, with rich Presents to the Emperour, and obtained a confirmation of the same for twentie yeres ensuing.

G. Senly.

The Turkes strength at Sea is so small, that the Florentine with six Ships onely, hath these three yeres kept the bottome of the Streits in despite of them, the whole Armado not daring the onser: the Admirall employing the Pyrats of Tunis and Algiers, who by our fugitiue Pyrats are instructed to the spoile of Christian Merchants. One cause of this weakenesse is their want of slaues for their Gallies, thorow their peace with Christendome.

Of Sultan ACHMET'S Person, Family, Government, and Greatnesse of State.

Sultan Achmet is now Ann. 1616. eight, or twentie nine yeeres old, of a iust stature inclining to be fat, readie sometimes to choke as he feeds, some purposely attending to free him from that danger. He is full faced, and (which they esteeme a great beautie) great eyed. A litle haire he hath on his lip, lesse on his chin. He is an vnrelenting punisher of vice, For Sodomie he caused some of his Pages to be drowned. He is now building a magnificent Moschee for the health of his soule, all of white Marble, himselfe first breaking the earth, and working three houres in person. Hee hath not so few as foure thousand which feed and lue in the Seraglio, besides fise hundred Capagies, who wait by fifties at euery gate. He hath three thousand Concubines and Virgins for his lust, as Mr. Knoller; Mr. Sandys saith, seldome so few as fise hundred Virgins in a Seraglio by themselves attended by Women and Eunuchs, taken in warre, or from their Christian Parents. They haue their purgations and dyets much like the Persian custome in the time of Esther. When it is his pleasure to haue one, they stand ranked in a gallery, and shee prepareth for his bed to whom he giues his handkerchiefe, then deliuered to the Aga of the women. Shee that beares the first sonne is honoured with the title of Sultana. He had but two sonnes and three daughters, A. 1610. and yet is that way vnstably addicted. He cannot make a free woman his Concubine, and therefore Roxolana procuring vnder colour of deuotion her freedome of Solyma, forced him to marry her, doting still on her. This also hath married the mother of his younger sonne (the mother of the eldest being dead) called Caske Caloun, that is, the Lady without haire, nature both gracing and shaming her. His eldest sonne is about twelue yeeres old. He is much delighted with pleasures of the field, for which in Gracia and Natolia he hath fortie thousand Falconers; his Hunt-men are not much fewer. And whereas their Religion bindes them once euery day to practise some mutuall trade, as his father did, making of arrows: This Sultan euery morning after his deuotions maketh horne-rings, which they weare on their thumbs for the better drawing of their bowes.

His Officers are thus deliuered: the Capi Aga, by whom hee speaks to such as haue suites to him; Treasurer of the household, Cup-bearer, Steward, Overseer of his women, and principall Gardner. These six are in great place: he hath Mutes (persons botne deafe and dumbe) which attend him; he hath fiftene hundred gelded men, from whom their priuities are wholly cut, and they make water thorow short quills of siluer, which to that end they weare on their Turbants. His Visier Bassas, or Priuie-counsellers, whereof there are nine at Constantinople, and were wont to be much fewer, are now thirtie. The rest of them are in their charges, or Beglerbegs places abroad. They sit euery Saturday, Sunday, Monday, and Tuesday, in the Diuano or Counsell-hall. The Aga is Capitaine of the Janizaries. The Chiaufes are his Pursuiuants. The Spahi his guard of Horse-men. The Janizaries are his best Foot-men, who in their child-hood are taken from their parents, and brought vp in all hardnesse, and in the rules of their Religion. Then are they put to Schooles, where vnder most severe Masters they are taught the vse of diuers weapons, and such as proue fit are enrolled for Janizaries. Of whom in all are fortie thousand, and about fiftene thousand with their Aga, attend the Grand Seignior his person at Constantinople, where they are employed as Constables, Clerkes of the Market, Warders of the Gates, Sergeants for Arrest, to guard Embassadors, and other Offices. The Aga is the third place in repute through the Empire: to whom iealousie makes too much loue of the Janizaries, fatal. The Janizaries call the Great Turkle Father, he reposing greatest trust in them, they acknowledging no dependance but on him. In their marches they carry certaine dayes provision of victuall with them, which is no great cumber, being a small portion of Rice, with a litle Sugar and Honey. The most of them that attend the Court, haue their being in three large Seraglios, where the Juniors reuerence their Seniors, and all obey their Commanders with much silence. Some are married (a breach of their first institution) and lue in priuate houses. Many of them undertake to guard such Christians as will be at the charge, both about the Citie and in their trauells, from violence and inciuilities, wherein they are most faithfull. This appeared in one of them of late, stricken by a swaggering Englishman, as they trauelled through Morea, whom yet with much patience and fidelitie hee brought safeto Zante. They are all of some trade: receiue but fise Aspers a day (to which pension his eldest sonne is admitted from his birth) two gownes yeerely, one of violet the other of stamell: they beare in their hand a great rough reed tipped with siluer, wherewith they strike such as displease them. No iustice may bee publickly admittred on them, but priuately are by their Aga corrected, and sometimes throwne into the Sea in the night. They are most tumultuous when the Emperour is dying, or dead: for which cause it is by all industrie concealed from them till the next yeere established, who must bestow a largesse present, and encrease their pensions an After a day. They haue lately admitted (besides Renegados) naturall Turkes, of which one is now Bassa of the Port, which was neuer before knowne.

He hath also in pay, others, called Topegi, six thousand which are Gunners; and twelue thousand Cebegi, which haue charge of the powder and shot in the Armies. He hath Seminaries for the training vp of those younglings, the one sort of which are called Iheoglangi, whereof are five thousand, which neuer goe out of the Seraglio in fixeene or twentie yeeres, neuer see any but their Officers, where they are trained vp to future seruice. The Gemoglangi (who are also tithed children of the Christians) are brought vp with some more libertie, and to base offices of husbaurie, and such like, and may also proue Janizaries. Of these are twentie thousand. The Janizaries and tithed children, with his Timariots, are the maine pillars of his Empire. His Timariots, which hold land in Fee, to maintaine so many Horsemen in his seruice, are in Europe two hundred fiftie seuen thousand; in Asia and Africa four hundred fixtie two thousand.

b Some say there are in all a million. Every one finding remedy, but as his former doth double the yearly value of so. Sultans; ready to be commended by their Sinicks, these former Billies commensurate 5000. Timariots.

He hath three or fortie thousand Achingi, Hinds of the Country, which serue on horsebacke, without other pay then what they get by foraging; but of small reckoning: as are also the Azapi which serue on foot (yet properly belonging to the Gallies) whose best seruice is, with their dead bodies to fill vp ditches, to make way for the Janizaries, and to wearie the Enemy with multitude. Many vicinaries also attending the Campe, in hope to succed the same Spall for Janizaries. When they march, the Tartars scowre the Country two dayes journey before, then follow the Achingi, and after them the Timariots, next the Iemuglans, after them the Janizaries, then the Chaulcos on horsebacke: the Sultan follows with the Officers of his Court, and Archers of his Guard foot-men, the stipendiary Spahis marching on either side of him. His Coaches which carry the Pages and Eunuchs come after, and then the carriages and Voluntaries. The Royall standard is a horse rayle tied to the end of a staffe, the Janizaries haue wooden modells of Elephants, boots, swords, and the like, borne before them.

Beglerbeg signifieth Lord of Lords; of which were wont to be two; one in Europe, another in Asia: but by Solyman increased, that though Romania, and Natolia haue still the chiefe titles, yet in Europe are four others; in Asia before these Persian wartes, nine and twentie, in Africa foure, in all nine and thirtie, which are as Vice-royes, and haue their Begs or Sanzacks vnder them. His Admiralls place is as great by Sea. If these great ones doe iniustice, the oppressed will sometimes in troupes attend the coming forth of the Emperour, and by burning straw on their heads, or holding vp torches prouoke his attention: who being brought by his Mutis deliuer their Petition, which often turnes to the ruine of the other. Bribery is but lately knowne, yet now the best Advocate. Every Bassa keeps a Diuaz or Court of Iustice in his Province: the chiefe is at Constantinople foure dayes of the weeke in the Seraglio, whence is no appeal but to the Musli. The Great Visier Bassa is President of the rest: in three dayes all causes are determined. All they haue for assurances of purchases, is a little schedule, manifesting the possession of the Seller, which vnder-written by the Cadi frustrates all after-claimes: and as for law-querks they are vnknewne. Rebellions rarely happen, both because the greatest Commander submits his necke to the Executioners sword, sent with Commission by the Tyrant enclosed in a boxe: neither may any hope for parakers in resisting, where one mans fall is anothers rising: their kindred and alliance not so much as knowne to themselves: to haue had eminent parents is argument of neglect; of ruine to be beloued: and for wealth they are but sponges, all which a greedie life hath sucked, being stained at their death, except what the Grand Signior pleaseth to bestow on their posteritie. Neither may any slave promise much to himselfe, where damnable policie is the greatest Bassa given by the Sultan, when made husband to his sister or daughter: rarely attaine above the degree of a priuate Capitaine. This great Empire may be considered to grow neere a period, in respect it hath lately decreased Eastward, and in the Sea-forces: their discipline is neglected, and not exacted to ancient rigour: their late Emperours effeminate the bowells of the State much infected with rebellions, and it hath already been a long-lived Tyrannie, out-living the wonted period. It may seeme the greatest Empire now in being: yet is that of China farre exceeding in reuenues, in naturall situation for defence, in Provinces better vntied, and better peopled, not inferiour in that kinde of policie which prevents alienations and rebellions: but in Souldiery not to bee compared, except we say herein he hath full recompence, that hee is strong enough in that kinde, which cares

not to conquer, nor need feare to be conquered. The Persian hath not so vast Countries subiect, but better subjection, and himselfe a better Commander, and his Souldiers better disciplined and experimented. The Mogoll is great, wealthy, and mightie, but Asia is not comparable to European valour. But compare the Turkish greatnesse to that of some of the first Calitas, which stretched from India to Spaine, France, and Barbary; or to the Tartarian, which awed more in Asia, then euer Turke possessed in the Vniuerses, perhaps twice told (for prooue read our Tartarian Relations) and yet they pierced as farre as Austria in Europe, ouer-running Russia, Polonia, Hungaria, and making Italy to quake with the rumour of their armes: or to the Roman, which held almost all the Turke hath, when it was better worth the holding, besides, this Westerne World which the Turke knowes not. Herein, I thinke, the Turke ouer-matched beyond comparison: nor any whit exceeding the power and possessions of Alexander; no, nor the Persian greatnesse before him, except in martiall discipline, wherein they now also differ. Thus much of Turkish affaires of state: if we adde also this Summa totalis for a conclusion, that the Turke commands on the Sea-coast (after some mens^b Arithmetike) 11280. miles in Asia, Africke, and Europe, and the superficies of all his Dominions come to a million two hundred three thousand, two hundred and nineteene miles euery way square. Let the Author answer it, if the summe be transcendent. The Turkes reuenues, besides his Timariots, are esteemed but fiftene millions of Sultaries: which may seeme strange in so huge an Empire. But tyrannie in wasting and desolating Nations, and Lording ouer euery mans estate (none willing to toyle for that whereof he hath no certaintie, nay, which may procure him the greater danger) hath caused this habitation (I except the Cities) and poor inhabitants. To this his reuenue may be added his taxes, customes, spoyles, and extortions: as the greater fish preying on the smaller, and pray to the greatest; so here, the great ones spoyle others, and themselves spoyle of all with their liues, or else necessarily leauing him the reire at their deaths.

An Appendix touching the succession of MUSTAPHA twice, and of OSMANS murder, and other ciuill, vnciuill late Combuitions.

CHMET before he died, to make all sure, resolved to strangle his brother Mustapha, and according to custome will leaue no Competitors in such an Empire. For which purpose a Guard of Capagies attend at the Iron gates of the Seraglio, and the Mutes are placed in a roome accordingly. Thus is Mustapha to be dispatched, but see how the stronger arme puts out the stronger men? The same night Achmet had a dreame or fearefull vision, which some of the Deuices would needs presume to rumor abroad, in this manner; that he thought, as hee was entering into the seven Towers, the Princely prison of his predecessors, his brother kneeled downe before him, and cried out, Oh when shall we leaue this horrible custome of shedding innocent blood? Looko among all the heathens, and see, how quickly they loathed and cast away that crying Sin of sacrificing of humane flesh? But in stead of replying he drew his Semiter to strike off his head, had not one (as hee conceited) held it fast, that hee could not strike; whereupon hee demanded angrily, What art thou? I am the good Genius of Mustapha, and will not suffer him to perish, therefore leaue. And very shortly shall strange things happen in the Empire. Achmet contrary to all expectation the next morning after his Dreame, sent for him into the roome of State, where he lay on a stately Paller, with all his Vice-Roys and Bashaws crouching on the ground, and the principall Mutes kneeling before him reading on a booke. It should seeme that glad tidings came first to the Citie; For he was taken out of the prison with great respect and obseruation: hee was landed to his galley with high Ceremonies, and yet Iohanne countenances: hee was accompanied on the Sea with thousands of boats, and ten thousand of weeping eyes: hee landed at the Emperours owne Caska, with great respect and modest silence: hee walking through the Garden of Cypres trees, and at last came to an Iron gate, where his owne company left him, except two Bashaws, who led him by the armes; the gate opened and he must through a Guard of Capogies: they bend to the ground, and yet looke cheerefully: they brought him into the roome where the Mutes stood: whose presence did more appale him then the rest, but that hee saw the crueltie confirmed, and their very sight was worse then an vnererable iudgement: but when he perceiued no violent hands laid vpon him, and that hee must yet goe further, hee was the more astonished, and the more vexed to endure such a prostration.

a This is taken out of a booke written of that argument.
Achmet reigned about fiftene
yeeres.

At last he came where the Emperour lay sicke on his Pallet, before whom his prostitution was as the ordinary flaves: but contrary to all expectation he had him rise, and commanded certain Persian Carpets to be spread, and rich Cushions to be laid: on which, according to their manner, hee late crosse leggd by him, and when the Mustie had raised the Emperour up a little, with a faint voyce he discovered an vnllook for louing heatt, and bequeathed to him the succession.

He had no sooner done, but he began to faint, and so read them all a lesson of mortalitie by opening a booke, wherein they saw death writ in Capitall letters, and himselfe sinking past recovery, which made them recouer new Spirits, and presently bring his brother out into the Sophia, where the principall Mustie proclaimed Mustapha Emperour, intimating to the Ianizaries the charge of Achmat, to the discharging their duties: and the pleasure of Mustapha to giue them a larges, which equalling the bountie of other Princes, ouerwayed nicer exceptions, and so with great acclamations they ratified the Election, and cried out, Live and raigne great Mustapha. Thus is Mustapha Emperour, and they had two yeeres triall of his disposition, whereby they found him harmelesse (if innocent in both senies) Encomi- ons of no great and stirring Spirit.

Scander, and Mehemet Balthaw take the young Osman after this out of the Seraglio, and present him to the Ianizaries, a comely sweet young youth of nine or ten yeere old, demanding withall, if such an heire of the Othoman Family were to bee reiected without cause, or why they should bring an harmelesse Prince (as they reputed Mustapha) into the danger of vsurpation, and suffering no further from a Traytor, but that it was not imputed to him, as for Achmat's Will? Empires are not so translated, and what could they tell, but priuate men for their owne ends had wrought vpon his weaknesse, making a diseased tongue speake that, which a healthfull heart, and perfect sense would not consent to: For it was probable, that a Father would disinfet his children for any brother in the world: Besides, there was no triall or cause either of insufficiencie, or disability, and therefore they could not beleue it. Last of all, for any thing they saw, Mustapha himselfe was not stirring or strong enough to play the Steres-man in such an high built Ship, considering the Seas were tempestuous, and many dangerous shores and rockes were to be passed by.

These speeches to the turbulent Ianizaries, were like fewell to fire, and the presence of the lovely youth, made them amazed at their inconstancies: so at by way of penitencie and satisfaction, they quickly altered the acclamation of Live Mustapha, into the cries of, God save young Osman, and so without further disputing, hee was advanced into the Throne, and brought into the Seraglio, when Mustapha least thought of the alteration. But now there is no remedie, hee must needs bee depozed, and sent prisoner once againe into the seven Towers.

Now doth Osman begin his Phaetons flourish, and runneth the course of pleasures with his youth, spending foure or five yeeres in wantonnesse and iollitie, while his Balthawes spent the time in couetousnesse and ambitious ouer-ruling others: yet not without careful ouer-looking the Ianizaries, and prouident preventing their discontentes, & turbulent disposition: but all doth helpe; for they ouer-accustomed to actiue employment, and liuing vpon the spoile of forraigne Nations, as much as the Emperours entertainment, cried out to the warre, and when answer was made, that the Persians had contraſted a new league, and the Emperours of Germanies old couenants were not yet determined or ended. They presently replied, the incigities which the Russians had offered vnto their neighbors the Tartarians, were not to be endured, for they need goe no further then the piracies of the blacke Sea, and the iniuries of the Cossacks and Polonians: Nay, why should they not march to the expugnation of Leopold, and the foraging of the Countreies of Moldavia and Bogdonia, and so forward to teach Poland a better lesson, then to displease the Othoman Family and mightinesse.

The Balthawes knew there was no replying, nor now the fire was kindled no other quenching it, then letting it consume to cinders, whereupon they presently answered, they were glad that the Souldiers were so memorable of the glory of the Empire, and so readie to imploy them selves for the dignitie of the Nation, and therefore they would not by any means hinder them, or the cause: But they should finde the Emperour as careful to satisfie their demands, as they were willing to augment his Greatnesse: so that if they would giue way vnto time for the preparing of all things fit for the Armie, and the sending for the Tartarians to accompany them in the iourney, the Emperour should goe in person into the field, and Poland soone finde, what it was to exasperate such a Maiestic.

The King of Poland sent to the Emperour, to the French King, to the Pope for assistance; as also to his Maiestic of England with intimation of the terrour, and his well deliuered discourse made such impression on his Maiesties Princely heart, that he had a present supply:

e The Polish
is presumed.

In a word, his Armie was soone readie, and his Cossacks prepared : by the end of July hee was encamped in the fields of Bogdonia, and within eight dayes entrenched with twentie Peeces of Ordnance mounted : but the Cossacks quartered by themselves, and after their accustomed manner lying between two Rivers, were the more emboldened to make their daily excursions vpon the Tartars : For hauing a bridge in the reare of their Campe, with which the Turkes were vnacquainted, they quickly transported their men, and as quickly endamished their enemies.

When the Grand Signeur was made acquainted with the forwardnesse of these Polonians, and vnderstood they were already encamped, and expected his coming, hee was too young to apprehend any feare, and not old enough to lay the blame of his retardance where it was : therefore they made the more haste, when he vnderstood the occasion, and so according to former preparation, the establishment of diuers Gouvernments, the ordering the Provinces, the settling the great Citie, the mustring his Gallies, the guarding of his Castles, and the watching of the Blacke Sea : the Tartars vnited themselves to his Armie, and both together made a bodie of 200000. which with all magnificent preparation hee presented in the same Fields, and within sight of the Polonians, where hee pitched his Imperiall Tent. The Tartars thought to haue made but one battell, and day of triall of the businesse, but when they came to passe ouer Rivers, and assaile Trenches : they knew not what to say, and eile to doe, though the Ianizaries came as a second vnto them : whereupon they retreated, and were altogether appauled to be so disappointed : Both they & the Ianizaries were glad to retire with losse, & the young Emperor vnacquainted with the war, was yet acquainted with Oathes and Curses, to chide both himselfe and Fortune. At last the Bashawes seeing no remedie, and finding so great obstacles of their attempt, projected the preservation of the Emperours person ; but it may bee to secure their liues, and so entrenched themselves, being (as they said) the first time that euer so great an Armie of Turkes was enclosed within walles.

The Polonians also endured both hunger & cold, slacknesse of payment, and their entertainment came many times short : The Noble Generall died in the Campe, the Prince lay sicke of a Feuer, their horse miscarried, and other lamentable effects raught them extraordinary patience, which made them attend good conditions of peace, and secret workings of more nimble spirits. A Priest of Moldavia was set on worke to go among the Polonians, and by way of generall complaint against the outrageous effects of warre, to enlarge the happinesse of peace, and inferre what a blessing it were to procure the same : whereupon hee was brought to the young Prince of Poland, and Commanders of the Armie, with whom hee at last prevailed so well, and so farre, that they sent a solemne Embassie to the great Turke, as hee lay entrenched in the fields, to entreate a peace, and desire the renouation of the antiqua pax, which had bene euer betweene the two Nations. The Turke had learned his lesson so well, that he seemed to make the matter strange and of great humiliation, if hee should consent thereunto, and rather a courtesie granted, then a necessitie imposed, and so deferred them awhile, till at last (as if he had bene ouer-wrought by the intercession and mediation of his Bashawes) he was contented to capitulate the matter, and after many meetings, and a great deale of conference, Articles were drawne and confirmed, with a kinde of solemnitie, and proclaimed by sound of trumpet in both the Campes, and so brake vp the Campe with a kinde of murmuring and repining.

The Great Turke tooke easie journeys toward Adrinopolis, where hee discharged the Tartars, and sent most of his Ianizaries before hand to Constantinople. Sigismund King of Poland raised his Armie, and rewarding the Cossacks, dismissed them home againe into their Country : he went in person to Leopolis, from whence (by this time Osman was come to the Great Citie) hee sent a solemne Embassadour to be there a Leiger, as it had bene in former times.

By Christmasse, Osman comes home, and had the accustomed acclamations of the people, with all the Ceremonies of his returne, whereupon he goes in great pompe to the Sophia, and had the vsfull Guard of his Court Ianizaries to attend him : but within short space many fearefull accidents appalled them all. First, they were astonished at a blazing Comete. Secondly, they were alighted at a great fire hapning amongst the Iewes, which they prefaged ominous to the government. Thirdly, a sore Earth quake made their hearts quake for feare : but this is vsuall in those parts, by reason of the ascending vp the Hills, and many Cauerns vnder ground. The Sea also swelled extraordinarily. And a great dearth hapned. These might bee concurring Symtomes : the disease was *Osman*s great spirit, emulous of his Ancestors glory, and ambitious to adde the rest of Europe to their Conquests ; but hereto his owne auarice, and the decrepit, or at least that vndisciplined age of that Empire were agreed correspondents : and this first disastrous Polonian attempt, filled him with repining indignation.

Of these and other occurrences in the Polish warres, are tracts & letters printed.

dignation. He is said to vndertake that warre against the will of his Souldiers, and without the aduice of his Viziers, and his gaires to be the losse of 100000. horses for want of fodder, and 80000. men for want of fighting, to which hee could neuer incite his Ianizaries, though he hazarded thereto somewhat farre his owne person. Hereupon he complained hee was no King, subiect thus to his owne slaues, which would neither fight in war, nor obey in peace, without exacting new bounties and priuiledges.

Delaur Bassa.

Delaur Bassa, a man of great courage, lately called from the Easterne parts was suddenly made Vizier; and wrought vpon the Kings discontent, giuing him counsell to prouide a new Souldiourie about Damasco, and from the Coards in stead of these degenerate Ianizaries, and of them to entertaine 40000. for his Guard, and that the Begh-lerbegh of euery Province should traine vp some of the inhabitants in Martiall discipline, with which men of new spirits and hopes hee might be able to doe something. Osman extremely pleased with this dulce consented and left all to his discretion. Hereupon it was concluded that the King should pretend to goe in person against the Emirde Zaida; and after interceding against that, a pilgrimage to Alcca was pretended. May seuen, 1622. he began to passe his Tents to Affa side with great store of treasure, to the defacing of his Palace, and of Churches. The Ianizaries had secret intelligence, and vpon a word giuen met at the Hippodrome, and thence ranne to the Seraglio in tumult, taking order to stop the passage by water. There they cried out for the King; who appearing, they first demanded his continuance in the Citie; Secondly, the chiefe Officers to be deliuered to them; Delaur the great Vizier, the Hoia or Confessor, the Tre-surer, the Gouvernour of the Women, the Cadileskar, or Chiefe Iustice, and others as enemies to the State, and authors of that iourney. Hee granted the first, but stucke at the second, and they returned discontent.

Mustapha restored.

The next day they renewed the mutinie, slew the Vizier and the Gouvernour of the Women, and not finding the King, they called for Mustapha before deposed, a man esteemed holy (or frantike) and sister for a Cell then a Scepter. Him they found almost starued in a Vault, where in the beginning of these tumults hee had bene put; who first feared death, and the next thing was hee begged water; whom they presently proclaimed Emperour.

Osman consulted with Huzain Bassa, late Vizier in the Polish watre, and the Aga of the Ianizaries, both faithfull to him: sent to haue strangled Mustapha in the Seraglio, but a new vproare happened, and hee was removed and guarded. The next day the King, with the Musli went to them, where after much intreatie, their hearts somewhat relenting, yet with new furie possessed, they slew Huzain Bassa, and the Aga; the Musli was conveyed away secretly; and Osman led to Mustapha, pleads for his life, and at last is cast into the Seven Towers prisoner.

Osman brethren & death.

Daout Bassa, the new Vizier, enquires and findes that Osman had two brothers liuing, one about twelue, the other seuen yeeres old, and thereupon goes to the prison with a packe of executioners, which finde him new false assepts, and by their intrusion awaked and discontent. At first they are amazed, and hee made shew to defend himselfe, till a strong knave strooke him on the head with a battle axe, and the rest leaping on him strangled him with much adoe. And soone after they mourned for their dead King, as freshly as they had ragged in all likelihood they must change for disabilitie.

New broiles.

The first of Iune following, the Capiaga had receiued secret order to strangle Osman's brethren, which going to doe, they cry out, and he by the Pages was slaine. The Ianizaries mutinie afresh, and will haue account of this treason, whereof the King denies knowledge; so did Daout (who was suspected) but to please them is degraded, and Huzain Bassa late Gouvernour of Cairo put in his place.

Const. Lext. Febr.

Daout strangled

There is later report of the said Daout, to bee strangled in the same place where hee had caused Osman to die. Neither can wee expect otherwife then monstrous and portentuous birthes, after such viperian conceptions.

CHAP. X.

Of the Opinions holden by the Turkes in their Religion, and of their Manners and Customes.

Ow the Turkes from so small beginnings, haue aspired to this their present greatness you haue seene; bought indeed at a deare price, with their temporall Dominions accepting of a spirituall bondage, becoming the Lords of many Countries, and withall made subiect to those many Mahometan superstitions. The occasion and chiefe cause of Sects in the Saracenicall deuotions, yee haue heard in the fourth and seuenth Chapters: to which wee may adde here out of • Bellonius. He saith, that besides the Alcoran, they haue another booke called Zuna, that is, the Way, or Law, or Councell of Mahomet, written after his death by his disciples, but the readings thereof being diuers and corrupt, the Caliph assembled a generall Councell of their Alphachi, or learned men at Damasco, wherein six Commissioners were appointed, namely, Muselin, Bochari, Babaraya, Anney, Aerminidi and Dent, to view and examine these bookes, each of which composed a booke, and those six bookes were called Zuna; the other copies (being two hundred Camels-lading) were drowned in the Riuer; those six only made authentically, esteemed of equall authoritie among the Turkes, with the Alcoran, and after by one of their Diuines contracted into an Epitome; which booke was called the Booke of Flowers. But this Zuna, being not Una (one as the Truth is) but full of contrarietie, hence haue risen Sects amongst them, the Turkes differing from other Mahometan Nations, and diuided also amongst themselves.

§. I.

Of their Eight Commandements.

ANTHONY • MENAVINS (who liued a long time in the Turkish Court) saith, that the Booke of their Law is called Musaph, or Curam, which Georgiour reckoneth another booke; not the Alcoran: it is in Arabike; and they hold valiafull to translate it into the vulgar. If any like not of Georgiour's his opinion, but thinke it to be the Alcoran (for al is but the Article, and the name little differs, as before is shewed) I could thinke it likely that this containeth some Extracts and Glosses hereof; or is to their Alcoran, as our Seruice booke to our Bible; hauing some sons and proper methodes, but grounded on the other. Some things I finde cited out of the Curam, that are not in the Alcoran, as that of the Angels mortallitie, which perhaps may bee the mistaking of the Interpreter. The ignorance of the Arabike hath caused much mis-calling of words and names. They haue it in such reuerence, that they will not touch it, except they be vashed from top to toe: and it is read in their Churches by one with a loud voyce, the people giuing deuout attendance without any noyse: nor may the Reader hold it beneath his girdled; and after he hath read it, he kisseth it, and toucheth his eyes with it, and with great solemnitie it is carried into the due place. Out of this booke are deuied eight principall Commandements of their Law. The first is, God is a great God, and one only God, and AMOMET is the Prophet of God: this Article of the Unitie (they thinke) maketh against s, who beleeue a Trinitie of Persons in deification wherof, they often reiterate these words, Hu, hu, hu, that is, He, he, he, is onely God, who is worthy to be praised for their riches, health, &c. and for that he hath provided sustenance for euery one fortie yeeres before his birth.

The second Commandement is, Obey thy Parents, and doe nothing to displease them in word or deed: they much feare the curses of their parents. 3. Doe vnto others, as thou wouldest bee done vnto. 4. That they repaire to the Meschit or Church at the times appointed; of which after. 5. To fast one moneth of the yere, called Ramazan, or Raidah. 6. That they giue almes to the poore liberally and freely. 7. To marry at conuenient age, that they may multiply the sect of Mahomet. 8. Nor to kill. Of these Commandements is handled at large in Menauino, and in the booke a of the Politike of the Turkish Empire, and in others.

Their times of prayer, according to the fourth precept, are 4 in the morning, called Salahe might vaish, vaish. They measure the time of prayer by houre-glasses of water. Some say six, and the druer sort, seuen, namaz, before Sun-rising : the second at noone, called Vlenamaz. The third, about three hours before Sun-set, called Inchindnamaz. The fourth at Sun-set, Afcannamaz. The fifth, two hours within night, before they goe to sleepe. Master Sandy nameth seuen times of prayer enioyned daily : the first Tingulnamaz, two hours before day, not mentioned by Septemcastrensis ; and another Gimmanamaz at ten in the morning, duely obserued on the Fridayes by all, at other times by the more religious. When the Priest calls to prayer, they will spread their garments on the earth, though they bee in the fields, and fall to their deuotions. Moreover, I haue seene them conioynedly pray in the corners of the streets, before the opening of their shops in the morning. They spend but a part of Friday (their Sabbath) in deuotion, and the rest in recreations ; but that so rigorously, that a Turke had his cares nay, I led to his shop-boord for opening it too soone. Their seruice is mixed with Songs and Responses. They neuer looke backe till they come to the salutation of Mahomet ; whom they expect to come againe, and thinke it will be behinde them : They hearken to the Priest reading the Alcoran, or Legend, or intermixing instructions and expositions, with such attention and such steadie postures of bodie, as if they were intranced. They number their often repetitions of the names of G o d, with short ejaculations of prayer and praise vpon beades. If they finde a paper in the streets, they will thrust it in some creuise of the adjoining wall, lest the name of G o d may be therein, and prophaned. Of their publike prayers you shall see more after. They which meane to goe to prayer, goe first to the house of Office, and there purge their bodie : they wash their priue parts : and then going thence, wash their hands, their mouth, their nose, their countenance, and their wrists, each of them three times, and after their eares and neckes, saying a certaine Psalm, and then wash their feet to the mid-legge, saying another Psalm ; and after all this, with a graue pace, walke to Church : without these washings they hold their prayers vnprofitable, Septemcastrensis saith. That for this cause of washing they cut their nayles, and all their haire ; except on their heads and beards (which yet they combe, and bestow curious paines about, that the water may haue free passage to all parts) yea for this cause he thinketh they obscure Circumcision, that nothing be left couered and vnwashed. They haue three kinds of washings : the first of all the body, no part being left free, called Zooagirmeg, which is necessary after any pollution. The second is called Tachirac, of the priuities and hinder parts after stoole, vrine, or breaking of winde. The third, Aptan, or Abdu, in the instruments of the fuellesies, beginning at the hands, from thence the wrists to the elbowes, then the mouth and nostrils ; then all the face ; with the eyes ; then the eares, and from thence to the feet, which he washeth as he as the ankles. This is not necessary before euery Prayer, except some vnclannesse happen, but may serue for all day.

Their Almes, enioyned in the sixth Commandement, are publike or priuate. Their publike Almes is a sacrifice (if we may so call it) or offering of some beast once euery yeere. For whereas of old they should haue giuen a certaine pension of money to the poore, namely, two in the hundred, Mahomet vpon their complaint eased this heavy burthen, and converted it into this sacrifice. This beast must bee cut in pieces, and giuen to the poore ; neither must they themselves eate of it, yet may each man eate of his neighbours offering : and this sacrifice ought to be of the fairest and best Horse, Veale, or Mutton. The place for this sacrifice is called Cannara : where are many Butchers, which cutting the throat thereof, say ; In the name of him which hath made heauen and earth, and all things else ; this sacrifice be to his honour and worship, and let his infinite bountie accept the same. They vse the like vpon occasion of vowes, if any of their house be sicke. As for their priuate Almes, they hold it necessary : hauing a vaine conceit, that if seech them from all imminent misery, which (they say) together with the Almes, runneth from them to the poore man ; whence it commeth die amongst them for want of reliefe : and * if the poore pay not their head-money to the leene (saith Mr. Sandy) but a few beggers amongst them : sometimes you shall meet with couples chained together, begging to satisfie their Creditors.

Marriage ought to be sought (they say) for procreation, not for lust. They which liue vnmarried (after fit time, which is about fise and twentie yeeres of age) are not lust, nor please G o d. Their Law enioyneth them to performe their marriage-ceremonies, with prayers and praises, and modest shamefastnesse ; and they ought to learne each other to read, if either partie be ignorant. But their marriage is now farre degenerate from that ancient simplicitie : * For if a man like a young woman, hee buyeth her of her Father, and then enowlyeth her in the Cadix booke ; the marriage following with all Bacchanall solemnities. Many women are inuited by the Brides mother the night before, when after the feasting they bathe her, and the next morning tricke her in her richest ornaments, tying on her silken buskins :

buskins with knots easily not vnknit (which the Bridegroom must vntie, though with his teeth,) after that with much solemnitie, his companions on horsebacke, riding two in a ranke, & conducted by the Sacdich, who is neere of his kindred haue fetched her home: The Bride being deliuered with her face close couered, set astride on horsebacke, with a Canopie ouer her, and receiued of him at his doore, thence led (if shee be of qualitie by an Eunuch so the Bride-chamber. The guests honour him with Presents, yet come not in. The Father also giueth onely some pieces of household, carryed openly by particulars through the streets. Now hee is to entertaine the Wiues with an equall respect: as like is their lyet, apparell, yea and beneuolence (vnlesse they consent to change or giue turnes) or else they may complaine to the Cadi, and procure a diuorce: but the husband may put away his wiues at pleasure, who may marry vnto another within foure moneths after, except shee proue with childe, and then shee must stay so long after her deliuerie. But if hee will haue her againe, hee must buy her; and if after the third diuorce, another is first to lye with her, as a punishment for his leuitie. They will sell some of them, or giue them to their liues. The wiues giue him the reuerence of a Master. They are at no time to deny him their embracements, whom hee toucheth not againe, vntill they haue bene at the Bath. They hold their chastitment, which they receiue from him, as an argument of affection. They intermeddle not with household affaires: onely it is required of them to content their husbands, to nurse their owne children, and to liue peaceably together, which also they do without iealousie or enuy. They are exceeding beautifull, for the most part ruddy, cleere and smooth as the polished luory; tender and soft, as frequenting the Baths daily, and neuer open to the weather: but wither quickly. Great and blacke eyes are the greatest fayre to hee eyes of a Turke. They sit not at Table with their husband, but waite and serue them; and then they dine by themselves, admitting no mankind with them about twelue yeeres old. And they neuer go abroad without leaue, except to the Bath, and on Thursday to weepe at the graues of the dead: They rise to their husbands, and stand while they are in presence; and besides them, come in no company of men, nor doe they speake with a man, or in any part of their body are seene of any man, because they thinke sight, especially where beautie or comelinesse is, cannot bee without sinne. Onely the brother may bee permitted to see the sister, but not the husbands brother. Yea, their sonnes when they come to growth, are separated from them. For this cause that sexe is not suffered to buy and sell, but is closely newwed, saue that their law alloweth them to frequent the publike Baths. The wife and Concubine differ in the right to a dowrie, which the later wanteth; but the wife must cause the other to bee her husbands bed-fellow, when hee commandeth, without gaine-saying, except on their Sabbath, or Friday night, which is the wiues peculiar. Yet are the Turkes giuen in both Sexes to vnaturall lust (in these times) euen the women in publike Baths, sometimes are so enflamed in that filthinesse, as is intollerable. Busbequius tells of one woman, which falling in loue with a young maide, and no way else preuailling, clothed her selfe in mans apparell, and hyring a house neere, procured the fathers good will to haue that his daughter in marriage; which being solemnized betweene them, and the truth discovered (which the blacke mantle of night could not couer from Hymeneus) complaint was made, and the Gouernour quenched the hot flames of this new Bridegroom, causing her to bee drowned for that offence. If the man abuse the wife to vnaturall lust, shee may asue her remedie by diuorce, if shee accuse her husband: which modestie forbiddeth to see done in words, and therefore shee puts off her shooe, and by inverting the same, accuseth her to her husbands peruersenesse. One Master Simons, which liued amongst them, told me, that there are some which keepe boyes gallantly arraied, to serue for the worse then beauly lust of such as will hyre them. He affirmed also, That they haue this lothsome punishment or that lothsome sinne of whore-dome, to take the panch of a beast new killed, and cutting a hole thorow, to thrust the adulterers head in this dung-wallet, and so carrie him in pompe thorow the streets. It is death, either to the bodie by iudiciall sentence, or the soule by turning Turke, for a Christian to haue carnall dealing with any of their women. A Iew which had dealing with a Turkes wife, with her husbands consent, could not escape hanging therefore, (this indeed was a fauour, for hee should haue bene burned) notwithstanding his rich country-men offered 2000. Duckets to saue him: Her husband was hanged for his wittolily permission, and shee her selfe drowned. George Doufa reporteth the like danger, which an Armenian hardly escaped, but for talking with a Turkish woman, both of them being therefore imprisoned, and thence deliuered at a decre rate. Hee telleth of their Zederatie that they buy boyes at an hundred or two hundred Duckets, and mew them vp for their filthy lust, till they proue bearded; they will also steale boyes for that villa. i.e. as hee instanteth of one which came with the Polonian Embassadour so stolne, and neuer could after bee heard of.

Murder

Murther (prohibited in their eight Commandment) they hold vnpardonable, if it be done wilfully. Often will the Turkes braule, but neuer in private quarters strike one another for feare of this Law, and the severitie of the Magistrate. And if one bee found dead in a street or house, the Master of the house, or the Parish, must finde out the murderer; otherwise hee himselfe shall be accused of it, and the whole Contado shall be fined, and likewise in case of robbrie. During the time that I remained amongst them (you heare Mr. Sandys) it being about three quarters of a yeere, I neuer saw Mahometan offer violence to a Mahometan, nor brake into ill language: If any give a blow, hee hath many gashes made in his flesh, and is led about for a tennor; but the man-slayer is delivred to the friends of the slaine, to bee by them tortured to death. For publike punishments (to mention that heere) they haue impaling on stakes, thrust in at their fundament; ganching on hookes, on which they are cast from some high place, there to hang till famine (if some more gentle crueltie haue not made a suddener dispatch) consumed them: they also haue another invention to twitch the offender about the waste with a towell, enforcing him by often prickings to draw vp his breath, till they haue drawne him within the compasse of a spanne: then tying it hard they cut him off in the middle, and setting the bodie on a hot plate of copper, which seareth the veins, vp-propping him during their cruell pleasure: who not onely retaineth sense, but discourses also, till hee be taken downe, and then departeth in an instant. Little faults are chastised by blowes on the soles of their feet, by hundredths at a time. Parents correct their children by stripes on their bellies.

¶ II.

Of other their Opinions and Practices in Religion.

MANINUS reckoneth seven mortall sinnes; Pride, Avarice, Lecherie, Wrath, Enmie, Sloth, and Gluttonie. The first, they say, cast Lucifer out of heauen. The seconde is the root of many other sinnes. The third is most rife amongst them, and that in the most filthy and vnnatural kinde of Sodomie; their Law to the contrarie notwithstanding. Their fourth maketh a man a beast. The fifth shutteth men out of Paradise, and so forth of the rest. Wine ^a is also forbidden them; but yet they will be drunke with it, if they can get their fill of it. And Mahomet the third (Anno 1601.) imputing diuers insolencies of the Ianizaries to their excessive drinking of Wine (by the Muffies perswasion) commanded on paine of death, all such in Constantinople and Pera, as had Wine, to bring it out and stauet it (except Embassadors onely) so that the streets ranne therewith. One drinking Wine ^b with Burbequins, made great clamors; being asked the cause, hee said hee did it to warne his soule to flee into some corner of the bodie, or else be quite gone, lest it should be polluted with that sinne. Yet in their Fast or Lent they abstaine very religiously. ^c If it be proued against a Priest, that he hath drunke wine but once, hee shall neuer be beleueed as a witness after it. Swines flesh is prohibited too; in abstaining from which they are more obedient; it being vterly abhorred.

^b A. C. S. B. B. Epist. 1.

^d The Turkes are no Isalamongers.

The Turkes ^d generally hate (with Septemcastrensis) that lightnesse in apparell, speech, gesture, &c. vsed of the Christians, whom for this cause they call Apts and Goates. Likewise they are not sumptuous in their private buildings. They go to the warre as it were to a wedding, esteeming them blessed which are therein slaine. The wines and women-servants agree in one house, without iealousie and grudging; they are in their habite and behaviour modest: and, where himselfe dwelt, the Father-in-law had not seene the face of his Daughter-in-law, living in the same house with him, in twentie yeeres space; so religiously doe they veyle themselves.

On Friday they pray more deuoutly, but (as the Alcoran also permitte) they abstaine not from all labour. He saw the Grand Signior himselfe goe to their Church, and likewise to the Bath, attended onely with two youths; none vsing any acclamation to him. And in the Church he prayed on the pavement couered with a carpet, like to the rest, without any throne or ensigne of royaltie. And hee obserued the like modestie in his other behaviour. But this (as other things from their ancient simplicitie) is now altered. Thus Mr. Sandys of Achnat, Mosque; and when in state, there is not in the world to bee seene a greater spectacle of humane glory, or (if so I may speake) of a sublimated manhood. For although the Temple of St. Sophia, which hee most visually frequenter, bee not about a stones cast from the utmost gate of the Seraglio, yet hath hee not so few as a thousand horse, besides the Archers of his guard foot-men, in that short procession: the way on each side enclosed with Cappages and Ianizaries in Scarlot. The Aga, Captaines, Bassaes, Beglerbegs, and the rest attending in exceeding pompe, and yet (which is the greater marvell) in exceeding silence, the eares discerning no more then in midnight sleepe, except when they salute him with a soft and short murmur: So like wise in entertainment of Embassadors, he sits in a rich roome vpon a low Throne, the Bassaes standing by like Statues without speech or motion. The stranger is led betwene two, and goes backward from him, neuer putting off his hat: for to shew the head they hold it an opprobry.

The Turkes are so zealous in their superstition, that they will rather lose their life then Religion: as among other examples in Scanderbegs time at Dibra, many Turkes chose rather to die Turkes, then to be Christians; yea some, as it is reported, rather to kill themselves, then to leaue their superstition: and in the yeere 1568. The Persian Embassador was shot at, and one of his followers hurt by a Turke, who being apprehended, confessed that hee did it because he was an Heretike, and sent from an Heretike: for which fact he was drawne at an horse-tayle throw the Chaine, and then had his right hand cut off, and after his head. They hate the Persians, as Ruissan Bassa told Bukequin, more then they doe the Christians: like as the Traditionarie Jew doth the Textuarie, and the Papist the Protestant.

Luthe. Epist. 3.

Images they haue in such detestation, that (besides the scratching out the eyes of those in the Misajque worke of Saint Sophies Temple) when Solyma ouerthrew King Lewis of Hungary, he carried away three Images of cunning worke in Brasse, representing Hercules with his Club, Apollo with his Harpe, Diana with her Bow and Quiver, and placed them in the Tilt-yard at Constantinople: but by the perswasion of the Multie, they were molten into great Ordnance. They haue no Scutchions or blazing of Armes: nay, they vse no scales in their letters or other writings, which seeme to them to fauour of superstition, or superstitiue.

When they conquer any Citie, they turne the Temples into Mosques, and sacrifice there. Thus did Solyma at Buda, and Amurath sacrificed sixe hundred captiues to his Fathers ghost.

They are moderate in their priuate buildings, and detest the Christians for their excessive and superfluous expences that way: What (say they) doe those Pagans thinke they shall liue euer? They often lodge (saith Villamont) at the Signe of the Moone; and the like moderation they vse in diet and apparell. They haue a brasse por, and their other meane household implements with them in the warres, which they vse in peace. Ready money is their surest riches, because the Grand Signior is their surest Heire.

They haue the rising of the Sunne in great reuerence; and especially the appearing of the new Moone: as when Mahomet the great besieged Scodra, the new Moone beginning to shew her selfe, the Mahometane Priests, going about the Armie, gaue the Souldiers warning thereof, as the manner is, by singing of a Song in manner of a Procession; whereunto the whole Armie answered with a short respond, and at the same time bowing themselves to the ground, saluted the Moone with great superstition.

They may haue twelue lawfull Wiues; and as many Concubines as they will (some say, but foure Wiues.) The children of the one are equally legitimate as well as the other, and inherite alike: yet few of them keepe two Wiues together in one house: but in severall places where they haue dealings, they haue severall Wiues, which they diuorce at pleasure. Some say, but foure Wiues are allowed them: no great matter, where all their owne are allowed to their vse, with others they may not meddle. The offending man they gash; the woman they drowne.

They tell many things of Antichrist (whom they call Tetischel) and of the Resurrection, and of the last Iudgement, of Hell, and Purgatorie: And that Mahomet after Iudgement shall deliuer all of all Religions from thence.

k Lemelae, 13th Decem.

They haue no knowledge of liberrall Arts, of cases of Conscience, of Originall sinne, or of actiual, further then the outward act.

Their respects to Reliques appeareth by Mahomet the third, 1597. who in the discomfiture of his Armie fled towards Agria, shedding some teares as he went, and wiping his eyes with a peece of *Mahomet*s garment, which he carried about him as a Relique.

The Turkes may neither eate, drinke, nor make water, standing.

In their aduersitie they seeke with earnest prayers to their Prophets; and publike supplications are sometimes decreed. At the taking of Alba Regalis, 1601. the Bassa of Buda (then prisoner at Vienna,) hearing of it, abstained from meate, with his two seruants a whole day, prostrate vpon his face, praying vnto his Prophet Mahomet, who hee said had beene angrie all that yeere with the Turkes. They endure punishments inflicted by the Magistrats with great patience, thinking they shall escape all torment in those parts of the World to come: they therefore reward the whipper, and esteeme the whip (which I enuie not to them) sacred.

f Septemest. They are (but contrarie to the Alcoran) addicted to sorceries and dreames: their Priests write them letters or spells, to keep them from danger and harme of shot, &c. called f mayy. They will write any thing for money, as letters of freedome for servants to run away from their masters, and such like. They make a shew of holiness, but are clofly wicked, ignorant of their owne law (to cover which, they enswere in darke sentences) and the people much more. Nothing is sune, to count of, but that which endamageth ciuill societie.

w Workes. They esteeme for good workes, & the buildings and endowings of Hospitals, making Bridges and High-ways, digging of Pits and Wells, and conueying waters to High-ways and Cities, building Bathes, and founding of Churches, and such like publike workes. Raslan b M. Harbun. Bissaleft his wife, the Daughter of Selyman, at his death fiftene millions of gold, and shee had of yeerely reuenue halfe a million: shee, amongst other her workes, attempted one most famous, which was a conduit to conuey water, for the vie of the Pilgrims betwixt Cairo and Mecca, fortie dayes journey, and for the same intent procured the Sultan Selym her brother, to write to the Venetians for a licence to extract out of Italy an hundred thousand pound of Steele, only to make Chizzells, Hammers, and Mattocks, for the cutting of certaine Rocks, by which this water must passe.

k Andr. Ambulens. Their Oaths (especially of their Emperours) are of many cuts, and variētie of fashion. And for Vowes in necessaries and dangers, they will promise vnto God the sacrifices of beasts in some holy places, not vpon Altars, but k hauing flaid off the skin, they giue it with the head, feet, and forth part of the flesh to the Priest; another part to the Poore; the third to the Neighbour; the fourth is for the Guests.

They are so addicted to the opinion of Fate, that God is esteemed to blesse whatsoever hath successe, as namely, Selym murdering his Father; and to detest what wanteth good euent, whatsoever ground it had. They feare, not the Plague, accounting euery mans time limited by Fate, and therefore will wipe their faces with the cloathes of such as haue dyed thereof.

They hold l it alike acceptable to God, to offer almes to beasts, and to bestow it on men, when it is offered for the loue of God. Some there are, which will redeeme birds, imprisoned in their cages or coops, and hauing payed their price, let them flie. Others (for the loue of God) cast bread into the water to feed the fishes, esteeming it a worke greatly meritorious; but Dogges are accounted vncleane, in stead whereof they delight in Cats, following (they say) their Prophet Mahomet, who falling asleepe at table, and awaking to goe to his deuotions, rather cutt off his sleeue, whereon he found his Cat fast asleepe, then he would disturbe her. Master Simons told mee, that he hath seene them at Cairo feed Dogges with baskets of bread, one standing by with a club to keepe them from fighting: and one gaue almes fora Birch which had Whelps vnder a stall. Heerein perhaps (as in other things) the Egyptians are more superstitious then the Turkes, especially in this of Dogs, which fauours of their old Anubis and dog-worshipping. Yes, and in Constantinople, m though they suffer them not as vncleane creatures, to come into their houles, yet they thinke it a deed of pietie to feed them, and buy bread therefore, providing them kennells also: most of them haue no particular owner: they repaire to the Sea-side nightly, where they keepe a grieuous howling, heard (if the winde be Southward) to Pera.

They say Moses was the first great Prophet, to whom was giuen the booke of Tefrit, that is, the Law, and they which obserued it in those times were saued. But when men grew corrupt, God gaue Dauid the booke Czabur, or the Psalter: and when this preuailed not, Iesus was sent with the booke Ingil, or the Gospel, whereby in that time men were saued. They hold that Christ was borne of the Virgin Marie, at her breasts, hauing conceived by the smell of a Rose, which the Angell Gabriel presented her. And preferring Christ before Moses, they admit not a few to tume Turke, but hee must first be a Christian, and eat Swines-flesh, and after two or three dayes abiuiring Christ, hee is made Musulman. For so Mahomet came last in order of the Prophets with his Alcoran. This Law and Lawgiuer is so sacred to them, that in all their prayers, euen from their mothers breasts, they obserue this forme: La ilah, illelah Mehemmet irrefullalah tanve nirpeghamber hacc: That is, there is no God but one, and Mahomet his Prophet: one Creator, and more Prophets. This they sucke in with their milke, and in their first learning to speake, lipe out this deuotion. The infants goe with the rest to their Mosques or Mescuits, but are not tied to other ceremonies, sauing washing, till they are circumcised. Euery man n hath (in their opinion) from his birth to his death two Angels attending him; the one at his right hand, the other at his left. At foure or five yeere old they send him to the Schoole to learne the Curaam, and the first words which their Masters teach them are to this sence; God is one, and is not contained in any place, but is through all, and hath neither father nor mother, nor children, eateth not, nor drinketh, nor sleepeeth, and nothig is like to him. The two Angels before said, are called called Chiramins and Chiraribin, which write the good or euill that men doe against the day of Iudgement. The Turkes $\propto$ abhorre blasphemie not onely against God and Mahomet, but also against Christ and the Virgin Marie, and other Saints: and they punish blasphemers of whatoeuer Sect: they account it a sinne for a man to build a house which shall last longer then a mans life: and therefore howeouer they are sumptuous and magnificent in there public buildings, yet are their priuate dwellings very homely, and ill conſtruted. They eate much Opium, thinking it maketh them courageous in the warres. They $\propto$ haue a remedie for paine in the head or elsewhere, to burne the part affected with the touch-boxe (which they alway carry with them) or with some linnen cloth, whereby they haue many markes on their foreheads and temples, wittneſſes of their needlesse and heedlesse respect to Physicians.

As the Scripture attaineth some Prophecies of the arising and proceedings of the Turkish Nation, the rod of God, whereby hee scourgeth his Christian people; so haue they also prophecies amongst themselves of their end and ruine, when God in his mercie to Christians shall execute iustice vpon the Turkes, and cast the rod into the fire, wherewith hee had chastised his children. Such an one is that which Gregoriovitz ⁊ translate and expoundeth: and such is that which Leuenclavius hath transcribed out of their Booke called Messiahli, wherein is written, that Constantinople shall be twice taken before Degnal Lain, that is, the curled Antichrist, shall come; once by the Sword, another time by the force of the prayers of the foines of Isabae Lain: is an Epithete which they giue to Degnal, signifying wicked or mischieuous. Of this Degnal the Turkes fable, that before his coming, shall Mechdi enioy the Empire. This Mechdi, they say, ⁊ was defended of their Prophet Mahummer, and walketh inuisible: one day hee shall come into light, and raigne for a time: and after him shall Degnal be their Anti-Propheet, or Antichrist, come. A certain Deruif: offered to assault & murder Baiazet the Great Turk, professing himselfe to be that Mechdi, and was slayn by one of the Bassas.

Of the Turkish Manners, their Civill and Morall behaviour.

AS for the bloodie practises, which each Emperour vseth in murdering his brethren to secure him in his Throne, In rooking out of the Nobilitie of the Countiees which they conquein raising the Walls & Fortresses of the Cities, least they should be receptacles for conspiracie, in translating people from one Countie to another, with other their practises and policies of state, I purpose not to adde any more: but refer the Reader to others Treatises. But to present vnto you a Turke set forth in the ordinary Turkish disposition, manners, and fashions, will not (I thinke) seeme tedious. Thus therefore have we viewed him with others eyes. They be generally well complexioned, of good statures, and full bodies, proportionably compacted. They nouish no haire about them, but a locke on their crowne, and on their faces only, esteeming it more cleanly: and to bee better prepared for their superstitious washings. But their beards they wear at full length, the markes of their affected grauitie, and token of freedome (for slauces haue their shauen) scoffing at Christians which cut or want them. All of them wear on their heads white Shashes and Turbants, the badge of their Religion: as is the folding of the one, and size of the other, of their vocations and qualitie. Shashes are long Towells of Callico wound about their heads. Turbants are made like great Globes, of Callico too, and thwarted with rolles of the same; hauing little capped caps on the top, of Greene or red veluet: being only worn by persons of ranke, and he the greatest that weares the greatest, except the Muffics, which ouer-sizeth the Sultan: some Christians (Turking in fashion) are permitted as a great fauour to wear white heads in the Citie. The next, that they wear is a smocke of Callico with ample sleeuces, much longer then their armes: vnder this, a paire of Calcons of the same, which reach to their ankles, the rest naked: their slip-shoes yellow or red, picked at the toe, and plated on the sole: ouer all a half-sleeued coate, girt vnto them with a Towell: their necke all bare: and this within doores is their Summer accoutrement. Ouerr all, when they goe abroad, they wear gownes buttoned before, vngathered in the shoulders. In the Winter they adde to the former, Calcons of cloth, which about the small of the legge are sewed to short smooth buskins of leather without soles, lining their gowmes with Furses, as they doe their coats. They wear no gloues, nor alter their fashions, which (except in richnesse) are like in all. They retain the old worlds custome in giuing change of garments, one vest fitting all. The Clergie goe much in Greene, as Mahometts colour: whole kinfmen wear Greene Shashes, and are called Emers, or Lords, as doe their women allo somewhat of Greene on their heads: an ill-fauoured race, seeming branded of God, for their hereditarie presumption of holinesse from so vnholly a stocke. If a Christian wear Greene, they will

teare off his clothes, if not beate him. They carry no weapons about them in the Citie : onely they thrust vnder their girdles great crooked knives of a dagger-like size, in sheaths of metall, the hatts and sheaths sometimes richly set with stones. They beate their bodies upright, of a stately gait, and elated countenance. In their familiar salutations they lay their hands on their bosomes, and a little decline their bodies, almost to the ground, if to a Great man, with kissing the hemme of his garment. The ornaments of their heads they neuer put off vpon any occasion. They affect cleanness euen religiously, neuer making water, but they wash their hands and priuities: this they doe secretly and couching, reuiling the Christian, or striking him for pissing against a wall. This they doe also, lest they should pollute their garment, which might frustrate their prayers. They neuer walke vp and dowe for recreation, nor vie any other exercise but shooting, and then also sit on carpets in the shadow, and fend their slaues for their Arrowes. These pierce deepe, through Targets of Steele and pieces of Brasse two inches thicke : the Bow for forme and length like the lath of a Crosse-bow, of Buffalos Horne, intermixed with sinewes of admirable workmanship. Wrestling and rope-walking are professions, not recreations. Of Cardes and Dice they are happily ignorant : at Chess they will play all day long, auoiding yet the hazard of money. The better sort delight in Horfes, which are quickly jaded if held to a good round trot (for amble they doe not) in an indifferent iourney. But they ride not so fast to put them to it. They feed them in their stable with Barley, which there is very cheape, as onely seruing for that purpose.

They greatly reuerence their Parents and Superiours, and the young, the aged : the left hand as they got, hath the prioritie of the right, in that they are made Masters of the others sword, and the chiefeft place the furthest from the wall. They liue brotherly together, but come not, except on speciall occasion, in each others house, and then but into the more publike parts thereof. Their houses and furniture are meane, hauing nothing on the inside but white walles (except some speciall roomes) the roofes of many curiously ceiled, the greater part of the floore, and that a little advanced, couered with carpets, the cause they at entering put off their slip-shoes. They lie on Matresses of Silke, or stained Linnen, with Bolsters of the same, and Quilts suitable, but much in their clothes : as for lowliness which followes, it is no great shame. They haue neither Tables nor Stooles, but sit crosse-legged on the floore all in a ring. They haue a skinn spread before them in stead of a cloth. The better sort sit about a round board standing on a foot, halfe a foot high, and brimmed like a Charger. Rice sod in the fat of Mutton is their ordinarie food ; Potrage also, fried Eggs, Pasties, Tanfics, Flesh little in gobbits, London spending as much flesh in one day, as Constantinople in twentie. Fish they haue in indifferent quantitie. The Commons commonly feed on Herbes, Rootes, Onions, Cardis, hodge-podge, &c. vile fare, and at as vile rate in so great plentie. They are attended by their slaues, of which to haue many is to bee rich. When one hath fed sufficiently he tisseth, and another takes his roomes, and so continue till all bee satisfied. They este three times a day : but when they feast they sit all day long, except they rise and exonerate nature, forthwith returning. They abstaine from Hoggs-flesh, Bloud, and that which dies alone, except in necessitie. Their usuall drinke is water : the richer infuse diuers confectiōes. Wine is prohibited, but so greedily swallowed where they can get it, that but few goe away viled from the Embassadors table. Our Beere they preferre before all other drinckes, which would in all likelihood prouee exceedingly profitable to such as would bring it in amongst them, where wine is forbidden, and Barley is at nine pence a bushell. They haue Coffa houses more common then Ale-houses with vs, in, or neere to which on benches in the street, they will sit chatting most of the day, drinking their Coffa (so called of a berry it is made of) as hot as they can indure it. It is blacke as soot, and tastes not much unlike it, good (they say) for digestion and mirth. Of the boyes which some Coffa-men keepe as slaues, wee haue spoken before. Optum they much vse, it seemes for the giddinesse and turbulent dreames it causeth, which they (as all kinde of stupifying, astonishment and madnesse) religiously affect. This perhaps the cause why Tobacco is so liked, a thing brought them by the English, the worst here, pissing currant, and excellent there. But Mora Basia, not long since, caused a pipe to be thrust through the nose of a Turke, and so led in derision through the Citie. They take it through reeds with great heads of wood annexed.

The vnder garments of the women differ little from those of the men. These weare on their heads a cap sugar-loose-fashion, the better sort vse Bracelets and Jewells. When they goe abroad they weare ouer all, long gownes of violet or scarlet cloth, tyed close before, the longer sleeves hanging over their hands. They haue the sweetest children that are lightly seen, which they carry a-ride on their shoulders. They anoint their bodies with the earth of Chios, which makes the skinn soft, white, and shining, freeing the face from wrinkles.

c In imitation,
I seeme, of their Prophet Machmet, which had the

They vse their bond women with little lesse respect then their wiues. Their Markets yeeld Men, Women, Virgins, Children, to as ample tryall and full purchase as Horses with vs: saue that the Men-slaues may compell their Masters before the Cadi to limit the time of their bondage, or set a price of their redemption, or else to sell them to another. But Galley slaues are seldome released, or those that belong to great men beyond the Cadies authoritie. They buy little children, and geld many of them, as you haue heard, which some say was begun by Selym the second, after he had scene a Gelding couer a Mare: and by Menasinus his relation of himselfe, seemes not practised in his father Balarzets time. These are in great repute with their Masters: yea, the second Vizier of the Port is now an Einnuch.

For Arts; some haue some little knowledge in Philosophie. Necessitie hath taught them the practise of Physicke, not the grounds of Arts. In Astronomie they haue some insight, and vndertake to tell fortunes. They haue a good gift in Poetrie. Their Musicke is very vile.

The Grand Signior was once perswaded to heare some Italian Musick, but while they pent much time in tuning, hee (perhaps esteeming that their Musick) commanded them to depart. Logick and Rhetorick they reiect. Some write Histories, but few read them, thinking none dare write the truth of the present, or can, of the times past. Printing they reiect, the most of their Priests liuing by writing. Euery one hath some trades, such lightly as Scru their owne turnes; a lazie people, more esteeming ease then profit, yet very couetous, seldome holding compact with the Christians that holds not with their commoditie.

Turkish women. Though they be courteous to each other, and will askehow himselfe, child, slaue, horie, cat, &c, doe: yet neuer of the wife: yea, if you aske a child how his mother does, he will throw stones and reuile you. Siddulph.

THE places * of most Religion to the Turkes abroad, are those which Mahomet himselfe polluted with his irreligion: as Mecca, Medina, &c. The places of most Religion amongst themselves are their Moschets, or Meschits: that is, their Temples and Houses of Prayer (whereof they have many in all Turkie) and next therunto their Hospitals for the reliefe of the poore, impotent, and Pilgrims. Neither are the Turkes sparing in these or the like (seeming charitable exp. nses. For when a Turke falleth sicke, and thinketh he shall thereof dye, hee sends for his friends and kinsfolkes, and in their presence maketh his Testament: the greatest Legacies whereof are bequeathed to publike vses, which they thinke will be meritorious to their soules.

Such as the making and repaying of Bridges, Cawseyes, Conduits to conuey water to their Hospitals or Temples. Some also giue to the Redemption of Captiues. Many of their Women (the deuout Sexe, whether in Religion or superstition) bequeath money to be distributed amongst such Souldiers as haue slaine any certaine number of Christians: a deed in their conceit very religious. These are the Walls and Deeds of the inferior sort. But the Emperors, and great Bassaes, appoint Legacies to expresse a greater magnificence with their donation, as the building of Temples and Hospitals.

Their Temples or Melchites are for the most part foure square, not much vnlike to our Churches, but larger in length then bredth. The Temple of St. Sophie in Constantinople is of all other in the Turkes Dominion the most admirable, built long since by Iustinian, and (by Mahomet the Conqueror) peruered to this Mahometan vse about nine hundred yeeres after. Of this Temple they write, * that it was first built by Constantius, sonne of Constantine the Great, with a rooffe of timber: and burnt by the Arrians in the time of Great Theodosius, who againe repayed it. Sozomenus * saith, that in the broyles, which hapned not long after in the raigne of Arcadius and Honorius about Chrysostome, the Church was fired, his enemies ascribing it to his partakers, and they againe to his Adversaries. It is reported that Theodosius Iunior rebuilt it. Put in the time of Iustinian, Procopius * testifieth, that base and wick d men burnt it againe, which Iustinian built a new in such sumptuous and manifest for, that in regard of this change it might haue bene wished that it had perished long before. His chiefe worke-men were Anthemius, and Isidorus, who raised it into a most goodly frame, which might amaze the beholders, and seeme incredible to the hearers. Both he and Enagorius * recite the particulars. The length was two hundred and threescore feet: the bredth one hundred and fiftene: the height a hundred and fourscore. Zonaras, Agathias, and Georgius Cedrenus, tell of the harmes it receiued by Earthquakes, which Iustinian lured, which yet he repayed, as did Basilus and Andronicus after him. Nicephorus * saith, that Constantine raised the Temple of Peace (which before was but small) to that large and stately attesse, which in his dayes it retaind: and his sonne Constantius finished the Temple of Sophia to neere it, that they seemed to haue but one wall. It was * founded by Constantine his father: and was burnt in a sedition of the people, in the raigne of Iustinian, in which rebellion thirtie thousand of the people were slaine, and partly to pacifie the wrath of God (saith hee) for so great a slaughter, hee built this Temple. From the side of the Temple hee tooke * foure hundred twentie and seuen Pillars or Images of Heathen gods, and of the twelue figures of the Zodiacke: and fourscore Statues of Christian Emperours, which hee distributed in the Citie. But more then enough of the ancient structure thereof.

As it is at this day, diuers haue described it: but of them all most diligently, Petrus * Gelius. The walls and roofes thereof are of Brick, the inner part lyned with Marble most excellent, and of diuers sort, the rooffe is set with Stones, and pieces of Glasse gilded: Nature and Art conspiring to breed the beholders both pleasure and wonder. It is so composed and the Pillars and Arches so placed, that the middle Ile within (considered by it selfe, seeme:

seemes like the forme of an Egge, long and round : but the whole fabrick both within and without, yeeldeth to the curious obseruer a square forme. All the inner part hath Arches (in the top open to receiue light) which are sustained with Marble Pillars of diuers colours, and there are, saith Bellonius, (if one may say it) as many doores in that Temple, as are daies in the yeere. It is farre more admirable then the Roman Pantheon : The worke of that being grosse, solid, and easie for a workeman to conceiue. But this Sophian Temple is more subtile to the view of the eye and minde. It hath two rowes of Pillars each ouer other, those vpper ones supporting the hemisphere, loouer, or steeple, which is wrought all with Mulaike worke, garnished with gold and azure. The doores or gates are covered with fine Latten of Corinth : one of which (they imagine) was made of the wood of Noahs Arke. And therefore there are in it three places left vncouered for the deuouter people to kisse, for the pardon of their sinnes. It had sometimes aboue three hundred thousand Duckets of yeerely reuenue. The Turkes, when they turkeified it, threw downe the Altars, turned the Bells into great Ordnance, and either tooke away the Images, or put out their eyes, for (say they) God, and not walls and pictures, is to be adored. Nicolas & Nicolai saith, that it had in compass more then a mile, within which were comprehended the houses of Carons and Priests : of the most part of the Cloyster (because it was neere the Seraille) they made a stable for horses ; as Constantines Palace for Elephants ; and a Temple (neete the Tilt-yard, or Hippodromus) for wilde beasts, which are tied to the seuerall pillars thereof, Lyons, Beares, Wolves, wilde Asles, Ounces, &c. No Christian may enter into this Meschit, but he may put his bodie in at the doores and view it : But Master Simons saith, they are not now so scrupulous : for he hath bene suffered to goe in : as G. Doufa also reporteth of himselfe. There haue been at once (in the time of Baiaacet) numbred a thirrie and sixe thousand Turkes assembled for deuotion at an Easter-solemnitie. Perhaps (it is Master Sandys his obseruation) the ancient fabrick then standing entire, whereof this remaining was little more then the channell. Better to be beleueed then Bellonius his report of so many doores, whereas if it hath five, it hath more by one, then by me was discerned. It is almost euery other Friday frequented by the Sultan. The Christian Emperours ascended the stately Galleries on horse-backe. Before the entrance there is a goodly Portico, where the Christians, that visit it on curiositie, as well as the Turkes, doe leaue their shooes before they doe enter. It had in Iustinians time Porches or Galleries on both sides, one of which it seemeth fell by some earthquake. The innumerable windowes, and vspeakable ornaments of the Temple, would easily detain our pen, as a willing prisoner in the relation thereof. But besides the ancient, P. Gyllius, Ammanius, Bellonius, Nicolas, Doufa, and many others haue done it already : neither will my Pilgrimage suffer mee to stay long in one place, which am to visite so many, both here and else where in the World. Let vs proceed therefore to their other Temples : especially seeing this is such, that none is able to expresse the excellencie, nor could euer worthily expresse the least part thereof. Besides, what others haue reported, Doufa telleth of a Marble Pillar therein, which continually sweats forth a certaine liquor, which the Turkes wipe off with their handkerchiefs, as (in their opinion) profitable against diuers diseases.

Mahomet the Conquerour built one in like fashion without any figures, which hath about an hundred houses couered with Lead for their Doctors and Priests, and for all Strangers and P. Igrims of any Nation or Religion, where they may refresh themselves, their seruants, and horses for three daies, with meat and lodging at free cost. There are also without the precinct of the Mosche, an hundred and fiftie other Tenements for the poore of the Citie, which haue there an Alpera day, and as much bread as they need : but they account that kinde of life so vnhappy, that oftentimes those Tenements stand empty : but the money which should this way be bestowed, is sent to the Hospitalls of the diseased. There are also five other Meschits, in forme resembling the former, but not so great nor so rich. The rest of the Meschits are of diuers sorts, some high, some low, of seuerall fashions. The Turkes, vpon which their Priests call the people to prayers, are of a great height, made in manner of Watch-towers ; their greater Churches hauing two, the lesser one of them. Vpon the top is set an halfe Moone or Cresent, which is the Turkes Ensigne, as the Crosse is vnto all the Christians. Within their Temples they haue no kinde of ornaments, but bare walls, with Arabike Letters (some in gold) written thereon, saue onely their Bookes, and Lamps burning with oyle in great abundance, and clothes of Tapestry, on the which being spread ouer Mats vpon the pavement, they prostrate themselves in prayer time.

Of their Hospitals and Monasteries.

THEIR Hospitals they call Imarets; of these there are great use, because they want Innes in the Turkes Dominions. They found them for the reliefe of the poore, and of Travellers, where they have food allowed them (differing according to the vie of the place) and lodging places, without beds. They are open for the most part to all men of all Religions. The chiefe Hospitals in Turkie, are in Constantinople: two of 12 which Mahomet and Baiazet his sonne founded. Both these haue about five and twentie round Turrets couered with Lead; one of which, being in the middelt of the other, is larger and greater then the rest, and vnder are lodgings for the Priests: On one side are beds for Pilgrims and Trauellers, on the other for Lepers. Thrice a day may any man resort thither into a certaine place for meate. There are maintained foueteene Doctors of their Law. Somel say, that the reuenues of *Mahomet*s Hospitall amount to an hundred and fiftie thousand Duckets, and the other to as much or more. Each of which hath a little Chappel adioyning, in which the Founders are buried, who were at this great charge, that the Priests and such as are there refreshed, should pray for their soules, and say, Alla Rahmetsefion: that is, God haue mercy on them. Selym finished that which Baiazet his father had begun to build, But his sonne Solyman erected one farte surpassing the former. Orchanes was the first of these Ottoman Princes which founded Monasteries. Mahomet the first, finished a the great Temple at Hadrianople, the seat Royall of the Turkes in Europe before Constantinople was won. He built also, besides a Palace, another Temple, with a most sumptuous Abbey, and a publike Schoole adioyning, endowing the same with great reuenues. He also gaue great summes of money to be distributed yeerely at Mecca and Medina, for the reliefe of poore Pilgrims. Solyman erected, in memoriall of Mahomet his eldest sonne, a stately Tombe, a sumptuous Church, a Monasterie and Colledge, with other things for the health of his soule. He was buried himselfe in a Chappell which hee had in his life time built most stately, with a Colledge and Hospitall; his wife Roxolana, and some of his murdered children lying intombed by him: his Seimatar also hanging by him, in token that hee dyed in warres, which honour they grant not other wise to their Princes. The reuenues of the Country about Sigeth in Hungary (lately wonne from the Christians) were given to the maintenance of those houses, which his deuotion had founded. Neither is it lawfull for them to conuert any Lands to such sacred uses, except they haue first with their owne sword wonne them from the enemies of their Religion; the most acceptable seruice to their Prophet. And therefore Selym the second, sonne and successour of Solyman, intended to build a Magnificent Temple, and Munificent Colledge, Monasterie and Almshouse at Hadrianople, where hee intended his Sepulchre, brake his league with the Venetians, & wan Cyprus from them, that thence he might endow the same with maintenance. But it were tedious to insist further in declaring their expences, which deuotion in all Turkey hath procured: their Emperors and Bassies esteeming nothing of more honor in the world, or merit for heauen. Let vs come to their Church-rites and Ceremonies.

§. III.

Of their publike Prayers and Church-Rites.

THE Temples in Turkie are (as hath beene said) innumerable, both publike, and private of meaner bauldings: on which is a Tower, as with vs a Steeple, whereupon on the Muectin or Thalsman ascendeth: and it being open with Pillars or four Windows, first he goeth to that on the East-side, and calleth the people to pray with a loud voyce, stopping his eares with his hands; crying: There is no God but one, and Mahomet his Messenger: come to make prayer for remission of your sins, and know that there is no stronger then the God of Mahomet his Messenger. This hee saith in order on every side of the Steeple. If there be in the Citty any Moschee, the Cathedrall beginneth, and then all other Parishionall follow. This they doe five times a day, and on Friday (their Sabbath) sixe times. First, at Sun-rising, with foure bendings to the earth, and twice praying. The second about noone, with ten bowings, and five prayings. The third, at afternoon before Sun-set, with eight inclinations, and foure prayings. The fourth, with five bendings and three prayings about Sun-set. The fifth, longer then the rest, with fifteen bowings, and eight prayings. This bending or bowing they call Likes, which is a double bowing with with prostrating himselfe: their prayer they call Czalamet, which they make sitting at every Erket, with a salutation on the right hand and on the left, and the impression or signe of peace, which is done with bringing both hands over the face. Every Musلمان is bound to resort to these their Lurgies, at his Parishionall Melchit, except hee have some lawfull impediment: and if not at all of them, yet at least at one to be well washed, for which purpose they have innumerable Baths in Turkie fairly built; nor may any enter into the Temple, especially in the morning, but first well washed in the Bath, as is said before; and if hee keepeth him not cleane the rest of the day, that washing will serve; but * if he have committed any carnall sinne, or be any way soiled, or have eaten any unclean thing, then in some secret place he washeth his hands and armes to the elbow, his hinder parts ^b and privities; and this sufficeth without going to Bath, except he be otherwise polluted. For defect herein they haue inquisitions, and appointed penalties; respect or pardon being given to none that faile, especially on Friday, and in their Lent: Such a one is carried about the Towne with a board fastned to his necke, all be-hanged with Foxe-tayles, besides a penaltie according to his state in money; and he that will not thus order himselfe, shall not be allowed their buriall rites. After they are thus washed, they put off their shoes in imitation of Moses, and then enter into the Melchitta, where the floor is covered with Mats or Carpets, nor is any other thing seen but white walls, and great store of burning Lamps, and in golden Arabike letters those c words before mentioned.

There is a Pulpit, on which the Choza or Focqui ascendeth, and the first thing he doth is to stretch out his hands at large, and then joining them together, he kneeleth and kisseth the ground: then heliseth vp his head, and stopping his eates with his hands, standing a good space, as it were ^d distracted or rauished in his prayers, after lifting vp his hands, hee againe kisseth the ground so many times, as the houre of prayer according to that former rule, requirerh; and then lifting vp himselfe againe, he stretcheth out his hands againe, so standing about a quarter of an houre, and againe kneeling with his mouth to the ground, so continueth mouing it euery way about a Pater noster while, and then lifting vp his head, and setting his hands to his eares, falls to his praying another quarter of an houre, and then heaureth the people to depart. There is no noyle heard * as if there had beene nothing within. Not so religious is their course (and yet that religion admits it) which Martin Baidenobch reporteth to be practised by them in a Melchit on Mount Sinai, where Moses receiued the Law; for the Saracens vse to get therein Prophets, thinking the issue there gotten is holy, and full of the Propheticall spirit.

Menauino thus describeth their Rites. After their mysticall washing (as before) they goe with a sober pace to the Melchit (not like one which rinneeth away) and if he happen to breake winde by the way, his former washing is vsufficient, and hee must returne to renew it. Being assembled in the Melchit, they all turne their faces ^f Southwards, and the Meizin or Muelden, Clerke, Sexton, Priest, Bell-ringer, or Bell rather standeth vp and readeth that Psalme, which before hee had cried to them in the steeple, and euery one standeth vp, holding his hands fastned to his waste, and bow their heads to their feete with great reuerence, and with uttersing. Then ariseth another Priest of another order called Imam, and readeth a Psalme alowde, the Meizin as his Clerke answering, which being ended they fall on the ground, and say, Saban alla, Saban alla, Saban alla, that is, God haue mercie on vs most wretched sinners, abiding prostrate till the Priest Imam singeth againe his Psalme, and then they rise. And this they doe foure or fve times, according to the order of their seruice. After this they all kneele and prostrate themselves on the ground, the Meizin obseruing a long Ceremonie, in which with a loud voyce hee prayeth God to inspire the Christians, Iewes, Greekes, and generally all Infidels to turne to their Law. This being said, euery man listeth his hand to heauen, crying aloud, Amin, Amin: and then they touch their eyes to wipe them with their hands, (which is, as crying among the Papists, a blessing of themselves) bringing their hands ouer their face, and so they depart. In the English Treatise of the Turkish Policie these things are related, with some other Ceremonies; as that they say together with the Priest the first Azoara or Chapter of the Alcoran, &c. Bartholomaeus & Georgiowitz saith, that onely the chiefe sort are bound to assemble to the daily deuotions, which they obserue fve times a day; others, which cannot spare the times, are not tied. On their Sabbaths it is otherwife.

§. III.

Of their Sabbaths, and of their Lent and Easter.

THE women enter not their Mesquitas, but on Fridayes at nine a clocke, or at Easter, and then they are in a Gallery or Terrasse apart, where they may see and not bee seene, and this is not common to all, but the wiues and mothers of the chiefe of the place. And as we haue said of the Priest, so it is to be vnderstood, that all the men and women there doe the same without failing in any point. They suffer not a Christian to enter therein: and yet will they enter into the Churches of the Christians to heare the Church-musicke. The women abide in their Churches from nine of the clocke to midnight, continually praying with certaine motions and strange cries, continuing so long in this act, that they fall vpon the ground as in a swoone through wearinesse: and if any feele her selfe at that time to bee with childe, the Turkes hold that they are conceived by the holy Ghost, and presently vow that childe to God, and call such Nesces Oghl, that is, sonnes of the holy Ghost. And on Friday at nine or ten of the clocke, the Priest vseth to preach to the people: and these their discourtes last about two houres. That which is said is not verie manifest; yet they say, that he preacheth the miracles of Mahomet, sometime exalting their faith, sometime commending obedience, and sometime rehearsing fabulous tales to terrifie the bad, as that such mens soules are carried of certaine Camels (there being some fixe thousand flying about in the ayre for this purpose) into the Sepulchres of wicked Christians, and that the good Christians are put in their emprise Sepulchres, inueighing against the blasphemers of Mahomet, Christ and the Saints, exhorting to Almes, rehearsing their commandments of the law. And if they preach scandalous doctrine, the Musli and the Cadilischeer deprive them, and correct them as Heretikes; yea, some of them, for preferring Christ before Mahomet, are put to death; of which one Ibrahim Schec a Priest of Constantinople (reported to haue wrought miracles amongst the Turkes in the dayes of Solman) was stoned to death, his head cut off, and his bodie burned; & of his Disciples some were beheaded, others thrust into the Gallies, for preferring Christ, and denying Mahomet. And were it not for the terrour of the sword, there would be more innovations of religion; and some haue perswaded the Grand Signior, not to suffer the Alcoran to bee so common to be read, and interpreted of euery one, guiltie of the aburdities therein contained. But to returne. After this preaching ended, two young Clerkes goe vp to him, and sing certaine prayers, which ended, the Priest againe beginneth to sing with the people in a base voyce, with wrigling euery way for the space of halfe an houre, saying nothing but Laila, illellah, that is, there is but one God. And these Ceremonies are done onely on their Lenten Fridayes. Their Lent is one Moone or Moeth in the yeere, which, if this yeere it be July, the next it shall bee August, and so in order: that in twelue yeeres they haue fasted all times of the yeere, making no other difference of meates, then at other times, but eating onely in the night. They prepare themselves by diminishing their fare (not as the Christians at Shrouetide) that they may the better endure it: for on the day, in which they fast, they will not so much as taste a cup of water, or wash their mouths therewith, till the Starres appeare: And eight or ten dayes after it beginneth, some Officers ride about the towne, crying: Such a day beginneth the Fast, prepare yee, prepare yee; and when it is begun, the Cadi and Subassi, if they finde any shops open, or any body casing in the day, set him on an Asse backwards, with the tayle in his hand, as Adulterers: re punished: and to drinke wine at this time, is death. Neither will they suffer Iewes or Christians to scandalize their Turkes this way. And when their Lent is nere the end, they goe all to the Baths and plucke off all their haire, but of the head and beard, with an cymment for that purpose: they colour their nayles red, with an enduring colour, called Chua, with which they dye also the nayles and feet of their horses; and the women their hands, feet, and priuie parts. This they doe in honour of their solemnitie, which lasteth three daies with great feasting, in which nothing else but meates and drinckes may be sold. They goe to the Sepulchres of the dead there to eate, full of gladnesse, and salute each other, saying: Baaram gloriouseong, that is, God giue you a good Feast: and if they meete with a Jew or a Christian, woe vnto them. On the first day of their Bairam, the Sultan rideth to S. Sophia with all pompe: and then did we see (saith Master Sandy) a sight full of horror, many mourne with age, yet dead before death, and reuolting from their Christianitie, therefore throwing away their bonnets, and lifting vp their fore fingers, to which the Tyrant bowed himselfe, as glorying in such conuersions. The Turkes keepe another Easter, especially in Mecca, more solemne resort thither.

§. V:

Of the Turkish Circumcision.

HE Turkes say they are ^d circumcised, because they are the sonnes of Ismael, and because they may be cleane when they goe to their Temples, no filth lying hid vnder the skinnē. At seuen or eight yeeres of age, or later, this Ceremonie is performed. The first thing they doe, is, to inuite many thither, both Turkes, Iewes, and Christians, besides the friends and kindred, to make the greater gaine, euery one giuing somewhat according to his abilitie. When the day is come, they which are inuited mount on horse-backe, for else it is ^e no solemnitie, and goe to the house of the childē, who being mounted on a faire horse richly clothed, with a great Tulipant on his head is carryed to Church, with a long speare borne before him, hauing a torch on the top worth a crown, more or lesse, according to the state of the partie, adorned with roses and garlands, which with the speare is left a gift to the Church, the fees of the Priest: all the way they sound on instruments: after the sonne followeth the father, the kindred, and the rest of the friends, that sometimes there are a hundred horse; at Church they alight, and accompany the childē to the Priest, which wayteth for them. Here one of the friends sitteth downe, and on his lap the child is set: presently another pulleth off his shoes, another holdeth his hands, and others his feet, and many hold him in talke with words, and these are the Gossips. The Priest seeing all things ready, taketh the end of the skinnē of his yard, and draweth it out, and nipperth it with siluer Pinlers, so to mortifie it, and cut it off with lesse paine: then making him beleue he will deserue it till the next day, he ariseth, the other holding him fast; and after, as if he had forgot somewhat to be done about it, with fizzers, which he holdeth closely in his hand, suddenly cutteth it off, and another layeth thereon a certaine powder to ease the paine, and in fūe and twentie dayes they looke to the curing of it, laying on it salt, and marmalade of Quinces, and thence forwards he is called a Musliman. But his name is not then giuen him, but at his birth, and that according to their qualitie. Bellonius writes that they must answer the Circumciser to certaine questions (somewhat like it seemes to that, which in the Baptisme of elder persons is performed by themselves, of younger by their Godfathers) and therefore they are so old before they bee circumcised. Hee also affirmeth, that it is neuer done in the Melchit (whetein none yncircumcised may enter) but in the house. The name Musliman, Musliman, or Muslim, signifies an Orthodoxe Mahometan, as Christian or Catholike with vs: Verus Turca, saith Bellonius, Saluatus, or sane fidei homo, after Cantacuzenus.

After the child is loosed (who to shew himselfe of courage, smileth, and lifting vp his greatest finger saith those former words of their profession) and is againe mounted, all the company, after a little prayer and offering at the Church, with like pompe conueigh him home, where is great feasting provision; some feast it three dayes together.

Amurath circumcised his sonne Mahomet at sixteen yeeres old. Vnto which solemnitie many Christian Princes were solemnly inuited, who sent thither their Ambassadors with Presents, who had there their scaffolds prepared for them, and furnished according to their states. The solemnitie lasted fortie dayes, and fortie nights, in the great Market-place of Constantinople. And to end these solemnities, Mahomet the Prince was circumcised, not publicly, but in his Fathers chamber, by Mechmet one of the inferior Bassas, sometime the Emperour Solyman Barber. And it is done of other Turkes also most commonly in the Fathers house, not in the Church.

The women-children, about the same age among other women, without other solemnity, say ouer those words, La ilah &c. and likewise the renegado-Iewes; but the Christian renegadoes are carried about the streets of the Cities with much solemnity, and many gifts giuen them, besides freedom from tribute: many blinded by couetousnesse offer themselves to this circumcision. But if any for blasphemie against Mahomet, or iniurie to a Turke, be by force circumcised, they haue no such gifts: which punishment the Cadilefcher (by the testimony of two accusing Turkes) inflicteth. And therefore to prevent the same, the Christians obtaine the Great Seigniors safe conduct, that in cases of conscience they may not be iudged of any, except they were accused at the Court before the foure Bassas, and the Cadilefcher of Constantinople, and that by the witness of Priests onely, which had not in twelue yeeres drunke wine.

Now if you be wearie of viewing their Temples, and their Prayers, and other Ceremonies ſeeme tedious, I haue thought fit to preſent you with another ſight, and to conclude with (that which is the concluſion of all fleſh) a diſcourſe of their Funerals. When a Turke is ſicke and like to die, his friends viſite him, and putting him in minde of his finnes, aduiſe him with a penitent heart to bewaile them. Then doe certaine of their Priests, or one of his kinsmen, read ſome Pſalmes and Prayers. And if the pangs of death doe ſtill continue, they bring him the Alcoran, or Curſam, wherein is one Legend, called Tebbara Echelezi, which they read ſeven times: and if hee ſhall die of that ſickeſſe, they thinke hee will die before they haue thrice read it: and if they ſee breath ſtill remaine, they read another Pſalme, called Iafimel Curamil Hecim, to the end that the Deuill caule no impediment to his ſoule. When hee is dead, they lay him forth in the middeſt of the houſe vpon Carpets, and place him on his right ſide, with his face towards the South. Then doe aſſemble certaine Priests to bury him, who bring with them a ſtring of Beades (ſuch as the Papiſts vſe in mumbling and numbring their deuotions) being a thouſand of them, of ſignum aloe, and there with compaſſe the bodie, and then ſay to every one Sababan alla, that is, God haue mercie on him, and turne it about ſoure or ſixe times. After this, their Priests (which are twentie or more) carrie the corps into the Garden, and lay it on a Table two hands breadth from the gronne, taking aw y his ſhirt, and couering his ſhame with a new cloth made of fine bombait, with warme water and ſoape waſhing him from top to toe: Then do they take two ſheets of bombait, in which they wrap the corps, wetting the ſame with Roſe-water, perſumes, and odoriferous things, and laying him in the Beere, couer him quite ouer with his beſt garments, placing his Turbant at the head thereof, all bedecked with flowers. This done, the Priests begin their deuotions, and ſome of the company take vp the Beere, carrying the ſame with the head forwards to the Meſſe it: the kinsmen follow, and the women remaine at home weeping, and make ſeade to eate for the Priests. When they come to the Church, they ſet him downe without doores, and goe and make an end of their ſeruite. After that, they carry him forth of the City to the buſſall place: (for it is not lawfull to bury in their Cities.) Some prouide their Sepulchres in their life time, ſome haue them made after by their friends, either in their Gardens, or ſome ſolitarie place: They haue alſo common buriall places, as are our Church-yards, wherein are many Tombes of Marble, Brick, or other matter, according to the qualitie of the perſon.

If the deceased were a man of high condition, his horſes are led with his corps, and his Tombe is adorned with many Epitaphs. And if he were a great Commander, thoſe horſes are ſaddled the contrary way, and ſichly lurchiſhed, hauing certaine things hanged at their noſes, which cauſe them to neigh, as it were lamenting the loſſe of their Maſter. They carry alſo the truncheons of their Lances, with their Standards and Enſignes, trailing along the ground. There are planted alſo about their Sepulchres violets and other pleaſant flowers. The common ſort haue their Tombes of Marble engrauen with letters.

When they are come to the place, with thoſe ſheets they let the corps into the graue, couering him on every ſide with boords, only on the face they lay a litle earth, and there leaue him, and returne home, where they finde ſtore of cheere, & there make a prayer for his ſoule. Georgianiz, ſuch, that they make ouer the graue the forme of an Altar, leſt the beaſts ſhould goe ouer it, and deſile it. They alſo often repaire thither with teares, and ſet on the Monument ſiſh, bread, wheat, eggs, milke, &c. which is done for the dead mans ſoule in almes to the poore, or to the birds, or ants, which they alſo account an act of mercy, no leſſe meritorious then the other. The Priests haue ſixe ſpers a peece giuen them for their paines. And if the partie be poore, they gather money to pay the Priests, and to diſcharge the funerall charges: they care a blacks eight dayes in token of mourning: and thoſe that are of great account, all conſolation from thenceforth reſume their wonted habite. Howbeit their kindred, ſpecially of the ſenaleſe, often repaire to the graues to lament there.

Pellonus in his Obſeruat. obſeruet, that they ſew not the ſheet at the head nor at the feet. The reaſon is their dreame of certaine Angels, ſent in comiſſion preſently after the buriall, to examine the deceased partie, into whom they ſay God hath then put a new ſpirit. burning fire-brands, and examine him of his life, which if they finde wicked, they scourge him with fierie whips, if good, they become goodly Angels, and comfort him. Bellonius a little other wise telleth, that those Angels (which hee calleth Guanequir and Mongir) come, the one with an yron hammer, the other with a hooke, which fet the corps vpon his knees, and put a new soule into it; and then aske if he haue beleued Mabomet and obsestred his precepts, if hee haue done good workes, they depart from him, and two other Angels come in their places, white as snow, and one of them puts his armes, in stead of a pillow vnder his head, the other sits at his feet, and defends him vntill the day of Iudgement. But if hee satisfie not the demands of those blacke Angels, hee with the yron mallet strikes him at one blow therewith nine fadome vnder the ground: and neither of them ceaseth, the one with his hammer, the other with his hooke, to torment the deceased partie vntill the day of Iudgement. For this cause the Turkes write vpon the dead carcases the name Croco, and make their Sepulchres hollow, that they may haue roome to kneele, and some lay boords ouer, that no earth fall in. The feare hereof makes them in their morning prayer to say, Lord God, from the questioning of the two Angels, the torment of the graue, and euill journey, deliuer me, Amin. Yea, hence are the prayers which the Turkes, men and women, say at the graues of the dead, for deliuerie from these Angels.

Concerning the day of Iudgement, they hold that there is an Angel standing in Heauen, named Israhil, holding alway a Trumpet in his hand prepared against Gods command, to sound the conuocation of the World. For at the sound thereof, all Men and Angels shall die, for so they finde it written in their Craam, which Bookes of high authoritie with them. The Turkish Doctors would dissent from that opinion of the Angels mortallitie, if this Booke would giue them leaue: for to contradict the authoritie thereof is punished with fire, or else their tongues are pulled out of their heads. They hold, that after this dismall sound shall bee a great Earthquake, which shall tumble the Mountaines and Rockes from their places, and grinde them to meale. After this, God will returne to make anew the light, and the Angels as before, and will cause to fall a pleasant raine, called Rehmet sui, that is, the raine of mercie: and so shall the earth remaine fortie dayes, although those dayes shall bee of a larger size then these. Many also hold, that from thenceforth there shall bee no darknesse of the night, as now, but that it shall be most cleere; neither shall there need any more sleepe for the sustentation of our bodies.

After fortie dayes God will command Israhil to sound his Trumpet the second time, at which sound all the dead shall bee raised againe by the will of God, the dead euen from Abel to the end of the world, throughout all the earth, hearing the sound thereof, and rising in manner as they were buried. Amongst them shall be seene diuers faces and countenances, some shining as the Sunne, many like the Moone, many as the Starres. Others shall bee obscure and darke, and others with hogges faces, with swolne tongues. Then shall euerie one crie Nessi, Nessi, that is, Woe is me wretch, who haue suffered any selfe to be overcome with my filthy lusts. The Angels shall with their fingers point at the faces which shine, which are they that haue wrought good workes, and shall shew them to one another. The wicked shall haue enuy thereat. They say, that those with faces like hogs, are such as haue bene Vfurers; and those with the swolne tongues, Liers and Blasphemers. There shall be other troden vnder foot, to wit, the proud persons of this world. God, say they, will then demand account of the Kings, Princes, Emperors, and Tyrants, which vse oppression and violence. Then shall God diuide this raised company into seuentie parts, all which shall be examined; presenting their sins before their eyes, and all that they haue in this world done well or ill: whereto hee shall need no testimony; euerie member bearing witnesse against it selfe of the deeds, yea, and very thoughts. There shall be also Michael the Angel, holding in his hand the ballance of diuine Iustice, and shal weigh soules, and distinguish the good from the bad. There shal be Moser with his Standard, vnder which shall all the obseruers of his law bee assembled. Neere to him shal be Iesus Christ, the Sonne of the Virgin Mary, with another great Standard, and all his Christians, the obseruers of his Faith. On the other side shall be Mabomet, with his Standard and faithfull Mahumetans: they which haue done good shall be all gathered vnder the said Standards, where they shall haue a pleasant shaddow; the rest shall be extremely scorched by the heat of the Sun, according to the measure of their sinnes. Thus shall both parts abide, till God shall pronounce his eternall sentence. When that doome is pronounced, the Angels shall stand diuided into Squadrons, all like adorned, the Seraphins on one side, the Cherubins on the other: of the which one part shal sound Instruments of diuers sorts, & other shal sing hymnes: and many shall stand at the gates of Paradise, singing and gratulating the blessed soules which haue obserued the diuine Precepts; Christians, Jewes, Turkes, and Moores, being all of equall beautie and beatitude, if they haue done well. But sinners shall be

They ſhall alſo haue Barachi, in Sun-beames, on which they may ride and take their vew round about Paradiſe, of the precious delights therein. There ſhall they haue pleaſant fruits, and if they eate one apple, two ſhall grow in the roome; and to quench their thirſt, they ſhall haue riuets cleere as Cryſtall, ſweet as Sugar, by drinking of which their thirſt and vndrſtanding ſhall increaſe in ſuch ſort, that they ſhall ſee from one Pole to the other. The meates which they eate, ſhall conſume by a ſubtile kinde of ſweat. Further they ſay, they ſhall haue their women called Vri, that is, ſhining, which ſhall euerie day be Virgins, with which they ſhall continue for euer. Neither ſhall there be any danger of olde age; the men alway being as of thirtie yeeres old, the women of fifteen or twentie. Thoſe three Standard-bearers ſhall be the principall, each of them hauing a peculiar part of Paradiſe aſſigned him for his dominion.

Thoſe which for their bad deeds ſhall be condemned to hell, ſhall be all knowne by proper names, which they ſhall beare in their fore-heads: and they ſhall beate the number and greatneſſe of their ſinnes on their ſhoulders. Th'v ſhall they be led betweene two Mountaines where Hell is ſituate, at the mouth whereof is a moſt venomous Serpent: and from one Mountaine to another is a Bridge thirrie miles long, which is ſo made, that they aſcend on the firſt part, the other part is plaine, the laſt deſcendeth. This Bridge (ſay they) is made of thin yron and ſharpes: (they call it Serat Cuypliſſi, that is, the Bridge of luſtice.) Vpon this ſhall they paſſe the ſinners with the heaue weight of their ſinnes vpon their ſhoulders; and they which ſhall ſuddenly be plunged into the bottome of Hell, where they ſhall burne, more or leſſe, according to the quantity of the fire of their ſins, which they haue carried out of this world: and after the burning they turne to be reſreſhed, and preſently againe to the fire. In the miſt of Hell they ſay is a tree full of fruit, euerie Apple being like to the head of a Deuill; which groweth Greene in the midſt of all thoſe flames, called Zonacum Agacer, or the tree of B. eternelle, and the ſoules that ſhall eate thereof, thinking to reſreſt themſelues, ſhall ſo finde them, and by them and their paines in Hell they ſhall grow madde. And the Deuils ſhall binde them with chaines of fire, and ſhall dragge them vp and downe through Hell. Thoſe ſoules which ſometime ſhall name God in their aide, they ſay, after many yeeres, ſhall goe into Paradiſe; and none ſhall remaine in Hell, but ſuch as deſpaire of their ſaluation and Gods mercie. Thus ſaith Menauno. To this agreeeth Beſellinus, and addeth, that in the day of Iudgement, they beleeue a reſurrection of the Birds and Beaſts: and that the Rams which they kill at their Eaſter, ſhall goe into Paradiſe: and therefore, though one would ſeue, they kill many. For the Booke of Zuna ſaith, that thoſe Rams ſhall pray for their Sacrificers in the day of Iudgement. It telleth that the Starres are hanged in t' e ſayte by golden chaines, to watch leſt the Deuils ſhould learne the ſecrets of Paradiſe, and reueale them to Sooth-ſayers. Alſo, that the Ramme which Abraham offered in ſtead of his ſonne, was a blacke one, which had beene nourished ſortie yeeres in Paradiſe; that Mahomet ſhall be turned at the end of the world into a Ramme; and the Turkes into Fleas; whom hee ſhall carrie ſtick- ing to him, out of Hell into Paradiſe, and there ſhake them off, where they ſhall againe recieue the formes of Turkes: That hee ſhall waſh them with the water of that Fountaine in Paradiſe, to purge the blackneſſe which they got by the ſcorching of Hell, from whence hee will deliuer all good Turkes.

CHAP. XIII.

Of the Religious Votaries amongſt the Turkes, and of their Sgints, Sects, Miracles, and Hypocriticall bolineſſe.

Proceed vnto the differences of opinions amongſt the Turkes: Septemtuſcenti (who liued vetie many yeeres amongſt them) ſaith, that although they conſent againſt Chriſt, yet doe they much diſſent among themſelues, wrelling the Alcoran to their purpoſes, and ſcarceely one of a hundred agreeing with his fellow about Mahomet and their Law. And beſides their differences in Ceremonies, there are, ſaith he, foure ſects, differing in maine grounds of Religion; which would not be appeſed without blood, if they feared not the higher power, and were not thereby kept in awe. One of theſe ſects is that of the Prielts, holdinge t'at none can be ſaued, but by the Law of Mahomet. The ſecond, of their religious Dermiſchler, reputed reputed the Successors of the Saints, the friends of God and Mahomet, who are of opinion, that the Law profiteth nothing, but the grace of God: and these ground their opinions on miraculous illusions, of which he reporteth one in the time of Amurath the second, who examining this contention betwixt these Seculars and Regulars, and being purposed to give sentence in the behalfe of the Priests, and against the religious, one of these Dermeschler * appearing to him in a Vision, (others also ground Faith on Visions) and deliuering him out of a great danger, altered his minde: for going to steele in the night, the boords gaue way, and he fell in, staying on a crosse Timber, where this religious man in their wonted habite appeared to him, and bid him now vse the helpe of his Priests for his deliuerance. This after so affected the King, that himselfe became a religious man, till the necessitie of State-affaires compelled him to resume his government. (Hee that listeth may compare with this, Dunians deuices for his Regulars:) The third he calleth Czeslar speculative men; which Sect is founded on Tradition, holding that they are saved by Merit, without Law or Grace. These are verie earnest in prayers, neuer ceasing; and meeting in the night, and sitting in a circle, they begin to say, Layla illalack, with shaking their heads till they fall downe senselesse; these three sorts are manifest to the people, and as it were of equall esteeme with them. The fourth are called Horsej, that is, Heretikes, holding, that euery man is saved in his owne Law, and all Lawes to be a like good to the obseruers; these are burned if they be taken.

Strange it is, that he reporteth of the miraculous workes of some of them, that they may seeme (as he saith) incarnate Devils: Some going naked, with their priuities onely hidden, and some of these are impossible, besides the violence of Winter and Summer, enduring, like stones, the branding with fire, or wounding with sword: some seldome eate or drinke, and some not at all: others, but from hand to mouth: some are perpetually silent, hauing no conuersation with men, of which he saith he saw one; and some haue their supernaturall trances or raptiements: some dwell amongst men, some by themselves apart, and some in Wilderness: some keepe hospitalitie in Cities, at least to harbour men, if they haue not food for them: some carrying about water in leather bagges, giuing it to all, and demanding nothing for the same, except any voluntarily gratifie them. Some inhabite at the Sepulchers of the Saints, keeping the same, and liuing on the vowes and offerings of the people, not observing the washings and ceremonies of the Law. As concerning those Water-carriers, Nicholas Nicholai saith, that he hath seene in a morning at Constantinople fiftie of those Sacques (so he calleth them) in a company, all furnished with their Scrips of leather, full of Cisterne or Fountaine-water hanging on their side, with cups of fine Corinthian Latten, gilded and damaskined, bearing in the same hand a Looking-glasse, which they hold before their eyes of them whom they giue to drinke, admonishing them to thinke on death: and if any giue them any thing, they out of a Violl cast on their faces sweet smelling water. Hee telleth of some that would seeme to liue a solitarie life amongst beasts, but indeed liue in shops in most popular Cities, the walls whereof are covered with skins of diuers beasts, and vpon the hornes thereof they hang Tallow Candles. In the midst of this their sacred shop standeth a steele covered with a greene cloth, and vpon the same a great Latten Candle-sticke without any Candle. Moreover, they haue painted a Cimeterre hung in the middle, in memorie of Haby, who forsooth with his sword cut the Rockes in sunder: and they breed vp with them beasts, as Bulls, Beares, Harts, Ravens, Eagles; so that in stead of their liuing with beasts, beasts liue with them. And if sufficient be not brought to their shops, they with one of these beasts in their hand goe about the streets begging.

In the Armie of the Turkes that assaulted Malta, in the yeere 1565. were ^b thirteene thousand of a certaine kinde of men amongst the Turkes, which liue of the reuenues of the Church, who had at Constantinople ^c vowed their liues for their superstition. Antonio Pigafetta ^d reporteth, that as the Emperours Ambassadors were conueyed from the presence of the Great Turke to their lodging, by the Ianizaries and their Aga, there were amongst them certaine Religious men, called Haagi, which vse to follow the Ianizaries, who continually turning about, and in their going singing, or rather howling certaine Psalmes or Prayers for their great Sultans welfare, made them wonder that they fell not downe for giddinesse. And this my friend Master Simons hath seene them doe, taking one another by the hand in a ring; and so continuing their whistle-gigg-deuotions with continuall turnings (sely agreeing to so giddie and brain-sicke a Religion) till with the great applause of Turkes, and admiration of others, sweat, and a long protracted wearinesse makes an end of this dancing their round.

^b But amongst all their orders of Religion, Nicholas Nicholai, * and before him Menauins, reckon foure which are most common amongst them, the Giamailer, the Calender, the Deruisti, and the Turlachi.

to trauell through diuers Regions, at other mens charges, vnder colour of Religion; carrying with them none other apparrell then a little Cassecke of purple colour, girt with a girdle of silke and gold; vpon the ends whereof hang certaine Cymbals of Silver; mixt with some other cleere-sounding metall: and they doe ordinarily weare sixe or seuen of these about their girdles, and vnder their knees. In stead of a cloake, they are covered with the skinner of a Lyon or Leopard, being whole and in his naturall haire, which they make fast vpon their breast, by the two former legges. All the rest of their bodies are bare; sauing that they weare great Rings on their eares, and a kirde of Sandalls on their feet; their haire groweth long like womens disheuel'd ouer their shoulders. They beare in one of their hands a Booke, written in the Persian language, full of amorous Sonnets. And thus with their Voyces and Cymbals, they make pleasant Musicke, especially if they meet some faire stripling, whom they set in the midst of them, and incompasse with their Morice-musicke. These are the Pilgrimes of Lome; and vnder pretext of Religion, doe draw vnto them the hearts of women and younglings, and are called the men of the Religion of Lome, vnto which order of Religion youth is prone more then enough. The partakers of their Musicke ordinarily in part to them of their Coyne.

The Calender is of a contrarie profession to the former, glorying of abstinence and chastitie. They haue for their dwelling certaine little Churches, which they call Techie, ouer the gates whereof they doe write these or the like words, Çada narmas dul er'in cusevunge al, cacebecim: that is, They which will enter into their Religion, must doe workes like theirs, and remaine in their Virginitie. These Calenders are clothed with a little short coat without sleeves, after the fashion of Haire-cloth, made of Wooll and Horle-haite, and doe nolet their haire grow long, but cut the same, and couer their heads with felt Hats, like the Priests of Græcia, about which hang certaine strings, about the breadth of an hand, made of Horle haire: in their eares, and about their neckes and armes they weare great rings of Iron. They pierce their skinn vnder their priuy member, thrusting thorow the same a ring of an indifferent bignesse and weight, to bane them from venetic, if they were therunto otherwise willing. They also goe reading of certaine Songs, made by one of their Order, called Nerami, the fifth Saint and Martyr, after their reckoning, of their Religion, who for certaine wordes spoken against the Law of Mahomet, was in Alexandria strid quicke. Menaime is faith, he had need to be of his writing; agreeing with the Christian Faith in many points. Some he say, he was martyred for contesting Christ.

The Dervis goe bare-headed, and cause their head and beard to be cut with a razor, and all the haire parts of their bodie: and burne also their Temples with a hot Iron, or an old piece of cloth burnt; hauing their eares pierced, wherein they doe weare certaine great rings of Isaper. All their clothes are two sheepes or goat skins, the haire thereof being dried in the Sunne, one before, and the other behinde, embracing the bodie in forme of a girdle, otherwise naked Winter and Summer. They dwell without the Cities, in Suburbs and Villages. Thus vnder the colour of Religion they roame vp and downe, and make no conscience to rob, kill, and murder (if they finde themselves the stronger, with a small Hatchet which they beare vnder their girdle) ill men of whatsoever Law or Nation. They are fornicators, and most detestable in that most detestable sinne of Sodomit. For shew of holinesse they cate of a certaine herb called Matslab, the violent operation whereof maketh them to become madde, so as through a certaine tyme, they with a certaine knife or razor, doe cut their necks, stomachs and thighs, vntill they be full of most horrible wounds; which to heale, they lay vpon them a certaine herbe, leuing it cleave vpon their hurt, vntill it be altogether consumed into ashes, suffering in the meane time extreme paine with manuellous patience. Thus do they imitate their Prophet Mahomet, who, through abstinence in his den, fell into such a furie (say they) that hee would haue throwne himselfe from the top of it. And therefore fooles and madde men are in great reuerence; yea, they account such for Saints: and if such madde men strike or reb them, they take it in good part, and say they shall haue good lucke after it. They erect little Monumentes ouer such mad mens graues, as at Aleppo, one Sheb Boubae (who being mad, went alwaies naked) being dead, they built a house ouer his graue, where to this day (saith our Author) there are Lampes burning day and night; and many of these Dervises are remained, to looke to his Sepulchre, and to receiue the offerings of such as come, as many do euery weeke out of Aleppo. If any be sicke or in danger, they vow to offer money or other things to Sheb Boubae if they recover.

The same account they make of one Sheb Mahamet a mad man, yet liuing in Aleppo, going naked with a spit on his shoulder. Men and women will come and kisse his hand, or some other part of his body, and aske him counsell, for they hold that mad mens foules are in heauen talking with God, and that hee reueleth secrets to them. And euen the B. shies themselves will kisse and consult with this Oracle. Hard I deeme it to say whether is the mad man. In a late victorie against the Christians, they affirme that this Sheh Mahammet was seene in the field many thousand miles distant, fighting against their enemies, whom by his helpe they ouercame.

But to returne to our Datuifes, this our Author saith, that oftentimes great Bassas, in displeasure with the Emperor, will retire themselves into this Order, as the Hospitall and Sanctuarie of their diseased and dangerous state. Their witness is of better account then any other mans, although he were an Emir, or of the kindred of Mahomet. They live of Almes, as the other Religious doe, which they begge in the name of Holy. They have 1 in Natolia a Sepulchre of a Saint called by them Scidibatal, who (say they) conquered the most part of Turkie, and about the place of the Sepulchre is an habitation and couent, where aboute five hundred of these Deruifes dwell: and there once in the yere they keepe a generall assembly, in which their Superiour (whom they call Assambaba) is present and President; their Counsell or Chapter consisteth (saith Mesamius) of aboute eight thousand of their Order. One of these Deruifists drawing neere vnto Baiazet the second, as if he would haue received an Almes of him, desperately slaid him with a short Scimarar, which he clofly hid vnder his hypocriticall habite. But Baiazet by the stirring of his horse (afraid of this Hogobolin) avoided the deadly blow, but not vawounded: neither had he so escaped, had not Isheuder Bida with his Horsemans Mace presently stricke downe the desperate villainie, as he was redoubling his blow, who was forthwith rent in pieces by the Souldiers. Baiazet thereupon proscribed all them of that superstitious Order, and banished them out of his Empire. The like (as Septemcastrensis saith) they had attempted against Mahomet his father in his youth, while Amurath was yet liuing. And in our daies Mehemet or Mehemet, the great Visier Bassa, who swayd almost wholly and onely their mightie Empire (as appeareth in the Historie of that State) in the daies of Solman, Seljm, and Amurath, as was Master Harborne relateth, was esteemed to possesse two and twentie millions of gold, was not assailed only, but murdered by one of these Deruiflers. For whereas it is a custome of the great men, that at ordinarie houres all their Chaplaines, or Priests, assemble themselves in the Diuano, there together mumbling their superstitions: and this Deruifler ordinarily thither admitted, vpon an old grudge, for that Mehemet had before deprived him of a Souldiers place and pension, when the Visier late there to giue publike audience, sitting right against him, after his Mussumus finished, the Visier reaching vnto him his wonted Almes, he with a dagger closely before provided, slabs him into the breast, and was therefore of Mehemet slaues with exquisite torments done to death. In their great Counsell before mentioned, there are young men clothed in white, which tell the most memorable obseruations in their trauels, which they present to the Assambaba in writing, subscribed with their names. On the Friday they vse after prayer and eating the herbe Assral, to read the same with dances, and after their dance (which is about a huge fire, made of as much wood as in hundred beasts can carrie) they cut the skin of their armes, legs, or breasts, engraving some figure thereon, whereto they after apply ashes and wine. In the doing hereof they utter this speech: This I cut for the loue of such a woman. Vpon the last day of their Feast, they take leaue of their Gouernor, and depart in troups like Souldiers with Banners and Drums; and so returne vnto their owne Monasteries.

The Turlequis (by others called Durmisflurs) cloath themselves with sheeps and goats skins like vnto the Dernis: about the same they wrap about them in manner of a cloake the skinn of a great Beare, with the haire, made fast vpon their stomacke with the legs: vpon their heads they were a white Bonnet of Felt folded with small plaits, hauing the rest of their bodies altogether naked. They also burne their Temples as the former. A beelily generation. For they know not, nor will not learne to read, write, or doe any ciuill profitable act, but liue idly vpon almes, roauing thorow the Countrey alone, and in troups thorow the Deserts, robbing such as they meet handiomey apparelled, causing them to goe as they doe, naked. They profess palmittury and fortune-telling, the people seeing and feeding them for such vanities. And sometimes they carry with them an old man, whom they worship as a God: lodging themselves neere the best house of the Towne where they come. And there this new numen, and old impostor, faining himselfe ransied in spirit, pronounceth graue words and spirituall commandments; at sundry times lifting vp his eyes to heauen, and after turning to those his disciples, willett them to carry him from thence, for some imminent iudgement there to be executed, as is revealed to him. They then pray him to auert that danger by his prayer, which he accordingly doth: which the people (deled by their hypocrisies) reward with a large beneuolence, at which they after amongst themselves doe merrily scoff. They eate also of the herbe Matlaze, and sleepe vpon the ground naked of clothes and shame, and commit also abominable Sodomitic. And thus much of their disorderly orders of an irreligious Religion. He that will read more at large of them, let him read the Booke of the Septemcastrensis v tellet of certaine Saints of exceeding estimation for holinesse, whose Sepulchres are much frequented of deuout Votaries: as that of Sedischaff (which signifieth a holy Conquerour) in the confines of Caramania. Another is called Hatschepetsefch, that is, The Pilgrims helpe. Another Afchik passa who helpe in loue-matters, and for children in barrennesse. Another Tau passa, for concord: and Secheyb passa, in trouble and affliction: and Goi or Muschin, or Barschin passa, inuoked for their cattle: and Chidirelles for trauellers, to whom he sometime appeareth as a trauller; and any one that hath extraordinarily liued, is reputed a Saint after his death.

They haue many whole names I remember not (saith hee) in like reuerence with them, as are the Apostles with vs. When they would seeke for things lost, they go to one Saint; when they are robbed, they goe to another; and for the knowledge of things secret, they repaire to a third. They haue their Martyrs, and Miracles, and Reliques. Thus they tell of certaine religious men condemned wrongfully, for suspicion of treason, to the fire; which they entred without harme (as v those three companions of Daniel) and their shooes were hanged vp for a Monument. Their Nepes eglis, that is, soules or persons begotten of the holy Spirit (such is their fancie) without seed of man, they hold in such reputation, that they account themselves happy, which can doe them any good, yea that can touch them: and if their haire be laid vpon any, they say that their sicknesses are cured.

In this reputation of sanctitie, they haue a certaine old woman, which hauing a dog with her (in her pilgrimage to Mecca) readie to die for thirst, made water in her hand, and gaue it to the dog; which charitable act was so highly accepted, that a voyce was presently heard from heauen, saying, This day thou shalt be in Paradise. And at the same time shee was caught vp bodie and soule into heauen: and hereupon are they liberal to their dogs. If this crooke an opinion, which some Saracens hold, that women come not to Paradise, no marvell, seeing falshood is commonly contrarie both to the Truth, and it selfe. He that would read the miraculous tales which they tell of their Saints, may haue recourse to that namelesse Author, which of his Country is called, and heere often cited by name, Septemcastrensis; who telleth of his Master and his Mistis their deuotion and vowes to Goi and Muschin, for preservation of their cattell, sometimes miraculous (so readie is the Deuill with his sauing destruction, and destroying preservation) yea hee saith, that the Deuill doth turne himselfe amongst them into an Angell of light, with such effectfull illusions, that there are seene, or (at least) beleued amongst them, the dead raised to life, diseases of all sorts cured, secrets of the hearts disclosed; treasures, long before hidden in the ground, reuealed: and besides, such ostentation, and shew of dissembled holinesse, that they may seeme not to come short of the Fathers and Apostles in that behalfe: if bodily exercise were the trial of sanctitie.

Besequeus tells, that they haue like conceits of one Chederles, amongst them, as some superstitious persons haue of St. George, and the Turkes affirme to bee the same: The Dermis, haue a great Temple dedicated in his honor at Theke Thioi, not farre from Amasia, the chiefe Citie of Cappadocia. The Country and both Legends agree, for the killing of the Dragon, deliuering the Virgin, &c. They say that hee trauelled many Countries, and at last came to a River, the waters whereof yielded immortallitie to the drinker, and now cannot be seene. Chederles heereby freed from death, rides about euery where on his horse (which thence also dranke in immortallitie) and delighteth in battells, taking part with the best cause: and to make vp the tale, they say hee was one of the companions of Alexander the Great: they affirme, that Alexander was Salomons chiefe Captaine, and Iob his high Steward. In that Mosque or Temple at Theke Thioi is a fontaine of water, which they say, sprang vp of the flaying of Chederles horse. Like Stories haue they of his horse-keeper, and nephew, whose Sepulchres they shew, where deuout Pilgrims obtaine many blessings. They shew for relikes the pieces of the shooes which Chederles his horse brake in that Dragon-fight, & vnto the same in drinke against agues and head-aches. These places are full of Dragons and Vipers. prayer, O righteous God, giue vs strength and victorie, O Muhamet, O Mustapha the top of glory, by abundance of miracles, by the abundance of Gaibereulers, which are friends to the Musulmans, and walke inuisible, by the abundance of the Chederles, grant vs victorie. In the time 7 of Orchan, or Orchanes the sonne of Ottoman, they say these Gaibereulers appeared on white horses in a battell against the Christians, and slew them. These (they say) are friends to the Islams, that is, Catholike, or right beleeming Musulmans, and are diuine protectors of the Indies, as at the battell of Tauisco, where a strange horse-men discomfited the Indians, &c. And our inuocation of God and Saint George, is rather Turkish, then truly Christian: For

God

God alone is our strength, which teacheth our hands to fight, and our fingers to battell: and whom I have in heaven but thee, and I have desired none in earth with thee? As for George and Chederles, I know them both alike in matter of Inuocation, saue that it is worse to abuse to impute a Christian name then a Turkish: and King Edward the third seemed to inuoke Edward as much as George, Ha Saint Edward, Ha Saint George (saith Thomas Walsingham.) But that of George is rather an Embleme of euery Christian, as nor onely the Heroique Muse of our Spenser, in Poetical fiction, but the Diuiner of great Diuines, in their iudicial censures, haue manifested. It seemeth that the Chederles and Gaib-erenters are diuers: and perhaps that Martiall Nation in conquest of the Christians of those parts, would soone reconcile themselves to that Martiall Saint, and drinke in those further deuotions which his horse puffed, such Emblemes were those of Christopher, Catherine, George, which the P-pists inuocate as saints; an error proceeding from those pictures (as it seemeth) in Churches, according to hat of the Prophet, The stocke is a doctrine of vanitie, and the image is a teacher of lies. The vnder posteritie in that mist of Antichrist, and smoke from the bottomlesse pit, nor being able to discern an Embleme and Historic alunder, haue made Saint George the Maasⁿ of the Christians, quem nostra inuentus pro Mauris colit. Bellarmine o struggleth much, rather then hee will lose his Saint, and yet confesse the Historie Apocryphall. Baronius & his fellow Cardinal, but beyond in truth, acknowledgeth it an Image of a Symbole, rather then of a Historie, which Iacobus de Voragine without good authoritie, in his Golden Legend maketh historicall. He saith the Virgin representeth some Province, which imploret the Martyrs helpe against the Deuill. But Hyperius & Villanicius Possennii interpret it more fitly, to signifye the Church assaulted by the Diuell, protected by the Christian Magistrate: in which respect our Defender of the Faith, may iustly be termed the Patron of that renowned Order, which hath now learned their George to be Symbolicall, not a Cappadocian, and (as Princes, O! Gods but banderie, which gaue name to Saint George) to fight against the Dragon, and the deast with hornes like the Lambe, but speaking like the Dragon. As for the Popish George, Baronius also hath another originall from the Arrians, worshipped of them for a Martyr. But if any would bee further acquainted with this Knightly Saint, let him resort to Doctor Raimundus his larger Discourse touching these Romish Idolatries: which howsoeuer Serarius seeks to confute, mustering a huge Armie of eight and twentie Arguments to fight for this fighting Saint: Yet doe none of these Georgian Souldiers strike one stroke to proue that their Legendary Martyr, not so much as conclude his Horse taylor, or Dragons teeth, or his owne sword or speare: nor nor shew whether This George thus related, pointed, worshipped, bee the child of Historie or Myllerie; heite of the Painter, Poet, or Historian; Symbolicall or Historicall. As for George, Christopher, Catherine, Hippolitus; that some Saints haue bene called by these names, wee much deny not, care not: if these thus deliuered in their Stories, bee but monsters, or mysteries.

CHAP. XIII.

Hierarchie and Miserie of Christians
subiect to the Turke.

After the discourse of their Regulars (which in estimation of deuotion haue with the Turkes, and therefore in this Historie, the first place) their Secular Priests follow to be confuted. These are of differing degrees, which Menandus thus reckoneth: first, the Cadilescher, vnder which the Mifti or Mufiti; the third, the Cadi; and after these (in subordinate orders) the Modici, Auttippi, Imam, Mezzani, and besides these the Sophi. A certaine Ragusan, in an Oration before Maximilian the Emperour doth not much disagree: but for Cadilescher, he calleth the first Pescherbadian whereof (hee saith) there are two, one in Romania, the other in Natolia, chiefe Iudges of the Armie, hauing power to reuerte the sentence of the Emperour, if it be against the law of Mahomet. A second Magistrate (saith hee) is called Muchti, the chiefe Interpreter of the law, from whose sentence is no appeale.

Nic. Nicolai saith the same of their two Cadileschers, and that they are chosen out of their most learned Doctors of their Law, and alway follow the Court, and with the consent of the Bishops, constitute and depose the Cadi; hauing for their annuall stipend seuen thousand of eight thousand duckets, besides their ordinary gaires. They haue tenne Secretaries kept at the Grand Seigniors charge, and two Moolobassiss, which are busied about the horses; they haue also two hundred or three hundred slaues. They vse few words, but such as are of their Law and Religion altogether, with very much shew of grauitie. Arimbene (in his Preamble to the Italian Alcoran) maketh Kadilefcher to be a general name to all their Orders of Priests. Others doe place the Musfi in the highest place, and the Kadilefcher in the second ranke: and perhaps others gaue the Kadilefcher the first place, because their life was more in action and gouernment, as attending on the Court, and on the warres: but the Musfi being highest Interpreter of their law (though without gouernment) must indeed haue preeminence. And so Menanimo seemeth to affirme, who, though he placeth the Kadilefcher first, yet saith, that when happily appeal is made from his sentence, they haue recourse to the Mopbi. And this opinion is now generall and most current, which ascribeth to the Musfi the chiefe place.

Master Harborn, sometime Embassador into Turkie for Englands Queene (the worlds wonder, our Westerne Hesperus, that shined so farre ouer and beyond all Christendome, into the East; but my words are too base to vsher in that renowned name) ELIZABETH, thus reporteth. The Turkes doe hold for head and chiefe of their Religion the Musfi (the choice of whom is made by the Great Turke himselfe) such a one as is knowne to be wise and learned, and chiefly of a good life. His authoritie is so esteemed, that the Emperour will neuer alter a determination made by him. He intermedleth in all matters as best him liketh, whether they be ciuill or criminall, yea, or of State. And yet he hath no power to command, but is in each mans free libertie, when there happeneth any doubt of importance, to make in some few words by writing a declaration of his matter, in forme of a question: to whom the said Musfi, in writing likewise (called Zetfa) giueth a brieue answer containing his judgement thereon. This Zetfa, brought to the Iudge, is the rule of his sentence; provided, that the declaration, made before to the Musfi, contained no vntruth. Also the Grand Signior, to shew that he is religious and iust, doth serue himselfe of the authoritie of this Musfi, in affaires of warre and peace, demanding his judgement (in manner aforesaid;) by this course, the subjects being inclined to more forward obedience. But yet the Musfi will commonly flatter him, and leane to that part, to which he seeth him incline: as in the time of Solyman the second, the Musfi hauing discovered the Emperours intent to warre vpon Cyprus, approved the same in his Zetfa. But after, vpon great offers made to Mehemet the Visier, to breake that resolution, the Musfi, by him wonne to fauour the matter, affirmed still, that the warre against Cyprus was good and iust, but that his Maiestie had a greater obligation in conscience, which hee was bound to take in hand, namely, to procure the reuolt of the Moores in Spaine, there oppressed by the Christians, wherein hee was so bold with the Emperour, as to tell him to his face, that if hee did neglect the cause of those Mahumetans, hee might be thereunto by his subjects compelled.

Concerning the Musfi, and other steps of their Hierarchie, Master Knoller writeth, That the Turkes haue certaine Colledges, called Medresse, at Constantinople, Adrinople, Burdia, and other places, in which they lue, and studie their prophane Diuinitie and Law, and haue among them nine severall steps or degrees vnto the highest dignitie.

The first is called Sofii, which are young Students. The second are Calfi, who are Readers vnto the first. The third Hogi, Writers of Bookes (for they will suffer no Printing.) The fourth, are Naiji, or young Doctors, which may supply the place of Iudges, in their absence. The fifth, Caddi, Iudges of their Law, and Iustices to punish offenders; of which there is one at least in every Citie through the Turkish Dominion: and are knowne from other men by their huge Turbans, two yards in compasse. The sixth, are Muderisi, which ouersee the Caddes doings, and are as Suffragans to their Bishops; who are the seventh sort, and are called Mullis, which place and displace Church-men at their pleasure. The eight, Kadilefchieri, who are but two great and principall Iudges or Cardinals, in the whole sort, and are called Natolia: and these two sit every day in the Diuano among the Bassaes, the one of Gracia, the other of reputation. The ninth is the Musfi, who is among the Turkes, as the Pope among the Roman Catholikes. When the Bassaes punish any offence against their Law, they send to him. Hee may not abate himselfe to sit in the Diuano, neither when hee comes into the presence of the Grand Signior, will he vouchsafe to kisse his hand, or to giue any more reuerence, then they both sit downe face to face, and so talke and conferre together. No man can ascend to this place, but by the dignities aforesaid.

Mahomet the third, forced by a tumult of the Janizaries to present himselfe vnto them, came accompanied with the Musfi, and some few others of the reuerend Doctors of their Law, who were by the Sultan commanded to sit downe, whiles the great Bassaes abode standing. Such respect it had to these men. Thus much Knoller.

In the Booke of the Politie of the Turkish Empire, it is said, that the Musfi authority is like to that of the Jewish High Priest, or Roman Pope. I rather esteeme it like to that of the Patriarkes of Alexandria, Antioch, &c. as binding not all Mahumetans, but the Turkes only: whereas the one had, the other challengeth a subiection of all, which profess their religion. That Author also affirmeth, that whensoever the Musli goeth abroad forth of his own house (which he vseth to doe very seldome) his vse and custome is, first to goe and visit the Emperour; who as soone as hee seeth him comming to salute him, and doe him reuerence, resently ariseth out of his seat, and embracing him with great kindeesse, entertaint him very friendly and lovingly, causing him to sit downe by him, and giuing him the honour of the place.

His authoritie, saith Soranzo, is so great, that none will openly contradict the Musli m. L. Soranzo, part. 2. cap. 61. sentence: but yet if the Emperour be settled in a resolution, the Musli with feare or flattery declines vnto him.

Next to the Musli is the Cadilescher, who being also chosen by the Emperour, may be compared to those, whom the Christians call Patriarkes, or else to the Primats and Metropolitans of a Kingdome. Of these there are now in this encreased greatnesse of the Turkish Empire, three; whereas it seemeth that they had in the time of Baiazet but one, and long after (as before is said) but two. To one of these is assigned Europe, namely, so much thereof as is subiect to the Turke, for his Prouince: To the second, Natolia or Turkey: to the third, yria and Egypt, with the parts adioyning. There were but two Cadileschers, till Seljm wan yria and Egypt, and erected a third. But Soranzo saith, that this third of Carro is not rightly called Cadilescher, but should rather be called the great Cadi. Out of all which Prouinces, whatsoever causes come to be determined, by appeale or otherwise, they are brought to be decided before the Cadilescher of the same Prouince whence they arise: now this meaning that the abode of each of them be continually, or for the most part, at Constantinople, or elsewhere, wheresoeuer the Emperour holdeth his Court. The honour done to them, is little lesse then to the Musli, for that their authoritie is ouer Priest and people, temporal and spirituall: they are also learned in their law, aged and experienced. Of the Muderis and Mullis, can say no more then I haue done.

Next to these are the Cadi, which are sent abroad and dispersed into euery Citie and Towne of the Turkish Empire: which besides their Ecclesiasticall iurisdiction (as I may terme it) in forcing man to their religious obseruations, as it were, Iusticers and Governours of the places. So neere glued are the Offices and Officers, the religion and politie of the Turkes. There are other which are not sent forth, which are called Chozas, that is, Elders. These, with the Talismanis, haue the ordering of their Parishionall Churches: The Talisman calling the people to prayer, and the Chozas executing the Seruice and Preaching; and in absence, each supplying others Office. Menavino more distinctly, and in other names, nurbreth those Church-officers. The Modecis is a Governour of an Hospitall, receiuing and disposing he rents, with the other customes thereof. Their Schoole degrees are before spoken of, out of Knollers. Some y adde to these former, these other Priests, of baser condition. The Antipipis are certaine Priests, which vpon Friday (called of them Glumangun, and is obserued as their Sabbath, because Mahomet (as some hold) was borne on that day) and on other their altting and feasting-dayes, after they haue vsed diuers Ceremonies in a certaine place, in the midst of the Temple, about thirtie steps high, from thence read vnto the people something concerning the life of Mahomet. After which, two little boyes stand vp, and sing certaine Prayers: Which being ended, the Priest and all the people sing a Psalm with a low voyce, and then for halfe an houre together they cry Illah, Illah, that is, there is but one God. After all this, one of these Antipipis, out of that high place, sheweth forth vnto the people a Lance and Scimitar, with exhortation to vse their Swords and Lances in defence of their Religion. Of the Imam and Mezim, is elsewhere shewed, that the one calleth the people to the Mosque or Melchit, the other there celebrateth publike Orisons. The Sophis also are certaine Clerks or Priests, employed in the singing of Psalmes and Hymnes, after their manner, in their Churches at the times of publick Prayers.

All these inferior Orders of Priests are chosen by the people, and haue a certaine stipend allowed them by the Emperour, which yet is so small, that many of them are driuen to vse either writing of Bookes, or Handicrafts and Trades for their liuing, and are clothed like Lay-men. They haue a no great learning, it is sufficient if they can read the Alcoran, which being writen in Arabicke, they are as loth to haue translated into the vulgar, as the Papists are to haue the Scripture. Hee which can interpret, and make some Exposition of the Text, is of profound learning. Yet are they reuerenced: and if a Turke doe strike or offer outrage to them, he loseth his hand; and if he be a Christian, his life; being sure to be burned. Some say, that now of late some of them are more studious of Astronomie and other Arts. As for those superiour ranks, no doubt may be made of their high account. The Cadilescher is clothed in Chamlet, Satten, Silke, Damaske, or Veluet of seemly colour, as Russet, or Tawny, and in Purple-coloured cloth with long sleeves. Their Tulipan on their head is of marvellous greatness, sharpe in the middle, of Purple Russet colour, deeper and thicker then others; their beards great. They ride on Geldings, with Purple foot-cloths fringed; and when they goe on foot, they goe slowly, representing a stately and sacred grauitie.

There is another order of sacred persons, which yet are neither regular nor secular, by any vow or ordination, but had that account for their birth, being supposed to descend of the line of Mahomet. The Turkes and Tartarians call them Seni or Sabri, the Moores Seriffi. These weare greene Tulipans, which colour none else may weate, and that onely on their head. Some Christians, ignorant hereof, haue had their apparell cut from their backs, for wearing somewhat greene about them, These they call Hemir. They enioy many priuiledges, especially in giuing testimony, wherein one of these is as much as two other, which they abuse to iniury and wrong. The most of them are Moores, which goe ten or fiftene in a company, with a banner on a staffe, hauing a Moone on the top; and that which is giue for Gods sake, they sit and cate in the street, where also they make their praiers, and are poorly clad. Like to these (in priuiledge and prauiledge) are the Chagi, or Fagi, which liue on almes like Fryers. They attend on the publike prayers, on the holy Reliques, on the Corpser and Funerals of the dead, and to pray on the liuing by false oathes.

AND thus we haue taken a leisurely view of the Turkish Hierarchie, from the poore Sofis to the courtly Cadefcher and pontificall Mustis, flourishing and triumphing together with that Monarchie, which is exalted, and hath exalted them, with the power, not of the Word of God, but of the Sword of Man. But with what words: meane whiles shall wee deplore the lamentable and miserable estate of that Christian Hierarchie and Ecclesiasticall Politie, which sometimes flourished there with no fewer, nor lesse titles of dignitie and eminence? Where are now those Reuerend Names of Bishops, Archbishops, Metropolitans, Patriarques, and the swelling stile of Oecumenicall? Nay, where are the things, the life and liuing? for the stile, names, titles, still continue; continue indeed, but as Epitaphs and Incriptions on the Monuments of their deceased and buried power, as the ghosts and wandering shadowes of those sometimes quicke and quickning bodies of rule and gouernment. Great Cite of great CONSTANTINE, seated in the Throne of the World, the fittest situation to command both Sea and Land, through Europe, Asia, and Africa; at thy first Natiuitie honored with a double Diadem of Christianitie & Soueraigntie: to which the Sea prostrated it selfe with innumerable multitudes of Fish, the Land payeth continuall tribute of rare fertilitie; for which old Rome disrobed her selfe to decke this her New Rome, Daughter and Imperiall heire, with her choicest Jewels and Monuments: a Compendium of the World, Eye of Cities, Heart of the habitable earth, Academie of learning, Senate of gouernment, Mother of Churches, Nurse of Religion, and (to speake in the language of thine owne) A new Eden, an earthly Heauen, modell of Paradise, shining with the varietie of thy sacred and magnificent buildings, as the Firmament, with the Sunne, Moone, and Starres. This was thy ancient greatnesse, great now, onely in miserie and mischiefe, which as chiefe feat of Turkish Greatnesse, is hence inflicted on the Christian Name. And though the Soule of this Bodie, the goodliest Iewell in this Ring of Perfection, which so many wonders of Nature conspired to make the Miracle of Art, the TEMPLE of thy WISDOME of GOD, which is GOD; called by him which saw thee both Christian and Mahumetan, A terrestriall Heauen, a Cheriobicall Chariot, another Firmament, beyond all names of elegance; which I thinke (saith another) the very Seraphims doe admire with veneration, and (which hath here moued thy mention) high Seat and Throne of that Patriarchiall and Oecumenicall Highnesse, which hence rule, rities, yea persons Christian, wholly hallowed, to the damnable holies of ridiculous and blasphemous Mahometisme; the multitudes of other Churches, as silly captiued Damfels, and attending and following thee into this Mechanicall slavery. O CITE, which hast bene hast bene? let one word, the sum of all earthly excellence, expresse what fouds of words and seas of Rhetorick cannot expresse, which hast bene CONSTANTINOPLE; which art (that one name may declare thy bottomlesse hellish downefall) indeed, though not in name, Mahometople; the Seat of Mahometis power, the settling of Mahumetan dregs: What words can serue to preach thy funerall Sermon, and ring thy knell to succeeding ages? Sometimes the Theatre of worldly pompe, but then on that dismal day of thy captiuitie, the stage of earthly and hellish Furies, the sinke of blood, and slaughter-house of Death. What fenge would not become senselesse, to see the breaches of the walls filled vp with the slaine? the gates by death shunting out death, closed 4 vp to the arch with confused bodies of Turks and Christians? the shouts of men fighting? the cries, groanes, gaspes, of men dying? the manifold spectacles and varietie of death? and yet the worse estate, and more multiplied deaths of the liuing? women rauished; maidens forced; persons, vowed to sanctitie, deuoured to lust, slaughter, laurie; reuerend age no whit reuerenced; Greene youth perishing in the bloome, and rotten before it had time to ripen; the father seeing the hopes of his yeeres, leare pledges of Nature, slaine or sold before his face: the children beholding the parents passe into another captiuitie; all taking an euertlasting fare well of all wel-fare, as well as of each other. Well may we in compassion weepe for those miseries, the bitter passion whereof, like a violent whirlwinde, did to them drie vp the fountaines of teares! Euen he which writ the Historie of these things, quorum pars magna fuit, George Phranza, Counsellor, and great Chancellor to the Emperour, might much moue vs with his owne particular; himselfe sold to one, his wife to another, his daughter (richly espoused) now married to the Serailaueri, his sonne slaine with the Sultans owne hand, for not being obsequious to his beauty lust: if particular and priuate cases could finde any proper place in publike calamities; and if the Emperours owne Historie, were not (as some haue told it) more tragicall. O Sonne, how could thy brightnesse endure to see such hideous spectacles! but clouds of shor, dust, and smoke, hid th-m from thee! O Earth, which otherwhiles at that time f of the yeere, leck't thy selfe with thy fairest robes, embroidered with varietie of flowers! how wast thou then couered with dead carcases, and furrowed with rills of blood? O God, that the innes of man should thus prouoke thy iustice, by vnjust and sinfull instruments, to punish inalliance and sinne! and to chastise thy Christian seruants, by Antichristian and deuillish enemies! Iust art thou, O Lord, and iust are thy iudgements, which in iudgement remembreth mercy, which sauest the soules of thine, in and by the affliction of their bodies, but wilt cast this load of thy wrath into a fire that neuer shall be quenched.

But mee thinks I heare some excepting at this long digression, and quarrelling at this Tragedie in stead of the proceeding Historie. Shall I craue pardon? Or shall I rather desire the Reader a little to consider w th mee in this narration of Constantinople (as the Map and Epitome of Easterne Christendome) the miserable and perplexed estate of all Easterne Christians, by like meanes brought and trampled vnder the feet of the Ottoman Horse? The larger storie of their rites and opinions is referred to another taske: this I haue propounded as ne glasse of their miseries, that being now to take leaue of the Turkes, wee might not so much honour them with this peale of Rhetorical Ordinance; as by this mirror of miserie, be touched with feare in our selues for like punishments, if in time we meet not God with repentance; and remembering the afflictions of Ioseph, to pray for those our brethren, that God would shew mercy on them, and giue them patience, and (in his time) deliuerance. They which would take more view of the miseries of Christian vnder the Turke, may in Vinci, Georgiogra, Septemcastrensis, and others, read them; for mee, the parallels of the Turkish and Christian Hierarchy, was some occasion of this digression, touching which, let mee borrow a few words with our Reader.

Mahomet the Conqueror, for the reapeopling of the Citie, pretended great fauour to the Christians, gaue them licence to elect a new Patriarch, whom he honoured with the wonted rites and solemnities: and vouchsafed to conferre with him about the Christian mysteries for his mother was a Christian, and he himselfe a student to studies of learning, being a skilfull in the Greeke, Chaldee, Persian, Latin, Arabike, besides his Turkish, languages, professing knowledge also in Astrologie) and received at the hands of this Patriarch, (his name was Gennadius) a large treatise thereof, yet extant in Greeke and Turkish, and gaue him vners priuiledges. But things fained cannot continue; and partly through his owne coue-niuenesse, partly through the ambition and disagreeing of the Clergie, heauie fines were imposed on them, and the Seat receiued in his time nine successions, and eight in the raigne of his sonne, and so groweth vnder that burthen to this day. And howsoeuer the Patriarch enioyeth a Spiritual and Ecclesiasticall respect amongst the Christians, yet is hee contemned of the Turkes, some of them vpbraiding both him and other Christians, with the names of dogs, Ethnickes, vnbeleeuers, and the like zealous Rhetorick: nor is he admitted a come amongst the Bassaes, except when he brings his tribute of 4000. duckets, with almost is much besides to the Bassaes and other officers. In his Monastery and Patriarchall Church and Palace, are no Bishops or great Prelates nourished, but a few Monks and some Lay-officers and Counsellors. Gerasimus. They make publike mention of the foure Patriarchs in their Church Lyturgies. The Venetians allow the Greekes free vie of their religion through all their Dominion: and Crete is a chiefe place for their learned men.

The greatest misery which accompanieth the Turkish thraldome, is their b zeale of b Septemcast. making Profelytes, with manifold and strong inducements, to such as haue bin more nuzzled in superstitions, then trained vp in knowledge, and see such contempt of Christians, and honours which befall to many Renegadoes: and very many are peruerted and bewitched those with. c Septemcast. handleth this at large.

Yea, many voluntarily offer themselves to Apostasies, and others, by e hopes, feares, griefes, despaires, importunities, distracted: by that vision of vertue in the Turkish grauity, sobriety, bodily purity, and spirituall zeale (after their fash) with whole rabbles of Satanicall miracles deluded: wanting all intercourese of Sacraments, preaching, reading, and all Christian hoies: and full of wants, in necessities for this life; forget a better, and turne Turke. Thus do they sell to the Devil their soules, bought by the blood of Christ Iesus. We may well depaire of words to vter this misery, and to describe this Mart of Hell; seeing it exceedeth all words to see the Markets made of Christian bodies, the remainders of cruell and bloody warres, chained together in more then beastly bondage, so brought to the markets: if any bee sicke by the way, driven on as long as they can goe, and when their feet faile, laid ouer a horse, like as butchers deale with small cattle, and if thy die, left for a prey to the fowles and beasts: the places of their abode by the way, filled with cries of younglings of both sexes, abused to vnaturall lust. In the markets they are stripped, viewed, and (modestie forbids to speake, O Image of God thus abused!) openly in the secretest parts handled, bee they male or female: forced to goe, runne, leape; and if shame or disdaine make them vnwilling, by whips and stripes compelled: the infant plucked from the mothers breast and sold from euer againe seeing her, or libertie: the wife thus openly deluded and dealt with before the husbands face, and for a base price given by some baser Turke, euerslastingly diuorced from his face: his daughters virginities, openly, secretly! my words are swallowed vp with horror of the fact: himselfe, at home, reuerend for his yeres, now in that respect contemned, and hanging long on hand as vprofitable ware, before hee finde a buyer. Priest, Souldier, Merchant, Artificer, Husbandman, all equally subiect to this iniquity, saue that Gentlemen, and those of most liberrall education are least esteemed and most abused, because they can bring east profit to their Masters. Where besides filthy lusts, they suffer hunger, thirst, cold, and stripes; and which redoubleth those blowes, even there is the passion of Christ, in this passion of their owne, vpbraid to them. Some in impatience reuolt, some runne away, and are brought backe to a worse estate, if possible: some kill themselves; and some! But I can say no more. Let vs pray for them: and let vs at last leaue this Tragedie, and take view of former Antiquities.

CHAP. XV.

Of the Regions and Religions of ASIA MINOR, since called Natolia and Turkie.

NExt after the Turkish Religion thus related, it seemeth fittest to discourse of the ancient names and limits of Regions, and of the former Heathenish Religions of that part of the Turkish Dominion, which among Authors hath since, in a singular eminence, obtained the name of Turkie. And if it seeme strange, that the Turkish Religion (a new vpstart) be declared before those former of the Pagans, the matter wee had in hand hath thus altered our methode, that after wee had described the deformed disioynted lineaments of the Mother, in Arabian Saracen, her more mis-shapen Daughter, this Turkish Mopla, might attend her hard at her heels. As for the Region, we haue followed the Turkish forces hither: and now that we haue gathered our selues with the view of their later affaires of State and Religion let vs cast our eyes about vs, and observe the Countrey it selfe, which because of her long and entire subiection to this Nation, is styled by their b name. The Greekes c called it Natolia, and Asia, because it was the Easterly part of that Empire, as they called Thracia, the Countrey about Constantinople (which was named Nis Pagon) Romania. This Natolia, or Anatolia, is of others called Asia Minor; and yet Asia, is almost proper, and it is accounted aspecially applied to one Region in this great Chersonesus, or Peninsula, which containeth them.

with the Hills Anticaurus and Moschius, and part of Euphrates. Heere runneth Halyz, the end of Cresus Empire, both in the site and fate thereof; the doubtfull Oracle here giving him a certaine overthrow. For when hee consulted with the same, touching his Expedition against Cyrus, he received answer, That passing Halyz, hee should overthrow a great State; which he interpreting actively of his attempts against Cyrus, verified it passively in himselfe. And here, besides other streames, flideth Thermodon, sometime made famous by the bordering Amazons. Of which manly Feminine people, ancient Authors disagree: Theophrastus deriving them from the Sarmatians; Salust fetching them from Tanais; P. Diaconus describing them in Germany; Trogus and Isidore reporting them Scythians; Diodorus crossing the Seas to finde them in Libya, and thence also, in a further search, passing into an Island in the Atlantike Ocean; Ptolomey and Curtius placing them neerer the Caspian Sea; Strabo doubting whether there ever had beene such a people, or no. Some have found them out a-new in the new World, naming that huge River of them. Goropius confidently avouched them to bee the Wives and Sonnes of the Sarmatians or Cimbrians; who, together with their Husbonds, invaded Asia. And this hee proueth by Dutch Etymologies and other coniectures. Which, if it be true, sheweth, that their Religion was the same with the Scythian. They have said to have worshipped Mars, of whom they saie themselves to be descended. Religion it were, to speake of their Religion, of whose being wee have no better certaintie. Strabo writeth, That in the places ascribed to the Amazons, Apollo was exceedingly worshipped.

In Cappadocia was seated the Citie Comana, wherein was a Temple of Bellona, and a great multitude of such as were there inspired and rauished by deuillish illusion, and of sacred Seruants. It was inhabited by the people called Cataones, who being subiect to a King, did neuertheless obey the Priest that was in great part Lord of the Temple, and of the Sacred Seruants, whose number (when Strabo was there) amounted to sixe thousand and upwards of men and women. The Priest receiued the reuenue of the Region next adioyning to the Temple, and was in honour next to the King in Cappadocia, and commonly of the same kindred. These Idolatrous Rites are supposed to haue beene brought hither out of Taurica Scythia, by Orestes and his sister Iphigenia, where humane Sacrifices were offered to Diana. Here, at the solemne Feasts of Bellona, those Sacred Seruants before mentioned, called Comani, wounded each other in an extaticall suite, bloody Rites fitting Bellona's solemnities. Arganis, whose hoary head was couered continually with snow, was reputed a religious Hill, and habitation of some God.

Strabo reporteth of the Temple of Apollo Cataginis, in Daflacum; and of another of Iupiter in Morimena, which had three thousand of those Sacred Seruants or Religious Votaries, which as an inferior Order were at the command of the Priest, who receiued of his Temples reuenue fifteen Talents, and was reputed in the next ranke of honour to the Priest of Comana.

Not farre hence is Castabala, where the Temple of Diana Persica, where the sacred or deuoted women were reported to goe bare-footed on burning coles without harme. It is reported, that if a Snake did bite a Cappadocian, the mans blood was payson to the Snake, and killed him.

Many excellent Worthies hath this Region yielded to the world. Mazaca (afterwards of Claudius called Cæsarea) was the Episcopall Seat of Great Basil, Cucufum, the Receptacle of exiled Chrysostome; Amasia (now a Princicall Citie of the Turkish Beglerbegs) sometime the Countrey of Strabo, to whom these our Relations are so much indebted; Nissa and Nazianzum, of which the two Gregories receiued their surnames. But that Humane and Diuine learning is now trampled vnder the barbarous foot of the Ottoman-horse. Here is Trapezonde also, whilome bearing the proud name of an Empire. Licaonia, the chiefe Citie whereof is Iconium, celebrated in holy Writ, (and a long time the Royall Seat of the first Turkes in Asia, and since of Caramania, now Conia, or Cogne, inhabited with Greekes, Turkes, Iewes, Arabians and Armenians) is of Ptolomey adioyned to Cappadocia. And so is Diopolis, called before Gabira, since Augusta, which Ortelius placeth in the lesser Armenia.

In Diopolis was the Temple of the Moone had in great veneration, much like, in the Rites thereof, to that before mentioned of Comana; which although it bare the surname of Cappadocia, yet Ptolomey placeth it in this Armenia; and Comana Pontica, in Cappadocia, of the same name and superstitious deuotion to the same Goddesse. Thence haue they taken the patterne of their Temple, of their Rites, Ceremonies, Diuinations, respect to their Priests. And twice a yeere in the Feasts, which were called, The Goddesse her going out, the Priest wore a Diademe. He was second to none, but the King: which Priest-hood was holden of some of Strabo's progenitors: Pompey bestowed the Priest-hood of this Temple vpon Archelaus, and added to the temples reuenue two Schani, that is, three score furlongs of ground, commanding commanding the inhabitants to yield him obedience. Hee had also power ouer the Sacred Seruants, which were no lesse then fixe thousand.

Lycomedes after inioyed that Prelacie, with foure Sebeni of land added thereto: Cesar removed him, placing in his roome Dionentus, the sonne of Adiantorix, whom (with his wife and children) hee had led in triumph, purposing to slay his elder sonne, together with him. But when the younger perswaded the Souldiers that he was the elder, and both contended which should die, Dionentus was of his parents counselled to yeild to the younger, and to remaine aloue, to bee a slay to their family. Which pietie Cesar hearing of, grieving for the death of the other, hee thus rewarded. At the Feasts aforesaid, is great recourse of men and women hither. Many Pilgrims resort to discharge their vowes. Great flore of women is there, which for the most part are deuoted; this Citie being as little Corinth. For many went to Corinth, in respect of the multitude of Harlots, prostitued or consecrated to Venus.

Zela.

Zela, another Citie, hath in it the Temple of Anias, much reuerenced of the Armenians; wherein the Rites are solemnized with greatest Sanctimony, and Oathes taken of greatest consequence. The sacred Seruants and Priestly Honours are as the former. The Kings did sometime esteeme Zela, not as a Citie, but as a Temple of the Persian Gods: and the Priest had supreme power ouer all things; who, with a great multitude of those sacred Seruants inhabited the same. The Romans encreased their Reuenues.

In Cappadocia the Persian Religion was much vied: but of the Persian Rites see more^a in our Tractat of Persia. The^b lewdnesse of the Cappadocians grew into a Prouerbe; if any were enormously wicked, he was therefore called a Cappadocian.

GALATIA or GALLOGRACIA, so called of the Galli, which vnder the conduct of Brennus (saith Suidas) assembled an Army of three hundred thousand, and seeking adventures in foraine parts diuided themselves: some invading Greece; others Thrace and Asia, where they scitied themselves betwene Bithynia and Cappadocia. On the South it is confined with Pamphilia, and on the North is washed with the Euxine Sea, the space of two hundred and fift e miles. Sinope, the mother and nursing Citie of Mithridates, is heere seated: one of the last Cities of Asia that subiected it selfe to Turkish bondage, in the dayes of Mahomet the second. Of the Galate were three Tribes, Trogmi, Tolistobogi, and Tectosages: all which Gorgopus deriueu from the Commerij. At Tauium, which was inhabited with the Trogini, was a brazen Statue of Iupiter, and his Temple was a priuiledged Sanctuarie. The Tolistobogi had for their chiefe Mart Pisus, wherein was a great Temple of the Mother of the Gods, whom they called Andigista, had in great veneration; whose Priests had sometime beene mightie. This Temple was magnificently builded of the Attalian Kings, with the Porches also of white stone. And the Romans, by depriuing the same of the Goddesses Statue (which they sent for to Rome, as they did that of Aesculapius out of Epidaurus) added much reputation of Religion thereunto. The Hill Dindyma ouer-looketh the Citie, of which free was named Dindymena, as of Cybelus (which Ortelius suppoeth to bee the same) Cybele. Of the Galatians, Deiotarns was King: but more fame hath befallen them by Paulus Epistle to them.

Plutarch^c tells of a Historie of a Galatian woman, named Camma, worthy our recitall. Shee was faire and noble (the daughter of Dianæes Priest) and richly married to Sinurus the Tetrarch. But Sinorix, a man richer and mightier then hee, became his vnusitt couisall, and because he durst not offend violence to her, her husband liuing, he slew him. Camma solaced her selfe as she could, cloystering herselfe in Dianæes Temple, and admitting none of her mightie suiters. But when Sinorix had also moued that suit, she seemed not vnwilling; and when he came to desire her marriage, she went forth to meet him and with gentle entertainment brought him into the Temple vnto the Altar, where shee dranke to him a cup of poysoned liquor; and hauing taken off almost halfe, she reached him the rest: which after free sorrowfull weeping this day, now welcome me vnto thee: for I haue reuenged thy slaughter on the most wicked amongst men, and haue beene companion and patient with thee in life, with him in death. And thus dyed they both. The like manly woman-hood (if a Christian might commend that, which none but a Christian can discommend) Valerius Maximus^d sheweth of Glonaxa her country-woman, wife of Ortyagon, a great man amongst the Tectosages; who, in the warres of Manlius the Consul, being taken prisoner, was committed to the custodie of a Tribune, who forc't her to his pleasure. After that agreement was made for her ranisme, and the money brought to the place appointed, whiles the Tribune was busie about the receipt thereof, shee caused her Gallo-gracians to cut off his head, which hee carryed to her husband, in satisfaction of her wrong.

the into that lateſt and ſatall fire, ſuppoſing that their deceaſed friends ſhould read them in the other world. At their ſacrifices ^f they ſled not an Arſepex, or Diunor, which gazed in the entrails, but a Philoſopher, without whom they thought no Sacrifice acceptable to their gods. The Deuill certainlie was the god to whom their humane Sacrifices were acceptable, which in deſuill himanitie they offered at their bloudie Altars ^g, when they diuined of things to come, which they did by his falling, by the diſmembring and flowing forth of his blood, ^h Athenaus out of Phylarchus, telleth of one Ariagmes, a rich Galatian, which feaſted whole Nation a whole yeere together, with Sacrifices of Bulls, Swine, Sheepe, and other prouiſion, made ready in great Caldrons, prouided of purpoſe for this entertainment, that he made them in ſpacious Boother, which he had therefore built. Pauſanius ſaith, That the Penſinuntian Galatians abſtained from Swines fleſh. The Legend of Agdiſtus and Atte, which ne there addeth, is too ſilchy to relate.

Betweene ⁱ the mouth of Pontus, the Thracian Bosphorus, and part of Propontis on the Weſt, and Galatia on the Eaſt, part of the Euxine Sea on the North, and Asia (properly ſo called) on the South, is ſituate the Province called by the double name ^k of PONTVS and BITHYNIA. There were ſometimes two Provinces, diuided by the River Sangarius: now they are called Burſia by Girana; by Caſtaldus Beſſangial. The moſt famous Cities therein are, or rather haue beene, NICVS, famous ſometimes for Neptunes Temple, but more for the firſt Generall Councell therein celebrated, againſt Arrius, in defence of the Trinitie, and Chriffs Diuinitie; Nicomedia, ſometimes the Seat of Emperours, now ruinous; Apamia, and Prufa or Burſa, nigh to the Mount Olympus, where the firſt Ottomans had their ſeat Royall, and all of that race, except the Great Turkes themſelves, are ſtill buried: Chalcedon, built ſeuentee yeeres before Byzantium; and therefore the builders accounted blinde, which neglected that better Seat. Here was a famous Councell of fix hundred and thirtie Biſhops, againſt the Heretic of Eutyches: heere Iſaſon had built a Temple to Impier, in the ſtraights which ſeuer Europe from Asia, after Melaus meſure five furlongs. Of their ancient Kings others haue related: but one cannot paſſe this our Hiſtorie without obſeruation, and that is Mithridates, the ſixth King of that name; who looſing his father in the eleuenth yeere of his age, by his Tutors was treacherouſly aſſailed, but eſcaped, and by uſe of that antidote, which of him ſtill beareth the name Mithridate, out-liued their poyſoning conſpiracie. Hee liued indeed to the death of thouſands, which either his chaſtie or his warres conſumed. Four yeeres together (to auoid their Treafons) he liued in the fields and woods, vnder a ſhew of hunting; both preventing their deſignes, and inuring himſelfe to hardneſſe. Hee ſpake two and twentie languages, being Lord of ſo many Nations. Hee held warres with the Romans ſixe and forrie yeeres, whom thoſe renowned Captaines, Sylla, Lucullus, Pompey, did ſo conquer, as he alway aroſe againe with great luſtre, and with greater terror: and at laſt dyed, nor by his enemies command, but voluntarily in his old age, and his own Kingdome, neuer made to attend the Roman triumph; Syllas felicity, Lucullus prowefſe, and Pompeys greatneſſe notwithstanding. His aſpiring thoughts had greedily ſwallowed the Soueraignty both of Asia and Europe. He cauſed in one night, all the Romans in his Dominions to be ſlaine; in which maſſacre periſhed a hundred and ſiftie thouſand, as ſome haue numbred. But it cannot be conceiued (ſaith ^m Oroſius) how many there were, or how great was the griefe both of the doers and ſufferers, when every one muſt betray his innocent gueſts and friends, or hazard his owne life; no Law of Hoſpitalitie, no Religion of Sanctuary, or reuerence of Images, being ſufficient protection. And no maruell, if he ſpared not his enemies, when ⁿ he ſlew Xenopolis and Homochares his ſonnes; and after the poyſonings and voluntary death of Alonyma his wife, Statira and Roxane his daughters; his ſonne Pharnaces (like to raſe of the ſame cup) won to his part his fathers Armie, ſent againſt him, with which he purſued his father ſo hotly, that hee, hauing denounced a heauy curſe vpon him, entred amongſt his Wives, Concubines, and Daughters, and gaue them poyſon, pledging them in the ſame liquor; which his body accuſtomed to his Aridates, eaſily ouer-came, and therefore was ſaine to ſituate another to open a bloudy paſſage for that his cruell ſoule. A man (ſaith Oroſius) of all men moſt ſuperſtitious, alway hauing with him Philoſophers, and men expert in all Arts, now threeſcore and foureteene yeeres old. The Religion in Pontus was little differing from the Greekes: Wee read of the Sacrifices of this King to Ceres, and to Iupiter Bellipotens, in which the King brought the firſt wood to the fire. He powred alſo thereon Honey, Milke, Wine, Oyle, and after made a Feaſt. In honour of Neptune they drowned Chariots, drawne with foure white Horſes, with which (it ſeemed) they would haue him eaſe himſelfe in his Sea-voyages. ^o At the mouth of Pontus was the Temple of Iupiter Iafus, called Panopemus; and nigh thereto, a Promontory ſacred to Diana, ſometime an Iland, ioyned to the Continent by an Earthquake. Hereabouts was the Caeue Achernifum, whole bottomleſſe bottom was thought to reach to Hell.

I may in the next place set downe Paphlagonia, which, as it fareth with such as haue mightie Neighbours, can scarcely finde her proper limits. Some reckon it to Galatia, before described; and sometimes Pontus hath shared it: and either the force of Armes, or bountie of Emperours hath assigned it at other times to Phrygia, Cilicia, or other parts, the bounds thereof are thus deliuered: Pontus consisteth on the North; on the East, the River Halys; on the South, Phrygia and Galatia; on the West, Bithynia. Of the people herof, called Heneti, some derive the Veneti of Italy. They now call it Roni. It had the name Paphlagonia of Paphlagon, the sonne of Phineus. The Mount Olgasys is very high, and in the same are many Paphlagonian Temples. Sandracurgium is another Mountaine, made hollow by the Metall-miners, which were wont to bee slaues redeemed from capitall Sentence, who here exchanged that speedie death for one more lingering. So deadly is the Alpha and Omega, the beginning and ending, of this Idoll of the World: which the Spaniards haue verified in the West, by the destruction of another world. Virunum tells of a Fountaine in Paphla-gonia, as it were mixed with Wine, whereof they which drinke without other liquor, prone drunken.

The Heptacometæ and Mossynæci inhabited about those parts; * a people of that beastly disposition, that they performed the most secret worke of Nature in publicke view. These are not so much notorious for being worse then beasts, as their neighbours, the Tibareni, for surpassing in iustice other men. They would not warre on their enemy, but would faithfully before relate vnto him the Time, Place, and Houre of their fight; whereas the Mossynæci vowed to assault strangers that travelled by them very treacherously. They haue also a ve-nemens kinde of Hony, growing out of their trees, with which they beguiled and slew three troupes of Pompey. The Tabareni obserued one strange fashion, that when the woman was deliuered of a childe, her husband lay in, and kept his chamber, the women officiously attending him, a custome obserued at this day amongst the Brasilians.

His Region (in the strict sense) being a particular Province of the lesser Asia, is bounded on the West with part of Propontis, and Hellespont, the Egean, Icarian and Mæroan Seas; on the South, with the Rhodian Sea, Lycia and Pamphilia; on the East, with Galatia; on the North, with Pontus and Bithynia, and part of Propontis. In which space are contained Phrygia, Caria, and both Mysias, Eolias, Ionia, Doris, Lydia. Some b circumscribe from hence both Phrygia, and Mysia, alledging the authoritie of * Saint Luke. But in the Apocalypse, Chap. 1. these parts are also added; and, 1. Pet. 1. 1.

PHRYGIA is diuided into the greater, which lyeth Eastward; and the lesse, called also Hellespontica and Troas, and of some Epictetus. The greater PHRYGIA hath not many Cities. Here stood Midaium, the Royall Seat of Mydas, and Apamia, the Phrygian Metropolis. * Phrygia is called of the river Paryx, which diuideth it from Caria. Herodotus telleth that the Phrygians were accounted the most ancient of all people; for the riall wherof Pharmaceutus King of Egypt had shut vp, without societie of any humane creature, two children, causing onely goats to bee admitted to suckle them, who after long time pronounced bee, which they had learned of the goates; but be cause that (with the Phrygians) signified bread, therefore they accounted the Phrygians first authors of mankind. Before Deucalus's flood, Nannacus is reported to raigne there, and foreseeing the same, to haue assembled his people in to the Temple, with supplications and prayers. Hence grew the prouerbe to say, A thing was from Nannacus, which was exceeding old. Many antiquities are told of their gods; whose Theologie thus is recited by Ensebius. The Phrygians tell, that Meon was the most ancient King of Phrygia, the Father of Cybele, who inuented the pipe called Syrinx, and was named the Mountaine mother, beloued of Marsyas. But when as Attis had raised her belly, her father slaying him, and his fellowes, three enraged with madnesse, ranne vp and downe the country. Marsyas roamed with her, who after, being overcome in a Musickall contention of Apollo, was slayed quicke. After these things did Apollo loue Cybele, with whom Cybele obtained diuine Honours: and by his command the bodie of Attis was buried, and the young mans death. In Pessinus a City of Phrygia (after reckoned to Galatia) they erected a Temple to Attis, and Cybele. After the death of Hyperion, the children of Cælus parted

parted the Kingdome amongst them, the most famous of which were Atlas and Saturne: to the first of which befall the parts adjoining to the Ocean. He had great skill in Astronomy. Of his seven daughters were procreated many of the Gods and Heroes: and of Maia the eldest, and Jupiter, was Mercury begotten. Saturne the sonne of Atlas being covetous and wicked, married Cybele his sister, and had by her Jupiter. They tell of another Jupiter, brother of Cælus and King of Crete (but there and here they are so intangled with Fables, that the least inquirer hath most cause, and no lesse certaintie.) This Cætan held the Empire of the World, and had ten Sonnes, whom they call Curetes; his Sepulchre they shew to this day. Saturne (the Brother of Atlas) reigned in Italy and Sicilia, till Jupiter his Sonne dispossessed him, who proved a severe Prince to the wicked, and bountifull to the good. Thus much Eusebius of the Phrygian Divinitie out of their owne Legends, the Mysteries whereof he after unfoldeth. Other Tales they had, as that Minerva killed there a fire-breathing beast; of Philemon and Baucis, and such like, mentioned by the Poets. Meander making Warres with the Pessinuntians, vowed for Sacrifice whatsoever he first met after hee returned with Conquest, which he performed on Archeblaus his Sonne, overcoming, a faith one, Pietie with Pietie. Impious is that Pietie which destroyeth Humanitie, and Deuillish crueltye both in the Idoll and Idolater; as appeared also in the euent (if our Story bee true) the father rewarding such Pietie with greater Impietie on himselfe, and casting himselfe into the river, lest his name therunto. The like is told of the Rivers Sagaris and Scamander. Hercules when he went with the Argonautes to Colchos, came on shoare on Phrygia to amend his Oate, and being thirstie sent his sweeting Hylas to the river for water, who falling therein was drowned, wheteupon he (leaving his copanions) wandered in the woods, bemoaning his Hylas.

About these times Tantalus lived in these parts, a man besides other vices exceedingly covetous, not sparing the Temples of the Gods. Hence arose the Fable, that he was punished in Hell with perpetual hunger and thirst, whiles pleasant waters and dainty fruits did offer themselves to his mouth, but when he would haue tasted them, fled from him. So indeede doth Mammon torment his followers, making them to want as well that which they haue, as that which they haue not, the Medicine being the increaser of the Disease, as when fire is quenched with Oile: like Gardners Asles laden with lighted herbs (a burthen to them, food for others) themselves glad to feed on Thistles. And how many Tantals do we daily see enduring a hunger and thirst in the midst of their abundance? a monstrous and vnnatural sickness, to hunger after that which they haue: yet cannot, yet will not feed on; a Dropie-thirst, saue that they dare not drinke that, which they haue and thirst. Vnworthy of that life, which he sacrificeth to that, which neuer had the dignitie to be mortall: vnworthy that body, which he pineth with plenty; or that soule, which he dammeth for a fancie of hauing; or that nature of man which he conuineth to the Gallies, to the Mines, in the seruice of a piece of earth; vnworthy of the name of Christian, whose Christ was, to one of his Fore-fathers, worth thirtie pence, but now this will sell him for three halfe pence, for a piece of bread; yea, like a Leop Dog, for the shadow of a piece of Bread: vnworthy of any thing, saue that his couetise, to be his Tempter, his Tormentor, his Fury, his Deuill: Once, pity it is, that hee pitieth a Halter so deare, else would he rid the World of a burthen, and himselfe of his worthelesse life. But whither hath Tantalus carried me? Take heed (Reader) hee do not carry thee further, or thou him, beyond words: They say he would haue sacrificed his Sonne Pephiolos, had not Diuine power releued him: thou art like to find him Tantalus still. What the Poets tell of Ganymedes euery one knowes; of Niobe famous for her sonnes & daughters, which she lost all in one day: of Midus, (another Tantalus) whose couepousnesse became a new Alchymie to turne all into Gold. And how doth this two-fold Alchymie gull the world? the one making with vaine hopes a rich estate become poore, the other with ful haps making all Gold but the Man; onely the Roman Alchymist is Master of that Art which the former professe, that turnes so easily a little Lead into so much good Gold: onely the wiseman, wise in the latter to be Master of himselfe & his wealth, not a slave to passion or pelfe. And yet Midus in a publike calamity (happning by an Earthquake, which swallowed vp Houses) warned by an Oracle, to cast into those gaping jaws of the earth that which was most precious: hurled therein much treasure (what could hee thinke more precious: and how much more easily would many a Mydas haue hurled in himselfe?) But the Earth not yet satisfied, would nor close vp her mouth, till his sonne Ancuburnus (esteeming man to be most precious) leaped in, and the reconceited Element receiued an Altar in witness of his haughty courage. There were many Phrygian Kings named Midus.

The Phrygians sacrificed to the rivers Meander and Marsyas: they placed their Priests after death vpon a stone, ren cubits high. They would not sweare or force others to an oath: they were much addicted to diuination by Birds. Macrobius applyeth their Tales of Cybele and Atis, to the Sunne. Silenus is reckoned among the Phrygian Deities: whom Goropius fetcheth

In Phrygia on the river Sangarius stood Gordius (or as Arrianus? calleth it, Gardius) of which he reporteth, that when Alexander came thither, he had a great desire to see the Tower, in which was the palace of Gordius & Midas, that he might behold the shafts or beame of Gordius his Cart, and the indissoluble knot fastned thereto. For great was the fame thereof amongst the next adioyning people: that Gordius was one of the ancient inhabitants of Phrygia, hauing a litle place of ground, and two yokes of Oxen, the one hee tied to the plough, the other to the Waine or Cart. And while he was one day at plough, an Eagle fate vpon the yoke, and there continued till evening. Gordius astonished at so ominous a token, went to the Telmislean Sooth-sayers (for to the Telmislean, both men and women, this diuining science seemed hereditarie) and there met with a Virgin, whom hee acquainted with this accident: she counselled him to returne thither, and to sacrifice to Iupiter the King, for the augury was good. Gordius entreated her company with him, that she might instruct him how to sacrifice, which shee granted vnto him, and afterwards her selfe also in Marriage. These had betwixt them Midas, a proper stripling. Now a sedition hapning among the Phrygians, they consulted with the Oracle, which answered that a Cart should bring them a King, that should end that sedition. And while they were musing on this answere, Midas came riding in his Cart (with his parents) into the throng, and was by the Phrygians forthwith acknowledged King. The Car in memory thereof, was hangd vp to Iupiter in the Tower (or Temple of Iupiter, so Curtius calleth it) with thanks for that Eagle (Iupiters bird) sent before to fore-gishe thus much to his Father. The knot fastned vnto it, was of the barke of the Cornell or d-g-tree, wouen with such Art, that a man could neither finde beginning nor end thereof. Bruted it was amongst the Phrygians, that hee which could vntie it should be Lord of all Asia. Alexander turning it to and fro, and with vaine curiositie searching how to loosen it, at last with his sword chopped it in sunder, lest he should otherwise leaue some scruple in the hearts of his Souldiers. Thus saith Arrianus.

Qu. Curt. l. 3.

In the LESSER PHRYGIA, (of a Hillaberrin, called Ida; of a River, Xanthe, of the Kings, Troas, Dardania, &c.) stood that eye of Asia, and Starre of the East, called Ilium or Troie. Of which, all that I can say, will but obscure the renowne and glory which all Heathen Antiquitie haue by an vniuersall consent of Poetic and History giuen to it. And what Greeke or Latine Author hath not mentioned her ruines, and done exequies to her Funeral? Dardanius is named her founder, after whom, and his succeeding sonne Erichonius, Troas ruled, who erected the Temple of Pallas, and reedified the Citie, leaving thereto his name. To him succeeded Ilus, and after him his sonne Laomedon, whom Neptune and Apollo helped in repaying the Citie: which Hercules sacked, and Priamus restored, but to a greater losse, by the Grecians tenne yeeres siege, and one nights spoyk. Dares, and Diosy, supposed Historians of those times, besides Homer, and the Greekes and Latines his followers, haue more then enough related the particulars. Hesione, sister to Priamus, was by Hercules giuen to Telamon for the first entring the walls. Her did Priam demand in vaine by Antenor, and Eneas his Ambassadors, Paris, otherwise called Alexander, one of the fillicie children of Priamus and Hecuba, was sent in the same businesse, and returned with Helena, the wife of Menelaus a Lacedemonian Prince, who consulting with the other Grecian Lords for her recovery, first Diomedes and Ulysses were sent to intreat; after a thousand sayle of ships, to force her restitution: which after a tedious warre, with much losse on the one side, and utter ruine on the other, was effected. The league of the Greekes was made by Calebas, who diuiding a Boare in two parts, caused the Princes with their swords drawne, and besprinkled with bloud to passe betwene, swearing destruction to Priamus and the Troians. The like rites of solemne couenent we read obserued by Gop himselfe: and by the Jewes.

The Religion of Phrygia and Troy, and all these Grecian parts of Asia were litle, (if litle) differing from the Greeke superstitions of which in our Europe-discoueries wee are to relate. Therefore adioyning a larger discourse till then, wee are a litle to mention heere their deuotions. In Troy were the Temples of Iupiter, Hercules, at whose Altar Priam was slaine of Iupiter Fulminator, of Inno, Apollo, Minerva, Mercury, Neptune. To Neptune they which sayled, did sacrifice a Black Bull and Oxen, whose hinder parts were burnt, the inwards they tailed; Rams and Hoggies were sacrificed also to him. To Mercury cloven tongues hurled into the fire; To Venus, on the Hill Ida; To Scamander, to the Nymphes in euens. To the dead, also they sacrificed Black Sheepe ouer a ditch or hole in the ground, with wine, water, & flower, thinking that the soules dranke the bloud. They had whole flocks sacred to the God, vntouched by men. They obserued auguries, thunders, dreames, Oracles of Apollo, and other superstitions. The Troian Virgins when they were to bee married, bathed themselves felues a little before in Scamander, wing these words to the Riuer; Take, O Scamander my Virginities. This gave occasion to one Cimon to defloure Callirrhoe, having hidden himselfe in the reeds, and vpon that watch-word lifted vp his Reedic-head, and forced his Maider-head, which caused the ceasing of that foolish and superstitious custome. But of all their superstition, the most famous was their fatall Palladium (a name giuen to all Images, which superstition beleued not made with his hand,) was said to haue fallen from heauen a Pessinus, or (as Apollodorus witnesseth) at Ilium, at the prayer of Ilius when he built it. For he hauing a pyed Oxe giuen him by the King of Phrygia, and warned by him to build a Citie where that Oxe should lye downe, followed him to this place, where he built a Citie, which hee called of his owne name Ilium; and desiring Iupiter to send him some signe, found this Palladium the next morning before his Tent. Some say Afius a Philosopher made it by Magicall Art: Apollodorus addeth, that it moued vp and downe, holding in the right hand a Lauacin; in the left, a Dillasse. It was three cubits long. Apollo's Oracle fore-warned, that that Citie should neuer be taken, in whose walls it was kept. They hid it therefore in a more secret part of the Tower, that it should not be publickely knowne, making many other like it, to deceiue all future deceiuers. A woman-Priest attended the holy things in honour thereof, ceeping fire continually burning. It was valawfull with common hands or eyes to touch or see it. And therefore when Ilius saued it from flames, the Temple being on fire, he was for his blind zeale persecuted with blindness; of which, soone after hee recouered by diuine indulgence. Ulysses stole it from them. And thus perished that famous Phrygian Citie, if that may be said to perish which still continueth, farre farre more famous by Homers pen, then Priams Scepter, or Hectors valour.

The ruines thereof are as yet very apparant (according to Bellonius, * an eye-witnesse, his report) the walls of the Citie yet standing, the remnants of her decayed building still, with a kinde of Maestic entertaining the beholder: the walls of large circuit, of great spongie blocks and hard stones, cut foure square. There are yet to be seene the ruinous Monumentes of the Turrets on the walls. They spent foure houres, sometime on horse, and sometime on foot, in compassing the walls. Great Marble Tombes of ancient workmanship are seene without the walls, made chest-fashion: and their courts yet whole. There are also extant the ruinous shapes of two great Towers; one in the top of the hill, (on the bending whereof the Towne stood) the other in the bottome: and another in the middle. Many great Cisterns made to receiue raine water are yet whole. There are the ruines also of Churches built there, by the sometime inhabiting Christians. The soile about it is dry and barren: the Riuer (so much chaunted) Xanthus and Simois are small rilles, in Summer quite dry: as also Mela testifieth, fama quam natura maiora flumina. A later Trauellers say, That they are not so contemptible as made by Bellonius, who perhaps mistaketh others for them, there being sundry riuers that descend from the mountaines. He addeth that these ruines are still ruined, and beare not that forme lessened daily by the Turkes, who carried the pillars and stones vnto Constantinople, to adorne the buildings of the great Bassaes, as they now doe from Cyzirus.

This Ilium (whose Sepulchre only Bellonius hath seene) is not in that place where old Ilium stood, but thirtie furlongs Eastward, if Strabo * be receiued, yea it changed the place and situation often, and here at last abode, by warning of the Oracle, which also now had his Faies as well as Ilium. A small Towne was this later Ilium, having in it the Temple of Pallas, which Alexander in his time graced, enriching the Temple with offerings, and the place with name of a Citie, with building and immunitie. After his victory ouer the Persians, hee sent them a fauourable Epistle, with promise to build them a sumptuous Temple, and there to institute sacred games, which Lysimachus after his death in great part performed, peopling from the neighbour Citie. The Romans also planned there a Colonie, when as Lysimachus afore had walled it, and built the Temple. Fimbria, in the warres against Mithridates, hauing treacherously slaine the Consul Valerius Flaccus, and seeking to enter, vpon deniall assailed it, and in the eleuenth day entered by force; glorying that he had done as much in eleven dayes, as Agamemnon with a thousand Lill of Greeks, had done in ten yeeres. Not so much, replied an Ilian, for Hector was not heere to defend the Citie. Cæsar, enuious of Alexanders attempts, and desiring his pedigree from Iulus, confirmed their former libertie, adding a new Region to their Territory. Mela telleth a strange wonder of the Hill Ida: Soone after midnight they which looke from the top thereof, discern certain dispersed fires, which as the light approacheth are more vnited, and at last gathered into one flame, like a fire, which by degrees groweth into a round and huge globe, and then the degrees diminishing in quantity, but in qualitie of like increasing, is at last taken vp into the Chariot of the Sunne.

Achilles among the later Ilians enjoyed a Temple and a Tombe: Patroclus also and Antiochus had their Tombes: to them all and to Aiaz did the Ilians sacrifice; an honor denied to Alexander ^{re} reporteth, that Alexander sacrificed to Proteus ^{laus}, (choosing Alcates on his graue) who was the first of the Grecians, that in the Trojan warre set foot in Asia; as he had before in the Straits of Hellepont offered a Bul to Neptune and the Sea-Nymphes, pouring a golden Viall into the Seazand in the places from whence he set saile, and where he arrived, he set vp Altars to Iupiter Deceus, to Pallas, and to Hercules. And being come to Ilium he sacrificed to Trojan Pallas, and fastening the armes, which he vied, in her Temples, (a rite which the Philistines ^e obiened in Saul their enemy, and David ^d with the armor of Goliath hee tooke thence the armour sacred to the Goddesse; Monuments till that day of the Trojan warre, afterward the weapon^s of his guard. Hec ^f appealed also Priamus his Ghost, performing his exequies at the Altar of Iupiter Hircius, so to reconcile him to Naptolemus his house, of which he, by his mother, defended. He crowned Achilles his Tombe; calling him happy ^g, who had Homer to blaze abroad his praises to the world: in which he was greater, then Great Alexander.

Not farre hence is the Citie and Hauen Priapus, so called of the beasty God: like to Orphanes and Comissalus and Tychon, drunken Gods of the Athenians. This God or Deuill (o more iniquitie, then antiquitie) was not knowne of Hesiod. This Region was called Adastria of King Adastus, who first built a Temple of Nemesis, calling it Adastria. In the countrey adioyning was an Oracle of Apollo Alysus, and Diana: whose Oracle being demolished, the stones was carried to Pasium, where was built an Altar, famous for fairenesse and greatnesse. Of this Adastria was a Temple at Cyzicus.

This Cyzicus was a Citie of MYTIA-MINOR; (for there is another Mytia, called Major, according to Ptolemy ⁱ diuision;) the former is called Olympica, the later by ^k Galen Hellepontica; there is another Mytia in Europe, which Volatran distinguisheth, calling it Mztia. Some ascribe this Cyzicus to Bithynia. We list not to vmpire betwixt Geographers, but to relate our Historie, ^m which telleth that this Citie was renowned for Antiquite, given by Iupiter in dowrie to Proserpina; whom therefore the Inhabitants worship. The greatnesse, beautie, lawes, and other excellencies of Cyzicus let others shew you; their Temple I cannot but trye to view with wonder, ⁿ whose pillars are measured foure cubits thicke, fiftie high, each of one stone: in which, the whole building was of polished stone, and euerie stone was ioyned to his fellow with a thread ^o or line of gold: the Image of Iupiter was of luty, crowned with a Marble Apollo. Such was the beautie of the worke, and coslinesse of the matter, that the earth, whether with loue seeking to embrace it, or with iust hatred for the idolatrous curiositie, swallowed vp both it and the Citie in an Earthquake. The like befell to Philadelpia, another Mytian Citie (one of the seven Churches ^r to which Iohn writeth) and to Adagnesia ^q in the same Region. Neere to Cyzicus was the Hill Dyndima; and thereon Cybele Temple built by the Argonautes: who had also vsed a certaine stone for an anchor, which they fixed sure at Cyzicus with Lead, because it had often plaid the fugitiue, ^r called therefore the fugitiue Stone. The Cyzican Towers yielded a seven fold Echo.

The Mytians for their great deuotion were called snake-climbers, a fit name for all superstitious. They had in honour the Nymph Zrybia: vnder colour of religion the Parians counted the Lampacens of a great part of their territory. Of this City was Priapus aforesaid, a man monstrous in lusts, admirable in his plentifull issue; hated of the men, (how soeuer of the women beloued) and by them exiled to a wilde life in the field, till a grieuous disease sent amongst them, caused them, by warning of the Dodonan Oracle to recall him; Fit seruour for such a god. Hence the tale of his huge Genitals, and of his Garden-deitie. Offering to roush a Virgin at the time of her wedding, he was scared by the braying of an Asse, offering to this cause consecrated to sacrifices. Lettice most suitable to such lusts.

A little hence standeth Abydus, ^t where was a famous Temple of Venus, in remembrance of their libertie recovered by a Harlot. Ouer against the same on Europe side, was Sestus, chaunted by the Poets, the guard of the Hellepont, one of the keyes (saith Bellonius) of the seven furlonges ouer. Here did Xerxes ioyne Asia to Europe by a bridge, professing warres not against the Greekes alone, but against the Elements. To Mount Athos ^u did this Mount Athos write his menacing Letters. To the Hellepont hee commanded three hundred stripes to be giuen, and fetters to be cast in, with reuiling speeches for the breach of his new-made by tempest broken.

In Mytia ^x was that famous Pine-tree, foure and twentie foot in compass, and growing intire three score an ten foot from the root, was diuided into three armes equally distinct, which which after gathered themselves close into one top; two hundred foot high, and fifteen cubits. Apollo Cilleus had a Temple dedicated to him at Cilla; another was erected at Chrysa to Apollo Smythius; and twentie furlongs thence, another to Diana Asitima; another (with a sacred Caue) at Andira to the mother of the Gods: this Caue reached vnder the earth to Pales, a hundred and thirtie furlongs. Attalus reigned in these parts, who furnished the Library of Pergamus with two hundred thousand Volumes, for the writing wherof those parchment skins were inuented, therefore called to this day Pergamena. Of this name Attalus were three of their Kings; the last of which made the Romans his heires. Heere was that ruel Edict of Mithridates published to murder the Romans, whereby many, driven to seek helpe of Esculapius in his Temple at Pergamus, found him either vnmercifull, or vnkilfull to cure them, although his Physick-shop was in this Citie. Here were inuented (by King Attalus) Tapetrick hangings, called Aulaa of Aula his hall, which was hanged therewith. Here was also a yeerely spectacle of the Cock-fight. The Mysian Priests abstained from lech and marriage. They sacrificed a Horse, whose inward parts were eaten before their owes.

Pergamul.

South-wards from hence along the Sea-coast, trendeth Eolis: whereunto adioyneth LYDIA, called v anciently Asia, and the Inhabitants, Asiones. It was called Meonia of Meues their first King, who begat Coty, and he, Attyr, and Asius, of whom some say Asia taketh name. Cambyses a Lydian King (saith Athenens) was also addicted to gourmandize, that in the night he did teare and eat his wife; and finding her hand (in the morning) in his mouth, the thing being noyfed abroad, he killed himselfe. The same Author telleth of King Andramytes, that he made women Eunuchs for his attendants: that the Lydians were so effeminate, that they might not endure the Sun to looke vpon them, for which cause they had their shady bowers; that in a place, therefore called Impure, they force women and maidens to their lust, which Omphale (who had indured this violence, coming after to bee their Queene) reueaged by as vnjust iustice. For assembling all the seruants or slaues, shee put vp among them their masters daughters, permitting them to their pleasures. Shee was laughter of Iardanus of the posteritie of Attis, who set Hercules his taske to spin amongst her maidens. Her husband Timolus deflowered Arriphe in Diana's Temple. Of him hply was named the hill Timolus, which yielded golden sands to the Riuer Pactolus. Halyattis was after a long succession the Lydian King, father to Craesus, whose Sepulchre was an admirable Monument, being at the bottome stone; elsewhere, earth; built by men and women, slaues, and hired persons. It is sixe furlongs in compasse, and two hundred foot; and a thousand and three hundred foot broad. All the daughters of the Lydians prostitute themselves, and thereby get their liuing and dowrie. These were the first inuenters of coyning money: he first Hiclers and Pedlers: the first players at Dice, Balls, Chess, in the time of Attyr he first: driven to this shift by famine, which when they knew not otherwise to redresse, they deuised these games, passing the time of euery second day with these pastimes, then beguiling their emptie bellies, and (according to their ominous inuention) now not so much he companions, as the hatbengers and forerunners of emptinesse, although some contrarie to their first originally, yfe them to ease their fullnesse. Thus did the Lydians liue (if Herodotus be beleued) two and twentie yeeres, eating and playing by course, till they were faine to diminish their multitudes by sending Colonies vnder Tyrrhenus vnto that part of Italy, which of him receiued that name.

Here on the winding streames of Meander (or nigh thereto) was situate Magnesia, (not hat by Harmus) whose Inhabitants worshipped the Dyndimene Mother of the Gods. But the old Citie and Temple perishing and a new builded, the Temple was named of Diana Leucobryna, exceeding that of Ephesus in workmanship, but exceeded in greatnesse and multitude of oblations. And yet this was the greatest in Asia, except the Ephesian and Dindymene. Of Tralles a neighbouring Citie was Metrodorus the Priest of Iupiter Laryssus. In the way from thence to Nyssa, is a Village of the Nyssians, Achara. There is the Plutonium (compassed with a Groue) and the Temple of Pluto and Iano, and the Caue Charonium, admirable to the view, ouer-hanging the Groue, which it threatneth, seeming to deuoure it. They say, that sicke men, which are deuoted to those Gods, goe thither, and in a street neere the Caue, stay with such as are expert in those mysteries, who sleeping for them, inquire the course to cure them by dreames. These inuoking diuine remedies many times lead them into the Caue, where abiding many dayes with fastings, and sweatings, they sometimes intend to their owne dreames, by the counsells of the Priests. To others this place is pestilent and inaccessible. Here are yeerely festiualls solemnized, and then most of all are these deuotions practised, Souths and stripings naked and anoynted, draw or lead a Bull into the same Caue with great speed, who falls anon dead. Thirtie furlongs beyond Nyssa is a festiuall place solemnly frequented frequented by the neighbouring Inhabitants, which is said to have a Caeue dedicated to the same Gods, and reaching to Acharaca.

After Omphale, Hercules posteritie, which he had by her, reigned: carrying for their royall Ensigne that Battle-axe, which Hercules had taken from Hippolita the Amazon. Candaules was carie of the burthen, gave it to one of his Courtiers to beare, interpreted an ominous presage of that which happened. He thinking it not enough happinesse to enjoy the beauties of his wife, wallest some other eyes were witnesses of his possession, placed Gyger his friend where he might see violence (happily the occasion of that Tale of Gyger Ring, wherewith he went invisible) to take view of his wifes nakednesse. But being perceived by her at his departure, shee put him soone after to his choyce, whether hee would enjoy what hee had seene, and the Kingdome for dowrie, without other ioynture then Candaules bloud, or would there himselfe bee slaine. Easie to iudge his choyce, by which Hercules his race failed. Of him descended Craesus, whose History is knowne. Him did Cyrus overthrow, and had let him on a pile of wood to burne him, who then cryed Solon, Solon, Solon: which Cyrus not understanding, caused him to be asked, why he so called; he answered, That sometimes drunken with wealth and pleasure, he thought himselfe happy, but then was taught by Solon, not to iudge any happy till his end; which lesson hee now learned to his cost: to his good indeed; for Cyrus for this pardoned his life, now the second time saved: which a little before a Soeldier in taking the Citie had bereaved, had not naturall affection in his sonne (before this time dumbe) violently enforced Nature to loosen the instruments of speech, and proclaim, Iu the King. Thus had the Oracle prophesied, that the day would be dismall and disastrous to the father, when the sonne should speake (where to hee had before in vaine sought helpe of God and men) and he could speake freely all his life after. And this was all that Craesus; by his sumptuous & presents, and superstitious deuotion could get of Apollo, which had foretold him, what he himselfe had no power to avert or alter, not to speake of his enigmaticall answers, fates, not instructions; nouments, not documents vnto him.

ONIA is situate on the Icarian Sea, ouer against the Iland Chios. The Inhabitants are accounted Athenian Colonies (whereas Athens may rather seeme to bee Ionian) deducing their name from Ion the sonne of Crensa and Xuthus. But more probable is^b their opinion which deriue them from Iannus, as is^c before obserued by vs. Of the Ionians in Asia, were reckoned ten principall Cities in the Continent, Mileus, Myus, Priene, Ephesus, Colophon, Lebedus, Teos, Clazomenae, Phocaea, Erythraea, besides Chios and Samos in the Ilands, to which they imparted their names.

The Ionians had their common Sacrifices and Ceremonies at the Promontorie of Mysae, generally by all the Ionians dedicated to Neptune Heliconius, erecting there vnto him a Temple: the place was called Panionium, and the feast in which those sacrifices were offered, Panionia. To those twelue Cities, Strabo mentioning the founders of them, addeth also Smyrna, and saith, that they were called to the Panionian solemnities by the Ephesians, who were sometime called Smyrnaeans of Smyrna the Amazon, who is named the founder of Ephesus. Against those Smyrnaeans the Sardians warred, and would on no condition raise their flagge, except the Smyrnaean Matrons were permitted to their lusts. *The maide-servant of one Philarchus amongst them deuiled, that those of her condition might in their Mistressse habite be sent, to saue their Masters beds, which was accomplished.

EPHESVS.

As for EPHESVS, the place was designed by Oracle for the building thereof, which wamed them there to build, where a Fish and a Bore should shew them. It happened, that as certaine Fishermen at the sacred fountaine Hypaeus were broyling their fish, one of them lay covered therein, leaping out, ranne from thence as fast as Trachea, and there fell downe dead of a wound which they gaue him, grunting out his last gaspe, where Pallas after was honoured with a Temple. Greater then Pallas and her swinish deuotion, was that Grea Diana of the Ephesians, (so proclaimed in the madnesse of their zeale) and that Image which came downe from Iupiter, which all Asia and the world worshipped. This Image (as Plinie writeth) was thought by some to be of Ebonie; but Mutianus thrice Consul, writ, That it was of the Vine, neuer changed in seuen alterations or restitutions, which the Temple received. It had many holes filled with Spikenard, the moysture whereof might fill and close vp the rifts. The

doores of the Temple were of Cypresse, ^b which after foure hundred yeeres were as fresh as if they had bene new. The rooffe of the Temple was Cedar. The Image, which superstition supposed came from Iupiter, was made (saith the same Mutianus) by one Caneitia, the Temple (reputed one of the worlds seven wonders) was first the building of the Amazons, as Solimus affirmeth. But ⁱ Pausanias reproveth Pondarus, for affirming that the Amazons had built it, when they made their Expedition against Theseus and the Athenians: for at that time (saith he) the women going from Thermodon, sacrificed to the Ephesian Diana in their way, as they had done before in the times of Hercules and of Bacchus. Not the Amazons therefore, but one Craesus of that Countrey, and Ephesus (supposed the sonne of the Ruer Cayster) founded it. Of him the Citie also received her name. About the Temple dwelt both diuers other suppliants, and women of the Amazonian race. These were spared by Androclus the sonne of Codrus, who here planted his Athenian Colonie, and chased out the Leleges, which before were the Inhabitants; who being slaine in this Expedition, his Sepulchre remained in Pausanias his time, on which was set a man armed. Xerxes when he burned all other Temples in Asia, spared this, uncertaine whether for admiration or deuotion; most certaine, a bootlesse clemencie. For ^k Herodotus, to lengthen the memory of his name with de-citation of his wickednesse, fired this Temple on that day in which Alexander was borne at Pella. Diana forsooth, (who in her Midwife-Mysterie is called also Ino Lucina) in her officious care to helpe Olympias in her trauell, was then absent. It was after restored to a greater excellencie by Democritus, or (as Strabo termes him) Chermocrater, who was also the Architect of Alexandria. Some affirm, That two hundred and twentie yeeres were spent in building this Temple, by all Asia: Plinie saith, foure hundred. It was built on a Marsh, because of Earthquakes (which are said to be more common in Asia then other parts) being founded on Coles, the second foundation Wooll. There were therein an hundred and twentie seven Pillars, the workes of so many Kings, threescore foot in height, and fixe and thirtie of them very curiously wrought. The Temple was foure hundred twentie five foot long, two hundred and twentie broad; of the Ephesians holden in such veneration, that when Craesus had begirt them with a straight siege, ^m they deuoted their Citie to their Goddesse, tying the wall thereof with a rope to the Temple. It was enriched and adorned with gifts beyond vantage. It was full of the workes of Praxiteles and Thrasus.

The Priests were Eunuches, ⁿ called Megalobryzi, greatly honoured, and had with them sacred Virgins. Some call these, or else another order of Diana's Priests, Estiuates and Essene, that is, Good fellows (after the appellation of this bad age) which by yeerly courses had a peculiar diet assigned them, and came in no priuate houle. All the Ionians resorted to Ephesus, ^o at Diana's festiual, which with daunces and other pompe they solemnized, with their wives and children, as they had done before at Delos: the Temple had priuiledge of Sanctuarie, which Alexander extended to a furlong, Mithridates to a slight shot, Antionus added part of the Citie: But Augustus disannulled the same, that it should no longer bee a harbour for villaines. This the Romans finde (saith a Roman Pope relating this Historie) among whom are so many Sanctuaries, as Cardinals houses, in which theeves and ruffians haue pretorion, which make the Citie (otherwise quiet and noble) a denne of theues. A lake named Selmusius, and another which floweth into it, were Diana's patrimonie, which by some Kings being taken from her, were after by the Romans restored. And when the Publicans had seized the profits, Artimedorus was sent in Ambassage to Rome, where he recovered them to Diana, for which cause they dedicated to him a golden Image in the Temple. In the midst of the lake was the Kings Chappell, accounted the worke of Agamemnon. Alexander not onely restored the Ephesians to their Citie, which for his sake they had lost, and changed the government into a popular state, but bestowed also the tributes, which before they had paid to the Persians, vpon Diana, and caused them to be slaine which had robbed the Temple, and had ouertrowne the Image of Philip his father therein, and such of them as had taken Sanctuarie in the Temple he caused to be fetched out and stoned. While he staid at Ephesus, hee sacrificed to Diana with very solemne pompe, all his Armie being arranged in battell array. But this Temple of Diana, together with their Diana is perished: But neuer shall that Truth perish, which Paul writ in his Epistle to them; for observing which by Christ himselfe in another Epistle written by S. Iohn, they are commended; and which in a Councell there holden, was confirmed against the Heretic of Nestorius and Celestius. But alas, that golden Candlesticke (as was threatened) is now almost by Greekish superstition and Turkish tyrannie removed thence: a Bishop with some remnants of a Church

The Ephesians were obseruers of curious Arts, which not onely Luke mentioneth, but the prophete also confirmeth: Ephesia litera: so they called the spells, whereby they made themselves in wrestling, and other conflicts, invincible. The summe of those Magicall bookes burned by them, Luke taketh at 50000. pieces of silver, which Budens summeth at 5000. Crownes. The many Temples of Venus at Ephesus, are not worth memorie. Memorable is the History of an Ephesian maid, a who, when Brennus invaded Asia, promised him her loue (which he much desired) and withall, to betray the Citie to him, if hee would giue her all the Jewels and Attire of the women; which the Souldiers were commanded to doe, who heaped their gold so fast vpon the Damocell, according to their command, that shee was therewith covered and flaine. The Asiarche, which Luke nameth, Besa a Saitch were certaine Priests, whole office it was to set forth publike playes and games in honor of their Gods; as also were the Syriarche. The Ephesians, as all other Ionians, were much addicted to nicenes and sumptuousnesse of attire, for which, & other their delicacies, they grew into a prouerbe.

The Ionians had other places and Temples amongst them, famous for deuotion and antiquitie, such as no where else are to be scene, as the Temple and Oracle of Apollo at Gemini, Myus had a small arme of the Sea, whose waters by the means of Meander sayling, the foyle brought forth an innumerable multitude of fleas, which forced the Inhabitants to forsake their Citie, and with bagge and baggage to depart to Miletus. And in my time (saith Pausanias) nothing remaineth of Myus, in Myus, but Bacchi Temple. The like befell to the Atarniz neere to Pergamus. The Persians burnt the Temple of Pallas at Phoceæ, and another of Iuno in Samos, the remains whereof are worthy admiration: the Erythræan Temple of Hercules, and of Pallas at Prienæ; that for antiquitie, this for the Image. The Image of Hercules is said to be brought in a ship which came (without mans helpe) to the Cape, where the Chians and Erythræans laboured each to bring the same to their owne Citie. But one Phormio a Fisher-man of Erythræa was warned in a dreame, to make a rope of the haire cutt off from the heads of the Erythræan Matrons, by which their husbands should draw the same to the Towne. The women would not yeild; but certaine Thracian women which had obtained their freedom, granted their haire to this purpose, to whom therefore this priuiledge was granted, to enter into Hercules Temple, a thing denied to all other the Dames of Erythræa. The rope stil remaineth: and the Fisher-man which before was blinde, recovered his sight. In this Towne also is Mineruaes Temple, and therein a huge Image of Wood, sitting on a Throne, holding with both hands a Dittasse. There are the Graces and Howres, formed of white Marble. At Smyrna was the Temple of Æsculapius: and nigh to the Springs of the River Meles, a Caeue, in which they say Homer composed his Poems. Thus much Pausanias. The Ionian letters were more resembling the Latine, then the present Greeke are, and were then common, as in our first Booke is shewed in our Phœnician Relations.

At Miletus, a mad phrensie had once possessed their Virgins, where by it came to passe, that they in great multitudes hanged themselves. Neither caule appeared, nor remedie: Needs must they goe whom the Deuill driues. Whom neither the sweetnesse of life, bitternessse of death, teares, intreaties, offers, custodie of friends could moue, Modestie detained from proceeding in this immodest butcherie: and which is more to be wondred at, a Polhume modestie, which could not be borne, till they were dead. For a Law was made, That the naked bodies of such as had thus strangled themselves, should bee drawne through the streets: which contumely, though it were but a Gnat to those Camels, which with the halter they swallowed, yet strained they at it, and it could not bee digested, but stayed their fury. Before the Troian warre, was Hercules famous at Militus. The Ionians were subiect to the Assyrians: after that to the Egyptians; next to the Lydians, Persians, and the other Empires, which succeßiue followed.

From Ephesus to Colophon are seuentie furlongs. This Towne grew into a Prouerbe; for though their excellencie in Horie-manship they usually made the victorie (otherwise doubtfull) to bee certaine on that side which entertained them. Before Colophon was the Grove of Apollo-Clarius. And here dyed Calebas, that famous wizard for grieve, that when vpon his demand Mopsus had certainly answered how many Pigs were in the belly of a Sow, by him propounded: Calebas could not doe the like, when Mopsus asked of the number of Pigs growing on a Fig-tree thereby.

Not farr from hence is Erythræa, the Towne of one of the Syphils, which liued in the time of Alexander, of which name also there were others in other places and times, renowned for their prophesying. Beyond Clazomenæ is the Temple of Apollo, and Smyrna famous in those blinde times, for the Temple and Statue of Homer; since, for the Prelacie of Polycarpus, whom our Lord himselfe so highly commendeth. Plinie writeth of one in Smyrna, which being a maide, changed her sexe, and became a stripling: of which sort he affirmeth he had seene one in Africa, then liuing when hee writ, which on her marriage day sustained that alteration. Philegon relateth of Philotes, another Smyræan maide, thus made a male. Pontanus telleth the like of a woman at Cistera, married to a Fisher foure yeeres, and of another the wife of Antono Spensia twelue yeeres, which after married a wife and had children.

And

And in late times Spaine hath yeelded two such examples; of which I list not to play the Philosopher, whether they were imperfect males, or perfect Hermaphrodites. But to hold on our Asian journey. Nelus builded Mileus (who also erected the Altar at Posidium). The Milisian Oracle was sacred to Apollo Diāymus amongst the Branchidæ, who betrayed the treasures of their God to Xerxes the burner of their Temple; and therefore for feare of punishment followed him after his flight. Afterwards the Milesiāns builded a Temple, which for the exceeding greatnesse remained without rooffe, compassed with dwelling-houses, and a Groue, adorned sumptuously with gifts of ancient workmanship. Here was the Legend framed of Branchus and Apollo, whom they called Ulios and Artemis, of healing. Neere vnto the Temple of Nepune at Posidium was Heræum, an old Temple and Oratory, after conuerted into a Store-houle, but then also retaining diuers Chappels full of old workes, as was also a Courte-yard without, from whence when Antonius had taken three Colosses (the worke of Mro) standing on one basis, Augustus placed there againe Pallas and Hercules, but translated Iupiter to the Capitoll, and built him a Chappell.

Solmisus is not farre from hence, where the Curetes or Priests of Iupiter dulled the eares of Iuno with the sound of weapons, whilst Latona was deliuered. Heere were many Temples, some old, some new. The Curetes or Corybantes, for so they were also termed, were a shauen order of Priests, who, ratified with a sacred fury, played vpon Cimbals, and danced, shaking their heads to and fro, drawing others into the same rage of superstition. These first began their deuotions at Ida, a Hill of Phrygia, and after sailed into Crete, and here with their furious sounds they deliuered Iupiter from Saturnes gullet (who had before covenanted with Titan to kill all his male children) while hee could not by meanes of their noyse heare Iupiters crying. Diodorus Siculus writeth, That Corybantes was the sonne of Iason and Cybele, and with Dardanus brought into Phrygia the rites of the Mother of the Gods, and calleth his Disciples in that sect Corybantes, Natalis Comes traucteth many opinions about their originall and rites: their dances were in armour.

The Region of the Dorians was almost rounded with the Sea; Herein was Gnidus a City of name for the Marble Image of Venus: and Halycarnassus, the Countrey of Herodotus and Dionysius famous Hiltorians, and of Mausolus, whose Sepulchre, erected by Artemisia his wife and sister, was accounted one of the worlds seven wonders.

In the Suburbes of Stomalyenne was the Temple of Esculapins of great reputation, and riches. It was Antigonus of Apelles workmanship: there was also Venus naked, after dedicated to Cesar at Rome, as the mother of that Generation by Augustus.

Neere to Bargolia was a Temple of Diana. Mylasa another Citie of Caria had many publicke buildings and faire Temples; among the rest, two of Iupiter, (surnamed Oso) in the one; and in the other, Labrandenus, of Labranda a Village, a little off, which had an ancient Temple of Iupiter Militaris much frequented. The way leading thither was called Sacred, paved sixtie furlongs, through which their Procession passed in pompous solemnitie. The nobilit of the Citizens were ordained Priests, which function dured with their lues.

There is a third Temple of Iupiter Carini, common to all the Carians, of which also the Lydians and Mylians are partakers. Strabo reporteth of two Temples, at Stratonica, one at Lagina, sacred to Hecate, where were celebrated yeerely solemnities; the other neere the City of Iupiter Chrysaorens common to all the Carians, whither they resort to sacrifice, and to consult of common affayres: which their assembly is called Chrysaorean. In Caria was Alabanda, a Citie of no great note, except for that notorious, impious, and impudent flattery of theirs in building a Temple to ROME, and appointing anniuersary games to bee there celebrated, in honour of this new Goddesse; that Citie (since the mother of whoredome to the Christian world) euen then receiuing without scorne of the giuers, or shame of the present, the title of deitie (they are the words of a worthy Hiltorian of ours) at the gift of such a rascall Citie as Alabanda.

LYDIA, called also = Mæonia, was a rich Countrey, whose mother Citie was Sardis, the Royall Seat of Croesus, washed by golden Pactolus, where idleness was a speciall fault, and punished by the Law. Five miles from the Citie is a Lake called Colous, where is the Temple of Diana Coloena, very religiously accounted of, wherein on their festiuals, Apes were reported to dance. The Region, called Burned, stretcheth it selfe heere, about the space of fise hundred furlongs, mountainous, stony and black, as if it were of some burning, wanting trees altogether (Vines excepted) which yeeld a verie pleasant Wine. Heere was another Plutonium at Hierapolis ouer against Laodicea. It was a hole in the brow of a Hill, so framed, that it might receiue the bodie of a man, of great depth. Below it was a squared trench of halfe an acre compasse, so cloudie and darke, that the ground could scarcely bee scene. The ayre is not hurtfull to them which approach; but within it is deadly. Strabo put in Sparrowes, which presently dyed. But the gelded Priests, called Galls, might approach to docia, till the Armenians by their inuasions and Colonies altered the name: As for their rites I finde little difference, but they either resemble the Cappadocians, or their Armenian Ancestors.

CILICIA abuteth on the Eastern borders of Pamphylia, and was diuided into Trachea, and Campestris; now hath in it few people, many great Mesquites, and well furnished; the chiefe Citie is Hamla, sometime called Tarsus, famous for the studies of learning, herein (saith Strabo) surmounting both Athens and Alexandria; but most famous for yielding him to the world, then whom the whole world hath not happily yeilded any more excellent that was merely a man, that great Doctor of Nations, who filled these Countries and all Regions, from Ierusalem even to Ilyricum, (now full of barbarisme) by preaching, and still filleth the world by his writings, with that truth which hee learned, not of man, nor at Tarsus the greatest Schoole of humanitie, nor at Ierusalem the most frequented for Diuinitie, but of the Spirit of Trinitie himselfe: who both was at first from Heaven conuerted, and after in the third Heaven confirmed in the same.

Strabo mentioneth the Temple and Oracle of Diana Sarpedonia in Cilicia; where being inspired, they gaue answeres. The Temple of Iupiter also at Olbus, the worke of Aax. From Anchiale, a Cilician Citie, Alexander passed to Solos, where hee sacrificed with prayles to Esculapius, for recovery from a strong Feuer, gotten before in the waters of Cidnus, and celebrated Gymnical and Muscical Games. The Corycian and Triphonian Dennes or Caves were held in much veneration among the Cilicians, where they sacrificed with certaine Rites: They had their Diuination by Birds and Oracles. Of the Corycian Denne or Cae (so called of the Towne Corycos, almost compassed with the Sea) Mela writeth, that from the Hill which ascendeth the space of ten furlongs, this Cae or strange Valley descendeth by degrees, the further, the more spacious, enuironed with a Greene circle of pleasant shade Groues, filling the eyes and minde at once, with pleasure and wonder. There is but one passage into it, and that narrow and rough, which continueth a mile and halfe vnder delightfull shades, the Rills running heere and there, resounding I know not what strange noyse in those darkened Bowers. When they are come to the bottome, another Cae presently presents it selfe, which terrifieth those that enter, with the multiplied founds of Cymbals and vn-couth minstrelsie. And the light sayling by degrees, it brings them into a darke vault, where a Riuer riseth; and hauing runne a swift course in a short channell, is againe dunke vp of the earth: so soone dieth that streame which is yet immortal, the Earth dealing with this, that as some with their children begotten and borne in darknesse, smothering that breath which but euen now from them they receiued, alway bearing, and alway barren. There is a further passage, but none durst view it, possessed with a superstitious fancie of the Gods inhabiting; that conceit presenting all things to the minde as venerable and full of Deitie, which to the sense were dreadfull and full of horror. Beyond this was the Tryphonian, alway covered with a blacke mantle of darknesse, fabulously supposed the bed of Typhon, and naturally extinguishing the naturall life of whatsoever entred.

Vnto these things which haue beene said of the Temples, Priests, and Rites, obserued in Asia, thus much may be added out of a Sardus, of their Sacrifices. The Phrygians sacrificed Swines blood. This did the Gallis, Priests of Cybele, and this did the Bedlem Votaries, to recover of their madnesse. The Colophonians offered a dog to Enodia, which is Hecate, as did also the Carians to Mars. The Phaliges in Pamphylia sacrificed Fishes to Caber, the sonne of Vulcan; and the Lydians, Eeles to Neptune. The Cappadocian Kings in their Sacrifices to Iupiter Stratioticus, or Militaris, on a high Hill, built a great fire, the King and others bringing Wood thereto: and after that another lesser, which the King sprinkled with Milke and Hony, and after fired it, entertaining those which were present with good cheere.

Pencer tells of Diuinations vsed in some parts of Lycia: betwixt Myra and Phellus there was a Fountaine full of Fishes, by whose forme, nature, motion, and feeding, the Inhabitants vsed Diuination. The same Lycians in the Groue of Apello, not farre from the Sea, had a drie ditch, called Dina, in which the Diuiner put in fishes, and ten gobbers of roasted flesh, fastened on spits, with certaine Prayers: after which, the drie ditch became full of water, and fishes of all kinds and formes, by which the Priests obserued their Predictions. And not farre from hence, at Myra in Lycia, was the Fountaine of Apollo Curius, where the fishes being three times called with a Pipe, assembled themselves, and if they deuoured the meats giuen them, it was interpreted a good bode and happy preface: if they strucke away the same with their tayles, it was dicfull and dreadfull. At Hierapolis in Lycia, the fishes in the Lake of Venus, being called by the Temple-keepers, keepers, presented themselves, enduring to bee scratched, gilled, and mens hands to bee put into their mouthes. They diuined by lots six moneths of the yeere together, at Patara in Lycia, in Apolloes Temple. But Saturne hath swallowed his owne Children; and Time, which brought forth these, both Gods and Religions, hath also consumed them, not leauing any such memoriall of them, as might satisfie any curious seacher: yet in relation of the Greekish Rites (from which these, for the most part, haue not much swarued) you may expect a more full and ample Discourse. CHAP. I.

and the neighbouring Nations.*

SLOWLY hitherto haue wee proceeded in the discouerie of a part of Asia; sometime the store, sometimes the want, of conuenient matter, detaining our pen: In the one, Time, the Consumer of things, causing much time and paines to be spent in curious search, that wee might produce some light out of darknesse: In the other, store of Stories, and varietie of varying Authors hath dimmed our weaker eyes with multiplicitie of lights; vncertaine in so many Tracts and Tractates, where to begin, and when to end. Now at last are wee passed Euphrates, into a Countrey that often exalteth it selfe, as though it would pierce the skies, and as often receiueth the due punishment of aspiring pride, being cast downe into so many lowly valleyes and dejected bottomes. The World, which after the flood was repopled from hence, still carrieth in the severall Ages, Places, Peoples, and Men hereof, the resemblance of her Cradle, now vp, now downe, in all varietie and vicissitude of chance and change, constant in vconstancie, treading this Armenian Measure with vauquall paces, ouer Hills and Dales, like it selfe onely in vnlikenesse. Here Noes Arke settled, and here must our Ship hoysse sayle.

Of the Armenians and Turcomanians.

ARMENIA hath a great part of Cappadocia and Euphrates on the West; Mesopotamia on the South; on the North part, Colchis, Iberia, Albania; on the East, the Caspian Sea, and Media. Part of this greater Armenia is now called Turcomania, the other part is contained in Georgia. Ptolomey ^a reckoneth in it principall Mountaines, the Moschici, Paryarges, or Pariedri, Vdacelpes, Antitaurus, Abos, and the ^b Gerdzi, which which the Chaldean Paraphrast calleth Kardu; and Q. Curtius, Cordes; Berosus, Cordyes.

 On these Hills the Arke rested, whereof wee haue spoken in the first Booke. * Haithon (if wee beleue him of his owne Countrey, where hee was of royall linage) calleth this Mountaine Arath, little differing from the Scripture-appellation Ararat, and addeth, That although, in regard of abundance of Snow, alway possessing the top thereof, none be able to goe vp thither, yet there alway appeareth in the top a certaine blacke thing, which the vulgar people esteeme to be the Arke. Perhaps it may be some cloud or mist, which grosse vapour people esteeme to be the Arke. Perhaps it may be some cloud or mist, which grosse vapour doe often cause on the tops of high Hills. For before Haithon's dayes, Beniamin Tudor telleth that one Ghamar ben Alchetab had taken thence the remainder of the Arke, and therewith built an Imaeliticall Melschit. And yet a man may herein doubt also: for concerning reliques pretending such Antiquitie, Faith can finde no foundation in such ruinous rubbish; and wee haue before shewed out of Berosus and Nicolaus Damascenus of old, and Carrington's later travels, what may be thought thereof.

Armenia (as Strabo 4 affirmeth) receiued the name of one of Isfons companions, which followed him in his Nauigation out of Harchenia, a Citie of Thessaly, betwene Pherie and Larissa. The wealth of this Region appeared, when Ptolomey appointing Tigranes to bring in to the Romans fixe thousand Talents of Siluer, he added voluntarily beyond that summe, to euery Souldier in the Campe fiftie drammes of Siluer, to euery Centurion a thousand, to euery Deputie of a Countrey, and Chiliarch, a Talent.

Their Religion must at first be that which Noah and his Family professed; after by time corrupted. Here (* saith out Berosus) Noah instructed his posteritie in Diuine and Humane Sciences, and committed many naturall secrets vnto writing, which the Scythian Armenians commend to their Priests onely; none else being suffeted to see, or read, or teach them. He left also Rituall Bookes, or Ceremoniall, of the which hee was termed Saga, that is, Priest, or Bishop. Hee taught them also Astronomy, and the distinction of yeeres and moneths: For which, they esteemed him partaker of Diuine Nature, and furnished him Olybama and Asfeta, that is, the Heauen and the Sunne, and dedicated to him many Citie; some (saith he) remaining at this day, which beare these names. And when hee went from thence to gouerne Cytium, which now (as hee affirmeth) they call Italy, the Armenians were much affected to him, and after his death accounted him the Soule of the heauenly bodies, and bestowed on him Diuine Honours. Thus Armenia, where hee began, and Italy, where hee ended, doe worship him, and ascribe to him Names, Heauen, Sunne, Chaos, the Seed of the World, the Father of the greater and lesse Gods, the Soule of the World, moving Heauen, and the Creatour, and Man; the God of Peace, Iustice, Holmess, putting away hurtfull things, and preferring good. And for this cause both Nations signifie him in their writings with the course of the Sunne, and motion of the Moone, and a Scepter of Dominion, persecuting and chasing away the wicked from among the societie of men, and with the chastitie of the bodie, and sanctimony of the minde, the two keyes of Religion and Happinesse. They called also * Tidea, the mother of all, after her death, Aretia, that is, the Earth; and Esha, that is, the Fire, because shee had bene Queene of the Holy Rites, and had taught maidens to keepe the holy euertlasting fire from euer going out. Noah, before he went out of Armenia, had taught men Husbandry, more ayming at Religion and Manners, then Wealth and Dainties, which prouoke to lawfull things, and had lately procured the wrath of God. And first of all men he found out and planted Vines, and was therefore called Iamus, which to the Aramians foundeth as much as The Author of Wine. Thus saith Berosus lib. 3. and in the fourth Booke hee addeth, that Nymbroi (the first Saturne of Babylon) with his sonne Iupiter Belus, stole away those Rituall or Ceremoniall bookes of Iupiter Sagui, and came with his people into the land Sennar, where he appointed a Citie, and laid the foundation of a great Tower, a hundred thirtie and one yeeres after the Flood; but neither finished this, nor founded the other. Old Iamus when hee went hence, left Scythia, with his mother Araxia, and some inhabitants, to people Armenia, being the first King thereof; Sabatus Saga being consecrated High Priest, from Armenia vnto the Bactrians: all which space (saith he) in our Age is called Scythia Saga. In his fifth booke hee reporteth, That Iupiter Belus, possessed with ambition of subduing the whole world, closely endeououred to make (or take) away Sabatus Saga, who, being not able otherwise to escape his treacherie, fled away secretly. But Ninus the sonne of Belus, pursued his fathers intent against Sabatus, who substituted his sonne Barzanes in his place, and fled into Sarmatia, and after from thence into Italy, to his father Iamus. Barzanes was subdued by Ninus.

But to come to an Author of better credite, & Strabo saith, The Armenians and Medes haue in veneration all the Temples of the Persians; but the Armenians especially esteeme the Temples of * Tauas, as erecting them in other places, so in Acilesina. They dedicate vnto them men-servants and women-servants: the most noble of that Nation there (dedicating

How much can the shadow, how little can the substance of Religion persuade men to? The Image of Tanais, or Anaitis was set up in her Temple, all of solid gold: and when, as Antiochus warred against the Parthians, this Temple was robbed. The same I went, That hee which first had layed sacrilegious haids on the Ipoyles, was smitten blind, and so diseased, that hee died thereof. But when Augustus, being entertained of an ancient warrior at Bonodia, asked him of the truth of this report, he answered; Thou now, O Emperour, drinkest that blood; for I am the man, and wharfoerer I haue came by that bootie. II Diana. A Region of Armenia bare the same name Anaitis.

How bloody Rites the Armenians sometimes vsed, appeareth by the Historie of the Riuer Araxes, before called Halmus, borrowing this later name of a King there reigning; to whom, in warres betwix him and the Persians, the Oracle prescribed the sacrifice of his two faire daughters. Pietie forbade what pietie commanded; and whiles the King would be an Vmpire between Nature and the Oracle (which is the vsuall euent in arbitrements) he satisfied neither. That the Oracle might bee fulfilled, he sacrificed two of noble birth, of notable beautie: that Nature might not be wronged, hee wronged Iustice (the true touch-stone of true pietie) hee spared his owne, and offered the daughters of Misfaleus; but so hee lost both his daughters by Misfaleus reuenging sword; and himselfe in this Riuer by himselfe drowned. Bacchus loued Alphesibaea, an Armenian Damzell, and while Tygris, then (if you beleue the Story) called Sollax, was too coole a Mediatour betwene the two hot louers, hee swam ouer on a Tygers backe. Hence the Fable of his Metamorphosis into a Tygre: hence that name left to the Riuer. Armenia was subdued to the Persians by Cyrus: one part thereof payed to the Persians twentie thousand Colts for yeerely tribute. Sariaster, sonne to Tigranes the Armenian King, conspired against his father: the Conspirators sealed their bloudie faith with a bloudie ceremonie; they let themselves bloud in the right hands, and then dranke it. Wonder, that in such a treachery (as immediately before the same Author affirmeth of Antiochus, his sonne) that any man would helpe: or that hee durst importune the Gods: no wonder, that so bloudie a seale was annexed to such euidence.

The Mountaine of Armenia pay tribute vnto many Seas: by Phasis and Lycus vnto the Pontike Sea; Cyrus and Araxes vnto the Caspian; Euphrates and Tygris vnto the Red or Persian Sea: these two last are famous for their yeerely ouerflowings, the former of them arising amidst three other Seas, yet by the inroaching violence of the beetle-browed Hills enforced to a farre longer, more intricate, and tedious way, before hee can repose his wearied waues: the other, for his swiftnesse, bearing the name of Tygris, which with the Medes signifieth an Arrow. Solinus cap. 49. saith, That it passeth through the Lake Arethusa, neither mingling waters nor filthes, quite of another colour from the Lake: it diueth vnder Taurus, and bringeth with it much drosse on the other side of the Mountaine, and is againe hidden, and againe restored, and at last carrieth Euphrates into the Sea. The Armenians, besides their naturall Lords, haue been subiect to the Persians; after that, to the Macedonians, and againe to the Persian; after to Antiochus Capitaines: then, to the Romans and Parthians, tossed betwix the Grecians and Saracens; subdued after successively to the Tartarians, Persians, and Turkes. Of these present Armenians Master Cartwright reporteth, That they are a people very industrious in all kinde of labour: their women very skilfull and active in shooting and managing any sort of weapon, like the ancient Amazons. Their Families are great, the father ther and all his posteritie dwelling together vnder one rooffe, hauing their substance in common: and when the father dieth, the eldest sonne doth gouerne the rest: all submitting themselves vnder his Regiment: after his death, not his sonne, but the next brother succeedeth: and so after all the brethren are dead, to the eldest sonne. In diet and clothing they are all alike, of their two Patriarches, and their Christian profession, wee are to speake in fitter place.

The Turcomanians (later inhabitants) are as other the Scythians or Tartarians, (from whence they are deriued) theeuish, wandering vp and downe in Tents without certaine habitations, like as the Curdi also their Southerly neighbours, their cattell and their robberies being their greatest wealth. Of their Religion (except of such as after their manner bee Christians, which wee must deferre till a fitter time) wee can finde little to say, more then is said alreadie in our Turkish Historie. This wee may here deplore of the vnhappy fight of Armenia, which though it repeopleth the world, yet is it least beholding to her viperous offspring, a Map of the worlds miseries, through so many ages. For being hemmed alway with mightie neighbours on both sides, it selfe is made the bloudie Lists of their ambitious encounters, alway losing whosoever wonne, alway the Gauntlet of the Challenger, the Crowne of the Conquerour. This (to let passe elder times) the Romans and Parthians, Greeke Emperours and Saracens, Turkes and Tartarians, Turkes and Mamulukes, Turkes and Persians, doe more then enough proue.

OF IBERIA.

IN TOLOMEY placeth to the North of Armenia, Colchis, washed by the Pontike Sea; Albania by the Caspian; and betwixt these two Iberia, now together with some part of Armenia) called Georgia, either for the honour of their Patron Saint George, or haply because they descended of those Georgi, which Plinie * nameth among the Caspian Inhabitants. Strabo b recordeth foure kindes of people in this Iberia: of the first sort are chosen two Kings, the one precedent in age and nobilitie, the other a Leader in Warre, and Law-giuer in Peace: the second sort, are the Priests: the third, Husbandmen and Souldiers: the fourth, the vulgar ferule people. These haue all things common by Families, but hee is Ruler ~~was~~ his eldest; a thing obserued of the Armenian Christians (as before is said) euen at this day. Constantinus Porphyrogenitus * the Emperour writeth, That the Iberians boast and glorie of their descent from the wife of Vriah, which Dauid defiled, and of the children gorten betweene them. Thus would they seeme to bee of kin to Dauid and the Virgin Mary: and for that cause they marry in their owne kindred. They came (say they) from Ierusalem, being warned by Vision to depart thence, and rested themselves in these parts. There departed from Ierusalem Dauid, and his brother Spandians, who obtained (say they) such a fauour from God, that no member of his could bee wounded in warre, except his heart, which hee therefore diligently armed; whereby he became dreadfull to the Persians, whom hee subdued, and placed the Iberians in these their habitations. In the time of Heraclius they ayded him against the Persians, which after that became an easie prey to the Saracens. Of the Roman conquests and exploits in ⁴ Armenia, Colchis, Iberia, Albania, I list not here to relate.

ALBAⁿIA * (now Zuira) lyeth North and East, betwixt Iberia and the Sea, of which Strabo affirmeth, that they need not the Sea, who make no better vse of the Land: for they bestow not the least labour in husbandrie, and yet the earth voluntarily and liberally yeeldeth her store: and where it is once sowne, it may twice or thrice be reaped. The men were so simple, that they neither had vse of money, nor did they number aboue an hundred; ignorant of weights, measures, warre, ciuillitie, husbandrie: there were in vse among them fixe and twentie languages. They had ⁴ Spiders which would procure death vpon men smiling, and some also which did men to die weeping.

They worshipped the Sunne, Iupiter, and the Moone, whose Temple was nere to Iberia. The Priest, which ruled it, was next in honour to the King: hee performeth the Holy Rites, ruleth uleth the Holy Region, which is large and full of people : of the sacred Servants, many being inspired, doe Divine or Prophecie. Hæc which is most rauished with the spirit, wandreth lone through the Woods : him the Priest taketh and binde:h with a sacred Chaine, allowing him sumptuous nourishment the space of a yeere, and after bringeth him to bee slaine with other sacrifices to the Goddesse. The Rites are thus: One which is skillfull of this buisnesse, holding the sacred Speare, wherewith they vse to slay the man, stepping forth, thrusteth it into his heart : in his falling they obserue certaine tokens of diuination : then doe they ring out the bodie into some place, where they all goe over it. The Albanians honoured old age in all men, death in none, accounting it valawfull to mention a dead man : with whom they also buried his wealth. & Plinie out of Isgorus affirmeth, that a people called Albani (not these I thinke, if any) were hoarie haired from their childhood, and saw well by night as by day.

§. IIII.

Of Colchis or Mengrelia.

MENGRELIA (sometime Colchis) adioyneth to the Euxine Sea, in which Country Strabo mentioneth the Temple of Leucothea, builded by Phryxus : where was also an Oracle, and where a Ram might bee slaine. This Temple was sometimes very rich, but spoiled by Pharnax, and after of Mithridates. This country the Poets haue made famous by the fables of Phryxus, and Iason. Phryxus the sonne of Athamas, since of Thebes, and of Nephele, with his sister Helle, fled from their cruell stepdame Ino, on the backe of a golden Ram, from which Helle falling into the water, gaue name thereunto, of her called Hellepont : Phryxus comming safe into Colchis, sacrificed to Iupiter, and ranged vp the fleece of his Ram in the Groue of Mars, which custome was yeerely practised in his posteritie. Iason after by command of Pelias (seeking by a barbarous enemy, or a dangerous Nauigation to destroy him) with fourescore and nineteene other companions in the Ship, called Argo, fetched this Fleece from hence by the helpe of Medea : and the Ship ad the Ram filled Heauen with new Constellations. That fable had ground of Historie, howeouer by fictions obscured. For the Riuer here in Colchis is reported to carrie gold downe with their streames and sands, which the people take with boords bored full of holes, and with fleeces of Wooll. Spaine hath of late yielded many such Argonauts, with longer voyages, seeking the golden Indian Fleece, which their Indian conquest may make the Engine of their Order more sily, then the Burgundian inheritance. Suidas applieth this Fleece to the Ram, to Bookes of Alchymie, written in parchments made of Rams skins, which Delrio accounteth an Art of Naturall Magicke, and possible, howeouer these Colchians, as well as the Armenians, Egyptians, Persians, and Chaldeans were infamous for that other, which hee calleth Demulso : and Medea is most renowned for that science, the ignorance hereof is best learning.

Herodotus is of opinion that Sesostris left some of his Armie here at the Riuer Phasis, perauaded hereunto by the agreement of the Colchians and Egyptians. In the same ceremonie Circumcision, and in the like workes of Hempte, Vadianus citeth out of Valerius Flaccus the like testimonie. Plinie in his sixth Booke, and fifth Chapter, reporteth of Dioscurias a City of Colchis, whilome so famous, that Timosthenes affirmeth that three hundred Nations of differing languages liued in it, and afterwards the Roman affaires were there managed by a hundred and thirtie Interpreters. Cornelius Tac. saith, that they accounted it valawfull to offer a Ram in Sacrifice, because of Phryxus his Ram, vncertaine, whether it were a cat, or the ensigne of his Ship. They report themselves the issue of the Thessalonians.

Of the present Mengrelians and Georgians.

THe present Mengrelians are rude and barbarous, defending themselves from the Turkes by their rough Hills and ragged Pouertie : so inhumane, that they sell their owne children to the Turkes. I reade not of any other Religion at this day amongst them but Christian, such as it is. Some adde these also to the Georgians. The viues diuers of these people, reported to bee exercised in Armes and Martiall feates, happily haue occasion to that fable or Historie of the Amazons.

Bubequius * saith, that Colchos is a very fertile Countrey, but the people idle and careless: they plant their Vines at the foot of great Trees, which marriage proueth very fruitful, the husbands armes being kindly embraced, and plentifully laden. They haue no money, but in stead of buying and selling they vse exchange. If they haue any of the more precious metals, they are consecrated to the vse of their Temples, whence the King can borrow them vnder pretence of publike good. The King hath all his tributes payed in the fruits of the earth, whereby his Palace becometh a publike store-houise to all comers. When Merchants come, they giue him a present, and he feasteth them: the more wine any man drinketh, the more welcome he is. They are much giuen to belly-chere, dauncing, and loose Sonnets of loue and dalliance. They much caroll the name of Roland or Orlando, whose name it seemeth passed to them with the Christian Armies, which conquered the Holy Land. No maruell if Ceres and Bacchus lead in Venus betwixt them; which so ruleth in these parts that the husband bringing home a guest, commendeth him to his wife and sister, with charge to yeeld him content and delight, esteeming it a credite, that their wiues can please and be acceptable. Their Virgins become mothers verie soone; most of them at ten yeeres old carrying witness in their armes (little bigger then a great frogge, which yet after growth and square men) to proue that there is neuer a Maide the lesse for them. Swearing they hold an excellent qualitie, and to bee a fashion-monger in oathes, glorious: to steale cunningly winnes great reputation, as of another Mercurie; and they which cannot doe it, are holde dullards and blockes. When they goe into a Church, they giue meane respect to other Images: Saint George is so worshipped, that his horses hooves are kissed of them. Dadianus the King of Colchos or Mengrelia, came a suiter to Solyma, while Bubequius was there. Betwixt them and the Iberians their Neighbours, is much discord. And thus much of their present condition.

Haithon the Armenian, extending the confines of Georgia to the great Sea, saith, In this Kingdome is a thing monstrous and wonderfull, which I would not haue spoken nor believed, had I not seene it with mine owne eyes. In these parts there is a Prouince called Hamsen, containing in circuit three dayes journey; and so farre is it couered with an obscure darknesse, that none can see any thing, nor dare any enter into it. The Inhabitants thereabouts affirme, that they haue often heard the voyce of men howling, cocks crowing, neighing of horses; and by the passage of a Riuer, it appeareth to haue signes of habitation. This is reported by the Armenian Historians, to haue come to passe by the hand of Gozo, so denouncing his Christian seruants (by Sauorem a Persian Idolater, Lord of this place appointed to dye) and to punishing with outward darknesse, the inward former blindness and rage of those persecuting Idolaters. Thus Haithon or Anonim a Church (for so Ortelius nameth him) but this darknesse seemeth more ancient, and to haue beene the cause of that prouerbe * Commeria tenebra.

Of the Circassians.

Westward from hence is entrance into the Circassian Countrey, extending itselfe on Meotis six hundred miles, and within land two hundred. Christians they are in profession: from hence the Soldans of Egypt had their slaues, of which were raised their Mamalukes. Their chiefe Cities are Locoppa and Cromuco: as the mouth of Tanais, the Turke hath fortified Asaph. They liue in great part on robberies. I old time in this Tract was Phanagoria, and therein the Temple of Venus surnamed Aspharia, because, that when the Gyants assailed her, she implored the aide of Hercules, who slew them all one after another. Cimmerium a Towne at these straits, gaue name thereto: be said of the Seythians, to whom they are reckoned.

Georgius Interianus hath writen a Treatise of these Zychi, or Circassians called of themselves Adiga; expressing their vngchristianitie, and barbarous manner of liuing; which hold fittest in our discouerie of the diuers professions of Christian Religion to relate.

Of the Curdi.

SOME^b adde vnto Armenia, In their moderne Maps and Discoveries, besides the Turcomani, a people that came thither out of Tartaria, the Curdi, both still retaining the Tartarian and Arabian manner of life in Tents, without Cities, Townes, or Houses. Their Religion halteeth betwixt diuers Religions of the Turkes, Persians, and Christians, of the Iacobite and Nestorian Sects. In heare, they are neither fast to God nor Man; dissembling with the Persian and Turke; and better skilled in robbesie, further, and faithlesse treacherie (their daily practise) then mysteries of Faith and Religion. They are also Lords of Bitlis, and some other Cities and Holds in those parts. They are called ourdaues by Sir Anthony Sherley, who saith, they know no other fruits of the earth, but what elonged to the sustenance of their cattell, vpon the milke, butter and flesh of which they live, ruled by certaine Princes of their owne, which giue partly an obedience to the Turke, partly to the Persian, as they are neereest the confines of the one or the other. Yet in that similitude of liuing, through ambition, warres grow daily among them, eue to the extirpation of a whole Nation. As we found freshly when wee passed by one of their Princes, called Liderbeague, all whose people were deuoured by the sword, or carried away captiue by Catarbeague; and himselfe remained onely with some twentie soules in a Rocke. Ten thousand of their Courdines, subiect to the Turke, abandoned their Countrey, and requested some easie land to be giuen them by Abas the present Persian, which gaue them entertainment: the occasion of quarrell betwixt him and the Turke. They are supposed to be a remnant of the ancient Parthians, and neuer go abroad without their Armes, Bowes, Arrowes, Scimitars and Bucklers, euen when age seemeth to haue fastned one foot in the graue. They adore and worship the Deuill, that hee may not hurt them, nor their cattell: they are cruell to all sorts of Christians: their Countrey is therefore called Terra Diaboli. One of their Townes is named Mansuicere, a mile from which is an Hospitall dedicated to Saint Iohn Baptist, much frequented as well by Turkes as Christians, whom superstition hath perswaded, that whosoever will bestow Kidde, Sheepe, or Money, to releue the poore of that place, shall both prosper in his iourney, and obtaine the forgiveness of his finnes.

Of the Medes.

ARMENIA extending it selfe (if Iustine^k haue measured rightly) eleuen hundred miles, on the East encountereth Media, in which lieth our next perambulation. It receiued the name of Media the sonne of Isphet, not of Medus the sonne of Medea and Iason. It limited^l on the North, with the Caspian Sea; on the South, with Persia; on the East, with Parthia, Ecbatana, the chiefe Citie, built (as Plinie^m affirmeth) by Seleucus, (indeed farre more ancient, and by them happily rectified) is distant from the Caspian straits twentie miles. These Straits are a narrow way made by hand thorow the Hills, scarce wide enough for a Cart to passe, eight miles in length, the Rocks manifesting their indignation at this interruption, by obscure frownes, and saltⁿ teares continually streaming from them, which I know not by what sudden horror are presently congealed into Ice; also all the Summer time armies of Serpents keeping the passages. Well may this bee the house of Ennie: so filly doth that fable of the poet^o agree with the nature of this place.

great beaurie (the timber whereof was Cedar, ioyned with plates of silver and gold; it wa seven furlongs in compasse) his successours are there reckoned, Phraortes, Cyxares, Astages.
Isfime reports that Arbaces or Arbaces, Lieutenant of the Medes vnder Sardanapa lus, rebelled against him for his effeminate life, and translated the Empire from the Assyrians with whom it had continued thirteene hundred yeeres to the Medes. Diodorus Siculus ad deth in this conspiracie, vnto this Arbaces; the Mede, Delesus, whom some call Phul Beloe the Babylonian, who shared the State betwixt them; the Babylonian possessing Babyloni and Assyria; and Arbaces, Media and Persia. Of this more is said before.

In the time of Ninus, Farnus (saith Diodorus) was King of Media, who, encountering with Ninus in battell, was there taken, with his wife and seven sonnes: all which the bloody Conquerour commanded to be crucified. And thus remained Media hand-maid to the Assy rians, till the time of Sardanapalus; but not without some disquiet. For in Semiramis time the Medes rebelled, and destroyed Nineue. But Semiramis invaded their Countie with mightie Armie: and coming to the Hill Bagistanus, sacred to Iupiter, there pitched her Tents; and * in the plaine fields made a garden, containing twelue furlongs. Beyond it garden, shee cut a Rocke seuentene furlongs high, grauing therein her owne Image, and at hundred others, bringing her gifts. Some tell this otherwise, that shee pourtrayed her owne Image in that huge quantitie, and appointed an hundred Priests continually to attend the same with offerings and diuine worship. At Chaona a Citie of Media, shee clyping an other huge Rocke in the Plaine, caus'd another Garden to bee made in the middle thereof with sumptuous houses of pleasure therein, whence shee might behold all her Armie, and there gaue her selfe a long space to rest and voluptuousnesse, making choice of the likeliest Gallants in her Campe for her bed-fellows, all whom she after did to death. Thence to Ec batana she made the way shorter, and more passable, casting downe Hills, and exalting the Valleys into a plaine, still bearing her name. At Ecbatana she built a Palace, and brough water thither from the Hill Orontes, by a laborious and costly channell. And thus did shee not onely subdue the rebellious Medes, but made a conquest of Nature in ostentation of the puissance. The same Author telleth, that multitudes of Sparrowes which cate vp their seeds forced the Inhabitants to leaue their soile; as did Mice cause some parts of Italy, and Frog (rayned out of the clouds) the Attariote, and (as wee haue obserued) the Fleas chase away the Inhabitants of Myus. How great is the Creator, that of the smallest of his creatures can muster Armies to the conquest of them, which swell in conceit of their owne greatness!

We like Gyants by our wickednesse desile the Heauens, and desile the Earth, saying (by our workes) * Who is the Almighty, that wee should serue him? When as yet the Lord of Hosts need not tame vs with Legions of Angels (one could destroy Senacherib's Host) nor let the Hea uens in their courses to fight his battells (as against the Canaanites) nor arrange the Elements with an ouerwhelming Chaos to confound vs, by a Sodomitical fire, or arie pestilence, or deluge of waters, or deuouring of the earth: nor needes hee Lyons to challenge a part of his glorie to their strength and prowesse: Frogs, and Lice, and Fles shall bee Pharaohs Challen gers, Conquerors, slayers: And how many Nations in Africa haue the insulting triumphing Grasshoppers exiled from their natie dwellings? Proud MAN, well may the basest of thy basest seruants thus make thee to see thy basenesse; and by rebelling against thee, argue thy rebellions against their and thy Creator.

But that wee bee not too farre transported with this not vnjust passion; let vs returne to our Province of Media; which Arbaces deliuered from Assyrian seruitude, and subiected it together with the Easterne Empire to himselfe, vnder whose posteritie it continued three hundred and two and twentie yeeres. Astages, the last, was by Cyrus his Nepheue, con quered, according to two dreames, which had fore-signified this vnto him. In the first hee dreamed, that he saw so much vine streaming from his daughter Mandane (his onely child), that all Asia was drowned therewith: in the other, a Vine grew from her, which shad owed all Asia. His Magi told him, that hereby was fore-told his Nepheues greatness with the losse of his Kingdome. To prevent this, hee wedded his daughter to Cambyses Persian: and when shee was deliuered of a child, hee committed it to Harpagus (one of his ruttie Councellers) to be made away. He fearing reuenge from the daughter, if shee should after succeed her father, deliuereth the Infant to Mitradates the Kings Heard-man, com manding him in Astages name, to expose it on the Mountraine. Hee returning home, foind his wife newly deliuered of a dead child, which, by her entreatie was laid forth in steele thereof. Her name was Spaco, which in the Median language signifieh a Bitch: whence the fable grew, that Cyrus being so exposed, was nourished by a Bitch. This Infant growing vp, and called by the Heard-mans name, after ten yeeres was knowne by this occasion, * A company of boyes playing together, chose this strapping for their King, who shed his childsh Royaltie, with more then childsh discipline. For he ordained diuers Officers, some of them

o be his Guard, some Builders, Messengers, &c. as hee thought fit. Amongst whom was a sonne of one Artembares, a man of great estimation, who for neglecting his office, was by his young Kingling severely chastised. He complained thereof to his father, and the father brought the child to the King, accusing the indignitie of the fact, that his Heard-mans sonne should deale so malapertly and cruelly, shewing his beaten shoulders to Astages. The Heard-man and his supposed sonne was sent for, that Artembares might bee satisfied: where the young King gave to good account of that his fact, that Astages, much amazed, tooke the Heard-man aside, and with busie inquirie learned of him all the truth of this matter: wherewith enraged against Harpagus, who ought himselfe to haue done that dismal execution, but dissembling the same, he told him that hee would doe sacrifice for the childes safetie, and bade him send his child to beare Cyrus company, inviting him also to sup with him, where hee feasted him with the flesh of his owne sonne, whose head, fingers, and toes, were set before him at the last service. Harpagus bare it as patiently as hee could, till fitter occasion of reuenge offered it selfe, which thus fell out. The Magi told Astages, that in this childish Kingdome of Cyrus, the danger of his dreame was alreadye passed, and that hee need not to feare any further danger. Wherefore hee was sent into Persia to his Parents. After he was now a man, Harpagus, hauing secretly solicited the Medes to rebellion against heire euell Soueraigne, acquainted Cyrus with his proiect, to that end enclosing a letter in a faires belly, which hee sent to Cyrus by one, of his Huntsmen: which was with such inuoluntie and successe prosecuted, that Astages lost his Scepter, and Cyrus translated the Empire to the Persians. For Harpagus being made Generall of the Armie of the Medes; revolted to Cyrus, with all such as he had made acquainted with his treason. And when the Medes after rebelled in the time of Darius, they were forced againe to subiection. The Magi were by Astages command, crucified: and he himselfe re-enforcing his power, and bidding battell to Cyrus the second time, was taken alive, and by his Nephew set over the Hyrcans.

The Magi had large and fertile possessions (thus reporteth Ammonius) assigned them in Media. Their Science, called Magia, is by Plato termed Macabagista, which mysticall words significth the purest worship of the gods: to which Science Zoroastres of Bactria in old times added many things out of the mysteties of the Chaldees. But because the Persians had rom hence their Empire, and this Religion, by whose Armes they were made knowne to the World: there shall bee fitter place to speake of these Magi, when we treat of the Persian Rites. In this Region was made the oyle Medicum, wherein their Arrowes were steeped, which being shot out of a loofet Bow (for a swifter shot extinguished it) did burne the flesh in which it did sticke, and if water were applied to it, the fire thereof increased. Nor could any remedie cure the same, but hurling dust thereon. It was composed of Naptha. The Medes made league with this ceremonie. They wounded the Souldiers of each partie, either licked others blood. The North parts of Media were barren, and therefore they liued on Apples dried and stamped together: of roasted Almons they made bread, and wine of the roots of herbs. This and venison was there food. In one plaine of Media were pastured fiftie thousand Mares, belonging to the King: the herbe whereon they principally fed, is still called Medica. The race of Horics, called Nisei, were here bred, and hence dispersed allouer the East.

Among the Medes, none might be King by the Law of the Countrey, except hee were in stature and strength eminent. All the Medes (saith Bardefanes) a famous Chaldean) nourish Kings with great care, to which they cast men readie to die (whiles they are yet breathing) to be deuour d of them.

The Medes were worshipped the fire, with barbarous honours done thereto. Their Kings held such Maieftie, that none might laugh or spit before them: They were seldom scene of their people: They had alway Mustians attending them. Their wiues and children accompanied them in their battells.

The name of the Medes remained famous after the Persian Conquest, as appeareth by the stile which the Scripture giueth them: The Law of the Medes and Persians which was unchangeable, the King himselfe not hauing power to riuoke his sentence.

As for the Catalogue of the Kings which succeeded Arbaces, vntill the time of Astages, and the times of their raigne, wee haue before shewed it out of Scaliger, in our first Booke, Chap. 13. True it is that all agree not in that account. Reimerus & Reineccius leaue out diuers of them, and numbeth the yeeres of the Median Dynastie but 261. whereas our former account hath 322. But I had rather referre the Reader to that Catalogue, then trouble him with new out of this or other Authors.

Media hath bene diuided into Media Maior, and Atropatia: the former containeth Patris, supposed by Ortelius to be the forenamed Ecbatana (yet now wanting walls altogether) containing in circuit sixteene miles, and of people two hundred thousand; subdued to the Turke 1585. and before by Selim and Soliman; but Persian recovered by the Persian Sulvania * famous for the fairest Moschee in the East. Casbin, to which the Persian hath removed the Royall Seat from Tauris. The Lake of Pan three hundred miles long, and an hundred and fiftie broad (after Strabo *, Manihannus Lachs) of salt-water the greatest next to Meotis. Gyllus * affirmeth, that eight great Rivers runne into it, without any apparant issue to the Sea.

Atropatia is now called Seruan; the chiefe Citie is Sumachia, or Shamaki, in which the Sophi not long since * built a Turret of flint and free-stone, and in a ranke of flimts therein did set the heads of the Nobilitie and Gentry of the Countrey, for a terrour to the rest; the quarrell was pretended for Religion, intended for Soueraignie.

Their ancient Religion * differed not much from the Persian, and such also is it still. Their Kings * had many wives, which custome extended asier to the Villages and Mountaines, in so much that they might not have lesse then seven. The women * also esteemed it a credit to have many husbands, and a miserable calamitie to have lesse then five. Cyrus subdued them to the Parthians, Alexander to the Macedons. What should we speake of the Parthians? who made Ecbatana their Seat Royall in the Summer time: and of the Saracens, Tartars, Persians and Turkes, who have successively vexed these Countreys?

Not farre from Shamaki, saith Master Ienkinson *, was an olde Castle, called Gullistone (now beaten downe by the Sophi) and not farre from thence a Nurrie of sumptuous building, wherein was buried a Kings daughter, named Amelock Channa: who flew her selfe with a knife, for that her Father would have forced her (thee professing chastitie) to have married a Tartar King; vpon which occasion the Maidens euerie yeere resort thither to bewaile her death.

There is also a high Hill called Quiquis; vpon the top whereof (they * say) dwelt a Gya (named Arneoste, having on his head two great Hornes, and Eares, and Eyes like a Horse, and a tayl like a Cow, who kept a passage thereby, till one Hancoir Hambe (a holy man) bound him with his woman Lamsacke, and his sonne Aster; who is therefore had in Saint-like reputation.

Obolowcan King of this Countrey vnder the Sophi, besides gracious entertainment, granted unto Mr. Anthony Ienkinson for our English Merchants great priuiledges, Anno 1563.

Gilan, also anciently Gela, is reckoned to Media. Into these Cities of Media the * Israelites were transported, together with their Religion by Salmanesar the Assyrian: GOD in his manifold wisdoms so punishing their sinnes, and withall dispensing some sparks of diuine truth.

Of the Parthians and Hyrcanians.

Of Parthia.

d Lib. 6. 29.

f Isid. l. vi.

Parthia is placed by Plinie * in the rootes of the Hills; hauing on the East the Arians; on the West, the Medes; on the South, Carmania; on the North, Hyrcania, rounded with desarts. Hee affirmeth, that the Kingdomes of the Parthians were eightene. Eleven of them neere to the Caspian Sea; and the other seuen neere the Red Sea. The word Parthian signifieth with the Scythians an exile. Their chiefe Citie was Hecatompylos, now (as some * affirme)

Hispaham, for the excellencie thereof called of the Persians, Halfe the world. These Scythian exiles in the times of the Assyrians, Medes, Persians, and Macedonians, were an obscure people, the prey of euery Conquerour, which after seemed to diuide the world with the Romans. Their speech was mixt of the Median and Scythian; their Armies consisted most part of seruants, which they held in great respect, instructing them in feats of Armes. In an Armie of fiftie thousand wherewith they encountred Antonie, there were onely eight hundred free-men. The Parthians * had no vse of gold or silver, but in their armour. They had many wives, whereof they were so ielous, that they forbad them the sight of other men. They performed all businesse priuate and publike on horse-backe; this being the distinction of free-men from seruants. Their buriall was in the bellies of birds, or dogs. Their naked bones were after couered with earth: they were exceedingly superstitious in the worship of their gods: a stout, valiant, lecherous, vnfaithfull people. Arfaces, first a famous thief, after, the Founder of that Kingdome, left no lesse memorie of himselfe amongst the Parthians, than Cy- rus among the Persians, or Alexander among the Macedonians. The day wherein hee overthrew Seleucus, was solemnly obserued euery yeere amongst them, as the beginning of their libertie. Of him they called all their Kings Arfaces, as the Roman Emperors are named Cæsars. They s^c called themselves the brethren of the Sunne and Moore, which are in those places worshipped. This Arfaces was worshipped after his death. They were no lesse bloudie to their brethren, when they came to the Crowne, then the Ottomans are at this day. Phraortes h^e slew thirtie of his brethren; and before them his father; and after, his sonne; rather then he would endure a possibilitie of a Competitor. About 224. yeeres after Christ, Artabanus the last Persian King, being slaine by Ariaxeres, or Ariaxares the Persian, the Empire returned to the Persians, who were thereof depriued by the Saracens; and they againe by the Tartars; and is now for the greatest part vnder the Sophi: they had their cup-quarrels, striuing who should draw deepest: which custome wee need not goe into Parthia to seeke. Strabo mentioneth among the Parthians, a Colledge or Senate of Magi and Wife-men, Their ancient religious Rites I finde not particularly related.

The Parthian affaires are thus by some^k related. After Alexanders death, none of the Macedonians vouchsafing so meane a Prouince, Stragones a forrainger obtained it: after which (the Macedonians contending in ciuill quarrels for the Soueraigntie) Parthia wauered in vncertainitie, till in the time of Seleucus the nephew of Antiochus, Theodorus, Deputie of Cachia, entituled himselfe King: so giuing example of rebellion to the Eastern Nations, which after his death, with his sonne, strengthened himselfe in his new erected government of two Cities. But Seleucus taking armes against him, was by him overthrowne in battell: which day first gaue light to the Parthian greatnesse, not vvorithly obserued therefore of their posteritie with solemnitie. For Seleucus being by more important affaires called home, the Parthians had leisure to establish their hopes. Athenas reporteth that Arfaces tooke him prisoner, and after gentle vsage he sent him home.

After this first, came a second Arfaces, who encountered with Antiochus the sonne of Seleucus, coming against him with an Army of an hundred thousand foot-men, & twentie thousand horse. The issue was, they parted friends in mutuall league. Priapatus, or Paspazius was their third King, to whom Phraates his sonne succeeded; and next, his brother Mithridates, who subdued the Medes and Helimæans, enlarging the Parthian Empire, from Mount Caucasus to Euphrates. Hee tooke Demetrius King of Syria prisoner: and died in his old age. His sonne Phraates was the fourth: on whom Antiochus warred, and the Parthian opposed against him his brother Demetrius, till then detained prisoner. But while he warred against the Scythians, by treason of his owne subiects hee was slaine; and Artabanus his Vncle placed in his roome. He also soone after died of a wound receiued in the field: and his sonne Mithridates succeeded, whom the Parthian Senate expelled and deposed. But others reckon betweene Artabanus and Mithridates, Pacorus, and his sonne Phraates. So vncertaine is the Parthian Historie; for which caule also 1 Scaliger blameth Onuphrius for being too

Next in orders reckoned Orodes or Herodes, who besieged his said brother Mithridates in Babylon, and tooke both it and him, and caused him to be slaine in his sight. Against him Craffus the Roman Consull (moued with couetousnesse, and hatefull to Go^d and man, saith Florus) led the Roman Legions to win the Parthian gold: And by the way passing through Iudæa, spoiled the sacred Treasury which Pompey spared, amounting to two thousand talents, and robbed the Temple of eight thousand talents besides. Hee also carried away a beame of solide gold, weighing three hundred Mina (euery Mina is two pound and a halfe Roman) deliuered vnto him by Elazarus the Treasurer, vpon condition to take nothing else. But Craffus violated the oath which he had giuen to Elazarus, and carried all he liked. Many dismall presages prohibited Craffus his expedition, as the curses of the Tribune, whom Dion, Plutarch, and Appian call Atreus Capito. Those curses were denounced with inuocation of some vnknowne gods. Also the Roman ensignes were drowned, with sudden tempests in Euphrates: and when hee had sacrificed to Venus, his sonne stumbled and fell, and Craffus with him. Hee reiected the Legates of the Parthian, alledging the former league with Pompey. Thus positing to his destruction, one Mazanus (as Florus calls him; or as Plutarch, Arianus; Dion, and Appianus name him Augarus) encountered him, not with Armes, but with Acts and wiles, professing great hostility to the Parthians. Craffus following his aduice, led his Army into by-ways and deserts, till being brought into the Parthian snares, his new guide forsooke him, and the couetous Consull, with his sonne were slaine, and eleuen Roman Legions taken or left in the place. His head and periured right hand were sent by Surenas the Parthian Generall (vvhio was said to haue then in the field vvhich him twelue hundred Concubines, and a thousand Camels laden vvhith his owne furniture) vnto King Orodes: vvhio contumeliously, (if contumely and merite can ioyné societie) vsed the same, powring into his jawes (sometimes greedie of that metall) molten gold, Orades enuying Sarmas the glory of his v:ictorie, slew him, and committed the remnants of that warre to be pursued by his sonne Pacorus, a doynyng to him in that exploit Ofaces. In the ciuill warres they tooke part with Pompey against Cæsar. Pacorus being receiued into societie of the Kingdome with his father, invaded Iudæa, and placing Antigonus in the Kingdome, captiued Hircanus. But whiles he aspired to greater hopes, hee lost himselfe and his Armie, in which were twentie thousand Horse-men, in a battell with Ventidius; who by a wily Stratageme, counterfeiting flight and feare, and suffering the Parthians to come vp to their Tents, that they had now no space for their Arrowes, effected this ouerthrow.

Pacorus his head reduced the Cities of Syria to the Roman subiection, without further warre. This newes made his father madde, who before boasting of the conquest of Asia by Pacorus, now in many dayes did neither speake nor eate: but when hee once did open his mouth, all his speech was Pacorus, who still seemed present vnto him. In this extaticall mood, Phraates, one of his thirtie sonnes, which he had by so many Concubines, slew him, and after them his brethren, with a sonne also of his owne. This crueltie caused many Parthians to be-take themselves to voluntary exile, among which Mona (as pronoked Antonius to warre vpon this Tyrant. Hee did so, but with bad successe, of fixteene Legions scarce bringing the third part backe againe. Phraates, impotent and vncapable of so glorious aduentures, grew into such inuolencies, that the people exiled him, and placed Tiridates in his roomes; who was soone after displaced by the Scythians, and Phraates restored to his place. Tiridates fled to Augustus (then warring in Spaine) for refuge and aide, carrying with him the sonne of Phraates, whom Cæsar sent backe againe to his father without any price, maint:ining neither partie against the other, but allowing liberall prouision to Tiridates.

But after this, Augustus going into the E. A, the Parthians fearing ill measure, redeliuered all the Roman captiues, and ensignes, and gaue hostages also, his two sonnes, with their wiues and children, and resigned Armenia to the Romans. Phraatax his sonne slew him, with greatest iniurie, repaying that which was most iust, and due to his former pericide. This Phraatax, vniing incestuous a quaintance with his mother, Thermusa (an Italian, whom Augustus had bestowed on Phraates, and by whose helpe hee was slaine) was killed in an vppore, leaving his sonne Orades his succesor. Hee also in a conspiracie was killed: and Vonon substituted, whom the Parthians not long enduting, forced to seeke helpe of the Romans, where he was perfidiously slaine.

Artabanus obtained the Empire, in whom whence hee was after chased by Phellinus, who placed Tiridates in the Throne, which hee had scarce wormed, when Artabanus recovered it, and after left it to his sonne Bardanes; the Arsacian stocke being now displessed. This Bardanes whiles hee minded warres against the Romans, is killed of his owne. Gotarzes his brother succceeded to the Scepter: which he held, notwithstanding the decree of the Roman Senate for Meherdates the sonne of Vonon, whom hee tooke and cut off his eates: Vonones was his succesor, a little while, and presently after Vologases his sonne. The next was Artabanus, and after him Pacorus; and in the next place Cosroes his brother: against whom Traxan warred with good successe, who extended the Roman Empire to the Indians. But Adrian renewed league with the Parthian, Parthaspares succceeded; and soon after Vologases, who left him his sonne of the same name, depreued by his brother Artabanus. He being vniustly dealt with by the Romans trecherie, drave them to sue for peace: which, after that Antoninus the author of the breach was dead, was easily obtained by Macrinus his succellour. But Artaxares a Persian preuailed better, in a third battell ouerthrowing him, and reducing the Kingdome after such a world of yeeres to the Persian name. Some reckon this 472. yeeres from Arsaces, and 228. after Christ. Scaliger reckoneth the time of the Parthian Dynastie 479. yeeres. The number of their Kings after this computation is nine and twentie. They which list to see further of their warres with the Romans, may reade the Roman Authors, which haue writen of the same: the summe whereof is here presented to your view.

Cornelius Tacitus tells a merry tale (for I thinke these Tragedies haue wearied you) and pertinent to our purpose, of a good-fellow-like Hercules, whom the Parthians worshipped. This kind-hearted god warneth his Priests in a dreame, that heere to his Temple they should set his horses readie furnished for hunting, which they doe, lading them with quiers full of Arrowes. These after much running vp and downe the Forrest, returne home at night blowing and breathlesse, their quiers being emptied. And Hercules (no niggard of his venison) acquainteth the Priests at night by another vision, with all his disport, what woods hee hath ranged, and the places of his game. They searching the places, finde the slaine beasts.

Better fellowship, certaine, had their Hercules, then their Kings; when they invited any to their Feasts. For the King had his table alone and lottie, the guests sit below on the ground, and,

and, like dogs, feed on that which the King casteth to them. And many times vpon occasion of the Kings displeasure, they are haled thence and scourged, and yet they then prostrate on the ground, adore their striker. They worshippe the Sunne at his rising. Bardefane 9 in Ensebus, saith of them, that to kill his wife, or sonne, or daughter, or brother, or sister (yet unmarried) was not prohibited by the Law to any Parthian, nor any way subiect to punishment. The Parthian Ensigne was a Dragon; the Royall Ensigne a Bow: their stile was, King of Kings; they were a double Crowne. They had an ointment made of a certaine composition, which no private man might vse. Nor might any else drinke of the waters of Chonassus and Eulans. None might come to the King without a present. The Magi were in great authoritie with them. Their Rites were mixt of the Persian and Scythian. Nothing was more seuerely punished then adulterie. A seruant might not bee made free, nor might he suffered (except in the warres) to ride, or a free-man to goe on foot. Their fight was more dangerous in flying, then in standing or giuing the onset.

They account them the most happy which are slaine in battell. They which die a naturall death are vpbraid with cowardise. Their fight Lucan 10 describeth:

Et melior cessasse loco, quam pellere, miles:
Illiis a terra dolis, nec Martem cominus unquam
Ausu pati virtus, sed longe tendere nervos.*

Light skirmish, fleeing warre, and scattered bands,
And better Souldiers when they runne away,
Then to beare off an enemy that stands,
Their craftie caltrops on the ground they lay:
Nor dares their courage come to right downe blowes,
But fighteth further off most trusting to their Bowes.

Many Cities amongst them, and two thousand Villages are said 11 to haue been ouerwhelmed with Earthquakes. They are said to bee of spare diet, to cate no flesh, but that which they take in hunting: to feed with their swords girt to them, to cate Locusts; to be false lyars and perfidious: to haue store of wifes and strumpets. Their Countrey is now called Arach; in it is made great quantitie of Silkes. Isidorus Characenus 12 hath set downe the seuerall Countreys, with their dimensions, how many Scheni each of them containeth, with their chiefe Cities, and their wayes and distances: which giueth great light to Geography, and the knowledge of the Parthian greatnesse. Sebanus is accounted three score furlongs.

Of the Hircanians Tappyr and Cassians.

Hyrcania (now called Straua or Diargument) hath on the West, Media; on the East Margiana; on the South, Parthia; on the North, the Sea, which hereof is called the Hyrcane, otherwise Cassian. Famous it hath bene, and is, for fore of woods and Tygers. There are also other wilde beasts. Here in the Citie Nabarca was an Oracle, which gaue answeres by dreames.

Some Riuer in this Countrey haue so steepe a fall into the Sea, that vnder the waters the people resort to sacrifice or banquet; the streame shooting violently ouer their heads, without wetting them. Ionius writeth, That the ayre is vnhollome by reason of the Fennes. Straua the chiefe Citie aboundeth in trafficke for Silke. The lands before it in the Sea, were no lesse refuge to the Inhabitants in the Tamberlaine tempest, then to the Italians in the time of Asula, whose places, where now Venice standeth. Their Religion, as the State, both in times past and present, hath followed the Persian, of whom we are next to speake.

It is reported of Tappyr, inhabiting neere to Hyrcania, that their custome was to bestow their wifes on other men, when they had borne them two or three children; so did Cato his wife Martia, on Hortensius; and such, both Pertomannus, is the custome at this day of the Indians in Calechut, to exchange wifes in token of friendship.

They had wine in such estimation, that they anointed their bodies therewith. The Caspj b Celms Rhod. shut vp their parents, after they are come to age of seuentie yeeres, and there in respect of pitie (what more could the impious doe?) flauie them to death. Some say, That after that age they place them in some desert, and a farr off obserue the euent. If the fowles seize on them with their talents, and teare them out of their coffins, they account it a great happinesse: not so, if dogges or wilde beaſts prey thereon. But if nothing meddle therewith, it is accounted a miserable and lamentable caſe. The Derbices account all faults (though neuer ſo ſmall) worthy of the vniuerſall puniſhment. The Earth was their Goddeſſe: to their holies they admitted nothing female, nor to their tables. They killed ſuch as were about ſeuente yeeres old, calling to that bloudie banquet their neighbours, eſteeming ſuch miſerable, as by diſeaſe were intercepted and taken away. Old womens fleſh they ate not; but ſtrangled, and then buried them: they likewiſe buried ſuch as died before that age.

Of Persia, and the Persian State, in the first and second Persian Dynasties.

Persia, if wee take it ſtrictly, is thus bounded by ^a Ptolemy: It hath on the North, Media; on the Eaſt, Carmania; on the Weſt, Suſiana; on the South, part of the Perſian Gulfe. But this name is ſometimes ſtreched as farre as that wide and ſpacious Kingdome; all that Empire being often called in Authors, Perſia, and differing in the bounds and limits, according to the enlarging or contracting of that Monarchie. It is ſuppoſed, that the Perſians deſcended of Elam, the ſonne of ^b Shem; whoſe name remained vnto a Region called Elymais, mentioned by ^c Ptolemy, placed in the North parts of Media. ^d Plinie mentioneth ^e the Elamite, on the South next to the Sea, which name Ierome ^f in his dayes gaue to one of that Nation, frater quidam Elamita, &c. ^g Xenophon alſo nameth the Tribe of the Elamites. ^h Maſes telleth of the raigne and power of Chedorlaomer King of Elam, ⁱ in that morning of the world extended to the borders of Canaan. ^k Herodotus reports, that they were called of the Greekes Caphenes; of the neighbourly Nations, Sudas ^l affirms, that they were called of the Inhabitants Magog and Magafai. Other names are by Ortelius added, Chorſori, Achamenij, Panſhaia, &c. It was called Perſia of Persius the ſonne of Danue, or of Perſes the ſonne of Andromeda; or (as others) of Perſes the ſonne of Medea.

Of the beginning of the Persian Monarchie by CYRVS.

From the time of Chedorlaomer, whom Abram with his houſehold-armie overthrew, vntill the time of Cyrus, little mention is made of them, hee freed them from the Median ſeruitude, and created firſt that mightie Perſian Monarchie. ^a Bizarus (which hath written twelue bookes of the Perſian affaires) ſuppoſeth that in that time of their ſubiection to the Aſſyrians and Medes, they had Governours, and Lawes, of their owne: onely owing a tributary ſubiection to the other, as their ſupreme Lords. This hee collecteth out of Xenophon. Cyrus was by name foretold by Eſay, and the re-building of Ieruſalem and the Temple by his authoritie, before that Babylonian Monarchie was erected which deſtroyed them. God after revealed to Nebuchadnezzar and Daniel by dreames, this Perſian both riſing and fall. And by dreames did hee make way vnto the eſſecting of his decree; as appeareth in Herodotus, Iuſtine and others. For Aſtyages dreaming that hee ſaw a Vine growing on the wombe of his daughter Mandane, which couered all Aſia (interpreted by his Wizards, of the ſubuerſion of his Kingdome by his daughters future iſſue) married her, as before is ſaid, to Carnbyſes, a Perſian, deſcended of the ſtocke of Perſus ſonne of Iupiter, and Danue, and the ſonne of Achemenes, ſo that in that remote Region, meanes might ſaile vnto any aſpiring deſignes. The Chaldeans report, as Alphens recorderh out of Megaſthenes, that Nabuchodonosor hauing conquered all Libya, and Aſia, as farre as Armenia, at his returne rauiſhed with diuine fury, cried out, That a Perſian Mule ſhould come and ſubdue the Babylonians. This agrees ſomewhat both with the dream, and the madneſſe recorded of that King by Daniel, Chap. 2. and 4. The Oracle of Delphos made like anſwer to Craſus, That the Lydians ſhould then flee, when a Mule ſhould gouerne the Medes. Hee was termed a Mule, becauſe of his more noble parentage by the mother, then the the father, and their diuersitie of Nation. Strabo v thinks he was called Cyrus of a Riuer in Persia, being before called Agradatus. Plutarch a saith, hee was called Cyrus of the Sonne, which with the Persians hath that name, Polyænus * calleth his wife Nitetus, daughter of Aprian King of Egypt. Suidas saith it was Bardane, and that shee was daughter of Cyaxares, otherwife called Darius Medus. Hee conquered the Median Empire first; and after added two other, the Lydian and * Babylonian. Crasus the Lydian consulting with the Oracles about the successe of his warre, receiued answere :

Κράτος αἰὶν δὴ κράτος μεγάλης ἀρχῆς καταλύει,

That is,

Crasus passing Haile, great state shall make to fall.

This he interpreted of the ouerthrow of Cyrus, but proued it in himselfe; Crasus his sonne had beene mute, till (now seeing the sword of his enemy readie to giue the fatal stroke vnto his father) violence of sudden passion brake open those barres, and ittopps which Nature had set before as impediments to his speech, and by his first most fortunate-vnfortunate language, cried to the souldiers to spare his * father. After his many great exploits, hee warred vpon Thamyras the Scythian Queene, where he lost his life. I know not how, Diuine Prouidence seemeth to haue set those Scythian hints to the Persian proceeding; those great Monarches, both in the elder, and our later world, euer finding those Northerne windes crossing, and in some disuinal successe prohibiting their ambition that way.

Cyrus was of so firme memory, that hee could call all the souldiers (some say, but all that had any place of command) by their proper names. He ordained, that his souldiers should in the first ioyning with the enemy sing certaine Hymnes to Caiter and Pollux, that by this meanes they should not bee surpris'd with sudden feare. He gauleau to the Iewes to returne and re-people their Countrey, and to re-build the Temple. * A.M. 3419. Exra calleth this the first yeere of Cyrus; not the first of his reigne, but of his Easterne Monarchie, as in his Edict himselfe proclaimeth; The Lord God of Heauen hath giuen mee all the Kingdomes of the Earth. For after he had ouercome Darius Medus (whom Berosus calleth Nabonidus) in battell, and forced him to keepe himselfe in Borsippa; hee besieged and obtained Babylon, where, spending some time for the settling of his affaires, hee after that forced Darius to yeeld; and returning to Babylon, made a conquest of Susiana. All which atchieued, the ninth yeere after the taking of Babylon, the scuentieth of the Iewish Captiuitie, the nine and twentieth of his reigne; and the first of that his Babylonian Empire, hee made the decree about mentioned, and dyed the second yeere after. It is probable also, that the Persians who held Cyrus in such veneration, began their Æra, or new Computation, from this time of his settled Empire: an honour giuen after by the Easterne world to Alexander in like manner. The Babylonian Kingdome was thus diuided and giuen to the Medes and Persians; first to Darius, by blood and descent a Mede, and after, by conquest to Cyrus a Persian.

We haue large Fragments of Ctesias (who was present in the battell betwene Alexander and Cyrus, as was Xenophon also, who hath written the same at large) collected and referred by Photius, who saith, hee had read foure and twentie Bookes of this Ctesias his Persica, in which hee much differeth from the reports of Herodotus; professing, that hee had either seene those things which hee writeth, or receiued them of the Persians themselves. He affirmeth that Astages (so he calleth Astages) was nothing of kinne to Cyrus, but being by him conquered, was first imprisoned, and after enlarged, and kindly intreated; Cyrus taking his daughter Amysis (her husband Spytama being slaine) to his wife. He subdued the Bactrians, and tooke Amorges King of the Saxæ prisoner. But his wife Sparestira with an Army of three hundred thousand men, and two hundred thousand women, came against Cyrus, and taking him and Parnyses the brother of Amysis prisoners, in exchange of them redeemed her husband Amorges; after this helped Cyrus in his warres against Crasus, who (the Citie being taken, and his sonne, which had beene giuen in hostage, slaine before his face) fled vnto Apollon Temple, whence by Magickall illusions he made an escape; and being taken againe and bound faster, his bands with thunder and lightning were loosed, whereupon Cyrus freed him, and gaue him the Citie Barene, neere to Ecbatana. Cyrus after that warred against the Derbices, who by the helpe of the Indians and Elephants, ouerthrew Cyrus, who receiued there a wound by an Indian, whereof hee three dayes afterwards died. But by helpe of Amorges the Derbices were overcome, and their King Amorges slaine with his two sonnes. Cyrus before his death made Cambyses his eldest sonne his heire, and Tanyoxares his younger, Lord of the Bactrians, Chorasmians and Parthians, and set Spytades sonne of Spytama ouer the Derbices. He reigned thirtie yeeres.

of the ſucceſſion of CYRUS : and of CAMBYSES.

CAMBYSES (Cteſias addeth in his twelfth Booke) ſent his fathers bodie into Perſia. He warred vpon Egypt, and ſent Amyrtæus the King with fixe thouſand Egyptian Captiues into Suſa, hauing ſlaine ſiue thouſand Egyptians, and loſt ſixen thouſand and two Perſians. In the meane time Spendadates one of the Magi, being corrected by Tanyoxares for ſome offence, accuſed him to Cambyſes his brother, who cauſed him to die with a draught of Bulls blood, deceiuing his mother and his brothers followers, as if hee had put the Magus to death for that ſlander. And ſo neerely did they reſemble each other, that Spendadates was ſent to the Baſtrians, where ſiue yeeres after, the myſterie of this iniquitie was detected by Tyberheus an Eunuch (by him chaſtened) vnto Amiſis, who, when ſhee could not obtaine him of Cambyſes to puniſhment, poiſoned her ſelfe. Cambyſes after hee had reigned eightene yeeres, died at Babylon of a wound which he had receiued in his thigh, by whiling a ſticke to paſſe away the time, hauing receiued before diſtreſſfull preſages of this diſaſter, in his ſacrifice not bleeding, and Roxane bringing him forth a ſonne without a head. Bagapates, and Artaxerxes his chiefe Eunuches procured the Kingdome to the Magus, reigning with the name of Tanyoxares, till Ixabates detected him, who ſlewing into a Temple was drawne thence and ſlaine. But ſeuen chiefe men, Onophaus, Iadernes, Norodabates, Mardonius, Barſes, Ataphernes, and Darius ſonne of Hystaſpes, conſpired againſt the Magus, and by the helpe of Artaxerxes and Bagapates, ſlew him in his bed-chamber, hauing reigned ſeuen moneths, ordaining the ſolemne feſtiuall Magaphonia in remembrance thereof. Darius being mounted to the Throne by the neighing of his Horſe (as theſe Princes had before agreed) built him a Sepulchre in his life time, in a Hill; which when hee would haue ſeene, the Chaldeans forbade him, and his parents curious of that ſight, were let downe by the Priests with ropes : but they terrified by the ſudden ſight of Serpents, let goe their hold, and Darius for that loſſe of his parents ſlaine in the fall, cut off the heads of the 36 Priests, in number ſorie. He marched with eight hundred thouſand men into Europe againſt the Scythians; but returning with loſſe, dyed after hee had reigned one and thirtie yeeres.

But before we follow Cteſias any further, let vs ſee what the common report by Herodotus and others hath deliuered of theſe proceedings : and let the iudicious Reader chuſe whom hee wil embrace. Scaliger and others, rather follow Herodotus, who relateth of Cambyſes, that ſucceeding his father, hee tooke, and after ſlew Psammenitus King of Egypt. And when hee would haue added Ethiopia to his new Conqueſts, with the ſpoiles of the Temple of Ammen, for which purpoſes he ſent two Armies; the one was almoſt conſumed with famine, the beaſts and prouiſions failing, and that barren deſart denying graſſe; the remainder by conſuming one another, were (a ſtrange remedie) preſerued from conſumption, every tenth man being by lot tyed to the ſhambles, and more returning to their fellowes mawes, then on their owne legs. The other Armie was quite buried in the ſands. At his returne, finding the Egyptians ſolemnizing the feaſt of their Idoll Apis, hee ſlew the ſame (it was a Bull which they worſhipped) and after dreaming that Smerdis reigned, hee ſent, and ſlew his brother which was ſo called, in vaine ſeeking to fruſtrate this preſage, which was fulfilled in another of that name. He fell in loue with his ſiſter, and asking whether it were lawfull for him to marry her, the Iudges (whoſe authoritie with the Perſians laſted with their lues) answered, that they had no ſuch law, but they had another, that the King of Perſia might doe what him liked; whereupon hee married her. His crueltie appeared, in that Prexaphes preſuming to admoniſh him of his too much inclination to drunkenneſſe, hee answered, he ſhould ſee proofe of the contrary, and preſently ſending for Prexaphes his ſonne, with an arrow ſhot him to the heart: the father not daring but to commend his deadie hand and Art in ſhooting. He dyed of his owne ſword, which falling out of his ſcabbard as hee mounted his horſe, killed him, not fearing in this Countrey of Syria any ſuch diſadvantage, becauſe the Oracle of Latona in Egypt had told him he ſhould dye at Ecbatana; which hee vnderſtood of Media, and was fulfilled at another Ecbatana (more obſcure) in Syria. Hee cauſed a Iudge, which had bene corrupted with money, to be ſlayed, and made of his ſkin a couerting for the Tribunal. Polyannus ſaies, That againſt the Egyptians hee vſed this ſtratagem to ſet the gods (dogs, cats, ſheepe, &c.) in the fore-front of his battell. He neither deſerued nor obtained that honourable funerall which Cyrus had, who was buried at Paſargadae, a Tower ſhadowed with trees, hauing in the vpper part a Chappell furniſhed with a bed of gold, a table, cups, and veſſells of the ſame metall, with ſtore of garments and furniture, ſet with jewells. Certain Magi were appointed to attend it, with daily allowance of a ſheepe, sheepe, and once a moeth a horse for sacrifice. His Epitaph was, Omar, I am CYRUS, King of Asia, Founder of the Persian Empire; therefore bury me not a Sepulchre. Alexander opened the same in hope of gold, but found nothing, fawing a rotten shield, a sword, and two Scythian bowes: he crownd it with gold, and couering it with his owne apparell, departed. These things ^b Strabo, ^b Arrian, and ^b Curtius report.

III.

Of the succeeding Monarchs untill ALEXANDERS Conquest.

NEXT to ^a Cambyfes succeeded, for a small time, one Smerdis, which was slaine as an Vsurper, by the seuen Princes; and ^b Darius, the sonne of Hystaspes, succeeded, designed to that greatnesse by the first neighing of his horse. For when no male issue Royall was left, these Princes agreed, That meeting in a place appointed, he whose horse first neighed, should be acknowledged Emperor. Darius his horse-keeper, the night before, had suffered his horse there to vse his brutish lust with a Mare; which the place presently causing him to remember, he there (by his lustfull neighing) advanced his Master to the Scepter. Darius for his couetousnesse (first exacting tribute) was called a Merchant, Cambyfes a Lord, Cyrus a Father of his people. Babylon rebelled, and was recovered by the costly stratagem of Zopyrus ^d, who cut off his nose and eares, and fleeing in that deformed plight to the Babylonians, accused Darius of that crueltie. (Ctesius telleth this of Megabyzus.) They beleueing, entertained him, and knowing his Nobilitie and Prowesse, committed their Citie to his fidelitie, which he vpon the next opportunitie betrayed to his Master. Darius warred against the Scythians, but vnfortunately. His Army was of 700000. men. After Darius his death Xerxes ^e reigned (whom Scaliger proueth to bee Assurnus, the husband of Eisber. This Eisber is by some thought to be Ameltris, whom the Ethnike writers blame for crueltie: moued haply thereto by the execution committed vpon Haman, and the fewish enemies in the booke of Eisber related. They adde (perhaps in slander and hatred) that three killed foueteene children in one bloudie vow, and other things which I will not rehearse; but returne to Xerxes.

He made league with the Carthaginians, warred vpon the Grecians with an Armie (as Herodotus ^f numbereth) of 1700000. foot-men, 80000. horse-men, 20000. Chariot-men: Others say, That there were 2317000. foot-men in land-forces, besides 1208. ships. Ctesius hath only 800000. men, besides Chariots, and 1000. sayle of ships. Before the Army was drawne the sacred Chariot of Iupiter, by eight white horses; no mortall man might ascend the Seat. Hee offered to Minerva at Troy 1000. oxen. He, taking view of his huge Army, wept, in thinking, that of all that number in a hundred yeeres none would be aliue. At the passing of the Hellespontike straits, he (besides other deuotions performed) at the Sun-rising took a golden Viall full of sacred liquor, and cast the same into the Sea, with a golden Bowle & a Persian Sword; vncertaine whether in honour of the Sun, or in satisfaction to the angry Hellespont, which a little before, in more then made arrogance, he had caused to be whipped, and twined fetters therein, with many menacing threats. Hee wrote letters with like threatnings to Mount Athos, and accordingly pierced his bowells, and made way by force thorow that high and huge Mountaine. This Expedition was in the yeere of the World 3470. Leonides, with his Spartans, enlarged his glory at the Thermopylzan straits, or narrow passage, which a long time, with a handfull of men, hindered the Persians from passing. Mardonius was slaine, and Xerxes fled out of Greece, after hee had taken Athens, and lost great part of his Army, which in two yeeres space receiued fise ouerthrowes, at Thermopylzan, at Artemisium, at Salamis, at Platizza, at Mycale. Xerxes being slaine of Artabazus his kinsman, A. M. 3485. Artaxerxes succeeded, in whose time Egypt rebelled, helped therein by Inarus and the Grecians.

Among other the mad parts of Xerxes, it is reported, That he fell in loue with a ^b Plane-tree in Lydie, which hee adorned with chaines and colly furniture, and appointed a Guard to thereto. Artaxerxes writ to Hystanes, Gouvernour of Hellespontus, That hee should giue Hippocrates Cous (who then liued, and whose writings still remaine the Physicians Oracles) as much gold and other things as hee would, and send him vnto him. In his time the Egyptians rebelled, and created Inarus their King, to whom the Athenians sent three hundred Gallies for defence; but by Artabazus and Megabyzus they were subdued. Artaxerxes dyed, An. M. 3525.

After this Artaxerxes, surnamed Long-hand, another Xerxes succeeded and reigned a small time, as did also Dogdianus, or Ogdianus, or (so Ctesius calleth him) Secyndanus, whom Darius Notus slew, and possessed the Throne. Ctesius nameth him Oebus, and saith that hee changed changed his name to Darius. In the time of this King was the Peloponnesian Warre, which Thucydides hath related. Artaxerxes Mnemon his sonne succeeded, An. M. 3545. He slew his brother Cyrus; Ctesias was there present with Artaxerxes, whom hee cured of a wound given him on the brest by Cyrus, with whom was then present and partaker, that great Philosopher, Captaine, and Historian hereof Xenophon. Artaxerxes was a name given (as some write) to all the Persian Kings: it signifieth a great Warrior, as Briffon and Drafsius observe. This Mnemon reigned fortie yeeres. After his death succeeded Ochus, and reigned three and twentie yeeres. Next to him was Arjes, or Arjames; and last of all Darius, whom Alexander ouerthrew the second time at Arbela, An. M. 3619. & conquered that Persian Monarchie to the Macedonians. Of the Macedonian successors of Alexander (so much as concerneth this place) is before handled in our Syrian relation. They were deprived of these parts by Aspacetes, of whom & all his Parthian followers, even now ye haue read in the Chapteirs of Parthia.

Concerning these Persian Kings, Chronologers (after their wont) differ not a little. Master Linely hath taken great paines in this Argument; besides the painfull labours of Scaliger, Junius, and many others, both Rabbins, and Greeks, and Latines, in whose streames Elephants may swim, and the greatest Students may finde enough to busie their studious braines: for mee, it is sufficient to taste, or at least to enterlof farre as a Lambe may safely wade, without petill of drowning. The Hebrewes, through ignorance of the Olympiads, and humane Authors (where they are destitute of their owne) are most absurd, some b reckoning but foure Persian Kings in all, till Alexanders time: some account c five: and some d three. Against these, Petrus and Temporarius e most sharply (and not unworthily) enough, as also against their f Chronicles, which ascribe to the Persians, from the first yeere of Darius the Mede, but two and fiftie yeeres. Iosephus better seene in Ethnike Authors dissenteth from thm. As for Metasthenes of Amnius, wee haue before shewed him to be counterfeited, and the rest of his brethren, to bee either the bastards of Amnius, or Changelings, which hee hath nursed, and would foster vpon those Authors, whose names they beare. Vines g calls them Portentosa, & vel solo auditu horrenda; monstrous reports, dregs, friuolous pamphlets of vncertaine Authors; which, if any bee in loue with, hee may enioy without him his coruall. h Geopinus bestowes much paines in the vncasing of them; and learned men i doe now generall distaste them. Iosephus k cites Metasthenes in quarto Inducorum, the fourth Booke of his Indian Historie; from whence Petrus Comestor alledgeth the same testimonie, with deprauiing the word Inducorum, and making it Indicorum. Amnius adds, not onely the corrupting of the name Metasthenes for Megasthenes, but a Historie vnder his l name, de Indicio Temporum & Annalium Persicorum, wherein no maruell if he proceeded in the Storie, as he began in the Title. Beroaldus m in the Persian Chronologic saitheth diuers names to the Persian Kings; as Assuerus, Artaxerxes, Darius Assyrius, Artaxerxes Plus. Linely, and other moderne Writers out of the Greeke Olympiads and Histories, haue giuen truer account of the Persian Times and Government; beginning with the five and fifteth Olympiad, and continuing the same to the third yeere of the hundred and twelfth.

Scaliger and Caluissius (as you haue seene before) doe a little differ from this account of Master Linely, which he liuely proueth by conference of other Histories, both Humane and Ecclesiasticall, Clemens, Eusebius, Herodotus, Diodorus, Polybius, Xenophon, Thucydides, Dionysius, Halicarnassensis, Livie, and others. As much adoe is made about the beginning and ending of Daniels weekes, and the time of the building and finishing the second Temple, both which are most illustrated by the right knowledge of the Persian Chronologic. a Junius, Linely g, and some others begin the account of the threecore and ten weekes, and reckon the building of the second Temple, in the second yeere of Darius Nubus p, to whose reasons I referre the Reader, and returne to our Persian affaires. How this Persian Empire agreed to the dreame of Nabuchodonosor, and the visions of Daniel; Broughton q, Resnerus, and others truly, Artaxerxes recovered the Persian Name and Empire five hundred thirtie eight yeeres, as Beza, Lib. 4. reckoneth, after Alexander the Great had extinguished them, and in the World 418; and 563, after Alexanders Conquest: others otherwise. The Catalogue of r the Persian Kings in that their second Dynastie, you may read before, Lib. 1. c. 13. Put for better satisfaction of the Reader, we will here present a short view of their Historie.

ARTAXARES being a man of haucie spirit, sought three battells with Artabanus the Parthian, and at the third time deprived him of life and Scepter together. Hee proceeded to subdue the neighbouring Barbarians; and passing ouer Tygris, disturbed the Romane Prouince of Mesopotamia, deuouring in hope, and threatening in termes, all those Asian Prouinces, sometimes subiect to the Persians, before the Macedonian deluge. Alexander Senerus (sonne of Mamma) the Emperour writ to him, to stay his course: But Pikes, not Pens, were like to preuaile with Artaxares, who brought into the field seven hundred Elephants, and eightene hundred Chariots, and many thousands of Horse-men, but with much blood-shed was forced to leaue the honor of the day to the Romans. Herodians seemeth to write harder fortunes of the Romans in this warre. But Lampadius, Eutropius, Orosius, and Zosimus write, That Senerus obtained the victory, and tooke Ctesiphon and Babylon, and subdued also Arabia. Agathias² affirmeth, That Artaxares² was called Magnus.

Valerianus was ouer-throwne by Sapore, the successor of Artaxares, in Mesopotamia, and there taken, & was made a foot-stoole for Sapore, on whose necke he yfed to tread, when he tooke horse; and at last was slayed aliue, and sprinkled with salt. Zosimus saith, That he was treacherously taken at a meeting for conference: and Trebellius Pollio ascribeth it to the treason of his guide. This cruell Tyrant afflicted the Roman Prouinces, to Cilicia and Cappadocia, filling with dead bodies the broken spaces betwene the Hills, feeding (as it were) those deformed gaping lawes with cruell banquets of mans flesh. Odenatus Palmirinus brought some light to the Romans in this darkened and dreadfull Eclipse of their Sun, and recovered the Roman Territories. His wife Zenobia after his death, like another Semiramis, proved a fortunate General & Warrior against the Persians, and also against the Romans, from whom she withheld Syria, til Valerius Aurelianus carried her to Rome, being by vnexpected accident surpris'd. As for Valerianus, it was the iust iudgement of God for his cruell persecution of the Christians, whom he had at first fauoured, till one of the Egyptian Priests had perswaded him to this, and other wickednesse, as humane sacrifices, and such like. Euseb. l. 7. c. 9. He was taken of Sapore, An. Dom. 260. after Calvisius computation. Bunting hath two yeeres lesse.

In the time of Probus the Persians sued for peace, and obtained it, he procuring such peace in the East (saith Popiscus) that a rebellious Moule was not heard to peepe. Carus his successor warred against the Persians, and hauing entred their Country as farre as Ctesiphon, was slain with a Thunder-bolt (no Roman Emperour, by, I know not what secret destinie, from the time of Crassus, passing those parts, without vnfortunate successe.) This was An. Dom. 283.

Diocletian sent Galerius against Narse, the Persian, sonne to Varranes, or Varranes, the second; (for after Sapore, Hormisdas his sonne had reigned a yeere; Varranes the first, three yeeres; Varranes the second, sixteen; and a third of that name onely foure moneths, as Agathias reckoneth.) But not farre from Carrhæ (fatal to the Romans) Galerius Cesar lost almost all his Armie, and therefore found homely welcome at his returne, Diocletian suffering him to lacquey (in his purple Robes) some miles after his Chariot. Indignation supplying his former defects, he recovered his credit with the ouer-throw of the Persians; Narse fled, leauing his wiues, sisters, and children to the Conqueror. A league was made, with returne of Armenia, Mesopotamia, and Assyria to the Romans.

Maximian the Persian, began his reigne An. Dom. 301. To him An. 309. succeeded his sonne Sapore, and reigned (which I think was neuer read of any) longer then he liued in view of the World, beginning his reigne before his birth, which he continued thre-score and ten yeeres. For Misdates dying without issue male, and leauing his wife great with child, the Princes consulted with the Magi, whether this future birth would be male; which they affirmed, observing their predictions by a Mare, then ready to foale; and the Princes set on the Crowne, or Royall Ensigne, on the mothers belly, acknowledging him for their King. This Sapore, in a letter to Constantius the Emperour, intitled himselfe King of Kings, partaker of the Starres, brother of the Sunne and Moone: he demanded all that had before belonged to the Persians, to bee restored. Betwixt them grew a bloudie warre, as Ammianus relateth. Sapore tooke Singata and Bezabde, An. Dom. 359. but was repelled into Persia by Constantius. Julian his successor seeking to subdue the Persian, lost himselfe. The best part of himselfe he had lost before in Apostasie, which plucked this destruction vpon him, An. 361. It is vacertain whether diuine or humane hand executed this iustice on him. Iouinian was present-ly slayed Emperour, but forced to agree on dishonourable conditions with the Persians, leauing the Rabbicens, Carduens, Rhelens, Zalus, and Nisibis to the Persian Dominion. And a little after, in the reigne of Valens, the league was broken by Sapor, who wonne Ctesiphon: Valens intending this war, was by the Gothes ouerthrowne, and burnt alive, before he could effect any thing. Ann. 377. When Theodosius reigned, the peace was renewed.

After Sapor succeeded Artaxerxes; and after him Sapor his sonne, both which reigned nine yeeres. Then followed Varanes; Cermapas cleuen yeeres, to whom succeeded Idigertes, who held peace with the Romans. Procopius writes, That Aracadius the Emperour on his death-bed, Ann. 407. ordained in his last Will, this Idigertes the Tutor and Protector to his sonne and heire Theodosius, which he faithfully performed. Agathias also acknowledgeth it a currant report. e Maruthas was in credit with this King. He was a Christian Bishop, and by his prayers had cured him of a grievous sickness, which the Magi with their Ferrie superstition, and all their labour, could not effect. The Magi conspiring against Maruthas, watched opportunities, that when the King should come (after the Persian wont) to worship the Fire, a man (whom they had hidden before within the earth for that purpose) cried aloud, That the King should goe forth, as being accounted of their god impious, who so loved a Christian Bishop. Hereupon the King be thought him of sending him away. But Maruthas suspecting the knaerie, counselled the King to cause the earth to be digged vp for the Fire, faith hee, cannot speake. The King going into the Chappell or Sanctuary, and hearing this voyce againe, followed Maruthas his counsell, and found out their packing, and punished the authors, allowing Maruthas to build a Church, wherefoever hee pleased in Persia. And whilst the Magi yet added to their treacheries, he not onely punished their persons, but distasted their Religion, and purposed to become a Christian, but by death was prevented, which happened Ann. 421. Varanes or Vararanes his sonne, followed not his steps, but both brake league with the Romans, and persecuted the Christians. Narjes his Generall, with his forces, were defeated, Azamza wasted, Nisibis besieged by the Impeials: The Sarcens, which ayded the Persian, Stricken with a strange furie and amazement, drowned themselves in Euphrates. It is said, a hundred thousand men perished. Theodosius then Emperour, knew these things by Palladius e, who in three dayes did ride from Constantinople hither, and backe againe in as many, vsing to flie in this manner to any the remotest parts of the Empire, with such admirable, and almost miraculous expedition; with his celeritie making that spacious Empire seeme but narrow and strait. Vararanes sent an Armie of those expert Souldiers which were among them, for their excellencie, called Immortall, but the Roman forces soone proued them mortall. Thus succeeded that Warre which he had begun, for despite to the Christian Religion and profession. He was forced to seeke peace, and ended or mitigated his persecution. To him succeeded, Ann. 441. another Idigertes, who reigned foueneene yeeres; and after him Perozes, who reigned foure and twentie yeeres: after him, his brother Obolus (Bizarus calls him Bleses) ruled foure yeeres. Cabades his successor renewed the Warres with the Romans: and so marvell, for hee was cruell to his owne people, and warred euen against Nature: for hee ordained (as some report) That women should be common, any wedlock-bands notwithstanding. Whereupon his Nobles conspired against him, depriued and imprisoned him. Bleses was enthronized (Scaliger hath Zamages) who foure yeeres after resigned the State vnto Cabades againe, who hauing before reigned cleuen yeeres, added thereto thirtie more. Necrophorus e tells, That hee became friend to the Christians, and permitted free libertie of that Religion vpon this occasion. Betwene Persia and India was a Castle, called Tzardaduer, wherein Cabades had heard, that much money and iewells were kept. Cabades vsed all means to obtaine it, but in vaine; so strongly was it (as the Storie saith) guarded with Demills. Hee therefore vied all the Persian Exoticismes to disposseesse them; and when they preuailed not, he sought to effect it by the Iewes, but with the former successe. At last hee made vse of the Christians, who expelled the spits, and deliuered the Castle vnto him.

Cosroes.

It is reported, that he slew Zelobes, King of the Hunnes, for playing on both hands, and comming to helpe him in his Warres against the Romans, hauing before sworne to assist the Emperour. About these times were the Manichees destroyed in Persia, for corrupting his sonne Pharuaris with their infectious leauen. He therefore slew their chiefe Prelate Indagaras, and many thousand Manichees, all in one day, hauing assembled them with a wise professing, that he would make that his sonne King. He assembled also the chiefe of the Magi, Glonaces; and Boazanes a Christian Bishop, for the greater solemnitie, with like deuotion as Iehu sacrificed to Baal, with the presence and assistance of Iehonadab, 2. Kings 10. Calpurnius saith this was done Ann. 523. Cabades dyed. Ann. 531.

His sonne Cosroes the Great succeeded, and reigned eight and fortie yeeres. Hee about the thirteenth yeere of Iustinians Empire, Ann. 539. invaded the Roman Dominions, tooke Surus, burnt Berraea, destroyed Antiochia, and with lesse successe besieged Edessa. Agathian preferreth this Cosroes for his great exploits before Cyrus and Xerxes. Yet was his end ignoble, ignoble, and vnworthy his high spirit. For Mauritius in the time of Tiberius, entred into the Persian Dominions, and burnt some Villages neere to the place where Cosroes then was for his recreation, and saw this burning spectacle : wherewith Indignation and Griefe multering greater multitudes of fearefull, vnquiet, enraged thoughts in his heart, then Mauritius had Souldiers in his Armie, vnable to beare such vnwonted sights of hostile flames in his Countreies, and such vnwonted sights of inward perturbations, euen greatnesse of spirit made way to Pusillanimitie, and being weakned with colluctation of contrary passions, a feauer, taking that occasion and aduantage, apprehends him, and soone after kills him.

Some say, his sonne Ormisdas reigned seuen yeeres with his father. Hee succeeded and reigned eight yeeres. Hee was exceeding cruell, by reason of a prophetic that his subiects should dispossesse him, which caused him to dispossesse thousands of them of their liues : and made him so odious, that they easily after apprehended the occasion to fulfill that subtile deuillish Oracle. Against him Mauritius performed worthy attempts, which made way vnto him for the Romane Empire. And then also hee had good successe against the Persians, by the valour of Philippicus his Generall : insomuch, that the Persians moued with these and other discontentes, by incitement of Varanus, depose Ormisdas, killed his wife and sonne before his eyes ; which hauing remained to performe vnto him that their last, vncooth, vnaturall seruice, were presently after put out, with burning needles thrust into them ; himselfe first imprisoned, and after beaten to death with clubs, by Cosroes his sonne. That Varanus had a little before, bene sent as Generall against the Romane Armie : which his seruice being found vnseruiceable, and the Romans preuailing, he was not onely deprived of his place ; but, to his further disgrace, was, by the Kings commandement, clothed in womans attyre : which indignities he repayed, not in words alone (in his letters filling Ormisdas, The Daughter of Cosroes) but with those vnaturall and disloyall practises : which hee continued also against Cosroes, sonne and heire of Ormisdas, forcing him to flee to Mauritius the Emperour for succour. For Varanus did not approve his succession, but writ vnto him to relinquish his royaltie, for feare of succeeding in his fathers fortunes. In that letter he stileth himselfe, Friend of the Gods, Enemy of Tyrants, Wise, Religious, Vnblameable, Happy, Prudent, &c. СНОБОРОС giueth him an answer, wherein he thus writeth, СНОБОРОС King of Kings, Lord of Lords, Ruler of Nations, Prince of Peace, Salvation of men, amongst the gods a man good and eternall, amongst men a god most illustrious, most glorious Conquerour, rising with the Sunne, giuing eyes (Старцы) to the night, Noble from his ancesstres, &c. But for all these great Titles, he was compelled to flee, as is said, and write in a lower stile to Mauritius.

Theophilactus Simocatta, speaking of the Abares, a Scythian Nation dwelling neere Ister, saith, that they were defended of the Hunnes, and that Bacelabrat (which word significeth one that is a Priest and Magus, for their Priests were their Diuiners) hauing offended Chagan, the Prince of these Abares, fled vnto their originall Nation, dwelling in the East, neere to the Persians, commonly called Turkes. This I mention to shew the Turkish originall, and their common descent with the Hunnes (with whose posteritie in Hungarie they now hold such continuall dissensions) by the testimonie of an Author, which writ his Historie a thousand yeeres since. In his third Booke and sixth Chapter, hee saith, the Hunnes which dwell in the North-East, whom the Persians called Turkes, were subdued by King Hormisdas ; and whereas before the Persians had vsed to pay them fortie thousand pieces of gold to buy their peace, they now forced these Hunnes to pay so much for tribute to the Persians. The Persian Gold bred such surquedrie and excesse amongst the Turkes, that they had their Beds, Tables, Horse-furniture and Armour of solide Gold : which prodigallitie made them couetous, and to demand larger contribution from the Persians ; hence arose those warres and that chardome of the Turkish Nation. This Author, sist of all other to my knowledge, mentioneth the Turkish warres, which since haue yeilded matter for Authors more then enough.

These Turkes are said to helpe Varanus in his rebellion ; but both hee and they receiued discomfite by Narses the Roman Generall, and sixe thousand were taken and slaine. The Turkes being asked why they helpe Varanus, answered, That they were forced thereto by famine : they were also marked with a Black Crosse, which (they said) they learned of the Christians, thereby to expell hunger. Cosroes thus recoured the Kingdome by aide of the Empire, which Varanus had vsurped to himselfe.

Hee was deeply scene in the Chaldean mysteries, and being by a Roman Gouverneur reproved for some excesse, in those times when he so much needed their helpe : he answered, That the times did a duantage him to those reproothes ; but know (saith hee) that calamities shall also befall the Romans, and the Babylonian Nation shall rule them three weekes of yeeres. After that, in the fifth weeke, the Romans shall subdue the Persians : which being come to passe, a day shall come that shall haue no night, and the expected end of the Empire shall shall be at hand; in which time corruption shall be abolished, and men shall liue according to Diuine Ordinance. This, either false or vncertaine prophetic (according to that Despenesse of Satum) he vttered, but what effect answerable hath followed, I know not. In his time the Saracens, confederate with the Romans, spoyle the Countreys of Babylonia.

This Cosroes reigned nine and thirtie yeeres. He held peace with the Romans whiles Mauritius liued; but when Phocas cruelly and treacherously had slaine him, a world of euils at once assailed the Empire. The Germans, Gaules, Italians, Hunnes, and Persians, by their Armies afflicted the publike State; and the Roman Bishop then began to aspire to an vniuersall Soueraigntie, which that Murderer still entiailed him vnto. That Armie which was yetted with the blood of Mauritius, by the Persians sword was punished, and died in their owne blood: who hauing ouertrowne the Romans in two battailes, made way for further conquests. Thus did God punish that Murderer, and besides (to pay him in his owne coynne) Priscus, Heraclo, and Heracius conspired against this Conspirer, and murdered the Murderer, and hauing cut off his Priuities, and his Head, huddled him into the Sea, and destroyed his Issue.

Heracius succeeded in this troubled state of the Empire: Cosroes preuailling by his victorious Armies entred Apamea, Edeffa, Cæsares, Cappadocie, and subducd Asia, whiles the Auares, or Abates wasted and spoiled Europe: the Saracens also (as in preludes of their future fortunes) committed great spoyle in Syria. This in the third yeere of Heracius: in the fourth, the Persians tooke Damascus; in the fifth, Ierusalem (carrying away to the Crosse) 2 and slew therein by instigation of the Iewes 90000. and subdued Palestina. In the seuenth, heinued Egypt and Africa, and conquered all, euen to Ethiopia. In the ninth, the Auares entred Thiace with an Armie, and Chagan chased Heracius into the Citie, spoiling many Townes: but the next yeere compounded on peaceable conditions; the Persians at the same time tooke Ancyra a Citie of Galatia. In the twelfth yeere of Heracius, a certaine Astrologer, Stephanus Alexandrinus, propheticd, that the Saracens should rule in power and dominion three hundred and nine yeeres, and then should endure much disquiet and trouble fiftie fixe yeeres. What he saw in the Starres we know not; but their Fates were longer-liued, Saas at this time sent with an Armie from Cosroes wasted all the East, and held fraudulent conference with Heracius, who sent with him seuentie chieftemen Embassadors to Cosroes. All these Saas treacherously lead captiues and bound into Persia, which yet could not satisfie his tyrannicall Master, who (because hee had seene Heracius, and had not brought him aliuie) caused him to bee slaid quicke: and sent Sarbarus against the Romans. Heracius beganne his expedition with penitent, and lowly seeking peace with G o p, who made his warres prosper against the Persians. Some say he sent Embassadors to Cosroes, who refused all conditions, except they would renounce their crucified G o p. This G o p preuailed against that presumption, and deliuered Gazacum into the hands of Heracius, in which Citie was the Temple of the Sunne, the treasure of Crasus, and imposture of Coles. There he found the abominable image of Cosroes, in the Globe-fashioned roofe of the Palace, as it were sitting in heauen. About this were the Sunne, Moone, and Starres, which hee worshipped superstitiously, and certaine scepter-bearing Angels standing about the same. There were certaine deuices to imitate showers of raine, and the noise of thunder. These all, together with the Temple of the Fire, and the Citie, Heracius committed to the deuouring, not the deuotion of the fire. Hee after ouerthrew Sarbaranus, and Sarbaranus, and Sais, Persian Generalls, with all their forces; and so preuailed, that Cosroes in impious reuenge, robbed all the Christian Churches in his dominion of their gifts and treasures, compelling all the Christians (a worse sacriledge) to the Nestorian heresie. He also sent Sais with a great Army against Heracius, and Sarbarus with another against Constantinople, stirring vp the Slauius and Gepeds to helpe him, with the Westerne Hunnes or Auares. Heracius sent oue Army to the safeguard of the Citie, another against Sais, and with the third hee went to the Lazikes, seeking to winne the Easterne Turkes, called Chazari, to his partie. These breaking through the Caspian Straits vnder Zobaelus next in dignitie to Chagan, committed exceeding spoyles. Heracius meane while ouerthrowing Sais, who dying with indignation of this losse and griefe for his Masters displeasure, could not thus appease his fury, but his carkasse was despitfully intreated; although the Heauens fought for Heracius, and with a sudden shower of Haile caused that Persian ouerthrow. Tenne dayes was Constantinople besieged, but by diuine power preferred, as Cedrenus and others write, by a miraculous Vision. Cosroes makes Raxafes his Generall, who encounters with Heracius, not farre from Ninus, and lost his life and the field. This victoriously he proceeded, chasing Cosroes before him fife and twentie miles in a day, which could not before goe fife. And when some had accused Sarbarus, as inclining to the Romans, he sent to Cardarichas his Colleague to kill him; which letter being intercepted, caused Sarbarus to become such indeed; who adulterating his Masters with Darius Hystaspis slew the usurping Magus, might wear them bending to the middle of their head, and not hanging down to their brows, as the other. The Kings Tiara was properly called Cidaris, and was set on by the Surena, which was an hereditary dignitie next to the King. About this Cidaris hee wore a Diadem, which some Authors ^e contound, and make to be the same; others otherwise: it was a purple band, or of blew colour, distinguished with white, which was wreathed about the Tiara. The right or strait Tiara, with that purple and white band, was the note of royaltie, as the Crowne in these parts. The Diadem in ^d other Countries, was a white band wreathed about the forehead. The new King was placed also in a golden Throne, and (if hee pleased) changed his former name, as Codoman-nus to Darius.

His subjects adored him as a god (so did the Greekes ^e interpret it, and Mordecai which refused this ceremonie to Haman) prostrating themselves on the ground with a kinde of veneration; turning their hands behind their backe, if they had any sute to the King. Sperchies and Bulus Lacedemonians, and Conon ^f the Athenian refused this Rite: Ismenius ^g & the Theban dissembled with taking vp his ring, which for that purpose hee let slip from his finger, when hee came before the King. Timagoras ^h was put to death by the Athenians for doing it. In the time of Apollonius ⁱ, none might come to the presence of the King, which had not before done the like adoration to his Image. They also when they came into the presence of the King, held their hands within their sleeves; for default herein, Cyrus Junior slew Antiochus and Asitrus, as Xenophon writeth. Likewise, for the greater Maietie they seldome were seene of the people, and then neuer on foot: neither might any enter the Palace without licence of the King, signifying his attendance first by a messenger: this honour was reserved to the Princes which slew Smerdis, which might enter at all times, but when the King was in bed with his wife; which Intaphernes (one of the seven) transgressing, therefore lost his head. Yea, the Scripture ^k noteth the danger hercof in Haman, the Kings greatest favourite, and Ester the Queene, neither of which had libertie of entrance, without the Kings call or admittance. It was a capitall offence to sit on the Kings Throne, to wear the Kings garment, or in hunting to strike any beast before the King had stricken. The King (as before is noted, of Cambyses) was not subiect to any law: the people were held in much slavery, if that may be so called which is voluntarie. In this affection, they which were ^l scourged at the Kings command, were thankfull to him, for that they were had in remembrance with him. Their obedience appeared, when Xerxes ^m being in a ship in danger, many at his word leaped into the Sea to lighten the ship. Yea, they would be their owne executioners when they had offended the ⁿ King. None might salute him without a present. His birth-day was observed a sacred and solemne festival. His death was bewailed with a silence of lawes and sutes five daies, and with extinguishing ^o that Fire, which every one observed in his house, as his household dicie.

The Kings abode was according to the season: seven moneths saith Zonaras ^p in Babylon, three in Sufa, and two in Ecbatana. Ælian therefore compares them to Cranes, and Aristotle to the Scythian Nomades: alway by this shifting, enjoying a temperate season. Susa or Shushan, was so called of the abundance of Lillies, which in that language are so named, saith Stephanus: a Region to defended by high mountaines from the Northerne blasts, that in the Summer the vehement heat parched their ^q Barly (it is Strabos report, and therefore they covered the roofes of their houses with earth two cubits deepe) and it killed the snakes as they crossed the wayes. It was situate on Choaspes, and entertained the Kings Court in Winter, as Ecbatana in Summer the chiefe Citie of the Medes. Sometimes it also removed to Pasargada; and sometimes to Persepolis, the richest Citie, if Diodorus ^r bee beleueed, vnder the Sunne, wherein was a Tower enuironed with a three-fold wall, the first of which was sixteen cubits high, and made with battlements, the second twice as much, the third square, and sixtie cubits in height of hard stone with brazen gates: on the East thereof was ^s a Hill of foure acres, wherein were the Sepulchres of the Kings. Alexander in reuenge of the burning of Athens, and by insatiation of wine, and Thais his Concubine (Mart, Bacchus, Venus, three heauy, vnuly, tyrannicall enemies, conspiring) burned this sometime Treasurie-house of Persia.

The Persian Court or Palace had many Gates, and Guards which took turnes by lot; (you reade the words of Aristotle in his booke de Mundo, hereby manifested to bee his, or at least as ancient, in that he writeth of the Persian State flourishing before Alexander in his time had subuerted it) some, hee saith, were called the Kings eares, others his eyes, and others had other offices, by which the King learned whatsoever was any where done, and therefore holden as a God: And besides his Posts which brought newes, by Fires or Beacons, he might in one day learne the State of that huge Empire, extended from the Hellespont to India. The Palace-roofe admirably shined with the brightnesse of Iuorie, Siluer, Amber, and Gold. His Throne which the Persians embraced: neither doth hee in these things disagree from Herodotus and Curtius. The Kings Chariot was drawne with white horses, the drowning of one of which was the cause of drying e the River Gyndes. For Cyrus enraged for the losse of his white Palfrey, diuided the river by force of men into three hundred and twentie rills; so that it wildered and lost it selfe in those many by-ways: an argument what Diuision can doe. These horses were of the Niszan race in Media. When the King descended from his Chariot, a golden steele was set him to step on: one alway attending his Chariot with such a steele. While hee rode in his Chariot, hee spent the time in whistling with a kisse, not in reading, or any graue meditation, and therefore was vnlearned. When hee went on progresse into Media, he enioyned the Countrey to spend three dayes before to hunt Scorpions, which there abounded; allowing rewards therefore. They vied by themselves or their Legats, to visite their officers in the Prouinces, and to punish or preferre them according to their meritis. In iudgements they not onely considered the crimes and accusations, but the counterpoise also of their vertues: and the clemencie e of Artaxerxes (in their irreueocable law) appeared in cutting off the Tyre of condemned persons, in stead of their heads.

As often as the King entred into Persepolis, euery Matron was to haue a piece of gold giuen her: the men also were rewarded which multiplied children: but especial rewards were bestowed on them which were called Oryfange, which had deserued well of the King, whose names and facts were therefore recorded, as we reade of Mordacai, and his recompence. The- misocles receiued of the Kings bountie the Citie Magnesia, to finde him bread (which Re- gion was worth fiftie Talents yearly) Land for wine, Myus for cates. The chiefe gift giuen to any was a mill of gold. The Kings birth-day was a solemne feast called Tylos, that is perfect, for the magnificence thereof in which hee gaue gifts to the people: yea, hee might not denie any petition then made to him. The King nourished so many Indian dogs for hunting, that foure great villages in the plaine of Babylon were assigned to their sustenance. Artaxerxes caused Megabyzus (as Ctesias writeth) to bee beheaded for striking a Lyon with his dart, which was readie to assault the King, because he therein transgressed the Law, and preuented the Kings triall of his valour. The reuenues of the tributes were 14560, Euboike Talents: the silver and gold were melted and kept in earthen vessels, which were broken when they came to vie the same. Besides this, the subiect prouinces yielded to the maintenance of the King other things: as Armenia, horses; Babylonia, foure moneths victu- als, and the rest of Asia the other eight; and other Regions their peculiar commodities. The Kings ordinarie guard, night and day guarded the Palace, the most of them Persians: another band of 10000. choice horse-men were wholly Persian, and were called Immortal: one thousand of the best of them, called Doryphori and Melephori, were chosen into the Kings guard. They receiue no money but allowance of victual for their wages. Curtius mentioneth a guard next to the Kings person, called the Kings kinsmen, which were 15000. But it were too tedious to recite the Homotimi, Megasthenes, and other his court-officers and attendants, as their liues were burthened with voluptuousnesse, so they prepared for their deaths (that they might descend suddenly into the grave; as Iob saith of the prosperitie of some wicked, without any bands, to vie Dauids phrase, of a lingering death) certaine poysons, tempered of the excrements e of the Dirceus an Indian bird, which in short time, without sense of griefe de- prived them of life. After the Kings death they extinguished the SACRED FIRE, which deire Alexander obserued in Hephastions funerall. In Persepolis were erected vnto them stately Monuments, with Titles and Epitaphs inscribed. The Monuments of the Kings there, i with other Antiquities haue conquered Time and Alexanders Fires, yet remaining so fresh, as if they were new made, many still shining like glasse. Among which a Jasper Table is remarkable, inscribed with letters which none can reade, all of a Pyramide or Delta forme in diuersified postures. Twentie such Pillars remaine of admirable greatnesse, beau- tie, and likenesse, of a lasting Marble, with Images in long habits like the Venetian Senators, with wide sleeves and long beards: others sitting as in high arched seats, with footstoles in great Maiestie. There are also huge Colossall horses, with giantly riders, of Marble. And although a goodly fertile Countrey doth inuite habitation, of ten leagues extent euery way, yet is there now but one poore village of foure hundred householders, called Margatean, in this plaine of Persepolis. Our Author acknowledgeth Diodorus his relations iustly agreeing with his eyes: and esteemeth these Monuments farre beyond all other the worlds miracu- lous Artifices.

I might here terrifie the delicate and already-wearied Reader, with representation of their Marriall marching, discipline, numbers, armors, and the like; of which Brisson hath written a whole booke. Yet because wee haue thus farre waded in matters of the Persian Magnificence; let vs take a little view of the Heyre and Successour to that Greainest, Great Alexander.

Alexander, in state entring Babylon, thus by Curius related. Many came forth to meet him: the wayes were all strowed with flowers and garlands, on both sides were erected silver Altars, laden with Frankincense and all kinde of odors. There followed him for presents droues of Horses and Castell: Lions and Leopards in grates were carried before him. The Magi after their manner of Procession singing, had the next place; after them the Chaldeans, and the Babylonians both Diviners and Artificers, with muscical Instruments. Then the Horsemen, furnished beyond magnificence in excess of prodigality. The King, with his Armie followed, and last of all the Townsmen. Hee that will compare with these relations, that which in the bookes of the Romane Ceremonies is written of the Popes strait Tiara, enuironed with a triple Crowne: the veneration performed to him by all, even Emperours kissing his feet, holding his bridle and stirrop, putting their shoulders vnder his Chaire, when hee lists to ride on mens shoulders, holding water to his hands, and bearing the first dish to his Table: the change of his name at his election: his Palfrayes alwayes white, like the Nisrzan, led before him, one of which carryeth his God vnder a Canopie: his Scala, Processions, and other Rites; shall see hence borrowed, most exceeding the Persian Excess. Once, all Religion with them seemeth turned into State and Ceremonie, the soule being fled, and this (bodily exercise) bodie of exercise, in exercise of the body, onely left.

CHAP. VI. Of the Persian Magi.

He name of Magi is sometimes applied (say some) to all the Persians, or else to a particular Nation amongst them: sometime it signifyeth the most excellent in Philosophie, and knowledge of nature, or in sanctitie and holinesse of life. Thus Suidas calls the Persian Magi, Philosophi, and Philarchi, studious of knowledge, of nature, and of God. Sometimes it signified such as we now call Magicians, practisers of wicked Arts. Among the Persians this name was ancient and honourable, saith Pencernus, applyed onely to the Priests, which liued in high reputation for digaitie and authoritie, being also Philosophers, as the Chaldeans were. To these were committed the custodie of Religion, of ancient Monuments, of later Histories, of publike records, and the explanation of the Persian wisdom, whose account appeareth in that after Cambyses death, one of them is reported to succeed in the Throne. Now, whereas the Ethnickes had a tradition of two Genij, which attend euery man, one good, the other euill; proceeding (in likelihood) from Diuine Truth, concerning good and euill Angels, which are either ministring Spirits for mans good, or tempters vnto euill: curious men hence tooke occasion to deuise new Arts, which were called magia, and sorteria; by the one calling vpon the good Damon or Genius; by the other on the euill: which euill One could easily turne himselfe into an Angel of light, to delude blind people, being indeed (as in our White and Blacke witches at this day) worse when an Angel, then when a Deuill.

Hereof were diuers kinde; Necromancie, which inuocated the spirits of the dead: of which smoaky Soot, the Heathens Diuine Poets, and our Poeticall Diuines in the tales of Hell and Purgatory, strue who shall haue the blackest tincture. They had also their Leuromancie, which was obserued in a Basen of water, wherein certaine plate of gold and silver were put with Jewels, marked with their iugling Characters, and thence after pronuntiation of their words were answers whispered; Gastromancie procured answer by pictures, or representations in glasse-vessels of water, after the due Rites. Catoptromancie receiued those resemblances in cleere glasse: Chrysalomancie, in Crystall; Dactylomancie, was a diuination with Rings (which perhaps Gyger vsed) consecrated by certaine position of the heauens, and diuelliish Inchantments. Onymancie, with Oyle and Soote daubed on the Nyle of an vndeified Child, and held vp against the Sunne: Hydromancie, with water: Aeromancie, with ayre. But what should I adde them many more names of this Artlesse Art, vnworthy the naming? Tibi nomina mille, Mille nocendi artes; Infinitely diuersified are these blind by-ways of darknesse and mischiefe. Detru hath other diuisions of Magicke, which from the efficient hee diuiderh into Natural, Artificial, and Diabollicall: from the end, into Good and Bad; and this bad (which is by explicite or implicite compact with Deuills) into Magia specialis, Diuinatoria, Maleficentia, & Negatoria. Zoroaster is supposed Author both of the good and bad vnto the Persians. Natural Magicke is by Detru diuided into that which wolken wonders (not miracles) and that which diuineeth. But I am weary of this Magicall search. Leave we them in their Mazes, Circles, Labyrinth of Errour, and let vs take view of the Persian Magi, from whence Plante deriueh the first originals of Magi: all Vanities; which are (with hee)

compounded of three Arts, that exercise most imperious power over the mindes of men; Physicke, and that offering her selfe more sublimare and pure, in the sacred name and rites of Religion, beautified also with the addition of Mathematicall Sciences; (a threefold cord not easily broken, like a three-headed Cerberus, or triple crowned Prelate holding the world in feare, or loue thereof) Zoroastres (who lived at Eudoxius testifieth, fixe thousand yeeres before Plato) first inuented in Persia: Hermippus affirmeth, that Agonax taught him. Apollonius and Zymocentides the Assyrian, have been famous for their practise and writings of this Art. Pythagoras, Empedocles, Democritus, Plato sailed farre to learne it, vnder taking long exiles (rather the pilgrimages or peregrinations) to that end. He impiously addeth Moses and Isachabel (it may be he meant Iosua) to this impious number. The Scripture tells of Iannes and Lambres, and Simon Magus famous in this infamie. Hierom saith, they were the Philosophers of the Chaldeans, and that the Kings did all things after the direction of their Art; which (they are Plinius words) in the East ruleth the King of Kings. Porphyrius affirmeth, that they which were wise in diuine mysteries, and performed them, were called of the Persians Magi: the same, saith Picinus, that Philosophers were amongst the Greekes. The like hath Philos, and Proclus, and Ambrosius of Hosphanes Magus. They were studious in prayers, instituted sacrifices, and mysteries as the Indian Brachmanes, and Grecian Theologie; acknowledged Angels, Paradise, the soules immortalitie. Patriens also addeth to this their Philosophie and Theologie, Astronomic and Physicke, and all knowledge of Nature. It is like that in the Persian Magi concurred both a certaine stocke or kindred, which were also so called (as is said) and the Philosophicall Inquisition of Nature, and the Priestly function, and also some either implicite or explicite societie with Deuills. The same they were, at least in profession and reputation, that the Philosophers with the Greekes; the Priests in Egypt, Gymnosophistes in India, Chaldeans in Babylon, Druides in Gallia and in this our Ile, the Italian Aruspices, and other religious persons (the Treasurers of their Theologie and Philosophie) in other places. As for those Magi mentioned in the Gospel, some suppose them to come from Ethiopia; some from Arabia; some from Melopotamie; some from Chalda; and some from Persia; and some from diuers of those Regions. Whencesoeuer they came, they had a brighter Starre to guide them with diuiner light, then those Magicall brans of hellish fire could yeeld.

Plato commends this Magia, and calls it Macbagistia, and Sauv Seganis the worship of the Gods; and saith, that the Kings of Persia learned it, as a knowledge of Diuine Mysteries, wherein by the worlds Common-wealth, they were instructed to gouerne their owne. Others, as they were led by differing Prefectiō, doe as much discommend them. And truly (as in the Chaldean, and Egyptian Priests) their searching out the mysteries of Nature cannot but deserue commendation, but their abusing this naturall Philosophie to vnnaturall conspiracie with deuils, cannot but be detested of those which are not themselves detested of God. And either from this deuillish conspiracie, or over-curious vanitie, did arise their predictions of future euents: in which respect the Ethnikes had them in high reputation. Ammianus Marcellinus saith, that Zoroastres added much to this Art from the Chaldean mysteries, and Hyslaistes, the Father of Darius, from the Brachmanes, which hee in his Indian trauels had found in a woodie solitarie nest, and learned of them the motions of the Starres, and pure rites of sacrifices: which he taught the Magi, and they, together with the skill of diuination, delivered to their posteritie by Tradition: and that progenie is alway consecrated to Diuine Seruices, and keepe continually burning certaine fire which first came from heauen; a small portion whereof was wont to bee carried before the King of Asia. There were but a few of them at the first: and it was vnlawfull to touch the sacrifice, or approach to the Altar, before the Magus, with a certaine set speech had powred on his sacred preparatiue liquors. Afterwards being increased in number they grew into an entire Nation, and inhabited vnswalled Townes, being gouerned by their owne lawes, and honoured for Religion. Cicero writeth, that the Magi did assemblie together in Fana, into certaine Temples or consecrated places, to consult about their diuinations. They presaged to Cyrus thirtie yeeres reigne. They dranke the herbe Theangelis, and vsed also the herbe Alysaophon or Marmaritis when they would diuine. They diuined by the noies and markes of the bodie: they foretold the euents of prodigies. They might not teach any but Persians the mysteries of their Science, without the Kings leave. And yet Plinius saith, that Plato, Democritus, Empedocles, and Pythagoras, vnderooke exiles (as is said before) rather then trauels, to learne the same, which after their returne they taught. Apollonius also for the same cause went into Persia and India: whose Philosophie plainly appeareth by the history of his life to bee soyled with Magically impure. And although some commend one sort of Magia, as being their Theologie and Philosophie, yet seeing their Philosophie was corrupted with curiositie, and their
